345. Incidents:—The three essentials of an English mortgage as defined in this section are (i) that the mortgagor should bind himself to repay the mortgage money on a certain day ; (ii) that the mortgaged property should be transferred absolutely to the mortgagee ; and (iii) that such absolute transfer should be made subject to a proviso that the mortgagee will reconvey the property to the mortgagor, upon payment by him of the mortgage-money on the day on which the mortgagor bound himself to repay the same. An English mortgage closely resembles an absolute sale with a condition of repurchase—Narayana v. Venkataramana, 25 Mad. 220 (235) ; Satyacharan v. Ram Kinkar, 62 C.L.J. 28. In the former case it has been observed that it is the characteristic feature of an English mortgage that the operative words should be the same, as in an absolute conveyance, and consequently, the transfer should be by conveyance, assignment, demise or otherwise, according to the nature of the property ; and therefore where the deed of mortgage in case of a free-hold estate contained the words “the mortgagors do hereby mortgage and assign to the mortgagee the coffee estate described in the schedule hereto annexed,” etc., it was held that the word “mortgage” was inappropriate in the deed of English mortgage, and precluded the possibility of holding that the transfer was intended to be absolute, but that as the word “assign” was used it might be said that the requisite of an English mortgage was fulfilled—Narayana v. Venkataramana, 25 Mad. 220 (235). This case was decided according to the practice prevailing in England. But, as has been observed in a recent Calcutta case, the law and practice obtaining in England ought not to be applied in interpreting an English mortgage executed in India. The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act must be regarded first before resorting to English practice. According to this Act, the definition of an English mortgage as given in sec 58 (e) must be read subject to the definition gives in clause (a) of the section, and consequently an English mortgage can hardly be regarded as the transfer of the entire interest of the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Some estate is left in the mortgagor and only an interest thereon is transferred to the mortgagee—Fala Krista v. Jagannath, 59 Cal. 1314, 36 C.W.N. 709 (720), A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 775, 140 I.C. 788 ; Rowther v. Uma, 34 I.C. 24. The case of Fala Krista v. Jagannath, supra, has recently been approved by the Privy Council in Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14, 43 C.W.N. 281 (289), where their Lordships state: “Section 58 (e) deals with the form, not substance. The substantial rights are dealt with in secs. 58 (a) and 60. Whatever form is used, nothing more than an interest is transferred and that interest is subject to the right of redemption.” Their Lordships recognize in this case that the wording of sec. 58 (e) undoubtedly gives rise to some difficulty (at p. 288). That section speaks of the mortgagor transferring the mortgaged property absolutely to the mortgagee. “In using those words does it mean that no interest or no legal interest in the property remains in the mortgagor? Their Lordships cannot think so”—Ibid, at p. 289. In this case the Privy Council affirmed Satya Charan v.

Ram Kinkar, supra, and overruled Bengal National Bank v. Janaki, 54 Cal. 813, 31 C.W.N. 973 followed in Shiva Prasad v. Smith, 17 Pat. 499, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 146, 20 P.L.T. 46. See in this connection Imperial Bank, Petitioner, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 197, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 429, 191 I.C. 559.

Where the mortgagor binds himself to pay the money lent on a certain day and conveys the property absolutely to the mortgagee and there is the provision for reconveyance by the mortgagee to the mortgagor on payment of the loan, simply because the mortgagor undertakes to pay the taxes, etc., on the mortgaged property will not change the character of the mortgage from an English mortgage. In India a mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property. In substance it is not the transfer of the whole interest of the mortgagor to the mortgagee. In determining such questions clause (a) of sec. 58 cannot be ignored—per R. C. Mitter, J. in Cohen v. Baidyanath, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 646 (648), 40 C.W.N. 1270. The same view was taken in Janaki Nath v. Asad Reza, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 211, 14 Pat. 560, 158 I.C. 738.

A provision in the bond requiring the mortgagor to pay in addition to the mortgage debt and interest thereon further advances and sums paid by the mortgagee for the protection and preservation of the mortgaged properties and Government revenue, rents and all other costs, charges and expenses, etc., does not affect the character of the mortgage as an English mortgage—Janaki Nath v. Asad Reza, supra. There is nothing inconsistent with an English mortgage in the mortgagor granting a power of attorney to the mortgagee entitling him in the grantor's name, to collect the rents and profits of a portion of the mortgaged properties for ensuring the payment of interest, or in the fact that the agreement expressly provides that such management and collection by the mortgagee or by a substitute appointed by him would be as the agent of the mortgagor—Ibid. The possession taken by the mortgagee under the power of attorney or the appointment by him of a substitute has not the effect of placing the mortgagee in the position of a mortgagee in possession. Therefore he is not accountable on the footing of wilful default, but on the basis of actual receipts—Ibid.

The fact that the mortgagor has stipulated in an English mortgage to pay the insurance costs and other charges including quit rents, taxes etc. does not detract from the absolute character of the transfer—Rajagopala v. Ramachandra, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 628, 55 M.L.J. 417. See also Fozmal v. Shridhar, A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 499, 48 Bom. L.R. 327. The fact that in certain event the date of payment was changed did not mean that the mortgagor had not agreed to pay the debt on a certain date within cl. (e) of this section—Rajagopala v. Ramachandra, supra.

The appointment of attorney by the mortgagor to recover, receive and give effectual discharges for all rents and royalties from tenants is common enough in English mortgages and is designed to save the mortgagee from the liability of accounting on the footing of wilful default as a mortgagee in possession—Jharia Water Board v. Jagadamba Loan Co., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 539, (1938) P.W.N. 635.

Where the mortgaged property is situated in the mofussil, and one of the parties is a Hindu, a mortgage though styled as an English mortgage does not transfer an absolute interest in favour of the mortgagee—Ansur Subba Naidu v. Secretary of State, 1917 M.W.N. 794, 41 I.C. 770; Shurnomoyee v. Srinath, 12 Cal. 614; Pitchey Meera Rowther v. Pathumakutty, 8 L.B.R. 413, 34 I.C. 24; but the mortgagor remains owner subject to the mortgage, and can exercise the ordinary rights of an owner in possession—8 L.B.R. 413.

According to the strict provisions of an English mortgage under the English law, the mortgagor is not entitled to remain in possession; but if he remains, as he usually does, it is only by sufferance, and he is liable to ejectment at any time without notice and without being entitled to reap what he has sown or to the standing crops. The mortgagee may provide that on the mortgagor committing a certain default, the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into actual possession. In such a case if the permission is withdrawn the mortgagee is entitled under sec. 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882 to institute proceedings for ejectment—Sequeira v. Mrs. Nadershaw, A.I.R. 1954 Bom. 81. Under the Indian law, though the mortgage does not contain in so many words a covenant for possession, a right of entry on the part of the mortgagee may be implied from the terms of the deed. Even though the mortgagee enters into possession of the property by reason of a purchase at an execution sale under a decree which subsequently turns out to be invalid, he cannot be ousted from possession either by the mortgagor or by a person claiming under him, without the mortgage redeemed—Rukmini Kanta v. Baldeo, 28 C.W.N. 920, 81 I.C. 1025, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 77. Where the mortgagor had sold and handed over possession of the property to the purchaser without the knowledge of the mortgagee in the English form who has become entitled to possession, it can not be said that the possession of the purchaser was adverse to the mortgagee—Jasraj v. Sugrabai, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 195, 191 I.C. 483. Under an English mortgage the mortgagee is entitled to immediate possession and retain possession until he is paid—Sree Yellamma Cotton etc. Co. Ltd. in the matter of, A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 280.

Construction :—In construing English mortgages English decisions are a valuable source of elucidation as they are in a form prevalent in England and have been borrowed from there—Imperial Bank, Petitioner in Prudential Assurance Co. v. Galstaun, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 197, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 429, 191 I.C. 559. No construction of a particular document is necessarily a guide when a similar document comes to be construed—Fozmal v. Shridhar, supra.

Limitation :—Art. 147 of the Limitation Act continues to be applicable to suits instituted on English mortgages where they have been executed before 1st April, 1930,—the date on which the amending Act XX of 1929 came into force—ibid.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE :—See the new clause (f). The provision for equitable mortgage was previously contained in the third para of sec. 59 which ran as follows :—

“Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein, Akyab and in any other town which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, specify in this behalf, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon."

No amendment has been made; the language is practically the same, except that the mortgage has now been specifically described as a "mortgage by deposit of title-deeds."

The object of the Legislature in providing for this kind of mortgage is to give facility to the mercantile community, in cases where it may be necessary to raise money all on a sudden before an opportunity can be afforded of investigating the title-deeds and preparing the mortgage-document.

The term "equitable mortgage" in the English law is of much wider import than under this Act. An equitable mortgage under the English law might be of several kinds and one of them is by deposit of title-deeds—Ponnu v. Sambasiva, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 293, 56 Mad. 546, 141 I.C. 372.

An equitable mortgage should not be looked upon with disfavour or bias—Official Assignee v. Sind Provincial Co-operative Bank, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 479, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 36. An equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds is recognised and enforceable by law in the Punjab, although this Act does not apply to that province—Ram Mohan v. Bharat National Bank, 3 Lah. L. J. 373. See also Mrs. Stewart v. Bank of Upper India, 31 P.R. 1916, 34 I.C. 937. As Delhi was before 1912 in the Province of the Punjab, even after its separation in that year such a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds can be validly created though the property may be situated elsewhere, e.g., in Karachi—Ralli Brothers v. Punjab National Bank, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 920, 11 Lah. 564, 129 I.C. 21; Mt. Kanwal v. Babu Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 819, 172 I.C. 508.

By a Government Notification, this provision has been extended to the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore; and a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds can be effected in that town. See Papiah Naidu v. Naganatha Sethupathi, 61 M.L.J. 408 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 1061 (1064), A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 239, 134 I.C. 328.

A mere deposit of title-deeds outside the towns mentioned in this section not only gives no right to the mortgagee to proceed against the properties they relate to, but does not operate as a further security or charge—Darbari v. Khetra, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 41, 97 I.C. 391; Basant v. Commissioner of Tax, A.I.R. 1932 All. 451.

Where the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage money, by the operation of secs. 96 and 58 (b) it is an equitable mortgage—Nityananda v. Rajpur C. B. Cinema Ltd., A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 208, 90 C.L.J. 123.

346. Incidents of equitable mortgage:—A mortgage created by deposit of title-deeds and a mortgage created by an indenture stand on the same footing. A mortgage created by deposit of title-deeds does not create only an equitable estate liable to be defeated or postponed, as in England, by a subsequent purchaser for value without notice—Ram

Ratan v. Sew Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 823 (829). An equitable mortgage is valid only if made within the towns specified in this clause. If executed outside those towns it is invalid and gives no right to the mortgagee to proceed against the properties comprised in the mortgage—Darbari v. Khetra, 8 P.L.T. 85, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 41 (42); Konchadi v. Siva Rao, 28 Mad. 54. But the property mortgaged may be situate outside those towns. See below.

Three things are required for an equitable mortgage. (1) a debt; (2) deposit of title-deeds; and (3) an intention that the transfer should be security for the former—Behram v. Sorabji, 38 Bom. 372, 23 I.C. 140; Jowala Das v. Thakar Das, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 251, 158 I.C. 562. There may be constructive deposit—Nathan v. Maruthi Rao, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 430.

(1) Debt:—An equitable mortgage may cover an existing as well as a future debt; that is, it may be created not only to secure a contemporaneous advance, but it can be extended to cover future advances as well—Himalayan Bank v. Quarry, 17 All. 252. An equitable mortgage is created when title-deeds are deposited under an oral agreement to cover present and future advances. As each advance is made, it becomes a charge upon the land comprised in the title-deeds, from the force of the prior oral agreement that it shall be so—Jaitha v. Haji Abdul, 10 Bom. 634 (644).

(2) Deposit of title-deeds:—To create a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds it is not necessary that the property to which they relate should be situate within one of the towns mentioned in this clause—Valliappa v. Ko Tha Hnyin, 4 Bur. L.T. 189, 11 I.C. 721; Imperial Bank of India v. U. Rai Gyaw, 51 Cal. 86 (100) (P.C.). In interpreting cl. (f) the word "town" does not go with "person", but with "delivers". Under this clause it is not necessary that the person making the deposit of the title-deeds should be in one of the towns mentioned in the clause. It is enough if he makes the deposit to the creditor or his agent in that town with intent to create security thereon—Indian Cotton Co. v. Hari Poonjoo, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 39 (41), I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 763, 38 Bom. L.R. 1222, 166 I.C. 974. Agreement must precede before actual transfer of interest in immoveable property—Ibid at p. 42. An equitable mortgage can be created in the Presidency towns by the deposit of title-deeds of property lying outside those towns. Had it been the intention of the Legislature that transactions of the above description should only affect immoveable property situate within the narrow circle of the Presidency Towns, such intention would have been clearly expressed—Madho Das v. Ram Kishen, 14 All. 238; Manekji v. Rustomji, 14 Bom. 269; Srinath v. Godadhur, 24 Cal. 348; Behram v. Sorabji, 38 Bom. 372, 23 I.C. 140 (141) (per Macleod, J.).

Even it is immaterial whether the property is situate inside or outside British India. An equitable mortgage may be created by deposit of title-deeds of property situate in a Native State (e.g., Baroda)—Central Bank of India v. Nusserwanji, 34 Bom. L.R. 1384; A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 642.

But the delivery of the title-deeds must take place within the towns mentioned in this clause; so where the title-deeds were delivered outside Calcutta to an attorney's assistant who was acting for both parties for taking them to his employer to keep them in his Calcutta Office, the mere authorization to the solicitor outside Calcutta by the debtor to deliver the title-deeds to the creditor does not amount to delivery in Calcutta—Surajmull v. Gopeeram, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 823, 36 C.W.N. 1028, 141 I.C. 257. Where the creditor in Bombay requested the debtor outside Bombay to send the title-deeds by post and the debtor sent them accordingly, it was held that although the Post Office became the agent of the creditor and the transaction though complete under sec. 7 of the Contract Act, did not create an equitable mortgage as the deposit of the title-deeds was made outside Bombay—Indian Cotton Co. v. Hari Poonjoo, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 39 (43), I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 763, 38 Bom. L.R. 1222, 166 I.C. 974. A deposit of title-deeds can be both actual and constructive—Kakoo Shah v. Kamalawati, A.I.R. 1969 Delhi 120.

Where the defendants had already executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff and handed him the title-deeds of the property, and subsequently the plaintiff advanced a further sum to the defendants, who agreed that the title-deeds should be retained by the plaintiff as security for the re-payment of the further advances, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to be declared an equitable mortgagee in respect of such further advances—Dhirendra v. Kumud, 25 Cal. 611; Ex parte Kensington, 2 V. & B. 83. In such cases it may be assumed that the parties agreed to treat the title-deeds as having been handed back to the mortgagor and rehandled to the mortgagee. Such an agreement was a constructive delivery of the title-deeds to the creditor as security for the further advances—V. M. R. V. Chettyar Firm v. Asha Bibi, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 107 (108), 118 I.C. 407; Cowasji v. Tyabji, 23 S.L.R. 97, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 179 (186), 112 I.C. 722; K. J. Nathan v. S. V. Maruthi Rao, (1964) 2 S.C.J. 671.

In an equitable mortgage it is not necessary that all the title-deeds should be deposited. An equitable mortgage may be valid if only some or one of the material documents of title to the property have been deposited, although a complete title be not thereby shown as to the depositor's interest in the estate—Roberts v. Croft, 24 Beav. 223; Ex parte Wetherell, 11 Ves. 398; Ramanathan v. Dowlat Singhji, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 865 (874), (1938) 2 M.L.J. 534; Binapani v. Rabindranath, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 213. Thus, for the purpose of creating an equitable mortgage of a share in an indigo concern it is quite sufficient to deposit the title-deeds under which that share was acquired—Twomey v. Bhupendra, 7 Pat. 520, 111 I.C. 57, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 304 (310); Bhupendra v. Wajihunnessa, 2 P.L.J. 293 (301), 39 I.C. 564. The documents must necessarily be documents showing the mortgagor's title, but that does not mean that they should never be held sufficient unless they actually connect the mortgagor with some predecessor of his whose title the documents show. On the other hand, if they purport to show the mortgagor's title in the property, it is not necessary that they should connect the mortgagor with some predecessor of his who had acquired the title originally. Thus where the deposited documents were (1) the original probate of the will whereby the predecessor bequeathed his property to the mortgagor and a certified copy of a redemption certificate issued to the predecessor in respect of the said property, the original being lost, a valid mortgage was effected. But an attested copy would not be enough unless there is proof of the original not being available—Surendra v. Mohendra, 59 Cal. 781, 36 C.W.N. 420 A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 589 (593). Where a person himself puts a superstructure on the site of which he is a tenant, and subsequently purchases the site from the landlord, the title-deeds, though relating only to the land would clearly cover the house and his deposit would create an equitable mortgage of the entire property consisting of the ground and the superstructure—Berumull v. Velu, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 369, (1942) 1 M.L.J. 372, 1942 M.W.N. 261. But if the document that is deposited shows no kind of title of the depositor in the property, and there are documents in existence showing his title to the property which are not deposited, an equitable mortgage cannot be said to have been validly created—Venkataramayya v. Narasinga Rao, 21 M.L.J. 454, 9 I.C. 309.

Maps of properties and other documents consisting of unimportant and useless letters cannot be recognized as title-deeds. But where the documents which were deposited included the "sold notes" by firms from whom machinery of a factory was purchased, the drafts for the purchase price, freight, etc., and the receipts by the firm for the amount paid and the certificates etc., they were documents of title of the factory as distinct from the building and the site underneath it. By their deposit an equitable mortgage was created—People's Bank of N. India v. Forbes, Forbes Campbell & Co., A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 383 (403). Machinery which has been firmly fastened to the earth and has been continuously worked for several years is immovable property and the deposit of documents of title of such machinery creates an equitable mortgage—Ibid.

If part of the material documents of title be deposited with one person, and part with another, each deposit may have a good security, unless there be evidence of a contrary intention—Roberts v. Croft, 24 Beav. 223; Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Ed., p. 17. Thus, one S held two plots of land and a building thereon by virtue of a registered sale-deed. He also possessed the original lease-deeds under which the plots were held by his vendor. He deposited the sale-deed and also the lease-deed with respect to one of the plots with A, and thereafter deposited the other lease-deed with B. On each of the lease-deeds there was an endorsement that the property had been sold to S. Held that as A had title-deeds with regard to the whole property, an equitable mortgage was created on the whole property in his favour, although he did not possess the other lease-deed. Held also that an equitable mortgage was created in favour of B also, but A's mortgage had priority over that of B—Chettyar Firm v. Chettyar Firm, 7 Rang. 28, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 65 (68), 116 I.C. 475.

A patta of land is a document of title by depositing which an equitable mortgage may be created—Official Assignee v. Basudevadas, 48 Mad. 454, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 723, 48 M.L.J. 423. Even an expired lease may be sufficient to found a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, if the lessee continues in possession, the lessor accepts rent from him and the lease is subsequently renewed—Villa v. Petley, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 51, 148 I.C. 721. A patta issued in pursuance of an order passed by a Revenue Officer is not however a document of title but only evidence of title, the main object of it being to give information of the amount of revenue payable. A valid order passed by a duly authorized agent of the Government granting lands at the disposal of the Government would confer title on the person in whose favour it is passed—Dongannma v. Jamma-nna, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 613, 133 I.C. 782.

Where the mortgagor in consideration of his relinquishing all connection with his father and his property, obtains certain property and deposits a copy of the registered deed of relinquishment executed by him in favour of his father, the deposit of the document has been held to be sufficient to create an equitable mortgage of the property obtained by him—Punjab and Sind Bank v. Amir Chand, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 731, 11 Lah. 694, 125 I.C. 631; while receipts and certified copies of mutations and jamabandi papers have been held to be insufficient to create such a mortgage—Jowala Das v. Thakur Das, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 251, 158 I.C. 562. It has, however been laid down in a recent Full Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court in order to create a valid mortgage by deposit of title-deeds under cl. (f), it is not necessary that the whole, or even the most material, documents of title of the property should be deposited, nor that the documents deposited should show a complete or good title in the depositor. It is sufficient if the deeds deposited bona fide relate to the property or are material evidence of title or are shown to have been deposited with the intention of creating a security thereon—Chidambaram v. Aziz Meah, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 149 (F.B.), overruling Chettyar Firm v. Ma Joo, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 299, 11 Rang. 239, 147 I.C. 1105. It is not necessary that all the material documents should be deposited. It is sufficient if the principal documents are deposited—Ralli Brothers v. Punjab National Bank, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 920, 11 Lah. 564, 129 I.C. 21.

A tax-receipt and a copy of a map are not documents of title—Majoo Team v. Ma Thein, 10 Rang. 403, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 185, 140 I.C. 487; Chettyar Firm v. Ma Joo, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 299, 11 Rang. 239; see also Jiwan Das v. Peoples' Bank, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 926. But the copy of an award filed in Court being evidence of title, when deposited, creates a valid equitable mortgage—Gurudas Mal v. Punjab Sind Bank, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 972.

Where the original title-deeds have been lost, copies of such deeds may be deposited—Mrs. Stewart v. Bank of Upper India, 31 P.R. 1916, 34 I.C. 937. But unless it is proved that the original has been lost or is not available, an attested copy would not be enough—Surendra v. Mohendra, supra. A mortgage-deed executed by the owner of the property in favour of a third person can never be deemed to be a title-deed of the mortgagor—Nageswara v. Srinivasa, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 743, 94 I.C. 427.

(3) 'Intent to create a security thereon':—The title-deeds must be deposited with intent to create a security thereon. Otherwise there is no equitable mortgage. Unless the deposit of title-deeds effects the transfer of an interest in a specific immoveable property for the purpose of security the payment of money advanced or to be advanced, it is absolutely nothing at all—Imperial Bank of India v. U Rai Gyaw Thu & Co. Ltd., 51 Cal. 86 (98) (P.C.), 1 Rang. 637, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 211. Where one partner of an oil-mill had mortgaged the mill, and the other partner, who was the managing partner, discharged the mortgage and took delivery of the title-deeds from the mortgagee, no equitable mortgage was created in favour of the managing partner merely because he took charge of the title-deeds, in the absence of an intent to create a security. He took charge of the title-deeds merely as manager and chief of the partnership business, and the transaction was to be treated as an advance from one partner to another to be paid off out of the profits—Heng Moh v. Lim Saw, 1 Rang. 545 (P.C.), 29 C.W.N. 12 (16, 17), 45 M.L.J. 776, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 87, 75 I.C. 287. Both under the English and the Indian law, mere possession of title-deeds by the creditor coupled with the existence of a debt does not necessarily lead to a presumption of an equitable mortgage in the absence of an intention to create a security—Jethabai v. Putlibai, 14 Bom. L.R. 1020, 17 I.C. 722; Darbari v. Khetra, 8 P.L.T. 85, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 41 (42); Featherston v. Fenwick, 1 Br. CC. 270n; Behram v. Sorabji, 38 Bom. 372, 23 I.C. 140; Chapman v. Chapman, 13 Beav. 308; Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Ed., p. 20. A fortiori, when there is no existing debt, the mere delivery of title-deeds is not sufficient to create an equitable mortgage unless it is accompanied with an agreement that the deeds should stand as security for future advances—Jaitha v. Haji Abdul, 10 Bom. 634 (645); Dixon v. Muckleston, L.R. 8 Ch. 155; Ganpat v. Adarji, 3 Bom. 329. No equitable mortgage is created by an agreement to execute a mortgage in future in case the amount due on a promissory note be not paid together with the delivery of the title deed of the property agreed to be mortgaged—Subramania Iyer v. Nedungadi Bank Ltd., I.L.R. (1963) 2 Ker. 60.

Where there is a loan and document or documents relating to the property alleged to have been mortgaged are deposited, the only other fact that need be established for proving an equitable mortgage is that such document or documents have been deposited with the intention of creating a security on the property. It is not necessary that the document or documents should declare a title in the depositor—Brij Mohan v. Abdul Majid, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 185, 182 I.C. 564. Where there is a debt in existence and title-deeds are deposited by the debtor with the creditor to secure the debt, an equitable mortgage is at once created, even though the deeds are deposited with the express purpose of having a legal mortgage prepared—Dayal v. Jivraj, 1 Bom. 237 (241). But if at the time when the title-deeds were deposited with the purpose of having a legal mortgage prepared there was no antecedent or existing debt nor was any oral agreement made that the title-deeds should stand as a security for future advances, it cannot be said that the deposit was made with the intention of creating a security thereon; and therefore there was no equitable mortgage; and if the legal mortgage subsequently executed became invalid through want of registration, the creditor could not fall back upon the deposit of title-deeds as creating an equitable mortgage—Jaitha Bhima v. Haji Abdul, 10 Bom. 634 (644, 645); Madras Deposit Society v. Oonamalai, 18 Mad. 29 (30). “Certainly, if, before the money was advanced, the deeds had been deposited with a view to prepare a future mortgage, such a transaction could not be considered as an equitable mortgage by deposit; but it is otherwise where there is a present advance, and the deeds are deposited under a promise to forbear from suing, although they may be deposited only for the purpose of preparing a future mortgage. In such a case the deeds are given in as part of the security and become pledged from the very nature of the transaction"—Keys v. Williams, 3 Y. & C. 55 (61).

A mortgage by deposit of title-deeds cannot be looked upon as a mere oral transaction as the act of deposit is the essential part of it. In fact, the intention to create security is inferred in such cases from the mere deposit of title-deeds coupled with the loan without more, without writing, without word of mouth—Ralli Brothers v. Punjab National Bank, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 920, 11 Lah. 564, 129 I.C. 21; Chief Controlling Rev. Authority v. Pioneer Spinners Pvt. Ltd., A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 222 (F.B.). Oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any agreement put into writing—Ibid. All that is required is the intention of the lender to hold the title-deeds as security and of the borrower to leave them as security with the lender. If there be any writing to evidence the transaction that will require registration—Nageswara v. Srinivasa, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 743, 94 I.C. 427.

An equitable mortgage stands on the same footing as a simple mortgage—Chettyar Firm v. Vyaravan Chettyar, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 400, 164 I.C. 751; Ally Ramzan v. Balthasar and Sons, Ltd., A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 290, 14 Rang. 292, 163 I.C. 850. So, unless an agreement to the contrary is made, neither the right to possession nor the right to rents and profits are part of the interest which is transferred to the mortgagee—Ibid at p. 291.

As to the appointment of a receiver in such mortgages see Note 408, post.

Where registration necessary :—When title-deeds are deposited with intent to create a security, the law implies the creation of a mortgage, and no registered instrument is necessary under sec. 59. But if the parties choose to reduce the contract to writing, the document will be the sole evidence of its terms and the deposit and the document together form integral part of the transaction. As the deposit alone cannot create the mortgage, the document which constitutes the bargain regarding the security requires registration under sec. 17, Registration Act, where the value of the property is Rs. 100 or upwards. The crucial question is : Did the parties intend to reduce their bargain to the form of a document? If so, it requires registration. If, on the other hand, proper construction and the surrounding circumstances lead to the conclusion that the parties did not intend to do so, then there being no express bargain, the mortgage arises by implication of the law from the deposit itself with the requisite intention, the document being merely evidential does not require registration—Rachpal v. Bhagwandas, A.I.R. 1950 S.C. 272, 1950 S.C.J. 361; United Bank of India Ltd. v. Lekharam Sonaram, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1591; Indersain v. Md. Raza Gauthier, (1961) 2 M.L.J. 328; Rangbati v. United Bank of India Ltd., A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 158; Sham Lal Thakar Dass Agarwal v. Punjab National Bank Ltd., A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 81; Parkash Dev Chopra v. New Bank of India Ltd., A.I.R. 1968 Delhi 244; Binapani v. Rabindra Nath, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 213. In this case the draft memorandum, signed and delivered, was as follows :—"We write to put on record that to secure the repayment of the money already due to you from us on account of the business transactions between yourselves and ourselves and the money that may hereafter become due on account of such transactions, we have this day deposited with you the following title-deeds in Calcutta at your place of businessrelating to our properties at Samastipur with intent to create an equitable mortgage on the said properties to secure all moneys.....on account of the said transactions.....It was held that the memorandum did not require registration. In Kevaldas v. Chhotabhai, A.I.R. 1955 Bom. 454 it has been held that if the memorandum merely records a past transaction of an equitable mortgage then writing does not require to be registered, but that if the memorandum constitutes a contract the writing requires to be registered. See also United Bank of India Ltd. v. Lekhrum Sonaram & Co., A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 472; C. Balajiah v. Central Government and Union of India, A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 51 where it has been held that a subsequent suit to set aside the mortgage decree on the ground of non-registration is incompetent.

Priority :—A mortgage by deposit of title-deeds under a verbal arrangement to secure payment of a debt is a complete act by itself and not a mere "oral agreement or declaration" within the meaning of sec. 48, Registration Act. The holder of a registered instrument does not by virtue of that section take priority over an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds—Gokul Das v. Eastern Mortgage Co., 33 Cal. 410 (422); Coggan v. Pogose, 11 Cal. 158; Mrs. Stewart v. Bank of Upper India, 31 P.R. 1916, 34 I.C. 937. See the new Proviso to sec. 48, Registration Act, added by Act XXI of 1929. A mortgage created by deposit of title-deeds stands in the Province of the Punjab on the same footing as any other mortgage permitted by law. The transaction prior in time takes precedence over subsequent transaction—Ralli Brothers v. Punjab National Bank, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 920, 11 Lah. 564, 129 I.C. 21.

Extent of security :—In the case of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds the scope of the security is the scope of the title—Veerappa v. Ma Tin, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 250, 88 I.C. 1011; Pranjivandas v. Chan Ma Phee, 43 Cal. 895, 43 I.A. 122, 20 C.W.N. 925, 35 I.C. 190. An equitable mortgage will be a security only for the debt specified in the agreement, and will not include debts previously due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee—Mountford v. Scott, T. & R. 274; but it may include such debts, if an intention that it should do appears from the circumstances—Ex parte Farley, 1 M.D. & DeG. 688; Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Ed., p. 19.

An equitable mortgage will affect the beneficial interest of the mortgagor in all the property comprised in the deposited documents including accessions—Manningford v. Toeman, 1 Col. 670; Bhupendra v. Wajihunnissa, 2 P.L.J. 293 (299, 301). Compare sec. 70. It will operate not only on the interest of the debtor at the time of the deposit but also on any interest which he may subsequently acquire—In re Susty, 69 L.T. 160. But an equitable mortgage of a house will not comprise an entirely separate house, attached to that house, which is not included in the title-deed. The rule is that where titles of property are handed over with nothing said except that they are to be security, the law supposes that the scope of the security is the scope of the title-deeds. Where, however, title-deeds are handed over accompanied by a bargain, that bargain must rule. Lastly, when the bargain is a written bargain, it, and it alone, must determine what is the scope and extent of the security—Pranjivandas v. Chan Ma Phee, 43 Cal. 895 (900) (P.C.). An equitable mortgage of a house and godown cannot include a machinery, unless it is attached to the house for the permanent beneficial enjoyment thereof, within the meaning of sec. 8—Veerappa v. Ma Tin, 4 Bur. L.J. 52, 88 I.C. 1011, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 250.

Where title-deeds are deposited under an oral agreement to cover present and future advances, as each advance is made, it becomes a charge on the property comprised in the title-deeds. Fresh deposits of title-deeds for subsequent advances are not necessary—Mohini v. Janaki, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 412, 40 C.W.N. 1277, 166 I.C. 382.

There is an essential distinction between an equitable mortgage as understood in English law and the mortgage by deposit of title-deeds recognised by the T. P. Act—Nathan v. Maruthi Rao, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 430.

ANOMALOUS MORTGAGE :—

See the new clause (g). Under the old section 98, an anomalous mortgage was a mortgage "not being a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, a usufructuary mortgage or an English mortgage, or a combination of the first and third or the second and third of such forms." In other words, a simple mortgage usufructuary (i.e., a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage) and a mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale (i.e., a combination of a usufructuary mortgage and a mortgage by conditional sale) did not fall under the old definition of an anomalous mortgage. See for instance Lal Narsingh v. Mohammad Yakub, 4 Luck. 363 (P.C.), 33 C.W.N. 693 (698), and Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pallaya, 43 Mad. 589 (600), where a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage was held not to be an anomalous mortgage. Under the present clause (g) of section 58, those two classes of mixed mortgages will be included in anomalous mortgages.

"Section 98 only deals with certain classes or types of anomalous mortgages and is not exhaustive. We think it would be better to define anomalous mortgages as covering all mortgages other than those defined in clauses (b) to (f) of section 58 and that the definition should be inserted in this section as a separate clause. The rights and liabilities of the parties under anomalous mortgages should be dealt with in section 98"—Report of the Special Committee.

In construing mortgages of this kind the Courts should be guided by the following principles : In the first place, Courts should not be astute to take a transaction out of the category of recognised mortgages. In the second place, the essential elements of the transaction should be examined to find out whether the constituent parts of the recognised mortgages are found in it. The third principle is that in finding whether there has been a combination or not, the intention of the parties must be given paramount weight to. It is not merely the language in which the document is worded that should conclude Courts. It is really the substance of the transaction that should be looked into—Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pallaya, 43 Mad. 589 (603) (F.B.).

Anomalous mortgages will now include the following classes :—

- (a) combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage ;
- (b) combination of mortgage by conditional sale and usufructuary mortgage ;
- (c) local mortgages, such as otti, kanom, etc. ;
- (d) other miscellaneous forms.

These are considered below in detail :—

Section 58 does not purport to enumerate a complete list of permissible mortgages. It does not enact that a mortgage by absolute transfer shall not be valid unless it complies with all terms of an English mortgage—Shiva Prasad v. Smith, 17 Pat. 499.

347. Combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage :—In a pure usufructuary mortgage, the principal or interest or both are contracted to be satisfied out of the usufruct of the property. The mortgagee, so long as he remains in possession, has no right to claim the mortgage-money, and the mortgagor undertakes no personal liability. But where there is a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt, such covenant is inconsistent with a pure usufructuary mortgage, and it becomes a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage and consequently an anomalous mortgage—Jafar Husen v. Ranjit, 21 All. 4 (8, 10) ; Kangayya v. Kalimuthu, 27 Mad. 526 (527) (F.B.) ; Ramarayanimgar v. Maharaja of Venkatagiri, 50 Mad. 180 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 32 (36) ; Fida Ali v. Ismailji, 6 N.L.R. 20, 5 I.C. 701 ; Dattambhat v. Krishnabhat, 34 Bom. 462 (466) ; Ramayya v. Guruva, 14 Mad. 232 (234) ; Sivakami v. Gopala, 17 Mad. 131 (132) ; Venkataratnam v. Tota Varahaliah, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 768, 139 I.C. 449 ; Hundaldas v. Balukhan, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 452 ; A.I.R. 1943 Sind 59 ; Rupeswari v. Giridhari, A.I.R. 1952 Ass. 19 ; Rahimuddin v. Nayan Chand, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 18 ; Narendra v. Bhagaban, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 147 ; Amarji v. Jaravarsingh, 1953 M.B. 9 ; Ramakammal v. Subbarathnam, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 13 ; Sbbaraya v. Subramanyans, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 856 ; Md. Saeed v. Abdul Alim, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 40 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1946 Lah. 805 ; Chhadamrai v. Ram Naresh, A.I.R. 1943 All. 337 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1943 All. 802. In such a case it is a mixed or anomalous mortgage even if the personal remedy is not accompanied by a right of sale—Akbar Ali v. Maftzuddin, 45 C.W.N. 823, 74 C.L.J. 370, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 55 (58). Thus, a mortgage-deed after acknowledging receipt of the consideration and mortgaging the land with possession (the usufruct apparently being in lieu of interest) contained the following provision as to redemption : "Thereafter on (date) on paying the aforesaid Rs. 200 we shall redeem or recover back our land. If on the date so fixed the amount be not paid, in whatever year we may pay Rs. 200 in full on the 30th Pangu in any year, then you shall deliver back our lands to us". Held that the first sentence contained a promise by the mortgagor to pay on the date named, and that the mortgage was a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage—Kangayya v. Kalimuthu, 27 Mad. 526 (527) (F.B.). A mortgage provided for payment of interest and compound interest ; it also provided that the mortgagee should take possession and enjoy the net profits in lieu of interest and during the time of such possession the interest and the profits should be deemed equal; and it was further agreed that if the profits did not cover the amount of interest, the mortgagors would make good the deficiency from their pockets in accordance with the accounts prepared by the agent of the mortgagee. It was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage—Jawahir v. Sameshar, 28 All. 225 (231) (P.C.). Where by a mortgage landed property was hypothecated, the mortgagee to get and retain possession appropriating the profits after payment of a revenue towards interest, and any further surplus towards principal, but by a further clause it was stipulated that the mortgagors should remain entitled to enhance the rents, eject tenants, cultivate land and grant leases, and that the mortgagee like the mortgagors should possess all the remaining powers during his possession, held that the mortgage was a combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage—Lal Narsingh v. Md. Yakub, 4 Luck. 363, 33 C.W.N. 693 (698) (P.C.). The terms of a mortgage were as follows:—"Possessory mortgage-deed of immoveable property for Rs. 50..... This sum with interest thereon at Re. 1 per cent., per month I shall pay on 23-8-11. If I fail to pay on that date I shall give up the said land as sold to you and execute a proper sale-deed. The property has been delivered possession of to you on this very date.....you shall appropriate the profits towards interest." Held that the first portion of this deed with the covenant to repay with interest contained all the essentials of a simple mortgage, and the latter part (appropriation of profits towards interest) contained the elements of a usufructuary mortgage. It was therefore a combination of the two—Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pallaya, 43 Mad. 589 (599) (F.B.). A mortgage-bond provided as follows:—"The whole debt, including principal and interest will be paid in 4 years.....If the amount due to you on account of principal and interest be not paid within the time fixed, then you are to take up the management of the land and house. We have this day put the said land and house into your possession." Held that it was a combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage—Motiram v. Vitai, 13 Bom. 90 (94). When a due date has been fixed for the payment of the mortgage-money, the mortgage is not a purely usufructuary mortgage—Jag Sahu v. Ram Sakhi, 1 Pat. 350 (355).

But in an Allahabad case it has been held that where the mortgage is in other respects a usufructuary mortgage (e.g., where interest is stipulated to be taken out of the usufruct), the mere insertion of a personal covenant to pay the mortgage debt, unaccompanied by a hypothecation of the property (i.e., without an indication of an intention on the part of the mortgagor to charge the mortgaged property with the payment of the entire mortgage-debt) cannot alter the character of the mortgage, and it is still a pure usufructuary mortgage—Kashi Ram v. Sardar Singh, 28 All. 157 (160) (dissenting from 14 Mad. 232 and 17 Mad. 131).

Where in a simple mortgage-bond it was provided that in case of default in paying the mortgage-money with interest the mortgagee would have the option (akhtiar) to get possession of the hypothecated property in lieu of the principal and interest, it was held to be a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage—Ram Lochan v. Bachhu, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 255 (266), 148 I.C. 1197. Where the mortgage was partly usufructuary, but there was an express promise to pay the sum on a particular date and to redeem the land on that date, it was an anomalous mortgage—Qadir v. Mehr Nur, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 103, 16 Lah. 612, 158 I.C. 206. Where a mortgage-deed contained one clause which would make it a usufructuary mortgage, but another clause provided in the most explicit terms recovery of the amount due from the mortgaged property, it was an anomalous mortgage—Mohan Devi v. Talib Mehdi, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 145. A deed of mortgage with possession provided for payment of principal and interest at a specified rate. By a separate document of the same date the mortgagee leased part of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor providing that upon default in payment of the rent reserved it should be a charge upon the property included in the mortgage-deed. It was held by the Privy Council that it was an anomalous mortgage—Panaganti v. Venkatagiri, 50 Mad. 180 (P.C.). A mortgage-deed provided that on receipt of a certain amount the possession of the property was made over to the mortgagee. It was then stipulated that after a period of 28 years the debt would be extinguished both as regards principal and interest. There was a stipulation by which the mortgagor agreed that in the event of the mortgagee being dispossessed of the property in any way the mortgagor would on account of the period of depression be liable to pay interest at a certain rate per month. There was in addition to this a personal covenant to pay, held that the mortgage was an anomalous mortgage—Suresh v. Jadav, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 373.

Where a usufructuary mortgage (dakhali rehan) deed provided that so long as the principal was not paid the mortgagees were to remain in possession and if they were dispossessed they would realize the principal in any manner they liked and as security for the realization of the money in that event the land was mortgaged, it was held that it was a plain usufructuary mortgage of the kind described in clauses (a) and (d) of sec. 58 and not a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage—Udai Singh v. Bhunesharnath, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 94, 167 I.C. 755. The definition of a usufructuary mortgage in cl. (d) of sec. 58 refers to payment of the mortgage-money only in connection with the mortgagee's rights to retain possession and includes nothing inconsistent with its application to mortgages containing a condition for mere postponement of the right to repay. The mere fact that in a usufructuary mortgage there is a condition barring redemption within 5 years of the date of mortgage, would not take it out of the category of a usufructuary mortgage and make it an anomalous one—Vaddiparthi v. Cadimsetti, 41 M.L.J. 563, 68 I.C. 717.

For other instances of anomalous mortgage, see Dharameshwari v. Labhyadhar, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 197 and Amarji v. Joravarsingh, A.I.R. 1953 M.B. 9.

348. Mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale :—This is a combination of a mortgage by conditional sale and a usufructuary mortgage.

As instances of this kind of mortgage, mention may be made of Katkabala Muddata Kriyam (Ramasami v. Samiappa, 4 Mad. 179) or Bye-bil-wafa with possession (Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narain, 14 Cal. 730). A mortgage with possession provided that the rents and profits should be set off against the interest, that the mortgage should not be redeemable for 5 years, and that if the mortgage was not redeemed within a period of 20 years, the mortgagee should treat the lands as having been sold to him absolutely. Held that the mortgage was an anomalous mortgage, or a combination of a usufructuary mortgage and a mortgage by conditional sale—Narayanamurthi v. Applanarasimhulu, 41 M.L.J. 563, 68 I.C. 717. A mortgage-deed covenanted that the mortgagee should have possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest, that the mortgage-debt was payable at the end of the year 1307, and that if the mortgagors failed to pay the amount of the debt at the end of the specified period, the mortgagee should be at liberty to foreclose according to law. Held that the mortgage combined the incidents of a mortgage by conditional sale with an incident of a usufructuary mortgage—Sita Nath v. Thakurdas, 46 Cal. 448 (452).

Under a mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale, if the mortgagee fails to obtain possession, he is entitled to sue for possession of the mortgaged property or for the mortgage-money at once under sec. 68. But he is not bound to take the former course, nor is he obliged under sec. 68 to sue at once. It is open to him to bring a suit for the recovery of the mortgage-debt with interest, the money to be realised by foreclosure. This suit is in effect a suit under secs. 67 and 68 combined—Sita Nath v. Thakurdas, 46 Cal. 448 (454). Where a deed states that H has delivered possession of his property to K on receiving Rs. 700/- as loan and that K will be the absolute owner if the money is not repaid within 10 years, the transaction is a mortgage though described as a conditional sale in the deed—Hamappa Sanyappa v. Ramangouda, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 575.

A mortgage-deed provided that the property was mortgaged without possession. It contained a covenant to pay the principal and the accumulated compound interest at the end of the period of 5 years, there was also a provision that the mortgagors were not to be entitled to redeem earlier than at the expiration of 5 years, and finally it provided that in case of non-payment of the entire amount of principal and compound interest, the mortgagees would, after expiry of the stipulated period, have power to obtain proprietary possession of the entire property mortgaged by bringing a suit for a decree for foreclosure: held, the mortgage was not a mortgage by conditional sale, but was an anomalous mortgage—Ujagar Lal v. Lokendra Singh, A.I.R. 1941 All. 169, 1941 A.L.J. 111. The test whether a particular document was a mortgage by conditional sale or is some other kind of mortgage is not what the parties have said it is, but is rather whether it fulfils those statutory requirements which the legislature has laid down—Ibid.

348A. Local forms of Anomalous mortgage :—(1) Otti mortgages of Malabar. An otti mortgage, according to Malabar law, is not redeemable before the expiration of 12 years from the date—Edathil v. Kapa-sham, 1 M.H.C.R. 122, Keshava v. Keshava, 2 Mad. 45.

(2) Kanom mortgages of Malabar. A Kanom is an anomalous mortgage—Chandan v. Muhammad, 1914 M.W.N. 618. A Kanom may be a lease or a mortgage; it is a mere lease, if a sum is advanced as security for the rent or proper cultivation, to be repaid on the expiry of the term; and is a mortgage, if it is made to secure a loan advanced to the jenmi—Silapani v. Ashtamurthi, 3 Mad. 382 (F.B.). But ordinarily, and in the absence of special circumstances, it is to be treated as a mortgage—Raman v. Krishna, 6 Mad. 325 (326). And since it partakes of the nature of a usufructuary mortgage and a lease, it is an anomalous mortgage—Kannakurup v. Sankarvarma, 44 Mad. 344. A kanom mortgage also, like an otti mortgage, cannot be redeemed before the lapse of 12 years from the date of its execution, unless the parties have by express contract provided for its redemption at an earlier date—Kelu Nedungadi v. Krishnan, 26 Mad. 727 (728); Kasara v. Govindan, 5 Mad. 310. For all the incidents of a kanom see Parvati v. Makkam, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 187 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1952 Mad. 92 and Mariamamma v. Raman Pillai, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 273. For the purpose of understanding whether a particular document is a kanom one may see whether it provided for liability to pay renewal fee—Nambudiri v. Kartheya, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 176. Where all the terms generally found in a kanom are contained in a kanomkuzhikanom deed the fact that the parties agreed to one or more terms in addition does not make it the less a kanom—Madhavi v. Sucheela, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 612, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 556. For the incidents of a kanapaltam tenure and the distinction between a kanom and a usufructuary mortgage, see Sanku v. Hari, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 333 (F.B.).

Chitham is an anomalous mortgage. For the nature of chitham and vatantor see Bhagwanji v. Thacker, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 65.

(3) Illudarwara of Malabar.—Sec 1 M.H.C.R. 81 and 4 Mad. 113.

(4) Paruvartham of Malabar.—The characteristic feature of this kind of mortgage is that in redeeming the mortgage, the market-value of the land at the time, and not the amount for which it was mortgaged, is to be paid before restoration of the mortgaged land—Shekari Varma v. Mangalam, 1 Mad. 57.

(5) San mortgage of Gujerat. Its peculiarity is that the san mortgage without possession has priority over a subsequent bona fide purchaser with possession—Paramaya v. Sonde Shrinivasapa, 4 Bom. 459.

348B. Other instances of anomalous mortgage :—A contract of mortgage by which the mortgagor, in lieu of a sum due on account, made over to the mortgagee certain land for enjoyment for a certain number of years "in liquidation of the aforesaid rupees, and after the expiry of the said period the mortgagees will have no right whatever to the land," was held to be an anomalous mortgage—Tukaram v. Ramchand, 26 Bom. 252. Under a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession 'until payment of the mortgage-money' (sec. 58), so that no period of time can be fixed during which the mortgage is to subsist; however; the parties stipulate that the mortgage is for a definite period during which the mortgagee is to remain in possession, and after the end of the period the mortgagor shall be entitled to redeem, the mortgage does not strictly fall under the definition given in sec. 58 (d) but will be treated as an anomalous mortgage—Hikmatulla v. Imam Ali, 12 All. 203 (205). So also, where a mortgage-deed ran as follows.—"As we have received Rs. 500, you will, in lieu of the said amount and interest, enjoy the said property for three years by virtue of the arakatta otti. . . . on the condition that, on the expiry of the said three years, we should redeem the land without paying either principal and interest. You will, on the expiry of the said period, deliver possession of the said immoveable property, without raising any objection." Held that the instrument created an anomalous mortgage—Visvalinga v. Palaniappa, 21 Mad. 1 (3).

A mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee would be put in possession of the mortgaged properties and appropriate the usufruct towards payment of interest, after paying the landlord's rent; that the mortgagor would pay off the debt within 8 years and take back the properties; that in case of default the mortgagee would be entitled to recover his dues by suit, by sale of the mortgaged properties as well as other properties of the mortgagor; and that in case any hindrance or obstruction was offered to the possession of the mortgagee, he would be entitled to sue for and recover the amount of the bond. Held that the mortgage was neither simple nor usufructuary but an anomalous mortgage—Gajadhar v. Sibananda, 28 C.W.N. 532, 81 I.C. 768, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 592; Jagannath Prasad Tulsiram v. Kanti Prasad Batlilal, A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 305; A. V. Rama Chandra Naidu v. Hassina Bi, (1968) I.M.L.J. 139. A mortgage with possession for a fixed term without any provision for accounting is in the nature of an anomalous mortgage, and it automatically redeems itself at the end of the fixed period—Bhika v. Sheikh Amir, 19 N.L.R. 1, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 60 (61). In a mortgage-bond it was provided thus: "We shall pay off your said amount within three years from to-day. But if in the meantime a third party brings any suit against us or any one of us and attaches or brings into auction any property of us, then without waiting for the due date you shall forthwith bring a suit for foreclosure of this Katkobala and having got a decree shall be the owners of the properties mentioned in the schedule below." Held that this was an anomalous mortgage, and not a mortgage by conditional sale—Solema v. Hafez, 54 Cal. 687, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 836, 104 I.C. 833. Where in a mortgage-deed there was a covenant by the mortgagor to pay interest, but no covenant to repay the principal, and subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagor deposited certain title-deeds not mentioned in the mortgage-document, as further security, held that this was neither a simple nor an equitable mortgage, but an anomalous mortgage—Gupta v. Administrator-General, 5 Rang. 558, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 16 (17).

In a mortgage-deed described to be a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor stated that he had put the mortgagee in possession. The deed, however, authorized the mortgagee to demand the mortgage-money at any time and conferred on him the power to realize it by sale of the property. It was further provided that the property would remain hypothecated until the mortgagor paid up the mortgage-money and redeemed the property: held that the mortgage was an anomalous mortgage—Mir Singh v. Raghubir Singh, A.I.R. 1939 All. 615, 184 I.C. 873. Where under a mortgage without possession a period was fixed for payment of the mortgage debt, and in default the mortgagee was entitled to enter into possession, the mortgage is an anomalous mortgage subject to foreclosure—Govinda v. Narain, A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 107. Where a mortgage provides that the factory is mortgaged with possession, that the mortgage-money is repayable in annual instalments and that in default of payment of five instalments the factory shall be deemed to have been foreclosed with the right of redemption extinguished, the transaction is an anomalous mortgage with a right to foreclose—Vijay Kumar v. Ramprasad, A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 411.

348C. Sub-mortgage:—In ordinary parlance, the term "sub-mortgage" is often used as synonymous with a puisne mortgage, but the two are really different. Puisne mortgage means a second or subsequent mortgage executed by the mortgagor; but a sub-mortgage is a "mortgage of a mortgage," i.e., a mortgage executed by the mortgagee of his security under the original mortgage. A mortgage may be transferred by the mortgagee to some creditor of his own by way of mortgage; such a mortgage of a mortgage is known as "sub-mortgage."

The sub-mortgagee simply has a simple mortgage of a mortgage. The right given to him by the sub-mortgage is, in default of payment, to sell the interest mortgaged to him and to sell through the Court. He has no privity of contract or privity of estate with the original mortgagor such as would under the English law give him the right to join the original mortgagor and sell or foreclose in the suit which he files primarily against his sub-mortgagor and also secondarily against the original mortgagor—Maung Po v. Ma Ngwe, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 56, 167 I.C. 449. But see Vijayaraghavalu v. Arunachalam, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 165, 48 M.L.W. 766 where it has been held that a sub-mortgagee may maintain a suit against the original mortgagor; see also the cases cited there and Vengannan v. Ramaswami, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 498, (1943) 1 M.L.J. 342. See in this connection Manavala v. Md. Yoosaf, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 100, I.L.R. 1943 Mad. 195.

A sub-mortgagee stands in no higher position than the mortgagee. He is bound by the state of account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. He must take the accounts as they stand after the creation of the security, unless he protects himself by giving notice to the mortgagor—Bhagwati Prasad v. Dullan Singh, I.L.R. 1939 All. 943, A.I.R. 1939 All. 719, 1939 A.L.J. 924. A mortgaged certain property to B who mortgaged it with some other properties to C. A had no notice of the sub-mortgage. B obtained a decree against A, but did not execute it. C thereafter obtained a decree against B and purchased the property in execution. A's heirs then sued for the property. C contended that he was not bound by the decree in B's suit and that the security still subsisted; held that though the security subsisted for certain purposes after the passing of the final decree, it subsisted only in respect of the decretal amount and so the sub-mortgagee was not entitled to claim the total amount on his sub-mortgage—Ibid.

Where a mortgagee became insolvent and thereupon the Official Receiver purported to sell by auction the property of the insolvent including his claim under the mortgage and the purchaser sued on the mortgage, before a formal registered sale-deed was executed, without impleading the Official Receiver, it was held that the purchaser was not entitled to sue as an assignee of the mortgage-right in the absence of a registered deed of transfer—Vijayaraghavalu v. Arunachalam, supra, relying on Skinner v. Bank of Upper India, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 108, 57 All. 314, 62 I.A. 115, 155 I.C. 743.

A sub-mortgage may be made either by an assignment by the mortgagee of his interest, or by deposit of title-deeds where this is permissible.

An equitable sub-mortgage by mere deposit of title-deeds without a registered document can be validly made even of an equitable mortgage—

Maung Thaung v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 366, 164 I.C. 724; Gurnam Kaur v. R. K. Banerji, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 69, 14 Rang. 522, 168 I.C. 830; Ramanathan v. Dowlat Singhji, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 865 (874), (1938) 2 M.L.J. 534. A sub-mortgage of an equitable mortgage is deemed to be concluded on the day on which the deeds are deposited—Gokul v. Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co., 33 Cal. 410.

A sub-mortgagee of mortgage-rights in immoveable property is entitled to a decree for sale of the mortgage-rights of his mortgagor—Ram Shankar v. Ganesh, 29 All. 385 (F.B.). In a properly constituted suit, the sub-mortgagee may have a sale of the interest mortgaged to him, subject to the right of redemption of the original mortgagor—Ibid (at p. 406).

A sub-mortgage is only good to the extent of the amount due on the original security, on payment of which the security is released and the deeds must be handed back to the mortgagor—Mathews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. 118; Maung Shan v. U. Po, 5 Rang. 749, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 30 (31). The sub-mortgagee cannot recover anything more than the amount due to the original mortgagee from the original mortgagor, whatever may be the state of the account between himself and the original mortgagee—Nga Kye v. Nga Po Min, U.B.R. (1906) Sub-mortgage 1. And the original mortgagee cannot recover from the original mortgagor anything more than the amount stipulated in the mortgage, whatever may be the contract between the mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee—Imdad Hasan v. Badri, 20 All. 401 (408). The sub-mortgagee becomes an assignee of the debt. Under all legal principles he is entitled therefore to recover the debt and to realize it from the security though he is bound, no doubt, to render an account of the sum recovered, and, if it exceeds the sum due to him, to pay over the surplus to his own mortgagor—Chela Ram v. Walidad, 31 P.R. 1900 (F.B.). The original mortgagor is entitled to sue the sub-mortgagee for redemption; conversely, the latter may sue the former for recovery of his money out of the mortgaged property—Nga Kye v. Nga Po, supra.

The position of the original mortgagee in relation to the sub-mortgagee is that of a surety, and he is thus entitled to recover the debt from the original debtor, but is bound to pay it over to the sub-mortgagee in discharge of the sub-mortgage—Gurney v. Seppings, 2 Phil. 40; Dost Mohammad v. Dheru Mal, A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 25, 189 I.C. 665. The sub-mortgagee can enforce his claim against the mortgaged property as well as against the mortgagee. The only reservation is that if notice of the sub-mortgage is not given to the mortgagor and the latter pays the mortgage-money to the mortgagee, the sub-mortgagee loses his right to proceed against the property—Ibid. A sub-mortgagee is not privy to the original contract of mortgage and until and unless he gives notice to the mortgagor, the latter has got every right to redeem the mortgage and get rid of the liabilities thereunder. The sub-mortgagee has a remedy in such circumstances against his transferor only, that is to say, the mortgagee—Bhag Chand v. Sujan Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 73 (76); Viswanath v. Chimmitt Kutti, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 115, 55 Mad. 320, 135 I.C. 535. If payment of the original mortgage-debt is made by the original mortgagor to the original mortgagee without notice of the sub-mortgage, the sub-mortgage is extinguished, and the sub-mortgagee cannot hold the property against the original mortgagor—Maung Shan v. U Po, supra. See also Sahadev v.

Sheikh Papa Miya, 29 Bom. 199 (202). If the original mortgagor had notice of the sub-mortgage, he is bound to pay his debt to the sub-mortgagee, and the sub-mortgagee can hold the property against the original mortgagor, till the sub-mortgage is redeemed—Nga Kye v. Nga Po, supra; Ma Myat v. Ma Nyan, 2 Rang. 561 (565), A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 140.

The sub-mortgagee, by virtue of his assignment, is not only entitled to the usual remedies against his mortgagor (i.e., the original mortgagee) but is also entitled to a remedy against the original mortgagor; the position of the original mortgagee after the sub-mortgage becomes that of a surety, the sub-mortgagee becomes the creditor and the original mortgagor continues to remain the debtor. The original mortgagee is not entitled to exercise a power of sale as against the mortgagor. The sub-mortgagee is not bound by the result of any suit brought by the original mortgagee, for the operation of the sub-mortgage is to transfer to the sub-mortgagee all the rights and remedies the original mortgagee had against the original mortgagor. Where the debt has not been discharged, and the original mortgagee has already obtained a decree on his mortgage, which he has failed to execute within limitation, there is no bar to the exercise of the sub-mortgagee's right to the sale of the mortgaged property—Kanhaiya Lal v. Mahadeo, 18 I.C. 389 (Oudh).

Where a sub-mortgage is created for a lesser amount than that of the original mortgage and the claim of the sub-mortgagee is less, a decree obtained by the latter for his claim making both the mortgagor and original mortgagee parties to his suit does not preclude the original mortgagee from asserting his right in a subsequent suit, the causes of action being separate—Mohideen v. Nagore, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 799, (1937) M.L.J. 536. Where the original mortgagee creates a sub-mortgage over some of the mortgaged property and brings a suit on his mortgage against the mortgagor to which the sub-mortgagee refuses for some reason or other to be joined as plaintiff, the original mortgagee can maintain the suit to assert the right which still vested in him—Mohan Devi v. Talib Mehdi, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 145 (148).

Where in ignorance of the existence of a sub-mortgage, the original mortgagor substituted the original mortgage by another mortgage covering a distinct property, and the sub-mortgagee brought a suit for sale of the original property sub-mortgaged to him, held that the substitution of the original mortgage by a new one in favour of the mortgagee did not extinguish the sub-mortgage, and therefore the sub-mortgagee was entitled to bring the mortgagee's interest under the earlier mortgage to sale. Held also that the mortgagor's remedy against the sub-mortgagee was just what he would have had against the original mortgagee, if the latter sought to enforce his debt against that particular property, viz., to redeem by paying the amount sued for—Chakrapani Chetty v. Lakshmi Achi, 35 M.L.J. 309, 45 I.C. 769. There is no necessity for the original mortgagee to give notice of the sub-mortgage to the mortgagor, and such want of notice will not render the sub-mortgage invalid—Ibid.

It is, however, a well-settled principle of law that if the sub-mortgagee gives no notice to the original mortgagor of the assignment of the mortgagee's rights in his favour the original mortgagor would be justified in paying the debt wholly or in part to the assignor thereby extinguishing the original mortgage altogether. It follows that on such an extinction the sub-mortgagee has no remedy left against the property—Mohan Singh v. Sewa Ram, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 209, 75 I.C. 579; Fateh Bahadur v. Mt. Subhago, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 265, 175 I.C. 563. The question of notice will, however, arise if payment has in fact been made. The mere fact that the consideration or a part of it was not paid by the transferee is not sufficient to show that the right did not pass to the transferee, when it is otherwise clear that it was the intention of the parties that the transaction was to be effective—Ibid at p. 266.

348D. Mortgage of moveables :—In India, mortgage of moveables in the premises, existing at the time as also those which might be subsequently acquired and brought there, is valid—H. V. Low & Co. v. Pulin-behari, 59 Cal. 1372, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 154. A mortgage of moveable property can be created orally without delivery of possession, and the mortgagee is entitled to a decree for sale as much as a mortgagee of immoveable property—People's Bank of India v. Forbes, Forbes Campbell & Co., A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 398 and the authorities cited there. See also Co-operative Hindusthan Bank v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 524 (526), 36 C.W.N. 263, 138 I.C. 852; and Dwarampudi v. Kamajulu, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 241, 56 Mad. 500, 142 I.C. 96; Kesrimal v. Bansilal, A.I.R. 1952 M.B. 196; Pran-shankar v. Raghunath, A.I.R. 1952 Sau. 107. A holder of a charge on moveable property who has obtained a personal decree for his debt cannot, however, without leave of the Court, sue to enforce his mortgage-security. Order 34, r. 14 does not apply as it relates to immoveable property only. But his charge is not extinguished and he is entitled to all rights thereunder as defendant in a prior mortgagee's suit—Official Assignee v. Chinnivram, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 51, 57 Bom. 346. A mortgagee in possession of moveable property has on the insolvency of the mortgagor a right to sell the property without intervention of the Court. His right is in no way inferior to that of a pledgee—In re Ahmed, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 613, 34 Bom. L.R. 1398.

Where there is a mortgage of moveable property and it is allowed by the mortgagee to remain in possession of the mortgagor as ostensible owner, and the property is again mortgaged to a third party and sold, the first mortgagee cannot recover from the second mortgagee unless he can show that the second mortgagee had notice of the prior mortgage. Section 179 of the Contract Act has no application to such a case—Dāyalji v. Karachi Electric Supply Co., A.I.R. 1940 Sind 177, 190 I.C. 790; K. M. S. Mallayan Chettiar v. Sivarama Pillai Krishna, A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 162.

Hypothecation of moveable property is not a mortgage within the meaning of cl. (a) of sec 58 ante and hence sec. 59 post does not apply and the mortgage need not be registered—Avana Mana v. Mangat Valapil, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 293, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 805, 1941 M.W.N. 751.

A mortgagee of moveable property is not entitled to claim possession. His right is only to enforce the mortgage by suing for a sale of the property or by the appointment of a receiver to secure possession of it in order that his security may be realized—Venkatachalam v. Venkatrami, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 456, 1940 M.W.N. 978, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 929.

The right of a mortgagor of movable property, may be to sue for redemption and that of a mortgagee to sue for foreclosure where that is the term of the contract—Jagannath v. Fatechand, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 368, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 243.

Such a mortgage should be distinguished from a pledge under sec. 172, Contract Act. In a mortgage of movables the intention is to pass the ownership to the mortgagee, though this may be without possession, while in a pledge there must be delivery of possession and it does not pass ownership—Ibid. See also Kesrimal v. Bansilal, supra and Padam Singh v. Ram Krishan A.I.R. 1954 M. B. 6.

Mortgage of growing crops:—As immovable property does not include growing crops under sec. 3, ante, a deed of mortgage of immovable property and also of the produce realized therefrom every year operates in respect of the produce on the land as mortgage of movable property. The moment the crop comes into existence the mortgagee gets title to the crop—Venkatachalam v. Venkatarami, supra. So long as the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to remove the crops and does not secure them during the year the crops were raised, he loses his right to them. His rights cannot prevail against a bona fide assignee from the mortgagor without notice of the mortgage of the produce—Ibid.

59. Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage, other than a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.

Where the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by a registered instrument signed and attested as aforesaid, or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property.

(Omitted.)

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein, Akyab and in any other town which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, specify in this behalf, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon.

Amendment : —By sec. 20 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), the italicised words have been added in the first para, and the last para has been omitted. The addition of the words in the first para is consequential to the omission of the last para; and this last para has been transferred to clause (g) of sec. 58 with slight verbal alterations. See Note 356.

Scope :—Where a mortgage transaction is entered into and completed within an area in which this Act is in force but the property is situate outside such area, the form and validity of the mortgage deed are determined by the lex situs of the property and not by the lex loci contractus—Iqbal Begam v. Uttam Chand, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 324 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1947 Lah. 828.

348E. Principal money secured :—The term “principal money secured” is intended to show that interest or any other addition is not to be taken into account in calculating the value of the instrument for the purpose of registration—Habibulla v. Nackched, 5 All. 447 (F.B.); Ram-doolary v. Thacoor, 4 Cal. 61; Kattamuri v. Padalu, 5 Mad. 119; Nago v. Babaji, 8 Bom. 610; Laxman Rao v. Kesho, 4 N.L.R. 90; Gama v. Lahanoo, 4 N.L.R. 86. A bond showed that Rs. 90 was due and the mortgagor agreed to pay that sum in 18 years by six-monthly instalments of Rs. 5 each carrying a certain interest. He was, in case of default, liable for the payment of the whole sum of Rs. 180 plus interest. Held that the principal sum secured by the mortgage was Rs. 90, and that the deed did not require registration—Jodh Ram v. Lajja Ram, 11 A.L.J. 729, 21 I.C. 78.

349. Registration :—Prior to the amendment of clause (c) of sec. 58, a mortgage by conditional sale was usually effected by means of two deeds, one purporting to be a deed of sale and the other containing an agreement to reconvey within a certain period; and both documents had to be registered. If, in such a case, the deed of sale was alone registered, and the agreement to reconvey was unregistered, the latter document was inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that the agreement along with the absolute conveyance constituted a mortgage by conditional sale—Puttisesha v. Kuppachar, 1919 M.W.N. 87; Namdev v. Dhondur, 22 Bom. L.R. 979; Muthu Venkatachalapati v. Pyunda Venkatachalapati, 27 Mad. 348. See in this connection Rajjula v. Jalaluddin, A.I.R. 1950 Hyd. 51. Under the present law, however, a mortgage by conditional sale must be effected by only one document. See Note 338 under sec. 58.

The requirements of this section cannot be got over by applying the doctrine of part performance. Consequently an admission by the mortgagor that the mortgagee was in possession of the property as mortgagee under an oral mortgage for a consideration of more than Rs. 100 cannot create a mortgage; nor is an entry in the record of rights to that effect sufficient. The principle that once a mortgage always a mortgage will not be applied as there is no mortgage at all—Bishan v. Sheodhari, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 110, 12 B.R. 599. Where the property is worth Rs. 100 or upwards and the purported mortgage-deed is neither attested nor registered, it is not liable to stamp duty—Crompton Engineering Co. v. Chief Controlling Revenue Authority, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 764 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1953 Mad. 566. Where a prior mortgage is recorded in Book IV instead of Book I by mistake, it is a mere defect of procedure covered by sec. 87, Registration Act, and the mortgage is not invalid—Varadaraja v. Kailasam, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 175, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 355.

Under the first para of this section, a simple mortgage for Rs. 100 or upwards, must be effected by a registered instrument. The second para lays down that a mortgage under Rs. 100 may be effected by a registered instrument or by delivery; but delivery of possession does not take place in a simple mortgage. So, a simple mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument, irrespective of the amount of the loan—Mg. Shwe Bya v. Chawari, 4 Bur. L.T. 219, 12 I.C. 25.

(It should be noted that the words "registered instrument" in the second para have been substituted by the Amendment Act of 1904 for the words "an instrument" ; and therefore prior to 1904, a simple mortgage of value less than Rs. 100 could be created by an unregistered instrument.)

In case of the other kinds of mortgage, if the money secured is less than Rs. 100, delivery of possession would be sufficient. The validity of such a possessory mortgage is not liable to be affected by the fact that an unregistered document is also executed—Habibur v. Rasul, 19 A.L.J. 376, 62 I.C. 859. But if the mortgage is made in writing, and no delivery of possession takes place, the writing must be registered, for sec. 4 has abolished optional registration in respect of all instruments executed after 11th March 1904. Compare the cases cited in Note 290 under sec. 54. As to competition between possession and registration, see the analogous cases of sale in Note 291 under sec. 54. The holder of a prior unregistered mortgage (which is not compulsorily registrable) with possession cannot be defeated by a subsequent mortgagee under a registered deed, because the possession of the prior mortgagee would amount to notice to the subsequent mortgagee—Bhikhi v. Udit Narain, 25 All. 366 (370) ; Krishnamma v. Suramma, 16 Mad. 148 (170).

An unregistered simple mortgage cannot stand in competition with any other valid mortgage.

Where the mortgage-deed purported to mortgage fruit-bearing trees, such as mango and jaman trees as immoveable property, it was held that the mortgage could not be effected without the formalities prescribed by this section—Shiv Dayal v. Putto Lal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 50, 54 All. 437, 140 I.C. 491.

A husband and wife borrowed Rs. 500 and subsequently put the lender in possession of their land by an oral transaction. The lender utilized the usufruct of the land in payment of interest on the loan. There was no mortgage but the lender alleged that he was put into possession as usufructuary mortgagee: held, that as this was an entirely oral transaction, it was ineffective to create any interest in the land—U Talok v. Maung Tha, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 148, 169 I.C. 945.

A document effecting a change in the rate of interest payable on a mortgage is not, however, a change in the mortgagee's interest in the land and therefore does not require registration—Mt. Parbati v. Gopal Das, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 481, 40 P.L.R. 291.

It is not ordinarily obligatory for a person who takes a registered mortgage to secure the title-deeds of the property mortgaged, and ordinarily his registered mortgage is sufficient protection to him—Wan Taik v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 26, 155 I.C. 954.

Invalid registration:—If a property has been introduced in a mortgage-bond, which has either no existence or does not belong to the mortgagor, with a view to effect the registration of the bond in a particular office, the registration must be deemed to be invalid, with the result that there is no enforceable security under sec. 59 of this Act—Kedarnath v. Jayanta, 38 C.L.J. 355, 70 I.C. 583, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 348; Kesari v. Musafir, A.I.R. 1937 All. 711, (1937) A.L.J. 815, 171 I.C. 825; Akshoyalingam v. Ramayya, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 426, 120 I.C. 876; Harendra v. Haridasi, 41 Cal. 972, 41 I.A. 110; Biswanath v. Chandra Narayan, 48 Cal. 509, 48 I.A. 127. Where a plot of land in another district was purchased and included in a mortgage-deed, but it was found that the purchase was a paper transaction only, the registration of the mortgage was invalid—Parsotam v. Ali Haidar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 493, 171 I.C. 233; Biswanath v. Chandra Narayan, supra.

Where a mortgage-deed, dated 4th October, 1910, was presented by a person for registration under a power-of-attorney, dated 9th February, 1910, which stated that the executants authorized him to present the deed which they had already executed on 8th February, 1910, but the date was subsequently altered to 4th October, 1910, the Privy Council held that the deed was not properly registered not being presented for registration by an authorized agent. The registering officer had no jurisdiction to register it. It was pleaded that the executants represented that the person presenting the document had such authority but their Lordships overruled this plea on the ground that the express provisions of the Registration Act not having been complied with, there could be no estoppel—Dottie Karan v. Lachmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 52 (57), 10 Pat. 481, 35 C.W.N. 354, 131 I.C. 321. But see Hunter v. Damodar, A.I.R. 1924 All. 772, 46 All. 759, 81 I.C. 508.

Where the subject-matter of a mortgage has not been identified at all for the purposes of registration within the meaning of sec. 21 of the Registration Act, the document, even if registered, would not be valid—Nahar Lal v. Baij Nath, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 385, 32 C.W.N. 241, 47, C.L.J. 124.

Effect of non-registration :—If a transaction intended to be a mortgage, and requiring registration, is not registered, the mortgage is not converted into a charge under sec. 100—Somasundaram v. Nachiappa, 2 Rang. 429 (436); Maung Tun v. Mg. Aung Dun, 2 Rang. 313 (318). See Note 533 under sec. 100.

If a mortgage-security be invalid by reason of want of registration, it is invalid for all purposes and against all. It cannot be invalid only as between the mortgagee and a subsequent mortgagee—Krishnaswami v. Chevulu Kamalamma, 46 C.W.N. 29 (P.C.).

An unregistered deed of simple mortgage is not receivable in evidence for the purpose of affecting immoveable property, but it will be received as evidence of a personal obligation and will be admissible to prove the debt for the purpose of granting a simple money-decree—Kattamuri v. Padalu, 5 Mad. 119; Ulfatunnissa v. Hossain Khan, 9 Cal. 520 (F.B.); Vani v. Bani, 20 Bom. 553; Comaji v. Subbarayappa, 15 Mad. 253; Jadu v. Bhagwat, 7 A.L.J. 71; Ram Autar v. Ram Asre, 66 I.C. 680 (Oudh); Myat Thin v. Kasi-viswanathan, 4 L.B.R. 52; Nemdhari v. Bissessuri, 2 C.W.N. 591; Sadik v. Basaviah, 17 M.L.J. 167; Quan Cheng v. Maung Po, 66 I.C. 589; Hari Chand v. Kartar Singh, A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu. 56; Mon Koch v. Dhaniram Bora, A.I.R. 1968 Assam 10. It may also be admissible in evidence to prove an acknowledgment of liability on the part of the executant sufficient to save limitation—Mugniram v. Gurmukh, 26 Cal. 334; Sheo Dial v. Prag Dat, 3 All. 229; Lachman Singh v. Kesri, 4 All. 3. See the new proviso to sec. 49, Registration Act, added by Act XXI of 1929. (Appendix V). But see Mst. Sanjya v. Chauthmal, A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 129 and Mohanlal Ganeshram v. Gajraisingh, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 178. In the latter case it has been held that if an unregistered mortgage bond says that the mortgagor will repay the amount borrowed, namely, Rs. 600 after two years and the mortgagee will enjoy the usufruct in the meantime in lieu of interest, the bond is inadmissible in evidence in a suit to recover Rs. 600.

Until the mortgage-deed has been registered, the mortgagee is not under any obligation to advance any mortgage-money to the mortgagor. Consequently, it is not open to the creditor of the mortgagor to attach the mortgage-money in the hand of the mortgagee until registration of the mortgage—Tulsiram v. Harakh Narain, A.I.R. 1922 All. 384 (385).

But non-registration may be cured if the mortgage has been acted upon by the parties for a long period. Thus, money-decree for Rs. 300 was compromised by the parties, and they came to an agreement (which was embodied in an application to the Court) under which the plaintiffs were put in possession of certain plots belonging to the defendants, and it was further agreed that the plaintiffs would take the usufruct in lieu of interest and the defendants would be entitled to redeem on payment of Rs. 300. The agreement embodying the compromise was not registered but the plaintiffs remained in possession for more than fifty years, when it was challenged on the ground of want of registration and attestation. Held that although the formalities had not been complied with, still it is now far too late to challenge a mortgage which has in fact been given effect to for 50 years—Ram Sewak v. Sheo Naik, 45 All. 388 (389). Even where the mortgage is not a valid transaction because of non-compliance with sec. 59, the person inducted on the property as mortgagee may acquire the status of mortgagee by prescription, and the mortgagee or his vendee is entitled to redeem—Sukra Oraon v. Jagat Mohon, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 245; Rupa Nonia v. Ram Brich, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 164. It is for the mortgagee to have a proper and valid mortgage-deed executed in his favour. Therefore, where a mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property under a deed which requires registration but is not registered, the principle "once a mortgage always a mortgage" applies, and he cannot be permitted to resist the redemption by the mortgagor—Rajpati v. Sukwaro, 63 I.C. 400 (Pat.).

An unregistered deed of usufructuary mortgage (for more than Rs. 100) cannot be recognized by the Court in proof of the mortgage, and consequently a suit by the mortgagor for redemption, on the basis of the unregistered mortgage, is not maintainable—Ma Thaing v. Maung Chit, 7 Rang. 140, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 179 (180). In this case the mortgagee did not obtain possession. But if the mortgagee obtains possession under an unregistered usufructuary mortgage, he will be entitled to retain possession until the debt is paid off. The mortgagor cannot bring a suit for redemption, the mortgage being invalid, but he will be entitled to bring a suit for possession on his offering to repay the loan, and the Court will decree the suit conditional on his repaying the amount of the loan—Maung Tun v. Maung Aung Dun, 2 Rang. 313 (317, 318); Maung Po Sin v.

Mg. Po Sin, 5 Bur. L.J. 106, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 201 (202). These cases will now be decided under sec. 53A.

Where a person has been put into possession as usufructuary mortgagee and the mortgage is invalid for want of registration, a suit for possession by the owner by redemption is not competent. The defendants are not also entitled to prove the alleged oral mortgage for an additional sum. The proper course for the plaintiff would be to have sued for possession of the lands relying on his title—Ma Kyi v. Maung Thon, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 230 (F.B.), 157 I.C. 565; Sheikh Bhukhan v. Radhika Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 479, 176 I.C. 35; Ma Mo v. Ma Kun, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 234, 1941 R.L.R. 309; Maung Lu v. Maung San, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 11 (F.B.), 1939 R.L.R. 645, 186 I.C. 69. Where under a usufructuary mortgage bond for Rs. 2000, which is unregistered, the only remedy open to the mortgagee is foreclosure, the mortgagee can sue the mortgagor, who has not parted with possession, for the recovery of Rs. 2000 by way of damages for breach of contract—Harikishan v. Baijnath, 24 Cut. L.T. 447.

Although a person cannot sue for redemption on the strength of a usufructuary mortgage which is invalid for want of registration, yet if he sues for possession and proves his title and then the defendant sets up adverse possession, the plaintiff may prove that the character of the possession was not adverse to him by giving evidence of the factum of the unregistered mortgage, though not of its terms—Maung Daw v. Maung Wa, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 261 (F.B.). See also Maha Mangal v. Kishun, A.I.R. 1927 All. 311 (314), 100 I.C. 346, relying on Varada v. Jeevarathammal, 43 Mad. 244 (P.C.), 46 I.C. 284. If in a redemption suit, the defendant admit his possession as mortgagee and has no objection to restore possession on receiving the mortgage money, the question of non-registration of the mortgage deed does not arise—Munshi Ram v. Baisakhi Ram, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 335, 49 P.L.R. 79. Where the plaintiff's evidence as to ownership is vague, an unregistered mortgage cannot be used for proving the plaintiff's title to the land—Maung Daw v. Maung Wa, supra. A personal covenant to pay may be proved by a mortgage found to be invalid—Jagannadhan v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 124, 60 M.L.J. 309, 229 I.C. 814. In a possessory mortgage where there is no personal undertaking to repay the money the case is otherwise—Kesari v. Musafir, A.I.R. 1937 All. 711, (1937) A.L.J. 815, 171 I.C. 825.

Where a mortgagor executes a new mortgage-deed for consideration comprising the principal and interest due on an earlier mortgage-deed and the later mortgage-deed is found to be invalid through no fault of the mortgagee, he is entitled to sue on the earlier mortgage-deed—Kanhaiya v. Mt. Hamidan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 418 (F.B.), 176 I.C. 492.

Transactions which do not purport to comply with statutory requirements, e.g., the formality of the Registration law, although in every other way the object achieved by the transfer has been executed, can be recognized in law or rather at equity, so as to bind the parties by their conduct so irrevocably as to make it impossible for them to re-open the transactions or retrace their steps—Hunter v. Damodar, A.I.R. 1924 All. 772, 46 All. 759, 81 I.C. 508.

350. "Signed":—The term 'signature' is not defined in the Transfer of Property Act but its definition is to be found in the General Clauses Act of which sec. 3 (52) runs as follows:—"Sign" with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions, shall, with reference to a person who is unable to write his name, include 'mark' with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions." It is clear therefore that an illiterate mortgagor may sign a mortgage by affixing his mark—Gobind v. Bhau, 41 Bom. 384 (388). A signature may be put down in various ways. The executant may sign by pen and ink, or put his name down by means of types, or if he uses a facsimile for signing his name he may use it for his signature—Nirmal Chandra v. Saratmani, 25 Cal. 911.

The words "signed by the mortgagor" do not mean that the mortgagor must personally sign the document; the mortgage-deed may be signed by another for him and under his authority on the principle quo facit per alium facit per se (he who acts through another acts through himself). Before the T. P. Act was passed, a mortgage was a good instrument, whether it was signed by the mortgagor personally or by some other person signing for him, and it is not the intention of the present Act to curtail that freedom—Deo Narain v. Kukur Bind, 24 All. 319 (F.B.) (overruling Moti Begum v. Zorawar, 1889 A.W.N. 196); Sasi Bhusan v. Chandra Peshkar, 33 Cal. 861; Sristidhar v. Rakshakaly, 49 Cal. 438. The insertion of the words "on behalf of" in sec. 123 and the omission of those words in section 59 cannot be taken to show that the Legislature intended to lay down in sec. 59 a different rule from that provided in sec. 123. Further, to hold that the Legislature requires that the personal signature of the executant is indispensable in the case of a mortgage which is only the transfer of an interest in the immoveable property, while it does not require the same in the case of a gift or a sale whereby the transferor's immoveable property is absolutely transferred, is an anomaly, and a construction, which leads to such anomaly, should not be adopted—Deo Narain v. Kukur Bind, 24 All. 319 (F.B.) (per Banerji, J.). Where the executant of a document is illiterate, some other person can sign his name on the document on his behalf in his presence and at his request—Ibid; Sashi Bhusan v. Chandra Peshkar, 33 Cal. 861; Ram Charan v. Bhikari, 12 O.C. 257.

350A. Proof of execution :—Sec. 68, Evidence Act, provides: "If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution.... Provided that it shall not be necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution of any document, not being a will, which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied." (This proviso has been added by the Indian Evidence Amendment Act, XXI of 1926).

Section 70, Evidence Act lays down: "The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested."

These sections relate to the manner in which a deed should be legally proved. But they have nothing to do with the question about the legality or validity of the instrument itself as a document of title if there has been no attestation as required by law. In other words, if the document is void for want of proper attestation, any proof of execution of the document under these sections is out of the question—Balbhaddar v. Lakshmi, 1930 A.L.J. 623, A.I.R. 1930 All. 669 (673), 125 I.C. 507.

The validity of a mortgage-bond and the proof of its execution are two different questions. And so even though the execution of the bond is admitted by the executant and consequently need not be proved by calling in an attesting witness under sec. 68, by virtue of the provisions of sec. 70, still if any question is raised as to the validity of the deed owing to improper attestation (e.g., by a scribe), held that evidence must be given that the document was properly attested—Paban v. Badal, 26 C.W.N. 951 (953), 34 C.L.J. 498, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 276, 66 I.C. 906.

The proviso to sec. 68 lays down that no proof under that section is necessary unless the executant specifically denies the execution of the document. Where the executant says that "he has no knowledge of the mortgage, and that if it is genuine, it must be hollow," held that these words mean that the executant neither admits nor denies the genuineness of the mortgage, but that he asserts absence of consideration if it is held to be genuine; these words do not amount to specific denial, and consequently it is not necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution—Yakub Khan v. Gujar Khan, 52 Bom. 219, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 267 (268), 111 I.C. 287. The mere fact that the executant of a mortgage does not admit the genuineness of the bond, or says that the attesting witnesses did not sign as witnesses or did not sign at the proper place in the bond, does not amount to specific denial of the execution of the bond; and therefore does not necessitate any proof of attestation—Biswanath v. Kayastha Corporation, 8 Pat. 450, 10 P.L.T. 379, 119 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 422 (423).

Where some of the executants of a mortgage deed are minors and pardanashin ladies who had not executed the document according to law, the execution by the rest is not invalid, as the liability being joint and several the mortgagee is entitled to realize the whole debt from any of them—Keka v. Sirajuddin, A.I.R. 1951 All. 618, 1951 A.L.J. 258.

The word "execution" in sec. 70 means due execution or execution in a way in which the document is required to be executed. If the mortgagor admits his having signed the document but denies his having done so in the presence of attestors, held that such admission does not amount to admission of due execution, and cannot dispense with proof of execution—Arjun v. Kailash, 27 C.W.N. 263, 36 C.L.J. 373, 70 I.C. 532, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 149. See also 5 Pat. 50 (P.C.) cited in Note 354.

351. Attestation :— The provision as regards attestation has been newly introduced by the Transfer of Property Act. A mortgage-deed executed prior to the passing of this Act did not require attestation by witnesses—Jati Kar v. Makunda, 39 Cal. 227; Mt. Rangili v. Pearey Lal, A.I.R. 1940 All. 101, 1939 A.L.J. 1056, 186 I.C. 519.

See the new definition of 'attested' in sec. 3, and Note 18A, ante.

The requirements of this section as to attestation apply to an anomalous mortgage. Such a mortgage is invalid if it is not attested—Kannakarup v. Sankaravarma, 44 Mad. 344, 62 I.C. 386.

Attestation means simply witnessing the execution of a document, in order that the person attesting may subsequently testify that the deed was actually executed by the person whose name appears as executant. It does not import anything more, and therefore it must be distinguished from cases where a person signs a document not merely as a witness to the execution but also with a view to giving consent to the transaction. Such cases frequently arise where a Hindu widow sells or mortgages her husband's property, and the reversioner signs her deed with the object of giving consent to the alienation. Such an act on the part of the reversioner ought not to be treated as 'attestation'. Similarly, where a Hindu lady executed a deed of mortgage which was signed by two witnesses, one of whom was her husband, and it appeared that the husband had signed the document in order to evidence his approval of the transaction, held that the husband was not an attesting witness since he had signed in a capacity other than that of a witness, in spite of the fact that he signed in the place where the other witness had signed. The deed was therefore not validly attested by two witnesses—Barkuarin v. Sircar Barnard & Co., 6 P.L.J. 473, 2 P.L.T. 761, 62 I.C. 668; Sarkar Barnard & Co. v. Alak Manjari, 83 I.C. 170 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 89. The mere fact that a man was present and witnessed the execution of the deed and his name appeared on the deed does not lead to the conclusion that he was a good attesting witness. In all cases, the Court must have regard to the purpose for which a man's signature is on the document—Abinash v. Dasarath, 56 Cal. 598, 32 C.W.N. 1228 (1230), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 123 (disapproving Raj Narain v. Abdur Rahim, 5 C.W.N. 454). Attestation means a certain act with reference to the execution of the document. The act must be done with the intention of attesting the executant's signature. So, a person who signs a document, which is executed by pardanashin lady before the Sub-Registrar under the registration endorsement, in proof of the fact that he has identified the lady, does not sign as an attesting witness—Chandrani v. Lala Sheo Nath, 8 O.W.N. 104, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 146 (150), 132 I.C. 337.

Again, to attest means to bear witness; i.e., attestation means the act of witnessing another man's signature; therefore a man who signs for and on behalf of the executant (who is illiterate) is not competent to sign also as a witness. The same person cannot simultaneously perform a double function; a person who executes the mortgage-deed on behalf of the mortgagor is not competent to become an attesting witness to attest the signature he himself has written out. An attester is a person who 'sees the document executed'; a person who executes a document on behalf of the executant is not a person who sees it executed when he himself does the very thing to which by subsequently signing as a witness he professes to bear witness—Sristidhar v. Rakshakaly, 49 Cal. 438 (441, 443); Rajani Kanta v. Panchananda, 23 C.W.N. 290, 48 I.C. 720; Upendra v. Hukum Chand, 46 Cal. 522; Ram Samuji v. Mainath, 2 O.W.N. 853, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 737; Dharmadas v. Ramoomal, 19 S.L.R. 322, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 118 (120). But where a lady executed a mortgage-deed by putting her finger-mark to the same, and thereafter a person who saw her put the finger-mark wrote her name at her request and added the words "by the pen of" before his name written by himself; it was held that the document was executed by the lady herself and not by him on her behalf, and that consequently he was a valid attesting witness—Dinamoyee v. Banbehari, 7 C.W.N. 160 (161); Ram Samujh v. Mainath, 2 O.W.N. 853 (so assumed). See also Raja Ram v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 209, 91 I.C. 507. An illiterate person signed a mortgage-deed by putting his mark to it, which mark was described by the scribe of the deed who put his own signature below the description. Held that the scribe was a valid attesting witness. The execution was complete when the mortgagor unable to write his name placed his mark thereon; the mark was his signature and was independent of any description by which the mark was explained. The function of the scribe ended when he signed his name at the conclusion of the body of the document; he thereafter signed his own name under the description of the mark made by the executant, with a view to authenticate the mark, that is, to vouch the execution of the deed by the marksman, in other words, to act as an attesting witness—Govind v. Bhau Gopal, 41 Bom. 384 (389), 19 Bom. L.R. 147, 39 I.C. 61.

As stated above, 'to attest' means only to witness the execution of a deed, and it is not necessary that the person attesting a document should sign his name personally. Just as in the case of an illiterate mortgagor some other person can sign the mortgagor's name on his behalf and under his authority, so in the case of witnesses who are illiterate and cannot write, it will be sufficient if their signatures are affixed for them by another person with their consent. There is no distinction in this respect between the signature of the mortgagor and the attestation by the witnesses—Sashi Bhusan v. Chandra Peshkar, 33 Cal. 861; Lal Bahadur v. Rameshwar, 4 O.W.N. 965, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 510 (521), 3 Luck 113. But in such a case, where one person signs for another, it must be shown that the former was authorised by the latter to sign for him; otherwise there is no valid attestation. Thus, where a document contained the signature of one attesting witness, and the name of another person was written on the margin by the scribe, but there was no signature or mark made by this second person and there was nothing to show that he had authorised the scribe to sign for him, held that the document was not duly attested by two witnesses, within the meaning of this section—Paramhans v. Randhir, 38 All. 461, 35 I.C. 748. In the case of illiterate witnesses, attestation by a mark is a sufficient attestation—Shri Kishen v. Sonba, 1 N.L.R. 14; Chiranjil Lal v. Purna, 12 A.L.J. 1114; Harrison v. Harrison, 8 Ves. 185. Where a will was attested by one person in his own handwriting and he also held and guided the hand of a second witness who could not read or write, held that the attestation was sufficient—Harrison v. Elwin, 61 RR. 183.

Where a document is executed by two persons at different times, each time the signature must be attested by witnesses. Thus, where in a mortgage-deed executed by A and B, it appeared that after the bond was signed by A in the presence of two persons who then and there attested the document, it was taken to B who lived at a different place, and that B signed the document in the presence of the witnesses who however did not sign their names again as attesting witnesses, held that the bond was not properly attested so far as B was concerned—Muniappa v. Vellaichami, 1918 M.W.N. 853, 49 I.C. 278.

But where a document consists of several sheets of paper and the executant signs each sheet, it is not necessary that every signature of the executant must be attested by the witnesses; it is sufficient if one signature is attested. A mortgage-deed consisted of three sheets of paper; the mortgagor signed the second sheet in the presence of the attesting witnesses who also signed at the foot as having witnessed the signature of the mortgagor. The third sheet (which enumerated certain additional properties included in the mortgage) was signed by the mortgagor in the presence of the same witness but without again affixing their signatures. Held that the whole document was properly attested. To validate the third page of the mortgage-deed, it was not necessary for the two witnesses again to sign it—Janki v. Aswini Kumar, 60 I.C. 736 (Cal.).

One of the essentials of attestation of a mortgage-deed is that each of the attesting witnesses must have signed the instrument in the presence of the executant—Surendra Bahadur v. Behari Singh, 43 C.W.N. 669, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 117, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 222, 1939 A.L.J. 492. See the definition of 'attested' in sec. 3. Where it was proved that the executant signed the deed in the presence of the attesting witnesses, but there was no evidence that the latter signed the document in the presence of the executant, held that the deed was not validly attested—Jadumandan v. Surajdeo, 52 All. 434, 1930 A.L.J. 289, A.I.R. 1930 All. 223 (224). Where the witnesses did not see the executant sign the instrument and the executant did not acknowledge to them that she had signed it, and the attestors did not even sign the instrument in the presence of the executant, held that the deed was not validly attested—Venkata Jagannatha v. Venkata Kumara, 54 Mad. 163, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140 (141), 135 I.C. 17.

Proof of attestation :—The proviso to sec. 68, Evidence Act only removes the necessity of calling an attesting witness to prove the execution of documents therein referred to and does not purport to relieve the party of the necessity of proving a mortgage in the form prescribed in this section—Chettyar Firm v. U tau, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 6, 11 Rang. 26, 141 I.C. 700. Where the mortgagor puts the mortgagee to proof then there being no specific denial of attestation, the attestation of one witness is sufficient. Where there is specific denial, in that case only the mortgagee is called upon to prove attestation of two witnesses—Amir Hussain v. Abdul Samad, A.I.R. 1937 All. 646, I.L.R. (1937) All. 723, 171 I.C. 743 (following Lachman v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1932 All. 527 (F.B.), 54 All. 1051, 139 I.C. 1. Where one attesting witness has been called at the trial for the purpose of proving execution of a mortgage-deed and his evidence has not been accepted as reliable, further evidence of the due execution and attestation is necessary—Surendra Bahadur v. Behari Singh, supra. An attesting witness must either see the executant sign or he must receive from the executant an acknowledgement that the executant has signed the deed. Further the attesting witness must sign the deed in the presence of the executant. Unless these requisites have been established by evidence, due execution and attestation cannot be said to have been proved—Bhikari v. Sudhir, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 702, 42 C.W.N. 1055. Where the handwriting of the attestors who are dead has been proved, the presumption is that they actually witnessed the execution—Vankataramayya v. Kamiseti, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 662, 53 M.L.J. 216, 101 I.C. 498.

Admission by the executant of execution is not sufficient to validate a mortgage-deed which has not been duly attested—Maung Po Gyi v. Maung Min Din, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 233, 5 Rang. 561, 104 I.C. 386. Where a mortgage was executed and attested, but the Sub-Registrar finding a technical defect had the document re-executed by the mortgagors in his office, which was duly registered, though not re-attested; and in a suit upon the mortgage the mortgagor admitted execution: held that in spite of the admission the document did not amount to a mortgage—Sheikh Kachu v. Mammad Ali, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 926, 45 C.L.J. 577, 105 I.C. 28.

Where an attesting witness merely states that the executant has signed the document in his presence and he witnessed its execution, it is not a sufficient proof of attestation. There must be some evidence to show that the other witness was also present at the time of execution or at least he attested the deed after he had received a personal acknowledgment from the executant of his signature or mark—Zaharui Hussain v. Mahadeo Ramji, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 149, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 621.

352. Who can attest :—A party to an instrument cannot under any circumstances be allowed to sign the instrument as an attesting witness; therefore a person who has once signed as an executant of a mortgage-deed and as one of the persons who were borrowing money on the bond, cannot be allowed to have his position altered from an executant of the bond to that of a witness, for the purpose of rendering the document valid as a mortgage against the other executants—Debendra v. Behari, 15 I.C. 666, 16 C.W.N. 1075; Peary Mohan v. Sreenath, 14 C.W.N. 1046; Freshfield v. Reed, (1842) 9 M. & M. 404, 60 R.R. 769; Wickham v. Marquis of Bath, (1865) L.R. 1 Eq. 17 (24). A person who is a party to the deed cannot be regarded as an attesting witness, on the ground that if the person for whose benefit the instrument is executed is allowed to be an attesting witness, the very object of attestation, viz., the prevention of fraudulent mal-practice, may be completely defeated—Seal v. Claridge, L.R. 7 Q.B.D. 516; Amick v. Woodworth, (1901) 58 Ohio 86; Donovan v. St. Anthoney Co., (1899) 73 Am. St. Rep. 779. Where A executes a mortgage-deed on behalf of B under a power of attorney from him, A, though a different person, cannot be a valid attesting witness of that document—Gomathi v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 126. But a person who is merely interested in the money advanced under the deed of mortgage, and is not himself a party to the deed, can validly attest it—Balu v. Gopal, 13 Bom. L.R. 944.

When a mortgage is executed benami the person who actually advanced the money is of course interested in the transaction, but he is actually not a party to the mortgage-deed as it stands. If he attests the mortgage-deed, his attestation should be held to be a sufficient attestation by a witness under this section—Durgadin v. Suraj Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 285 (F.B.), 134 I.C. 402.

Attestation by scribe :—The question whether a scribe who has signed his name below the executant's can be regarded as an attestor is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case. The mere statement of a writer of a document that he wrote it cannot be regarded as an attestation of that document by him—Veerappudayan v. Muthu Karuppa, 24 M.L.J. 534, 19 I.C. 589 (590). A scribe who had seen the deed executed was held to be a valid attesting witness, though he called himself a scribe in the document—Paramasiva v. Krishna, 41 Mad. 535, 43 I.C. 983; Jagannath v. Bajrang, 48 Cal. 61, 62 I.C. 97; V. R. Firm v. Md. Kassim, 5 Bur. L.J. 68, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 145; Dharmadas v. Ramoomal, 19 S.L.R. 322, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 118 (120); Alagappa v. Ko Kala, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 134, 1940 R.L.R. 199, 188 I.C. 759. When a man places his signature upon a document and at the same time describes himself as the writer thereof, the inference is that he signs as the writer only; but as a matter of fact it can be shown that he signed not only as the writer but also as a witness—Alagappa v. Ko Kala, supra. The writer of a document who signs just below or above the signature of an admitted attester or among a lot of signatures of attesting witnesses is deemed to sign as an attester, though he merely describes himself as the writer—Ayyasami v. Kylasam, 26 I.C. 409 (Mad.); Jogendra v. Ntal, 7 C.W.N. 384 (386); Abinash v. Dasarath, 56 Cal. 598, 32 C.W.N. 1228 (1231). But in all such cases, it must be shown that he put down his name with the intention of attesting it. If such intention is established, he will be deemed as an attesting witness, inspite of the fact that he merely signed as a scribe—Badri Prosad v. Abdul Karim, 35 All. 251; Veerappudayan v. Muthukaruppa, 24 M.L.J. 534, 19 I.C. 589 (590). Such intention may be presumed when the scribe signs his name at the time of execution of the deed; and it is not necessary that the writer should expressly describe himself as a witness or that there should be a testimonial clause—Veerappudayan v. Muthukaruppa, 24 M.L.J. 534, 19 I.C. 589 (590); Bryan v. White, 2 Rob. Eccl. 315; Burdett v. Spilsbury, 10 Cl. & F. 340. But several other cases have laid down a more stringent rule, namely, that the writer of a document, in order to be an attesting witness, must sign as a witness (i.e., must describe himself as a witness). If his signature appears on the document merely as a scribe, it will not be sufficient to make him an attesting witness, even though he was present at the time of the execution and had seen the execution—Ram Bahadur v. Afodhya, 1 P.L.J. 129, 20 C.W.N. 699, 34 I.C. 370; Dalichand v. Lotu Sakham, 44 Bom. 405, 55 I.C. 616; Jadumandan v. Surajdeo, 52 All. 434, 28 A.L.J. 289, A.I.R. 1930 All. 223; Ram Samujh v. Mainath, 2 O.W.N. 853, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 737 (738) (following 1 P.L.J. 129); Dharmadas v. Ramoomal, 19 S.L.R. 322, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 118 (120). Where the name of the scribe appeared under a separate heading "scribe," apart from the signature of the only other person who signed as witness, held that the signature of the scribe was not, as a matter of construction, capable of being read as attestation—Abinash v. Dasarath, 56 Cal. 598, 32 C.W.N. 1228 (1231), 114 I.C. 84, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 123. If a person who has signed as a scribe subsequently asserts that he signed as a witness, the onus of proving such assertion lies very heavily upon him—Nageshwar Prosad v. Bachu Singh, 4 P.L.J. 511.

The scribe of a mortgage-deed who executes the document for and on behalf of the mortgagor is not competent to sign the document as an attester; for that will amount to attestation of one's own signature, which is invalid—Rajani v. Panchananda, 23 C.W.N. 290, 48 I.C. 720;

Upendra v. Hukum Chand, 46 Cal. 522; Shristidhar v. Rakshakaly, 49 Cal. 438.

353. Attestation of signature is not necessary:—See the new definition of "attested" in sec. 3. ante, particularly the words "or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature". Prior to this definition it was held by the High Courts as well as by the Privy Council that it was necessary, to validate a mortgage under this section, that the mortgagor must sign the document in the presence of the attesting witnesses. There was no attestation unless the act signing by the person who executed the document was done in the presence of the witnesses. The thing should be done in the presence of the man who in future would be able to testify that it was done. A mere acknowledgment of his signature by the executant in the presence of the witnesses was not sufficient—Shamu Pattar v. Abdul Kadir, 31 Mad. 215, affirmed by the Privy Council in 35 Mad. 607; Sarkar Barnard & Co. v. Alak Manjari, 83 I.C. 170 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 89; Hira Bibi v. Ram Hari, 5 Pat. 58 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 203; Arjunchandra v. Kailash Chandra, 27 C.W.N. 263; Radhe Shyam v. Chummi, 14 A.L.J. 361, 35 I.C. 192; Sama Rao v. Vannajee, 46 Mad. 64 (71); Abdul Karim v. Saliman, 27 Cal. 190; Girindra v. Bijoy Gopal, 26 Cal. 246; Khemchand v. Malloo, 10 N.L.R. 81; Pribhudas v. Sahib Khan, 18 S.L.R. 282; Paramasiva v. Krishna, 41 Mad. 535; Ranu Shivaji v. Laxmanrao, 33 Bom. 44; Badri Prosad v. Abdul Karim, 35 All. 254; Sahedha v. Raja Ram, 11 A.L.J. 757. These decisions are no longer of any authority in the face of the new definition of 'attestation' in sec. 3.

Prior to the decision of the Privy Council in 35 Mad. 607, it was held in several cases that it was not necessary for the mortgagor to affix his signature to the mortgage-deed in the actual presence of the attesting witnesses, but it was sufficient if he acknowledges his signature on the deed in their presence—Sheikh Ghazi v. Bhawani Prasad, 1896 A.W.N. 89; Bunkatesh v. Rama Das, 6 A.L.J. 737; Ramji v. Bai Parbati, 27 Bom. 91; Ganga Devi v. Shyam Sunder, 26 All. 69. These decisions will now stand as good law.

The new definition of attestation (which has been added by the T. P. Amendment Act XXVII of 1926) is retrospective in its operation, in view of the word "must be deemed always to have meant" occurring in the definition, which words have been added by the Amending and Repealing Act X of 1927. In other words, all documents executed even prior to the passing of the Act XXVII of 1926, in which the attesting witnesses did not actually see the executant sign the mortgage-deed but received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature on the deed, and then attested the deed, must nevertheless be deemed to have been validly attested—Balaji v. Gangamma, 51 M.L.J. 641, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 85, 99 I.C. 143; Mohammedi v. Kashi, A.I.R. 1926 All. 725, 96 I.C. 775; Veerappa v. Subramanya, 52 Mad. 123, 55 M.L.J. 594 (F.B.), 116 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 1; Radha Mohan v. Nripendra, 47 C.L.J. 118, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 154, 31 C.W.N. clx; Motilal v. Kasambhai, 29 Bom. L.R. 1334, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 16, 105 I.C. 864; Gangaram v. Umaji, 105 I.C. 891, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 70. See page 18, ante. The contrary view taken in the Allahabad Full Bench case of Girijananda v. Hanumandas, 49 All. 25, 24 A.L.J. 921, A.I.R.

1927 All. 1, 99 I.C. 161, must be deemed as overruled by the Amending and Repealing Act of 1927.

Where the mortgagee states in the presence of the mortgagor that the mortgage-deed has been executed by the latter and asks the attesting witness to attest it which he does without any dissent having been expressed by the executant, the mortgage-deed is duly attested on acknowledgment received from the mortgagor—Amir Husain, v. Abdul Samad, A.I.R. 1937 All. 646, I.L.R. (1937) All. 723, 171 I.C. 743.

Where the attesting witness to a mortgage-deed signed the document before its execution by the mortgagor, held that the bond was not attested as required by this section—Pran Nath v. Jadu Nath, 32 Cal. 729.

Attestation by Registration officer :—A large number of cases hold to the view that the Registration endorsement made by the Sub-Registrar at the time of registration of the mortgage-deed amounts to an attestation, so that if there is only one witness to the deed, instead of two, the defect is made up by the Sub-Registrar's signature—Veerrappa v. Subramanya, 52 Mad. 123 (F.B.) ; Radha Mohan v. Nripendra, 47 C.L.J. 118 ; Ram Chandra v. Bhairon, 53 All. 1 ; Saroda v. Triguna, 1 Pat. 300. But the Oudh Chief Court has dissented from this view on the ground that the word 'attestation' is used to mean a certain act with reference to the execution of the document, and with the intention of witnessing the executant's signatures, whereas the signature of the Sub-Registrar is put to the registration endorsement after the execution of the document has been complete, and he puts his signature not with the intention of witnessing the executant's signature, but with a different object and for a different purpose altogether—Chandrani v. Lala Sheo Nath, 8 O.W.N. 194, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 146 (150), 132 I.C. 337. A similar view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Lachman v. Surendra, 1932 A.L.J. 653 (F.B.), 139 I.C. 1, A.I.R. 1932 All. 527.

In a recent case the Judicial Committee has held that where the Sub-Registrar and identifying witnesses have affixed their signatures to the registration endorsement under secs. 58 and 59 of the Registration Act admitting execution of a mortgage-deed, but there is no evidence that the signatures were made in the presence of the executant, the signatures, assuming that it would be legitimate to look at the proceedings relating to the registration for the purpose of proving due execution and attestation, cannot be said to have proved due attestation as required by this section. In such a case secs. 58, 59 and 60 of the Registration Act are of no avail. The endorsements made at the time of registration are relevant to the matter of registration only—Surendra Bahadur v. Behari Singh, 43 C.W.N. 669 (P.C.), I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 222, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 117 (121), 1939 A.L.J. 492. See also Zaharul Hussain v. Mahadeo Ramji, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 149, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 621 ; Shanmughavelu Mudaliar v. Niranand Naraindas, (1967) 2 Mad. L.J. 388. In the absence of evidence that the Sub-Registrar put his signature or seal on the mortgage-bond in the presence of the lady executant, it cannot be said that the mortgage-bond was properly attested—Hem Chandra v. Guiram, 58 C.L.J. 545, 150 I.C. 762 ; see also Atul v. Krishna, 67 C.L.J. 31. Where in the registration endorsement there is no statement to the effect that the identifying witnesses signed the document in the presence of the admitting executants, and there is no other evidence to prove this fact, the Court is not justified in drawing an inference that the document was properly attested—Ramanathan v. Delhi Badaha, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 335 (338, 339), 60 M.L.J. 302, 131 I.C. 840. Where there was no witness to the mortgagor's signature at the foot of the mortgage-bond, but at the back there were three identifying witnesses to his signature before the Registrar and the mortgagor in his written statement admitted that he had executed the document though he made no admission as to attestation, it has been held that as the document does not show that the signature of the identifying witnesses were affixed in the presence of the executant, the document cannot be said to be properly attested—Dhanapala v. Goverchand, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 959 (962), (1938) M.W.N. 938.

See Note 18A, ante, under the heading "Attestation by Registering Officer".

354. Attestation of mortgage executed by pardanashin lady:—Where pardanashin ladies are unable to appear before male witnesses, a document, which by independent testimony is proved to have been executed by a pardanashin lady, may reasonably be deemed to have been attested by witnesses, if they were present outside the pardah and had before attestation satisfied themselves that there was no fraud and that the deed had been actually executed by the lady. The fact that a screen had completely separated the witnesses from the executant would not invalidate the attestation—Sarur Jigar v. Barada Kanta, 37 Cal. 526; Hamangal v. Ganaur, 13 C.W.N. 40 (In both these cases, one of the attesting witnesses managed to see the lady sign, from outside the pardah). Though this is not a strict compliance with the letter of the law, still it is the only possible mode of attestation under the circumstances, having regard to the custom of this country. These two cases may be compared with an English case in which Sir H. Jenner Fust expressed the opinion that he would be prepared to hold that if the attesor and the executant signed in the presence of each other, it would be a valid attestation though one of them being blind could not see, provided his position was such that he could have seen if he had his eye-sight unimpaired—Re Piercy, 1 Robertson 228, cited in Sarur Jigar v. Barada Kanta, 37 Cal. 526. A mortgage executed by a pardanashin lady was attested by her husband and another witness. The husband actually saw the signature being made and the other witness was outside the screen in the same room with the lady and he knew her voice and heard her say "yes" when the document was explained to her. Held that the document was duly attested—Rukmini v. Nilmani, 19 C.W.N. 1309; Syed Yakir v. Madhusudan, 45 I.C. 691 (Pat.). It is not essential that the attesting witness should have actually seen the lady sign the document—Kasidanbi v. Ganga, 16 N.L.R. 196, 56 I.C. 247. It is not necessary in the case of a document executed by a pardanashin lady that the witnesses should be actually inside the pardah. Where one of the witnesses to a mortgage-deed was inside the pardah where the lady affixed her signature to the deed, the other witnesses being outside the pardah, and after the lady's signature he took the document to the other witnesses, and there he signed it himself and the other witnesses also signed, held that there was valid attestation—Syed Yakir v. Madhusudan, 45 I.C. 691 (Pat.). Where the witnesses who attested the execution of a mortgage-deed by a pardanashin lady had not seen her face, but had identified her by her voice, held that the execution of the mortgage-deed was sufficiently attested—Padarath Halwai v. Ram Narain, 37 All. 474 (P.C.) ; Rai Radha Kishen v. Jag Sahu, 60 I.C. 173 (Pat.). But where the witnesses did neither see the face of the executant pardanashin lady nor hear her voice, the deed was not validly attested. Thus, a mortgage-deed, purporting to have been granted by a pardanashin lady on behalf of her minor son, was executed as follows: the lady was behind the pardah, when the document was taken to her for signature ; none of the witnesses saw her sign it ; her son came from behind the pardah, and said that it had been signed by her, and then the witnesses attested it. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed that the requirement as to attestation contained in sec. 59 was not complied with, since the attesting witnesses were neither able to answer as to the act of execution nor as to the identity of the person performing the act—Ganga Pershad v. Ishri Pershad, 45 Cal. 748 (754) (P.C.), 22 C.W.N. 697, 45 I.C. 1. The same view is taken in Hira Bibi v. Ram Hari, 5 Pat. 58 (P.C.), 89 I.C. 659, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 203, where the facts are exactly the same. Even the fact that the pardanashin lady subsequently admitted that she had executed the mortgage-deed would not validate the deed by operation of sec. 70 of the Evidence Act, for that section applies only to a document validly attested, which is not the case here—Hira Bibi v. Ram Hari, (supra). Where the attestors did not see the lady sign the instrument, and the lady did not acknowledge to them that she had signed it, and the attestors did not sign the instrument in the presence of the lady (as for instance, where the witnesses were waiting in the parlour of the lady's house and the document was taken inside the house for her signature, and after its return with her signature it was brought to the place where the witnesses were waiting and there they signed), the instrument could not be said to have been validly attested—Venkata Jagannadha v. Venkata Kumara, 54 Mad. 163, 60 M.L.J. 56, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140 (141), 135 I.C. 17.

Where a document executed by a pardanashin lady is attested by the witnesses while the lady is sitting behind a thin curtain and it is clear that she could have seen the witnesses, if so minded, even if she did not actually see them through the curtain, it amounts to sufficient compliance with the requirement of attestation as defined in sec 3—Kundan Lal v. Musharafi Begam, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 207, 63 I.A. 326, 40 C.W.N. 1093, 11 Luck. 346, 63 C.L.J. 511, 163 I.C. 156, reversing Mt. Mushrafi v. Kundan Lal, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 365, 144 I.C. 860 ; followed in Murari v. Samiuddin, A.I.R. 1937 All. 273, 168 I.C. 988.

355. Effect of invalid attestation :—If a document is not validly attested as required by this section the mortgage is ineffectual, but it does not follow that, failing to operate as a mortgage, it will still operate as a charge. The Legislature could not have intended that a transaction bad as a mortgage (because the document was not registered or attested) was still good as a charge under sec. 100, for then the owner of that charge could afford to disregard sec. 59 altogether, being amply protected by sec. 100—Pran Nath v. Jadu Nath, 32 Cal. 729 ; Samoo Patter v. Abdul Sammad, 31 Mad. 337 ; Shania Pattar v. Abdul Kader, 35 Mad. 607 (P.C.) ; Narayan v. Lakshmandas, 7 Bom. L.R. 934 ; Deben-dra v. Behari Lal, 16 C.W.N. 1075, 15 I.C. 666 ; Collector of Mirzapur

v. Bhagwan Prasad, 35 All. 164, 18 I.C. 311; Ram Narain v. Adhindra Nath, 44 Cal. 388 (P.C.); Khem Chand v. Malloo, 10 N.L.R. 81, 26 I.C. 601.

But though the deed may be ineffectual as a mortgage for want of attestation, still it will be admissible as an evidence of a personal covenant to repay the debt, whether the deed has been registered or not—Muthalakulangara v. Thiruthipalli, 32 Mad. 410 (F.B.); Sada Kavaur v. Tidepally, 30 Mad. 284; Venkata Jagannadha v. Venkata Kumara, 54 Mad. 163 A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140; and a single money-decree can be passed on the personal covenant to pay—Mahadeo Prosad v. Gajraj Sing, 3 O.L.J. 164, 34 I.C. 397; Mathura Prosad v. Chedi Lal, 13 A.L.J. 553; Sama Rao v. Vannajee, 46 Mad. 64 (67); Dhana Mohammad v. Nastulla, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 637; Tofaluddi v. Mehar Ali, 26 Cal. 78. So, in a suit on a simple mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property, if it is found that the document fails for want of proper attestation to take effect as a mortgage-deed, the Court can allow the plaintiff, even at a late stage of the case, to amend the plaint by adding an alternative prayer for a simple money-decree—Mahadeo Prosad v. Gajraj, 3 O.L.J. 164. But this rule will not hold good in the case of a usufructuary mortgage in which the mortgagor does not bind himself personally to repay the money. If such mortgage is not validly attested, neither a personal decree will be allowed against the mortgagor nor will the document create a charge—Ram Narain v. Adhindra Nath, 44 Cal. 388 (P.C.). In a case where a mortgage-bond failed to take effect for want of due attestation, the Privy Council gave effect to it as a validly executed transfer of the earlier mortgages by the mortgagees—Lucas v. Bank of Bengal, A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 129 (130), 31 C.W.N. 178, 98 I.C. 925. If any person enters into possession on the basis of a deed of usufructuary mortgage not properly attested he cannot resist the claim for recovery of possession by the owner especially when he does not deny the execution of the mortgage—Azab Ali v. Farid Ali, A.I.R. 1961 Assam 48. Attestation is not required in the case of a mortgage deed executed by the court in pursuance of a decree for specific performance—Sait Genamal v. Pachigalla, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 465.

355A. Usufructuary mortgage :—Where a person borrowed an amount less than Rs. 100 and executed a document stating "I have mortgaged to you with possession from the ensuing year.....," it was held that the actual mortgage was intended to take place the following year and before the date on which the mortgage was to operate, the document would presumably amount to an agreement to mortgage, and delivery of the property was not necessary at the time document was drawn up—Majji v. Gottennkkala, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 85, 46 M.L.W. 742. An oral usufructuary mortgage or charge in extension of a previous such mortgage is invalid without registration—Viswanatha v. Fatima Bi, A.I.R. 1952 Hyd. 5.

The mortgagor of an oral unregistered usufructuary mortgage cannot institute a suit for redemption but can treat the mortgagee as a trespasser and can evict him without repaying the loan—Ningappa v. Danappa, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 206, 48 Bom. L.R. 800. In such a case limitation under

Art. 137, Limitation Act does not start from the date on which the mortgagee took possession of the property—ibid.

356. Equitable mortgage :—The last para of the old section which provided for an equitable mortgage was not happily worded : it was in the nature of a negative provision. It gave rise to the contention (in a case before the Privy Council) that this para did not validate or expressly recognize an equitable mortgage but threw on those who relied on it to establish the validity of such mortgage, and that if the mortgagee did not discharge that burden, the mortgage was invalid. But their Lordships overruled this contention, saying that although this Act did not itself validate such mortgages, the validity of such mortgages must be deemed as recognized by this Act, and that no onus lay on the mortgagee to prove the validity of the mortgage—Papiah Naidu v. Naganatha Sethupathi, 61 M.L.J. 408 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 1061 (1065), A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 239, 134 I.C. 328.

No such contention is now possible under clause (f) of sec. 58, to which this para has been transferred.

An equitable mortgage may be made without any writing, because it is the deposit of title-deeds which creates the mortgage; the mortgage is effected as soon as the deposit takes place, and any letter or memorandum which accompanies or follows the deposit is merely a recital that the mortgage has been effected and is not itself a contract of mortgage—Kedarnath v. Shamlal, 11 B.L.R. 405; Jivandas v. Framji, 7 B.H.C.R. 62; Behram v. Sorabji, 38 Bom. 372. 23 I. C. 140 (141); Oo Nong v. Moug, 13 Cal. 322 (325).

As regards registration, the newly-added words "other than a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds" show that such a mortgage, whatever be the amount of the loan, does not require registration.

An equitable mortgage is created and is complete by the act of deposit of title-deeds; nothing else is necessary. It is essentially an oral transaction; consequently no writing is required, and registration is out of the question. But if there is a writing, the matter is different—Punjab & Sind Bank v. Rustomji, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 821 (823), 160 I.C. 773. In such a case a distinction should be made between cases in which the writing itself constitutes the bargain between the parties, and cases in which the writing is a mere memorandum of the fact of mortgage. In the former case, registration is essential; in the latter, registration is unnecessary. Therefore, in determining whether the writing requires registration or not, it is necessary to consider, whether the writing is the embodiment of the equitable mortgage or whether the mortgage is complete independently of it. Thus, a letter or memorandum which is written after the deposit has been made and which records the deposit and the purpose for which it has been made, does not require registration, because such a document does not constitute the bargain between the parties; the mortgage has been effected by deposit before the writing of the letter; and the letter is merely the record of a transaction which has already been completed—Bhuban Mohan v. Co-operative Hindustan Bank, 29 C.W.N. 784, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 973 (975), 89 I.C. 866; Kshetrath v. Harasukhdas, 31 C.W.N. 703, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 538; Sundara- chariar v. Narayana, 54 Mad. 257 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 494 (501), A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 36, 131 I.C. 328; Surendra v. Mohendra, 59 Cal. 781, 36 C.W.N. 420, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 589; Kedarnath v. Dowlat Singhji, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 865 (871, 872), (1938) 2 M.L.J. 534; Ram Sarup v. Shiv Dayal, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 285, 42 P.L.R. 307, 190 I.C. 463. In Sundarachariar v. Narayana, supra, a person in Madras gave a promissory note which contained a list of the title-deeds with the introductory words: "As agreed upon in person, I have delivered to you the undermentioned documents as security," it was held by the Privy Council that the memorandum was not other than a written record of the particulars of the deeds, the subject-matter of an agreement. "Even if it was a condition of the advance", observed their Lordships, "that the memorandum was to be given, the fact that the memorandum was prepared, signed and handed over to the mortgagee before the advance of the balance of the money to be secured by the deposit, could not alter the nature and meaning of the document. It was and remained a list of the documents deposited and nothing more. It did not embody the terms of the agreement between the parties"—at p. 38. "Where there is no written agreement there seems no reason why the intent to create a security.....should not be evidenced by written as well as oral evidence"—at p. 58. Again, "No such memorandum can", observed their Lordships in the same case, "be within the section unless on its face it embodies the terms and is signed and delivered at such time and place and in such circumstances as to lead legitimately to the conclusion that so far as the deposit is concerned it constitutes the agreement between the parties"—at p. 39. So also Punjab & Sindh Bank v. Jaswant Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 135, 164 I.C. 63; Central Bank v. Jawahir Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 65, 162 I.C. 406. It is the deposit of title-deeds that creates an equitable mortgage; that is, the essence of an equitable mortgage is the deposit of title-deeds, and a letter which accompanies or precedes or is contemporaneous with the deposit does not per se have the effect of creating the mortgage merely because it contains the terms of the contract—Muthiya Chetty v. Kothandaramswami, 31 M.L.J. 347, 35 I.C. 864 (865, 866). But where after reciting the details of the properties the mortgagor's letter ran: "Now I am creating an equitable mortgage.....and am depositing the title-deed", and the letter together with the title-deeds was handed over to the mortgagee: held, not only were the writing of the letter and the deposit of the title-deeds contemporaneous transactions, but the letter was the sole repository of the terms of the bargain, and since it was not registered, it was inadmissible to prove the mortgage transaction and its terms could not be proved aliunde under sec. 91 of the Evidence Act—Ram Sarup v. Shiv Dayal, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 285 (287-288), 42 P.L.R. 307, 190 I.C. 463. When a document is drawn up constituting the bargain between the parties,—a document which purports or operates to create the mortgage, which is tacitly considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and appropriate evidence of the agreement, a document without production of which in evidence the plaintiff cannot establish his claim—then the document is not admissible in evidence to prove the mortgage unless it is registered—Subramonian v. Lutchman, 50 Cal. 338 (346) (P.C.); Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich, 10 Cal. 315 (322); Chunilal v. Vithal Das, 24 Bom. L.R. 502, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 440; National Bank of India v. R. C. Nazir & Co., 34 Bom. L.R. 748, 139 I.C. 745, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 401 (404); Krishnaiya v. Pannuswami, 47 Mad. 398 (400), 46 M.L.J. 295, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 547; Dwarka v. Sarat Kumari, 7 B.L.R. O.C. 55; Bhairab Chandra v. Anath Nath, 24 C.W.N. 599, 31 C.L.J. 375; Behram v. Sorabji, 38 Bom. 372, 23 I.C. 140 (141); Swami Chetty v. Ethirajulu, 40 Mad. 547, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 84, 34 I.C. 853; Alwar Chetty v. Jagannath, 54 M.L.J. 109; Jagannadham v. Official Assignee, 60 M.L.J. 309, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 124 (127, 128), 129 I.C. 814; Kedarnath v. Hari Sankar, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 308, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 586, 175 I.C. 578; Krishnaswami v. Jonnagadla, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 256, 163 I.C. 195.

The criterion which should enable a Court to come to a proper conclusion as to whether or not any particular document is of such and such a character that it requires to be registered is this : If the document is merely a written record of the particulars of the deeds deposited, the document does not require registration. But if, on the other hand, the document is one which in itself purported or operated to create or declare some right, title or interest in the property included in the deeds, or in other words, if the document is of such a nature that it was treated by the parties as the contract for the mortgage and to be the only repository and appropriate evidence of the agreement, the document would come within sec. 17 of the Registration Act and would require registration—Kedar Nath v. Hari Sankar, supra, at pp. 311, 312. See also Ebrahim v. Official Trustee, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 741; Ram Ratan v. Sew Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 823.

An endorsee of a negotiable instrument, the payment of which is secured by a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, can claim to enforce the mortgage, even though there is no registered instrument conveying the mortgagee-rights to him—Villa v. Petley, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 51, 148 I.C. 721; Hirendra v. Noyes, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 154, 171 I.C. 356. [Contra—Elumalai v. Bala Krishna, 44 Mad. 965; Mrs. Niemeyer v. Mamooji, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 461.] In such a case the execution of fresh promissory notes is not a discharge of the loan of equitable mortgage, but merely a matter of providing evidence of the loan and keeping alive the right to a personal remedy against the mortgagor—Hirendra v. Noyes, supra, at p. 156.

If in a suit on a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds the mortgage is held to be invalid, but the mortgagee is found entitled to a money-decree by virtue of a promissory note executed for the loan, only a simple money-decree can and should be passed against the mortgagor and the suit must be dismissed as against a third party impleaded as a subsequent mortgagee—Krishnaswami v. Kamalamma, 46 C.W.N. 29 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 90. The validity or otherwise of the mortgage of such third party cannot be investigated, nor a money-decree passed in his favour on the finding that his mortgage is invalid as against the prior mortgagee, nor a sale ordered of the mortgaged property with directions as to the distribution of the sale-proceeds as between only these creditors—Ibid.

Title-deeds may be deposited under an oral agreement to cover present and future advances; as each advance is made it becomes a charge upon the property comprised in the title-deeds from the force of the previous oral agreement. When in such a case there is a written memorandum relating to the first advance creating a collateral security, oral evidence of the agreement, whereby the same deposit of title-deeds was to cover future advances, is not excluded by sec. 91 of the Evidence Act—Mohini Mohan v. Deb Narayan, 40 C.W.N. 1277.

A mere agreement to make an equitable mortgage does not require registration and is admissible in evidence though unregistered—Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich, 10 Cal. 315 (322).

Punjab:—The Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab. The result is that sec. 59 does not prohibit the creation of a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds in that Province; hence such mortgages are valid there—Gurudas Mal v. Punjab-Sind Bank, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 972, and the mortgage need not be executed, attested and registered according to the formalities of this section—Brij Raj v. Alliance Bank, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 946, 17 Lah. 686. But a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds cannot be effected within the limits of a cantonment to which sec. 59 has been extended—Punjab & Sindh Bank v. Ishar Sing, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1001; Gurudas Mal v. Punjab-Sind Bank, supra. As a matter of fact this section along with other sections enjoining registration of documents has been extended to all cantonments by sec. 287 of the Cantonment Act (II of 1924). See Note 8, ante.

59A. Unless otherwise expressly provided, references in this Chapter to mortgagors and mortgagees shall be deemed to include references to persons deriving title from them respectively.

References to mortgagors and mortgagees to include persons deriving title from them.

This section has been added by sec. 21 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The Special Committee observes:—

“Whether the words ‘mortgagor’ and ‘mortgagee’, as used in the different sections in this Chapter, include all persons deriving title from them has given rise to some difficulties. [See 39 I.A. 7, 34 All. 63 (P.C.): and 21 All. 223]. In order to make this clear, we propose the addition of section 59A.”

357. A distinction is drawn by this section between the two categories of mortgagors and mortgagees and the intention is that the persons who derive title from them are to derive title as a mortgagor or mortgagee. That is, under the term "mortgagor" would be included persons succeeding by inheritance or by will or by sale or by auction-sale to the right of the equity of redemption held by a mortgagor and these words would not include persons who subsequently take a mortgage from the mortgagors—Piarey Lal v. Dina Nath, I.L.R. 1939 All. 185, A.I.R. 1939 All. 190, 1939 A.L.J. 228.

The term "mortgagee" in sections 60 and 62 is intended to mean not only the mortgagee but persons deriving title from him. These sections do not limit the right of the mortgagor to proceed only against the mortgagee in a redemption-suit. In order to avoid multiplicity of proceedings the Court is not debarred from giving a decree in a redemption-suit against the persons who have derived title from the mortgagee (e.g., a sub-mortgagee)—Venkataramana v. Rangaswami, 1927 M.W.N. 418, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 703 (704). The expression "mortgagor" also includes his heirs and survivors—Harihar v. Lachman, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 246, 149 I.C. 543. The representatives of the mortgagor and mortgagee are also included whether they are mere heirs or subsequent transferees—Chettyar Firm v. Sein Htaung, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 420, 159 I.C. 1038. In view of the provisions of this section the word mortgagor in sec. 6 (1) (c) must include the subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property—Haridas v. Jagannath, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 63, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 256 (258), 1939 N.L.J. 338; Janki Saran v. Md. Ismail, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 273, 13 P.L.T. 373, 139 I.C. 525; Mt. Mathura Devi v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 210, 1938 O.W.N. 806, 177 I.C. 100 followed and Tretanath v. Ajodhya Prasad, A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 139, 124 I.C. 690 held to have been overruled by sec. 59-A; Madangopal v. Srinarayan, A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 226, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 297; Kishan Lal v. Gouri Shankar, A.I.R. 1949 Aj. 52. If the holder of a simple money-decree purchases the equity of redemption in execution of his decree against the mortgagor, he cannot question the validity of the mortgage—Hindusthan Ideal Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Perla Sathaya Chetty, A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 183.

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor.

60. At any time after the principal money has become due, the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage-money, to require the mortgagee (a) to deliver to the mortgagor the mortgage-deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee, (b) where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor, and (c) at the cost of the mortgagor either to retransfer the mortgaged property to him or to such third person as he may direct, or to execute and (where the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) to have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of his interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished : to redeem.

Right of mortgagor

Provided that the right conferred by this section has not been extinguished by act of the parties or by decree of a Court.

The right conferred by this section is called a right to redeem and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid any provision to the effect that, if the time fixed for payment of the principal money has been allowed to pass or no such time has been fixed, the mortgagee shall be entitled to reasonable notice before payment or tender of such money.

Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except only where a mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor.

Amendment :—By section 22 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), the word "payable" has been replaced by the word "due" (see Note 359), and the italicised words have been added in para 1 (see Note 370); the word "decree" has been substituted for "order" in para 2 (see Note 373); and the word "only" has been added in the last para (see Note 376).

The intention of the Legislature in making the above amendments in 1929 was not to alter but to declare the law—Md. Yunus v. Champamani. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 49, 19 P.L.T. 875, 18 Pat. 141.

As to mortgages executed between 1858 and the coming into force of this Act in 1882 the equity of redemption which had been originally imported from the English Courts must be recognized—Ramalinga v. Arunachala, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 386.

Scope :—This section gives the right to redeem to the mortgagors generally, and sec. 62 deals specifically with usufructuary mortgages—Parasram v. Bindeshari, A.I.R. 1953 All. 33. See also Ram Prasad v. Bishambhar, infra. This section does not override other statutory provisions limiting or barring the exercise of the right of redemption in certain circumstances, as for instance O. 23, r. 1 C. P. Code. Therefore when a suit for redemption has once been withdrawn or abandoned without permission and consequently dismissed, a fresh suit for redemption is not maintainable—Raju v. Raghavayya, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 225, I.L.R. 1945 Mad. 803. In a suit by the mortgagee against the mortgagor's lessees to recover possession, neither lessees nor the mortgagors can claim to redeem the mortgage—ibid.

This section applies to a subsisting mortgage only—Ram Prasad v. Bishambhar, A.I.R. 1946 All. 400, 1946 A.L.J. 175.

358. Right to redeem :—The right to redeem is a right conferred upon the mortgagor by enactment, of which he can only be deprived by means and in the manner enacted for that purpose and strictly complied with—Raghunath v. Mt. Hansraj, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 205, 56 All. 561, 39 C.W.N. 9, 61 I.A. 362, 157 I.C. 37. This relief the Court is not entitled to give on such terms as it thinks equitable. This right is only available upon the terms stated in this section—Shah Ram Chand v. Prabhu Dayal, 47 C.W.N. 1 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1942 P.C. 50 overruling cases taking a contrary view. It is not the law in India, any more than in England, that one of several mortgagors cannot redeem more than his share, unless the owner of the other shares consent or make no objection, subject to the pre-safeguarding of the rights which those owners might possess—Yadalli v. Tukaram, 48 Cal. 22 (P.C.). A second mortgagee desiring to redeem is bound to pay the whole amount due under the first mortgage and not merely the price realized at the sale held in execution of the first mortgagee's decree—Hare Krishna v. Gojendra, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 15, relying on Jnanendra v. Sorashi, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 23, 49 Cal. 626, 69 I.C. 759 and Umesh v. Mt. Zahoor Fatima, 18 Cal. 164 (P.C.). See this case for calculation of interest on a paddy loan. Where the first mortgagee without impleading the second mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the decree, in a suit brought by the second mortgagee for redemption, the first mortgagee contended that he was not liable to account as he was in possession not as a mortgagee but as a purchaser: Held that inspite of the sale in execution of the first mortgagee's decree, the second mortgagee held the equity of redemption and as such the first mortgagee was bound to account—Hare Krishna v. Gojendra, supra. But the principle that the right of a second mortgagee to redeem the first mortgage is not extinguished by proceedings in suit on the first mortgage to which the second mortgagee is not a party is inapplicable to a case where the second mortgage did not exist either at the time of the suit or at the date of the decree or even at the time of the sale in execution of the decree—Venkatarama v. Rangiyar, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 449, 77 I.C. 504. Thus, where the charge created by a widow's maintenance decree came into existence only on the date of the decree and not earlier, the mere fact that the widow was not impleaded in the sale proceedings in execution of the mortgage-decree did not give her or the purchaser in execution of her decree any right to redeem the mortgage—Ibid, at p. 505.

Where a mortgagor, having a power under the mortgage-deed to sell the mortgaged property enters into a contract for sale of the property, the mortgagor has still the right to redeem the mortgage—Mansoor v. Usman, A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 156, 46 Bom. L.R. 159. A puisne mortgagee or even a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property can redeem the mortgage by paying the whole sum. After suit and after decree this position is not altered—Suryanarayana v. Daulatrao, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 296 I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 60. In the absence of a final decree passed under O. 34, r. 8 C. P. Code the right to redeem remains intact under the present section—Loknath v. Daulta Kuer, A.I.R. 1953 All. 503, 1953 A.L.J. 258. See in this connection Sheo Narain v. Mt. Deolochan, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 208, 26 Pat. 97.

The remedy under this section depends upon existence of the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee—Batuk Prasad v. Rudra Das, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 206.

Where the mortgage was by conditional sale and no proceedings were taken to foreclose it, the mortgage could be redeemed—Pal Singh v. Bhola

Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 242, 149 I.C. 964. A mortgagee by conditional sale who is in possession of the property cannot, by obtaining a decree in an illegal foreclosure proceeding or by asserting himself to be the proprietor and obtaining mutation, alter the character of his original title, nor can he rely on a possession adverse to the mortgagor to deprive him of his right to redeem the property—Mt. Dhapan v. Sri Ram, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 837, 172 I.C. 449. A right to the equity of redemption may, however, be acquired by adverse possession against the mortgagor—Parshottam v. Sagaji, 28 Bom. 87.

If during the continuance of the mortgage and prior to its redemption the mortgagee allowed a stranger to receive an additional advance from him on the same security and attorned to him, while still entitled to retain possession, it would be ineffective to deprive the true mortgagor of his right to redeem—Gurunath v. Suryakant, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 453, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 225, 42 Bom. L.R. 399.

Where the mortgagee undertook to redeem a prior mortgage and pay the rent of the mortgaged holding, but omitting to do so, purchased it in execution of the rent-decree in the name of another person: held the sale was no bar to the mortgagor's right of redemption—Ram Kishore v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 307, 151 I.C. 255.

There is a material difference between a case where cash is paid in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt and where property is transferred in satisfaction thereof. In the former case, the moment the money is appropriated redemption takes place in fact, but in the latter case the redemption depends upon whether the title in the property sold, in law passed to the mortgagee or not, and the mortgage-debt in this case is extinguished to the extent to which the transfer is valid—Kishen Gopal v. Abdul Latif, 15 Luck. 175, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 97 (100), 1939 O.W.N. 1045.

A benamdar of the mortgagor is a trustee for him. A suit for redemption by the transferee of the benamdar's heirs is maintainable even though the real owner's heir gave evidence that he was not willing to maintain the suit. The remedy of the real owner, however, on establishing his right, stood unaffected—Md. Sheriff v. Sayyed Kasim, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 635, 145 I.C. 230.

358A. Suit for redemption :— Where in a suit on a simple mortgage a decree for possession was wrongly given, but the decree became final and was executed, it was held that the decree for possession did not amount to a decree for foreclosure or preclude redemption, the possession of the decree-holder having been as mortgagee and having involved liability to account to the mortgagor—Papamma v. Pratapa, 19 Mad. 249 (P.C.), 23 I.A. 32. A decree obtained by the mortgagee, before the Act came into force, to receive the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property which remains unexecuted; does not bar a suit for redemption if instituted within the period of limitation, on the ground of res judicata—Badrudin v. Sitaram, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 401, 32 Bom. L.R. 933, 126 I.C. 882.

Where the suit was in effect one for redemption of an oral mortgage it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he was the mortgagor entitled to redeem—Bishnu v. Sheodhari, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 110, 12 B.R. 599. Where the mortgagee acquired by auction purchase one fourth share of the mortgaged property belonging to one of the joint mortgagors with the result that the integrity of the mortgage was broken up, a suit for redemption of the entire property was not the proper remedy, and the plaintiff was allowed to sue for partition and redemption of his share only—Narayan-swami v. Perumal, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 720, (1953) 2 M.L.J. 150. See also Ayoob v. Anantha, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 335. In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage the Civil Court is entitled to consider question whether the mortgagee has set up a fictitious person as tenant to prevent the mortgagor from obtaining possession. Sec. 12 of the U. P. Agriculturists' Act, 1934 has not changed the substantive law in secs. 60, 76 and 83, T. P. Act—Ram Piary v. Ram Adhin, A.I.R. 1953 All. 472, 1953 A.L.J. 154. Where the renewal clause in a mortgage deed could not come into force without something more being done by the parties, the suit for redemption was not premature—Kurien v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 71 (F.B.). In a suit for redemption the plaintiff must show that the mortgage is a subsisting one—Bhailal v. Keshavji, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 1. As to Otti or Kuzhikanom mortgages see Savarmuthu v. Marthandan, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 170; and Bhageerathi v. Kochan, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 286. A suit may be a suit for redemption if only one of the three rights enumerated in sec. 60 is claimed in the suit—K. Manickchand v. Saleh Mohamed Sait, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 751.

Where the alleged mortgage is not proved the plaintiff cannot take advantage of a different mortgage not set up by him—Kanhiya v. Jamha, A.I.R. 1950 Raj. 47.

In a redemption suit instituted by the transferee from the mortgagor the plaintiff can obtain redemption with respect to the right of his transferor and no more—Abdul Wahab v. Raghunandan, A.I.R. 1945 All. 388, I.L.R. 1945 All. 637.

Successive suits :—Until a final decree is passed in a mortgage suit the right of redemption is not extinguished, and a mortgagor can bring successive suits for redemption of the same mortgage—Suraj Bali v. Rang Bahadur, A.I.R. 1950 All. 88, 1950 A.L.J. 86. See also Ramjatan v. Net Lal, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 281; Kunhotti v. Koya, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 443, I.L.R. 1949 Mad. 276; Somnath Pradhan v. Sanno Govinda Misra, A.I.R. 1959 Orissa 122. The cause of action in a redemption suit being a recurring one, provisions like O. 9, r. 9, O. 23, r. 1, etc. are no bar to the filing of a second suit for redemption—Subba Rao v. Raju, A.I.R. 1950 F.C. 1, 1949 F.L.J. 398, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 752; Rajaram v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 226 (F.B.), 50 Bom.L.R. 45; Narayan Shenoi v. Yasodabai, A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 9 (F.B.); Edumban Chettiar v. Ramalakshmi Pichamma, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 153. A subsequent suit for redemption would be barred by limitation on the application of the principle of res judicata, if in a prior suit for redemption the suit was dismissed on the ground of limitation—Neelakanta Pillai v. Mathavan Pillai, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 226.

Costs :—The ordinary rule that costs follow the event applies with greater force in mortgage suits including redemption suits—Varaha Devaswom v. Ummer Sait, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 17. See also Kaliya Pillai v.

Kamalammal, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 423 ; and Bhanwarlal v. Bhagwatidevi, A.I.R. 1954 Aj. 9 (1).

Limitation:—In a suit for redemption the mortgagor must prove that his claim for redemption is within time—Mangilal v. Ram Dayal, A.I.R. 1951 Aj. 21. Where the suit for redemption is instituted more than 60 years after date of expiration of the term, it was barred limitation—Shib Narain v. Chitru, A.I.R. 1949 E.P. 389 ; Mohammad Khan v. Md. Salim, A.I.R. 1951 All. 392, 1951 A.L.J. 174. See in this connection Gangadhar v. Dattatraya, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 424 ; Dhanammal v. Raju, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 193. In a suit by a co-mortgagor for redemption of his share of mortgage and for possession from another co-mortgagor who is in possession on redemption of the possessory mortgage, limitation starts not from the time when the re-deeming co-mortgagor redeemed it but from the time when the original mortgage become redeemable—Kaliyamma Pillai v. Narayana Pillai, I.L.R. (1966) 2 Ker. 388.

Decree:—There is nothing wrong in law if the mortgage-decree is scaled down, in accordance with local law, in favour of one of the judgment debtors while in respect of others the decree is kept intact—Ramaswami v. Kailasa, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 189, 1951 S.C.J. 278, 1951 M.W.N. 343.

359. "Due"—When mortgagor may redeem:—There is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property—Ashrafi v. Zamir, A.I.R. 1940 All. 29. Under a possessory mortgage executed in November, 1947 it was agreed that the debt would be paid within a period of ten years. Suit for redemption was filed in 1951. Held that the word 'within' indicate that the suit is not pre-mature—Yendru v. Satyavatamma, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra 30. One deed cannot be interpreted in the light of the language used in another deed. In such case the Court must look to the nature of the particular mortgage and the surrounding circumstances to ascertain what the intention of the parties was—Ashrafi v. Zamir, A.I.R. 1940 All. 29.

A mortgage-debt means that portion of the amount secured by the mortgage which is still due—Ganga v. Tejpal, A.I.R. 1944 All. 232, I.L.R. 1944 All. 349. The word "due" in this section means due by the mortgagor on expiry of the time during which the mortgagee was authorized to retain possession of the property—Dosabhai v. Vasan, A.I.R. 1953 Kutch 4.

Having regard to sec. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Legislature appears to have adopted the principle that in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, the presumption is that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose arise at the same time, and that when a date is fixed for the payment of the principal-debt and the mortgagee cannot foreclose earlier, the mortgagor also cannot redeem before the appointed time—Tirugnana v. Nallatombi, 16 Mad. 486 (489). Thus, if the mortgage-deed fixes a term of years (e.g., where the deed stipulates that the mortgagor will pay the debt within 10 years or 15 years and redeem the property), the mortgagor is not entitled to redeem before the expiry of the term. The mere use of the word "within" ("within 10 years") is not a sufficient indication of an intention that the mortgagor may redeem in a less period than 10 years—Vadju v. Vadju, 5 Bom. 22 ;

Shiam Lal v. Jagadamba, 25 A.L.J. 1051, A.I.R. 1928 All 131 (132, 132); Raghubar v. Budhu Lal, 8 All. 95 (98). This principle has been recognised in Husaini v. Husain, 29 All. 471 (473), and has been ultimately approved of by the Privy Council. "Ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period"—Bakhtawar v. Husaini, 36 All. 195 (199) (P.C.); see also Ram Datta v. Md. Husain, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 428, 1940 O.W.N. 897, 190 I.C. 828. The rule is not affected by the fact that the term fixed is such a long period as 60 years or that it is provided in the deed that even after expiry of the term, there should be no redemption—Narain v. Jagan, A.I.R. 1925 All. 42, 80 I.C. 728; see also Md. Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 17, 44 All. 185, 49 IA. 60; Bakhtwar v. Hussain, 36 All. 195, 41 I.A. 84; Mela Ram v. Prithvi Chand, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 523, 116 I.C. 609; Akbar v. Shah Ahsanul Haq, A.I.R. 1932 All. 155, 134 I.C. 459.

In an earlier Madras case Turner, C.J. expressed the opinion that where a date was fixed in the mortgage-deed, the presumption was that the date was fixed for the convenience of the mortgagor, and that he might repay the debt at an earlier period—Sri Raja Satrucherla v. Sri Raja Vairicherla, 2 Mad. 314 (316); and relying on this view, Mahmood, J. laid down that "no general rule exists in India as would preclude a mortgagor from redeeming a mortgage before the expiry of the term for which the mortgage was intended to be made, unless the mortgagee succeeds in showing that by reason of the terms of the mortgage itself the mortgagor is then precluded from paying off the debt due by him to the mortgagee"—Bhagwat v. Parshad, 10 All. 602 (609). In a Madras case, where the mortgagor covenanted to repay the mortgage-money within a specified date (e.g., within 20th April 1904), held that the mortgagor could redeem before that date, that the rule of mutuality (viz., that the right of redemption and the right of foreclosure are co-extensive) was not an inflexible or universal one, and that when the mortgagor covenanted to repay the money within certain date, it must be presumed that he intended to reserve the liberty of redeeming at his pleasure—Rose Ammal v. Rajarathammal, 23 Mad. 33 (35, 36), dissenting from Tirugnana v. Nallatombi, 16 Mad. 486.

But the Legislature has adopted the rule of mutuality, and the word "due" has been substituted for the word "payable" in order to make it clear that the redemption should not be allowed within the term of the mortgage.

The diversity of opinion as to the meaning of the word "payable" (referred to in the above Report) is to be found in Rose Ammal's case (23 Mad. 33) and Husaini's case (29 All. 471). In the Madras case (at p. 36) it has been remarked that money is said to be "payable" when it is payable by the mortgagor, i.e., when the mortgagor is entitled to pay it, even though it is not "due" to the mortgagee, i.e., even though the mortgagee is not entitled to call for the money. The Allahabad High Court holds (at p. 474) that money becomes "payable" when the payment becomes obligatory upon the mortgagor, i.e., when the mortgagee can enforce payment of it, and not earlier. To remove this divergence of opinion, the Legislature has substituted the word "payable" by the word "due," so that the mortgagor can redeem only when the money has become "due" to the mortgagee, i.e., when the mortgagee can call for the money, and not earlier.

But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of the mortgagor—Bakhtawar v. Husaini, 36 All. 195 (199) (P.C.); Kuddi Lal v. Aisha, 2 Luck. 564, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 199 (201). Where in a usufructuary mortgage for 37 years, it was stipulated that if the mortgagor made payment of the amount due at the end of 10 years, he would be entitled to redeem, but if such payment was not made, the mortgagee's possession was to continue on the same terms as before, and the mortgagor made no payment at the end of 10 years but brought a suit for redemption at the end of 14 years, held that the option to redeem at the end of 10 years not having been exercised on the proper date, the suit brought before the expiry of the original term was premature—Aga Mahammad v. Venkatappaya, 35 M.L.J. 287, 48 I.C. 379 (382).

Where no time was fixed for the payment of the mortgage-money, but after the execution of the deed a clause was added to the effect that "the amount will be paid, principal and interest, within one year," and this clause was separately signed by the mortgagor, held under circumstances of the case, that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem before the expiry of the year—Purna Chandra v. Peary Mohan, 39 Cal. 828 (833). Where no period is mentioned in the mortgage deed the mortgage money becomes due immediately on the date of the mortgage—Des Raj v. Hargurdial Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 249.

Where a provision was inserted in the mortgage-deed "exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagee" purporting to give him an option either to enforce the security at once or if the security was ample to stand by his investment for the full term of the mortgage, the mortgagor could not take advantage of his own default and upon such default he could not have the right to redeem. The mere fact that in the plaint in a suit on the mortgage the compound interest was calculated from date of the first default in payment of interest did not necessarily indicate that the option given to him had been waived—Lasa Din v. Mt. Gulab, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 207, 7 Luck. 442, 36 C.W.N. 1017, 59 I.A. 376, 138 I.C. 779. See also Nenumal v. Chadumal, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 14, 161 I.C. 518. If a default clause making the entire money payable on failure to pay interest in any year is incorporated in the bond, the entire money does not become due automatically on the mortgagor's default in payment of interest; it becomes due on default only when the mortgagee calls for the entire money—Subbanna v. Krishna Iyenger, A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 5.

A mortgagor may sometimes be allowed to redeem before the fixed date on equitable grounds, e.g., where the mortgagee failed to perform his part of the contract. In such a case, it is not equitable that the mortgagee should be in a position to resist redemption when he himself did not comply with the other terms of the deed—Narasimha v. Seshayya, 48 M.L.J. 363, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 825, 90 I.C. 138; Chhotku v. Baldeo, 34 All. 659

(662). Where the period of redemption was fixed as 50 years, but the mortgagor sought to redeem after 26 years only and the mortgagee sought to set up adverse title, redemption was allowed on the ground that the mortgagee did not act in accordance with the terms of the contract and was not willing to do—Durga v. Paresh, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 105 (106), 76 I.C. 336. Where the mortgagee failed to perform his part of the contract, e.g., paying the mortgagor by instalments, the mortgagor was entitled to redeem before the due date—Sanwaley v. Sheo Sarup, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 589, 122 I.C. 411. Where part of the principal money was made payable by the mortgagee to another forthwith and the mortgagor was entitled to redeem within 20 years, but owing to unexpected events payment by the mortgagee was made only subsequently, the right to redeem accrued only 20 years from the date of actual payment and not from the date of mortgage—Hira Lal v. Khizar, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 168 (174), 161 I.C. 251. Where under the terms of a mortgage the mortgagee is to enjoy the property in lieu of interest for five years and the mortgagor is to repay the amount when demanded in any year at the close of the agricultural season after the expiry of five years, money becomes due on expiry of five year's period without any demand from the mortgagee—Narayana Chettiar v. Ranga-swami Naidu, (1968) 2 M.L.J. 445.

A mortgagee may sometimes be allowed to sue before the expiry of the term on reasonable grounds (e.g., in the event of the property being found to have been mortgaged or transferred to any one or if there should arise any cause which may effect the total or partial loss of the properties), but that does not give a corresponding right to the mortgagor to redeem before the stipulated period—Bhawani v. Sheodihal, 26 All. 476 (482). In a later Allahabad case, where the term of the mortgage was a long period, viz., 40 years, the interest was payable annually, and it was stipulated that in case of default of payment of interest the mortgagee was entitled to sue at once for the entire mortgage-money, held that it was only equitable that the mortgagor also should be allowed to redeem before the expiry of the said period—Hira Kuar v. Gambhir, 19 A.L.J. 460, 62 I.C. 985 (986). But a mortgagor is not entitled to redeem before the expiry of the stipulated period merely on the ground that the mortgagee in possession has done something which he was not authorized to do, although he has not destroyed or permanently injured the property in any way—Har Baksh v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 130, 159 I.C. 1052.

Where a mortgagee brings a suit for possession in pursuance of a condition in the mortgage-deed that if the principal and interest are not paid off in a certain period the mortgagee can take possession, the mortgagor or person claiming through him cannot claim to redeem in such a suit—Bed Nath v. Rajeshwari, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 406, 168 I.C. 725. The tenant of the mortgagee is liable to be evicted in execution of a decree for redemption—Dalip Singh Hazara Singh v. Financial Commissioner to Govt. of Punjab, A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 369.

In India, before the date of payment, the mortgagor has an interest in the land which is legal and not equitable. After the date he has the legal right of redemption given him by this section. In each case he retains a legal interest in the property—Ram Kinkar v. Satya Chadan,

A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14 (19), 43 C.W.N. 281, 66 I.A. 50, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 283.

360. Usufructuary mortgage:—In a usufructuary mortgage, the essence of the transaction is the realization of the principal and interest from the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, and as soon as the principal and interest have been satisfied, the mortgagor is entitled to redeem, irrespective of the fact that a time has been fixed in the mortgage-deed for the satisfaction of the mortgage. In such cases the time is not of the essence of the contract. Thus, if the usufructuary mortgage provides that the usufruct is to be applied first towards interest, then towards principal, and that the debt is to be repaid after a certain number of years (e.g., 3 years) the mortgagor will be entitled to redeem before the date fixed, on his showing that the principal and interest had been wholly discharged by the usufruct before the stipulated period—Kundan v. Thakurlal, 6 C.P.L.R. 43. Where the deed provides that the mortgagee will be entitled to remain in possession for 12 years, even though the mortgage-debt is satisfied out of the property before the expiry of the term, held that the mortgagor will be entitled to redeem before 12 years, as soon as the mortgage-debt is satisfied—Ankinedu v. Subbiah, 35 Mad. 744 (748). See Notes 382 and 383 under sec 62, where this subject is fully discussed. But where there were no clear words in a usufructuary mortgage which permitted the mortgagor to pay the whole of the principal on or before the expiry of the mortgage-term and to obtain possession of the land, the mortgagee was entitled to insist on the term which provided for 15 years' enjoyment—Rangayya v. Basana, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 594, 94 I.C. 639. Where, however, the mortgagee gave the go-by to other terms of a mortgage-deed, the mortgagor was not bound to confine himself to his right under the deed to claim a proportionate relinquishment of the land, but was entitled to redeem the mortgage even before the expiration of the period fixed as the term thereof—Narasimha v. Sheshayya, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 825, 48 M.L.J. 363, 90 I.C. 138.

In a usufructuary mortgage of agricultural land it is usually stipulated that if the mortgagor wants to redeem, he must redeem in a particular month (e.g., Jeth) of the year. In such case, it has been held that having regard to the agricultural conditions of the country, the time of payment is of the essence of the contract, and that the mortgagor will not be entitled to redeem in any other month. The reason is thus stated: "In the case of a usufructuary mortgage like this one, it is necessary for the mortgagee who is liable to be redeemed to know before he commences to sow his crops whether he will have to give up possession in that year or not, and that no doubt is the reason for the stipulation that the redemption should take place in Jeth"—Bansi v. Girdhar, 1894 A.W.N. 143; Chinnasamy v. Krishna, 16 M.L.J. 146; Muhammad Ali v. Baldeo Pande, 38 All. 148; Narsingh v. Achhaibar, 36 All. 36; Kripal v. Sheoambar, 1930 A.L.J. 610, A.I.R. 1930 All. 283 (285), 126 I.C. 366; Sarbdawan v. Bijai, 36 All. 551 (554). In such cases, the redemption decree, even though it directs the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-money in any other month, at the same time allows the mortgagee to retain possession till the next Jeth—Narsingh v. Achhaibar, 36 All. 36 (39); Het

Singh v. Bihari, 43 All. 95 (101); Kirpal v. Sheoambar, supra. Where a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee sues for redemption against a prior usufructuary mortgagee, the former can be made liable for reasonable interest also along with principal amount only if the latter can claim interest in a suit under sec. 68 coupled with sec. 67—Kumarappa v. Suppan, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 672, 145 I.C. 744. Possession of the mortgagee after full satisfaction of the debt by the mortgagor of a part of the property after the mortgagor has taken possession of the rest is adverse to the mortgagor—Ananthan Patti v. Krishna Pillai, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 145. Where A is put in possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee after purported redemption of the usufructuary mortgage, B, a purchaser at a court sale of the equity of redemption is entitled to get a decree for possession on the basis of title without redeeming the mortgage in favour of the mortgagee—Jadunandan Mondal v. Hitlal Mondal, A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 171.

Limitation :—Where one of several mortgagors becomes a subrogee by redeeming the entire mortgage, his co-mortgagor can redeem him within the period prescribed by Art. 148, Limitation Act—Rahimansa v. Mad. Istamia E. Instn., A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 366, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 179. See in this connection Ram Lal v. Chetu, A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu. 101.

361. Clog on redemption :—The right of redemption of the mortgagor has been the subject of anxious protection in law; so much so that an impediment to the fair exercise of that right (i.e., a clog on the equity of redemption) even by a contract of the parties at the time of the transaction is not recognized. The Indian Legislature, in this section has omitted the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" with a view to prevent the mortgagor from contracting himself out of his right of redemption at the time of the mortgage—Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma, 40 Mad. 1040 (1062). This section is unqualified in its terms and contains no saving provision as other sections do, in favour of "contracts to the contrary". Therefore, there is no sufficient reason for withholding from the words of this section their full force and effect—Muhammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal, 44 All. 185 (189) (P.C.). But see Kadir Bibi v. Mailappa, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 542 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1946 Mad. 739 where it has been held that although this section is unqualified in its terms and there is no saving clause in it as in other sections, in favour of contracts to the contrary, it does not mean that the parties cannot decide for themselves what is reasonable notice to which the mortgagee is entitled under this section.

A mortgagor cannot by any contract, entered into with the mortgagee at the time, give up his right of redemption or fetter it in any manner by confining it to a particular time or a particular manner or a particular description of persons—Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam, 20 Bom. 677 (696); Kanaran v. Kuttoly, 21 Mad. 110; Rajmal v. Shivaji, 27 Bom. 154; Abdul Hakim v. Sajjad Hosain, 26 O.C. 209, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 209, 74 I.C. 304.

The doctrine of the Court of Equity on this subject is expressed in the well-known maxim "Once a mortgage, always a mortgage," which has been supplemented by the words "and nothing but a mortgage" by Lord Davey in the leading case of Noakes v. Rice, [1902] A.C. 24. "This doctrine means that no contract between a mortgagor and a mortgagee made at the time of the mortgage and as part of the mortgage transaction or in other words, as one of the terms of the loan, can be valid if it prevents the mortgagor from getting back his property on paying off what is due on his security. Any bargain which has that effect is invalid and is inconsistent with the transaction being a mortgage"—per Lord Lindley Samuel v. Jarra Timber and Wood-paving Corporation, [1904] A.C. 323. "The principle is this : a mortgage is a conveyance of land or an assignment of chattels as a security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of some other obligation for which it is given. This is the idea of a mortgage; and the security is redeemable on the payment or discharge of such debt or obligation, any provision to the contrary notwithstanding. Any provision inserted to prevent redemption on payment or performance of the debt or obligation for which security was given is what is meant by 'clog' or fetter on the equity of redemption and is void"—per Lord Lindley in Stanley v. White, [1899] 2 Ch. 274, "Redemption is of the very nature and essence of a mortgage. It is inherent in the thing itself. Equity will not permit any device or contrivance designed or calculated to prevent or impede redemption. It follows as a necessary consequence that when the money secured by a mortgage of land is paid off, the land itself and the owner of the land in the use and enjoyment of it must be as free and unfettered to all intents and purposes as if the land had never been made the subject of the security"—per Lord Macnaghten in Noakes v. Rice, [1902] A.C. 24 (30).

The doctrine of clog on redemption relates only to the dealings which take place between the parties to the mortgage at the time when the contract of mortgage is entered into, and therefore they are at liberty to deal subsequently with each other so as to vary the terms upon which the redemption of the mortgage can be had—Harihar v. Bhawani, 20 O.C. 97; Parmanand v. Matadin, 47 All. 582, 23 A.L.J. 307, A.I.R. 1925 All. 427; Shankar Din v. Gokal Prosad, 34 All. 620 (P.C.); Shankar Dhonde v. Yeshwant, 22 Bom. L.R. 965. The mortgagee cannot, at the moment when he is lending the money and taking the security, enter into an agreement, the effect of which would be that the mortgagor should have no right of redemption; but there is nothing to prevent that being done by an agreement which in substance and in fact is subsequent to and independent of the original bargain—Lisle v. Reeve, [1902] 1 Ch. 53. But the subsequent contract restricting the right of redemption must be an independent contract, distinct from the contract of mortgage. Otherwise it will be treated as a clog on redemption. The mere fact that the subsequent agreement was entered into 5 or 6 days after the contract of mortgage was executed, is not sufficient to show that it was an independent contract, if in fact the contract of mortgage and the subsequent agreement were parts of the same transaction. "The question is, in my opinion, not whether the two contracts were made at the same time and evidenced by the same instrument, but whether they were in substance single and undivided contracts, or two distinct contracts. The question is one not of form but of substance, and it can be answered in each case by looking at all the circumstances, and not by mere reliance on some abstract principle"—per Viscount Haldane in Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat Co., [1914] A.C. 25 (30), 83 L.J. Ch. 79; Browne v. Ryn, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 653; Tirumala v. Srinivasa, 52 Mad. 300, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 243 (248), 56 M.L.J. 318, 121 I.C. 753. There were three mortgages in favour of the same person in respect of the same property and possession had been given under the first mortgage. The third mortgage deed provided that in case of failure to repay the mortgage money on the third mortgage within two years, the deed should be deemed to be a sale deed and the total amount due on all the three mortgages should be treated as the consideration for the sale: Held, (1) all the three mortgages should be read together and the mortgagee should be treated as a mortgagee in possession under a mortgage by conditional sale; (2) the provision was a clog on the equity of redemption; (3) the possession of the mortgagee did not become adverse to the mortgagor; and (4) obtaining a patta of the mortgaged property in his name by the mortgagee without notice to the mortgagor did not affect the latter's right of redemption—Mathai v. Daniel, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 165. A landlord mortgagee in possession cannot by getting himself recorded in revenue papers as owner defeat the mortgagor's right of redemption—Sucha Singh v. Nighaya Ram, A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 86.

A covenant amounting to a clog on redemption has no binding force either on the mortgagor or his assigns—Mehrban v. Manka, 11 Lah. 251 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 529 (534), 32 Bom. L.R. 882, 28 A.L.J. 544, 58 M.L.J. 714, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 142, 123 I.C. 554; Sundar v. Lachhman, A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 17, 50 P.L.R. 88.

An agreement which amounts to a clog on the equity of redemption cannot be enforced, even though it is contained in a consent-decree. In passing a consent-decree, the Court simply embodies in the decree the terms of the compromise, without any adjudication or an enquiry. In these circumstances, the fact that an illegal term in an agreement is by consent of parties embodied in consent-decree cannot make that term enforceable, nor can it be a defence in a subsequent suit for redemption—Ambu v. Kelu, 53 Mad. 805, 31 L.W. 44, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 305 (314), 123 I.C. 584. In the case of a clog there is no question of limitation. The mere acquiescence of the mortgagor for a long time will not estop his vendee in a suit for redemption from contending that a certain provision in the mortgage-deed, e.g., a permanent lease, is a clog on the equity of redemption—Rattan Singh v. Kishen Das, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 49 (52), 158 I.C. 452.

Relief against a clog on the equity of redemption being an equitable relief can be obtained if it is challenged within a reasonable time—Shankar Lal v. Ganga Dhar, A.I.R. 1951 Aj. 28.

Application of the rule :—The rules as to clog on redemption apply not only to the classes of mortgages defined in sec. 58, but also to a mortgage which is a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage—Pandiyan v. Velayapa, 33 M.L.J. 316, 42 I.C. 438; Srinivasa v. Radha Krishna, 38 Mad. 667; Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pillai, 42 Mad. 589 (598, 604), 57 I.C. 274. The doctrine applies to an anomalous mortgage. See Muhammad Sher Khan v. Rajah Seth Swami Dayal, 44 All. 185 (189) (P.C.) cited in Notes under sec. 98, infra. and Chellakutti v. Ven-gappa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 366, 82 I.C. 809—Raman v. Gowri, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 7.

Even in those parts of India to which the Transfer of Property Act has not been extended, the rule enunciated in sec. 60 would be applicable as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience, and clauses which take away the right of the mortgagor to redeem after the stipulated period would be deemed as clog on the equity of redemption and as such not enforceable—Ma Min Byu v. Maung Chit Po, 1 Rang. 419; Jagjewan v. Rana Jelubha, A.I.R. 1951 Sau. 53.

362. Instances of "clog on redemption" :—

It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what should and what should not be regarded as an improper restraint or fetter on the equity of redemption. The Court has to take into account all the circumstances as they existed at the time of execution of the mortgage, and all the terms of the mortgage-deed, and then consider whether the covenant is so unduly hard and unconscionable as to nullify for all practical purposes the right of redemption, or the exercise of the right of redemption is restricted in such an unreasonable manner as practically to deny it—Bhullan v. Bachcha, 53 All. 580, A.I.R. 1931 All. 380 (384), 131 I.C. 520; Sarbdawan v. Bijai, 36 All. 551 (554); Rajai v. Randhir, A.I.R. 1925 All. 643, 87 I.C. 30.

(1) An agreement restricting the equity of redemption to a specific period or date is a clog on redemption. Equity does not recognise agreements to confine the right of redemption to any given period, as the life of the mortgagor; or to any specific class of persons, as to the mortgagor alone or the heirs of his body.. Fisher on Mortgage, § 1395; Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam, 20 Bom. 677 (696). Thus, where a suit on a usufructuary mortgage was compromised and a consent-decree was passed to the effect that if the amount due under the mortgage was paid within 3 years from the date of the decree, the mortgagor was to redeem the properties, that in default of such payment the mortgagee was to recover possession of the properties in execution of the decree, held that the provision in the consent-decree which allowed the mortgagor to take possession only by execution of the decree reduced the period of 60 years provided by the law of redemption (Art. 148, Limitation Act) to a period of 3 years and was invalid as being a clog on the equity of redemption—Ambu v. Kelu, 53 Mad. 805, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 305 (312), 123 I.C. 584. Where it was provided in a mortgage-deed that the right of redemption will accrue after 10 years from the date of mortgage, and that if the mortgagor did not redeem the property on that date, thereafter he would be entitled to redeem in any succeeding year only on a particular day, it was held that the latter stipulation was a clog on the equity of redemption—Suppan v. Rangan, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 405 (509), (1938) M.W.N. 356; Murarilal v. Devkaran, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 225.

(2) A condition restraining alienation during mortgage is a clog on the equity of redemption. Thus, a stipulation that the mortgagor shall not alienate the property pending the mortgage and that he shall be allowed to redeem only by paying the money out of his own pocket and not by money raised by a sale or mortgage of the property, is inequitable and incapable of enforcement—Ram Saran v. Amrita Kuar, 3 All. 369 (F.B.); Ram Ganesh v. Rup Narain, 80 I.C. 944, A.I.R. 1925 All. 34 (35); Kripal v. Sheoambur, 1930 A.L.J. 610, 126 I.C. 366, A.I.R. 1930

All. 283 (285); Kuddi Lal v. Aisha, 2 Luck. 564, 102 I.C. 263, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 199 (200). But see Shiam Lal v. Jagadambu, 25 A.L.J. 1051, A.I.R. 1928 All. 131 (134), 108 I.C. 561. So also, where a mortgagor undertook that he would not alienate the equity of redemption and that the mortgagee should not be obliged to receive the money from any one but the original mortgagor, it was held that as the undertaking absolutely forbade alienation, and thus deprived mortgagor of a right which was an essential incident of the estate he had in the property by virtue of his equity of redemption, it could not be given effect to—Trimbak v. Sakharam, 16 Bom. 599. In mortgage-bonds in this country, a clause is generally inserted restraining alienation of the mortgaged property; such a clause does not prevent an alienation being made subject to the right of the mortgagee—Syam Peary v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., 22 C.W.N. 226, 40 I.C. 865.

Similarly, a covenant that the mortgagor shall not be entitled to redeem the mortgage with borrowed money, cannot be enforced, as its effect is to throw an obstacle in the way of redemption—Sarbdawan v. Bijai, 36 All. 551 (555).

(3) Onerous covenant extending beyond redemption:—In a mortgage of a lease-hold public house by a licensed victualler to brewers, the mortgagor covenanted with the mortgagees that he and all the persons deriving title under him should not, during the continuance of the term and whether any money should or should not be owing on the security of the mortgage, use or sell in the house any malt liquors except such as should be purchased from the mortgagees. Held that the words “whether any money should or should not be owing for the security of the mortgage” showed that the onerous covenant was to continue even after the mortgage had been paid off; such an agreement was void, because it prevented the mortgagor from getting back the property unfettered and unclogged even after he had paid off the principal and interest. Therefore, the mortgagor, on payment of all that was due upon the mortgage, was entitled to have a reconveyance of the property, free from the tie—Noakes v. Rice, [1902] A.C. 24.

(4) Agreement to convert mortgage into sale on default of payment:—A contract entered into at the time of the mortgage for the purchase of the mortgaged property is a clog on the equity of redemption—Dharba Veera v. National Insurance Co., A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 51, I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 312; Viranna v. Pallaya, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 7, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 244; Pinfo v. Sheenappa, infra; Gangadhar v. Shankar Lal, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 770; Ratanlal v. Prabhudayal, I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 517; Sirinivas Fogla v. Satyanand Gupta, A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 64. An agreement in a mortgage that in default of payment of the mortgage-money on the due date, the mortgagor will sell the property to the mortgagee at a price to be fixed by umpires, constitutes a fetter on the equity of redemption, and is therefore unenforceable—Kanaram v. Kuttooly, 21 Mad. 110; Narayanan v. Kochupenna, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 142. Similarly, a condition in the deed that the mortgage will work itself out into a sale (i.e., the mortgagee shall be absolute owner of the property) should the amount be not paid within a fixed period, is a clog on redemption and therefore void—Mehrban v. Makhna, 11 Lah. 251 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 529 (534),

A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 142, 123 I.C. 554; Srinivasa v. Radha Krishna, 38 Mad. 667; Gulab v. Pancham, 59 I.C. 338 (Pat.); Pandian v. Vellayappa, 33 M.L.J. 316, 42 I.C. 438; Athan Kutti v. Sutarjanom, 32 M.L.J. 317, 37 I.C. 756; Ram Ganesh v. Rup Narain, A.I.R. 1925 All. 34, 80 I.C. 944; Nga Po Nyun v. Mi Yin, 11 Bur. L.T. 36, 39 I.C. 377; Narayanamurthi v. Appalanarasimhulu, 41 M.L.J. 563, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 517, 68 I.C. 717; Ram Bali v. Ram Asre, 12 O.L.J. 105, 86 I.C. 686, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 386; Ramalinga v. Arunachala, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 386, 93 I.C. 338; Rocky Flora Gomez v. Parvathy Ammal, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 175; Ananchaperumal Yogeeswarar v. Sivagurunatha Pillai, (1964) 1 M.L.J. 86. No title by adverse possession can be claimed by a usufructuary mortgage even when the mortgage deed provides that in default of payment on due date the mortgagee shall become the absolute owner—Srinivasa Fogla v. Satyanand Gupta, A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 64. An agreement that the mortgagee will acquire title to the mortgaged property on default by a branch of the Tarward to pay the value of the improvements due to him is a clog on the equity of redemption—Raman v. Gowri, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 7.

A stipulation in a mortgage-deed of raiyati lands providing that upon redemption of the mortgage those raiyati lands would not come back to the mortgagor is clearly a clog on the equity of redemption—Sapneswar v. Brundaban, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 397, 148 I.C. 429; Ramlochan Singh v. Pradip Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 230. But if this agreement is entered into not in the mortgage-deed itself but in a contract subsequent to the mortgage, it will not be invalid—Kanhayalal v. Narhar, 27 Bom. 297; Shankar v. Yeshwant, 22 Bom. L.R. 965. The rule is that the mortgagee cannot, at the moment when he is lending his money and taking his security, enter into an agreement the effect of which would be that the mortgagor should have no equity of redemption, but there is nothing to prevent that being done by an agreement which in substance and in fact is subsequent to and independent of the original bargain—per Vaughan Williams, L.J. in Lisle v. Reeve, [1902] 1 Ch. 53, affirmed by the House of Lords in Reeve v. Lisle, [1902] A.C. 461. The rule is thus stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 21, p. 143: "No agreement between a mortgagor and mortgagee contained in the mortgage can make a mortgage irredeemable; and no contract between a mortgagor and mortgagee made at the time of the mortgage and as part of the mortgage transaction, or in other words, as one of the terms of the loan, can be valid, if it provides that the mortgaged property shall become the absolute property of the mortgagee upon any event whatsoever." And at p. 140: "But the rule against clogging the equity of redemption does not invalidate subsequent and independent transactions between the mortgagor and mortgagee relating to the mortgaged property." See also Venugopala Rao v. Hanumantha Rao, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 541.

(5) Covenant to grant permanent lease to mortgagee:—A permanent lease by mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee, though by a separate deed and for consideration not included in the mortgage-debt is part of the same mortgage transaction and is therefore a clog on the equity of redemption—Rattan Singh v. Kishen Das, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 49, 168 I.C. 452. A condition in a mortgage that if the mortgagor redeems the property, the mortgage should be extinguished, but that the property should for ever remain in the possession of the mortgagee on his paying a fixed rent, is a condition which cannot be enforced. Such a condition, although it does not exclude the right of redemption, fetters it with the onerous obligation of accepting the mortgagee as a perpetual tenant, and prevents the mortgagor from getting back the property unfettered; it is therefore a clog on redemption—Mahomed Muse v. Jijibhai, 9 Bom. 524; Bhimrao v. Sakhararam, 46 Bom. 409, 23 Bom. L.R. 1268; Parmanand v. Mata Din, 47 All. 582, 87 I.C. 474, A.I.R. 1925 All. 427; Daolat Rai v. Sheikh Chand, 11 N.L.R. 180; Ram Narain v. Surath, 5 P.L.J. 423, 57 I.C. 337; Subrao v. Manjappa, 16 Bom. 705 (707); Sheo Singh v. Birbahadur, 6 I.C. 707; Jagjewan v. Rana Jelubha, A.I.R. 1951 Sau. 53. And the law is the same whether the lease is granted at the time of the mortgage or subsequently—Parashram v. Lakshmibai, 53 Bom. 360, 31 Bom. L.R. 229, 115 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 186 (187); Subrao v. Manjapa, supra. In fact, such a covenant amounts to a covenant for selling the mortgaged property to the mortgagee. In point of fact, there is very little difference between a contract by the mortgagee to buy the mortgaged property out and out for a consideration, and a contract by a mortgagee to take a permanent lease at a fixed rent, which in effect makes him the owner of the mortgaged premises—Bhimrao v. Sakhararam, 46 Bom. 409, 23 Bom. L.R. 1268.

(6) Long leases to mortgagees at fixed rents :—Similarly, long leases obtained by the mortgagees from their mortgagors at fixed rents are not allowed—Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball. & B. 109. Leases by a mortgagor to his mortgagee for a long period at an inadequate rent will not be upheld—Hickes v. Cooke, (1816) 4 Dow. 16. Indeed, in such cases, the determination of the question as to whether the rate of rent is fair or not is a matter of extreme difficulty. It is obvious that the parties are not able to deal upon equal terms, and the mortgagee by reason of his position tries to secure an advantage to himself. "Suppose the land, instead of being worth only £50 (the rent at which it was let to the mortgagee) was worth £60, and that £60 was offered for it by a third person; but the lease could not be made to that person without the concurrence of the mortgagee; and the mortgagee may say 'I will give only £50,' and thus by the power which his situation gives him, he prevails, without using a single word of threat, like the beggar in Gil Blas who with his gun on his shoulder extorted money from the traveller without uttering a word"—per Lord Redesdale in Webb v. Rorke, 2 Sch. & Lef. 661 (668). Dr. Ghose, however, is of opinion that a lease by the mortgagor to the mortgagee should not be set aside merely because it was of an improvident character, and that the above observation of Lord Redesdale should be confined to leases obtained by means of fraud. "It must also be remembered that an English mortgagee may harass the mortgagor in various ways which are not allowed in this country. There is thus very little similarity between the Indian mortgagee and the beggar in Gil Blas to which Lord Redesdale alludes in Webb v. Rorke."—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 246.

(7) Right of pre-emption given to mortgagee after redemption :—If the mortgage-deed confers upon the mortgagee a right of pre-emption at a price fixed in the deed, to be exercised after the mortgagor redeems the mortgage, such a right would be "a clog upon redemption," for though such a stipulation does not bar a suit for redemption, yet it precludes the mortgagor from redeeming the mortgaged property in the same unfettered state in which he had held it when he mortgaged the property, inasmuch as after redemption he will have to hold it subject to a right of pre-emption which the mortgagee has secured under the instrument of mortgage. Such a collateral advantage bargained for by the mortgagee is really a clog upon the right of redemption—Ramasami v. Chinnan Asari, 24 Mad. 449 (458). See also Pinto v. Sheenappa, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 524, (1950) 2 M.L.J. 169. Where six days after the mortgage the mortgagor executed an agreement in favour of the mortgagee stipulating that in case the mortgagor should happen to sell the property he would sell it to the mortgagee at a concession rate, it was held that the agreement was part of the same transaction as the mortgage and was a clog on the equity of redemption—Tirumala v. Kandala, 52 Mad. 300.

(8) Covenant to pay interest in addition to usufruct :—A covenant, in a usufructuary mortgage, to pay interest in addition to usufruct (especially in a case where the mortgagors are a pardanashin lady without independent advice and a boy of tender age without experience, and the mortgagee is the superior proprietor of the mortgagors) is hard and oppressive, and amounts to a clog on redemption—Mahomed Ali v. Rakdan Ali, 3 O.L.J. 746, 38 I.C. 454. So also, where the mortgagor is not entitled to rents and profits though he has to pay interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and the mortgagees are entitled to spend any amount they like on improvements and charge the same on the property with interest at 6 per cent. the whole transaction is unconscionable—Faujdar v. Abdul Samad, 5 Lah. L.J. 394. But where the profits from the land being small, the mortgagee in possession was allowed to take the produce as well as to charge interest at 6 per cent. at the time of redemption, held that the terms of the mortgage were not unconscionably onerous—Sarban v. Bhagwan, 28 P.L.R. 59, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 457; see Gokul v. Goitri, 4 O.W.N. 147, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 595 (596); Ramkishore v. Ram Nandan, 25 A.L.J. 1086, A.I.R. 1928 All. 99 (100); Sarfaraz v. Udawat, 4 Luck. 147, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 30 (32), 113 I.C. 46. A stipulation that the mortgagor would continue to pay interest, even if he wants to redeem the mortgage, till the widow died was a clog on the equity of redemption—Sarma v. Manikyam, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 768, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 468.

(9) Postponement of redemption for a long term :—The postponement of redemption for a long period in a mortgage is not necessarily or per se a clog on redemption. What has to be seen is whether the effect of such a covenant is to postpone redemption for an unduly long period without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor or whether the circumstances are such as to indicate that the stipulation postponing redemption is unreasonable and oppressive and intended to fetter the right to redeem. Thus, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage on full consideration of facts it was held that a period of 50 years was not a clog—Bansi v. Sawanu, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 373 (374), 145 I.C. 1016; Ganga Dhar v. Shankar Lal, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 770; Saleh Raj v. Chandan Mal, A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 47. The right of redemption and the right of foreclosure are always co-extensive; and where the mortgage-deed expressly gives the mortgagee a power to call in his money at any time, any stipulation for postponement of redemption is unilateral and consequently invalid—

Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam Jilani, 20 Bom. 677 ; Sari v. Motiram, 22 Bom. 375 (377) ; Rahmat Ali v. Shadi Ram, 28 P.L.R. 150, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 226 (227). A covenant in a mortgage-deed postponing redemption after the expiry of the period fixed in the deed for redemption, amounts to a clog on redemption and is invalid. Thus, a mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagor was to redeem at the end of five years and that if he did not do so, the mortgagee was to have the option of taking possession for a period of 12 years, and that if the mortgagee took possession, the mortgagor was not to be entitled to redeem, till at the expiration of the 12 years. Held by the Privy Council that the mortgage being for a term of five years, the mortgagor had a right to redeem on payment of the mortgage-money on the expiration of the five years, and that the clause in the deed postponing redemption for the further period of 12 years was a clog on redemption and therefore invalid—Muhammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal, 44 All. 185 (189) (P.C.), 68 I.C. 853, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 17. A condition in a usufructuary mortgage barring redemption, (1) within 5 years and (2) after 20 years from the date of mortgage amounts to a clog on the equity of redemption—Vaddiparthi v. Cadimsetti, 41 M.L.J. 563, 68 I.C. 717. See also Davis v. Symons, (1934) 1 Ch. 442. Conditions in a mortgage deed providing for redemption after 49 years and permitting mortgagee to rebuild, repair, pay taxes and to recover at a higher rate of interest the mortgage money amount to a clog—Sarju Ram v. Taji Bibi, A.I.R. 1962 All. 422. A clause in a deed of sub-mortgage that if the sub-mortgage is not redeemed for five years the mortgagee will lose his right of redemption is a clog—Jang Singh v. Jewa Singh, A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 478. A covenant postponing redemption for a long term does not necessarily of itself amount to a clog on redemption. But where a mortgage was made for a very long term as 40 years, and a provision was inserted in the deed fixing a particular date on which it was to be redeemed, failing which the mortgage was to be renewed for another term of 40 years, held that the provision giving a right of redemption on one day only in 80 years was designed to make redemption almost impossible, and should not be enforced, and that the Court would allow redemption at any time on such terms as it thought fit—Sarbdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh, 36 All. 551 (553), 12 A.L.J. 927, 24 I.C. 705 ; Ram Ganesh v. Rup Narain, A.I.R. 1925 All. 34, 80 I.C. 944 ; Bhullan v. Bachcha, 53 All. 580, A.I.R. 1931 All. 380, 131 I.C. 520 ; Durga Singh v. Nawab Mirza Muhammad, 17 O.C. 313, 25 I.C. 912 ; Kunj Behari v. Prag Narain, 9 O.L.J. 294, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 283 ; Rajai v. Randhir, A.I.R. 1925 All. 643, 87 I.C. 30 ; Chandanmal v. Salera, A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 298. See also the cases under Note 363 (2).

(10) Any covenant in the mortgage-deed conferring on the mortgagee any interest in the property after redemption, constitutes a clog on redemption. Thus, under a mortgage, the mortgagees were entitled to possession for 19 years. It was stipulated that if at the end of that period the mortgagor paid off the mortgage-money, the property was to belong, as to a limited interest therein only, to the mortgagor, and as to the major interest therein, to the mortgagees ; if the mortgagor failed to pay off the mortgage-money at the end of the 19 years, the property was to belong to the mortgagees absolutely. Held that the covenant was a clog on redemption and therefore void—Mehrban v.

Makhana, 11 Lah. 251 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 529 (534), 32 Bom. L.R. 882, 28 A.L.J. 544, 58 M.L.J. 714, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 142, 123 I.C. 554. Similarly, a stipulation that the mortgagee, even after the full payment of principal, interest and costs, should continue to receive for a definite or indefinite period a share of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, is void—Noakes v. Rice, [1902] A.C. 24 (31).

(11) An agreement in the mortgage-deed giving the mortgagee a right to purchase the mortgaged property at an inadequate price (e.g., at 40 per cent. of its value) is void—Samuel v. Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation, Ltd., [1904] A.C. 323.

So also, a stipulation in a mortgage-deed that the mortgagee shall be employed as a broker of the mortgagor-company, and that if the company's goods are sold otherwise than through the mortgagee, he should be paid the amount of commission he would have earned if the goods had been sold through him, is void—Bradley v. Carrit, [1903] A.C. 253.

(12) A stipulation which gives the mortgagee an advantage which does not arise legitimately from the mortgage contract is treated as a clog—Mt. Subratan v. Dhanpat, A.I.R. 1933 All. 70 (72), 54 All. 1041, 143 I.C. 409.

(13) Where a mortgage-deed embodied a contract to the effect that the mortgagor would pay the rent to the zemindars and that if the rent is paid by the mortgagee then the mortgagor would have nothing to do with the mortgaged field which the mortgagee might get entered in his name as tenant-in-chief, it was held that the covenant in the second part was a clog—Hardwar v. Sita Ram, A.I.R. 1934 All. 888, 150 I.C. 879.

(14) A stipulation that it would be open to the mortgagee alone to ask for payment of the mortgage money and that the mortgagor would not be entitled to seek redemption, is a clog on the equity of redemption—Vaidhyathanam v. Jnanaprakasam, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 570.

(15) A stipulation that the mortgagor will not be entitled to redeem the mortgage until the happening of an uncertain period of a certain event will be a clog—Sarma v. Manikyam, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 768, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 468.

(16) In a deed of mortgage it was agreed that if the mortgagor paid the amount due within the stipulated period the mortgagee would enjoy the mortgaged property paying every year a fixed amount to the mortgagor. Held that the stipulation was a clog—Yendru v. Satyavatamma, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra 30.

363. What is not a "clog":—The mere fact that the terms of a mortgage are hard does not lead to the conclusion that they are to be considered as forming a clog on redemption. A man who enters into a transaction with his eyes open, and without any undue influence being brought to bear upon him, cannot ask to be relieved of the consequences of his action—Nathu Ram v. Shadi Ram, 40 P.W.R. 1919, 49 I.C. 946. See also Aga Mahomed v. Venkatappaya, 35 M.L.J. 287, 48 I.C. 379 (382). Where at the time of the transaction there was no covenant which could necessarily postpone the mortgagor's right of redemption to a very indefinite period or which would create an insuperable difficulty in his way, there is no clog—Jeet Koeri v. Mathura Koeri, A.I.R. 1926 All. 171, 24 A.L.J. 125, 90 I.C. 87. The following covenants have been held not to constitute any clog on redemption:—

(1) Condition for redemption of prior mortgages:—Where subsequent to the execution of a mortgage, the mortgagor executed a fresh mortgage for further advances, and in this subsequent mortgage he stipulated that the prior mortgage should not be redeemed until the principal and interest due under the subsequent mortgage had been paid, it was held that such a stipulation was not a clog on redemption, and the mortgagor must satisfy the subsequent mortgage before he could be allowed to redeem the earlier mortgage—Sheo Kumar v. Fittu Singh, 9 I.C. 52 (All.); Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan, 31 All. 482; Brij Lal v. Bhawani, 32 All. 651; Shib-narain v. Gajadhar, 48 All. 292; Chauharaja v. Ram Harakh, 2 O.L.J. 601; Naunidh Lal v. Mahadeo, 25 O.C. 134; Ram Charan v. Jagan, 24 I.C. 737 (All.); Gayadin v. Gajadhar, 24 I.C. 611 (All.); Mt. Jugesri v. Aftab Chand, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 582, 8 Pat. 68, 112 I.C. 655; Ram Kishore v. Ram Nandan, A.I.R. 1928 All. 99, 25 A.L.J. 1086, 108 I.C. 149; Mt. Rangili v. Pearey Lal, A.I.R. 1940 All. 101, 1939 A.L.J. 1056, 186 I.C. 519; Har Prasad v. Ram Chandra, 44 All. 37 (F.B.). So again, a covenant in a subsequent mortgage not to redeem that mortgage without redeeming at the same time a prior debt or mortgage, is not a clog on the equity of redemption but is a part and parcel of the subsequent contract, and the parties are bound by it—Imam Baksh v. Anwari Begam, 18 I.C. 718 (All.); Abhai Narain v. Mata Prosad, 24 O.C. 240, 64 I.C. 82; Abdul Hamid v. Jairaj, 3 A.L.J. 768; Har Govind v. Tula Ram, 10 I.C. 222 (All.); Hari v. Vishnu, 28 Bom. 349 (F.B.); Paras Ram v. Sheo Dhan, A.I.R. 1932 All. 558, 138 I.C. 492. This subject is more fully discussed in Note 378-under section 61.

(2) Long term in usufructuary mortgage:—A long term in a usufructuary mortgage does not necessarily amount to a clog on the equity of redemption—Hira Lal v. Khizar, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 168, 161 I.C. 251; Hasar Ali v. Ajodhya Sah, I.L.R. 1950 Pat. 173; Hira v. Sitaram, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 12. It is obvious that a long term in a usufructuary mortgage is less likely to operate as a clog on redemption than in any other class of mortgage, because redemption is effected on payment of a fixed sum and there is no danger of arrears of interest amounting up to an extent which may far exceed the value of the property—Saiyid Zulfiqar v. Suraj Prasad, 9 O.L.J. 365, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 221. And so, the Courts have upheld a usufructuary mortgage which stipulated that the mortgagor should not be entitled to redeem until after the expiry of 15 years—Lila v. Vasudev, 11 B.H.C.R. 283; or 20 years—Sarban v. Bhagwan, 28 P.L.R. 59, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 457; Puran Singh v. Kesar Singh, 39 P.R. 1907; or 35 years—Sarfara v. Udawat, 4 Luck. 147, 113 I.C. 46, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 30; Dattawan v. Amardeo, 12 A.L.J. 492; Aga Muhammad v. Venkatappaya, 35 M.L.J. 287; or 50 years—Sundar Singh v. Hukam Singh, 219 P.L.R. 1914; Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam, 20 Bom. 677; Faujdar v. Abdul Samad, 5 Lah. L.J. 394; Milkhi v. Fattu, 40 P.L.R. 1903; Maiku v. Gayadin, 57 I.C. 603; Ram v. Jagrup, 15 I.C. 880, 10 A.L.J. 157; or 40 years—Lal Singh v. Kartar-Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1060, 130 I.C. 57; or 51 years—Abdur Rahman v. Ram Padarath, A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 113, 20 Luck. 85; or 60 years—Ralla v. Amin Chand, 126 P.R. 1908; Ram Samujh v. Sheoraj, 20 A.L.J. 607; or even 90 years—Mahomed Ibrahim v. Mahomed, 8 I.C. 1068, 1910 M.W.N. 792;

Baldeo v. Losai, 4 Luck. 203, 5 O.W.N. 1091, 114 I.C. 811, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 54; or 150 years—Abdulla v. Sadulla, 15 I.C. 917; Jagamadham v. Venuthurupalli, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 501, (1944) 2 M.L.J. 144; or 61 years—Side Munja v. Giga Karna, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 193; Jodhiram Sah v. Harihar Missir, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 464. But see Durga Charan v. Poresht, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 105, where though the period of redemption was 50 years redemption was allowed after 26 years.

These provisions restraining redemption for a long period have been upheld on the ground that the Indian Limitation Act allows a very long period (viz., 60 years) for suits for redemption, although the soundness of this ground has been doubted in Sarbdawan v. Bijai, 36 All. (553). Still in such cases, the Courts should be guided by considerations of justice and equity. Where the effect of a covenant is to postpone redemption for an unduly long period, without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor, or there are circumstances indicating that the covenant postponing redemption is unreasonable and oppressive and intended to fetter the right to redeem, a Court may allow redemption irrespective of that term—Durga Singh v. Nawab Mirza, 17 O.C. 313, 25 I.C. 912; Darghai v. Rafiqunnissa, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 237 (238); Bachu v. Perbhu, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 356, 13 O.L.J. 476; Abdul Hakim v. Sajjad Husain, 26 O.C. 209, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 209, 74 I.C. 304; Raza Mahomed v. Ram Lal, 12 O.L.J. 222, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 406; Kunj Behari v. Prag Narain, 9 O.L.J. 294, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 283; Saiyed Zulfikar Ali v. Suraj Prasad, 9 O.L.J. 365, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 221; Sohan Lal v. Kunwar, 61 I.C. 962 (Oudh); Madho Singh v. Lachhmi, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 720. This subject has been very fully discussed in Balbhaddar v. Dhanpat Dayal, 27 O.C. 4, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 237. But it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what should and what should not be regarded as an improper restraint or fetter on the right of redemption. The decision in each case must depend upon its own circumstances. The mere fact that the mortgage-deed contained a condition that in case the mortgage was not redeemed on the date on which the mortgage-period (20 years) expired, the mortgagor would not be able to redeem it for another period of 20 years, would not amount to a clog on the equity of redemption, in the absence of materials to show that there was a design to make redemption very difficult, if not impossible—Narsingh Prasad v. Rupan Singh, 1929 A.L.J. 606, 116 I.C. 876, A.I.R. 1929 All. 388 (389). Although the mortgage may be for a long period (e.g., 35 years), still if there are no provisions in the mortgage-deed which are wholly advantageous to the mortgagee and do not confer any corresponding advantages on the mortgagor, there is no clog on redemption—Sarfaraz v. Udawat, 4 Luck. 147, 5 O.W.N. 974, 113 I.C. 46, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 30 (31). But where a mortgage-deed contained onerous and one-sided covenants which operated to postpone the right of redemption for 60 years, while allowing the mortgagee to call for the mortgage-money at any time he liked, held that as the covenant postponing redemption was unilateral and an unreasonable fetter on the equity of redemption it could not be enforced—Lal Bahadur v. Zalim Singh, 2 O.L.J. 1, 27 I.C. 581; Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam Jilani, 20 Bom. 677; Sari v. Motiram, 22 Bom. 375. A provision fixing a very long term in a usufructuary mortgage is not a ground for holding that the provision should not be enforced, but where a further provision has been inserted in the deed which makes redemption very difficult, if not impossible, at the end of that term, such a provision is a clog on redemption and cannot be enforced—Sarbdawan v. Bijai, 36 All. 551 (553), 12 A.L.J. 927, 24 I.C. 705. Where a usufructuary mortgage-deed provided that redemption should take place after 99 years on payment of double the amount of the principal money secured, held that the covenant created an unreasonable and oppressive fetter on the right to redeem, and the Court would allow redemption, irrespective of that term, on such condition as it may deem fit to impose—Muthura Prosad v. Bhagwat Prosad, 22 O.C. 191; Abdul Hakim v. Sajjad Husain, 26 O.C. 209, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 209. A covenant postponing redemption for 200 years has been held to be a clog on redemption—Fateh Mohammad v. Ram Dayal, 2 Luck. 588, 4 O.W.N. 502, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 224 (225). Where under the agreement the mortgagor was to redeem the mortgage 99 years after its execution and the mortgagee was authorized to build any structure on the mortgaged plot as he liked, it was held that the two terms were so unreasonable that they amounted to a clog on the equity of redemption—Vadilal v. Gokaldas, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 408. But see Sarjug Mahto v. Devraj Devi, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 114.

(3) A stipulation that if the mortgagee constructed new buildings by demolishing the kachcha structure, the mortgagor would pay cost of construction at the time of redemption was not a clog on redemption—Chhedi Lal v. Babu Nandan, A.I.R. 1944 All. 204, I.L.R. 1944 All. 302. Where the mortgagor, apart from agreeing to a term of 99 years for redemption gave the mortgagee in possession unlimited right to improve the mortgaged property and to add the cost of improvement to the mortgage money it was held in a suit for redemption after 72 years that the term of 99 years and right to add the cost of improvement operated as a clog and that the suit was not pre-mature—Chandanmal v. Saleraj, A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 298.

(4) Condition of pre-emption by the mortgagee:—Speaking generally, a mortgagee is not allowed as such to avail himself of the necessities of his debtor so as to obtain a collateral or additional advantage beyond the payment of principal, interest and costs. (Coote on Mortgage, p. 15). But if the covenant creating the collateral advantage is not objectionable on the ground of unfairness or unreasonableness, it will be enforced—Bimal Jati v. Biranja, 22 All. 238. Thus a mortgagee may stipulate for the collateral advantage of a right of pre-emption (if the mortgagor sells within the period of mortgage) at the market value of the day; and such a covenant is valid and enforceable, because the option of sale is still left with the mortgagor who may sell or redeem as he likes, the only stipulation being that in the event of his choosing to sell, he shall give the mortgagee the first offer—Ramaswami v. Chinnan, 24 Mad. 449 (459); Matura Subba v. Surendra, 8 Pat. 243, 9 P.L.T. 747, 113 I.C. 106, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 637 (638); Bimal Jati v. Biranja, 22 All. 238; Harish v. Jahuruddin, 2 C.W.N. 575. In a later Madras case, it has been remarked, by way of obiter, that a right of pre-emption given to the mortgagee if the mortgagor wishes to sell the property even within the period of mortgage is a clog on redemption; for, in fact, a right of pre-emption may well prove a hindrance to a sale of the property for full value—Tirumala v. Srinivasa, 52 Mad. 300, 121 I.C. 753, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 243, (250). But a stipulation that the mortgagee would pre-empt not by paying the market-price of the day or the same price as that offered by a stranger, but the price fixed in the mortgage-instrument itself is oppressive and unconscionable—Ramašami v. Chinnan, 24 Mad. 449 (459). Similarly, a covenant by which the mortgagor binds himself to sell to the mortgagee at a concession price, i.e., at something less than the full value of the property is a clog on redemption and therefore void—Tirumala v. Srinivasa, 52 Mad. 300, 56 M.L.J. 318, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 243 (250). If the mortgage-deed provides that the mortgagee shall have a right of pre-emption even if the mortgagor sells after redeeming the property, such a right exercisable after redemption amounts to a clog on redemption—Ramašami v. Chinnan, 24 Mad. 449 (455); Tirumala v. Srinivasa, supra.

(5) Granting of leases:—Leases between mortgagor and mortgagee (e.g., the granting of a usufructuary mortgage, and the subsequent grant of a lease to the mortgagor by the mortgagee) are very common and are not bad in themselves, though like all other transactions between a mortgagor and mortgagee, they are to be looked upon with a certain amount of suspicion—Mahomed Cassum v. Joseph, 7 Bom. L.R. 772. Such leases to be valid should last only during the pendency of the mortgage. A lease which is to continue after redemption is a clog on redemption—Ankinedu v. Subbiah, 35 Mad. 744. See Note 362 (5) ante.

But where a usufructuary mortgagee granted a lease of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor for a term of years different from the term of the mortgage and the mortgagor executed a kabuliyat whereby he undertook to pay a fixed rent, and the rent was made a charge of the property, held that the two documents could not be read as forming one transaction but that they must be regarded as separate and independent transactions and that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the mortgage independently of the kabuliyat and could not be compelled as a condition precedent of redemption to pay off the rent charge created by the kabuliyat—Khuda Buksh v. Alimunnissa, 27 All. 313.

(6) There is no clog on the equity of redemption where the mortgagor stipulates that he will not be entitled to redeem the mortgaged property without first paying up the rents of the same property which he held as a tenant under the mortgagee—Chatter Mal v. Baij Nath, 28 All. 712. See also 20 All. 401 in Note 369 below. The provision for the payment of “Deorah” (an undertaking to pay at the time of redemption not the principal only but a larger sum) is not a stipulation by way of penalty under sec. 74, Contract Act. It does not also operate as a clog on the equity of redemption—Lala v. Hira Jan, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 502, 96 I.C. 538.

(7) High rate of interest:—The mere fact that a high rate of interest has been stipulated in a mortgage-deed does not entitle the mortgagor to put forward a case of clog, in the absence of any proof of undue influence or unfair dealing in the stipulation for interest—Saheb Baksh v. Mahomed Ali, 7 O.L.J. 389, 58 I.C. 115; Sarfaraz v. Udawat, 4 Luck. 147, 113 I.C. 46, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 30 (32). See also Baldeo v. Losai, 5 O.W.N. 1091, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 54 (55), and Ram Krishna v. Herambo, 33 C.W.N. 388 (390). But interest at 24 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests on a mortgage amount of Rs. 98 only for a term of 50 years is hard and unconscionable—Gajraj v. Munna, 4 Luck. 415, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 173 (175), 126 I.C. 673. A stipulation for payment of interest at 24 per cent.

on the mortgage-amount and on the cost of improvement made by the mortgagee, which were about ten times the mortgage-amount, was inequitable—Bechu v. Bhabhuti, 52 All. 831, A.I.R. 1931 All. 201 (202).

(8) Stipulation to pay remuneration to mortgagee for services:—An agreement whereby the mortgagee in possession agrees with his mortgagor to charge for his personal services, (e.g., an agreement for payment of a fair remuneration to the mortgagee who acts as manager) of a large concern like a spinning and weaving mill to keep it in a high state of efficiency is not a clog on redemption—Hope Mills Ltd. v. Cowasji, 13 Bom.L.R. 162.

(9) A provision in the deed postponing the mortgagor's taking possession so long as there were fruit-bearing trees on the land planted by the mortgagee, is not a clog on the equity of redemption—Genu Tukaram v. Narayan, 45 Bom. 117 (123), 59 I.C. 258.

(10) A stipulation in a usufructuary mortgage of agricultural land that redemption should take place only in the month of Jeth, i.e., before the mortgagee commences to sow the crops for the next season, is not a clog on the equity of redemption. The intention of the mortgagee is to permit redemption at a time when the crops are not standing—Kripal v. Sheoambhar, 1930 A.L.J. 610, A.I.R. 1930 All. 283 (285), 126 I.C. 366. It is a reasonable practice to provide that redemption shall take place only in the Khali fasl, in the month of Jeth, when the crops are off the ground. The mortgagor is allowed a month within which to redeem the mortgage, and if he fails to redeem within the month, he must wait till the following year—Sarbdawan v. Bijai, 36 All. 551 (554). See also Bansi v. Girdhar, 1894 A.W.N. 143; Muhammad v. Baldeo, 38 All. 148; Narasingha v. Achhaibar, 36 All. 36 (39); Kadir Bibi v. Mailappa, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 542 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1946 Mad. 739.

364. Payment to whom to be made:—Where there are two or more joint mortgagees, a payment made by a mortgagor to one of them does not operate as a discharge of the debt so far as the other mortgagee or mortgagees are concerned. A payment to one mortgagee is valid only to the extent of his share of the debt. There is nothing to indicate that each of the mortgagees is a creditor for the whole; consequently payment to one would not liberate the debtor against all the creditors—Hossainara v. Rahimannessa, 38 Cal. 342; Ray Satindra Nath v. Ray Jatindra Nath, 31 C.W.N. 374, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 425; Jauhari v. Ganga, 41 All. 631; Umesh v. Dinabandhu, 21 C.L.J. 570, 29 I.C. 966. See also Mahadeosingh v. Bal-mukund, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 279, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 553; Md. Sharif v. Abdullah, A.I.R. 1943 Pesh. 1; Alburi v. Muthangi, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 271, 1943 M.W.N. 228. In England also, the law is the same. As stated by Lord Alvanley M.R.: "Although the mortgagees take a joint security, each means to lend his own money, and take back his own"—Morley v. Bird, (1798) 3 Ves. 631; Steeds v. Steeds, (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 537; Matson v. Dennis, (1864) 10 Jur. N.S. 461; Powell v. Broadhurst, [1901] 2 Ch. 160. In a Madras case it was held that if there were several joint mortgagees, a mortgage was fully discharged by payment to one of them, though he was not an agent of the others—Barber Maran v. Ramanna, 20 Mad. 461. The Judges who gave this decision followed the English case of Wallace v. Kelsall, (1840) 7 M. & W. 264. But the authority of this case has been considerably shaken by the decision in Powell v. Broadhurst (supra). The correctness of the Madras case has been doubted in several cases of the same High Court; see Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader, 25 Mad. 26; Veeraswamy v. Ibramsa, 19 M.L.J. 221, 1 I.C. 200; Ramaswamy v. Muniandi, 20 M.L.J. 709, 5 I.C. 343; Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Aiyar, 35 Mad. 685. Where it has been agreed between two joint creditors A and B that A alone shall receive the sum and not B, and the mortgagor with notice of that agreement and defiance of it makes payment to B, it cannot be treated as a valid payment in discharge of the debt. It will be presumed to have been made in fraud of the person who was entitled to receive the money—Chinnaramanuja v. Padmanabha, 19 Mad. 471.

Similarly, where the original mortgagee dies, leaving two or more heirs jointly entitled to his estate, a payment made by the mortgagor of the amount due on the mortgage to one of those heirs without the concurrence of the rest does not amount to a valid discharge of the debt. The right which the several heirs jointly get on the mortgagee's death to enforce the mortgage is a right created by law in consequence of the devolution upon them of the single and indivisible right which the original mortgagee had as the sole promisee, and not in consequence of their being 'joint promisees'—Sitaram v. Sridhar, 27 Bom. 292. See also Banamali v. Talua Ramhari, 5 P.L.J. 151, 55 I.C. 841. The principle is that several co-heirs constitute one heir and are connected together by unity of interest and unity of title. One of the heirs, therefore, cannot enforce the mortgage without the concurrence of the rest so as to give a valid discharge to the mortgagor and free the mortgaged property from the incumbrance—per Tindal C.J. in Decharms v. Horwood, (1834) 10 Bing. 526.

A payment to the mortgagor's agent discharges the mortgage-debt. Consequently where in the case of a mortgage in favour of the Karta of a Hindu joint family, the Karta's brother accepts payment of the mortgage-debt during his absence as his agent and grants a receipt, the receipt constitutes a valid discharge for the mortgage-debt—Ram Kripal v. Baleswar, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 246, 192 I.C. 861. A payment may be made to an authorised agent; but payment to an agent, who to the knowledge of the debtor had no authority to receive the payment or who disclaims authority to receive it, does not discharge the debtor—Mackenzie Lyall v. Shub Chunder, 12 B.L.R. 360; Bai Ruttenbai v. Fraser Ice Factory, 32 Bom. 521.

365. Mode of payment :—A payment may be made not only in the current coin of the realm but in any other medium that the creditor may choose to accept—Ragho v. Hari, 24 Bom. 619. But ordinarily, a tender of money in payment of the debt must be made with the actual production of the amount in the current coin or in currency notes; and if a debtor sends a cheque or bill without any authority or request by the creditor that the amount should be remitted in that manner, the latter is not bound to accept it in payment—Krishna Prosad v. Beni Ram, 24 All. 85; Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal, 34 Cal. 305; Wade's case, 5 Co. Rep. 114a; Polglass v. Oliver, (1831) 2 Cr. & Jer. 15. When a tender is actually made but in a currency different from that required by law, e.g., by a cheque on a banker, the objection to the form of the tender may be expressly or impliedly waived by the creditor, and he will be deemed to have waived the objection, if he rejects the tender on the ground of the insufficiency in amount or on some other ground, without making any objection to the legality of the tender in point of quality—Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal, 34 Cal. 305; Polglas v. Oliver, 2 Cr. & Jer. 15; Jones v. Arthur, 8 Dow. 442; Caine v. Coulton, 1 H. & C. 764. When a mortgage-debt is contracted in a particular currency, it should be repaid in that currency. Thus, where the loan was of Rs. 450 in the Poona currency, the decree must be for Rs. 430-2-11, which is equivalent in British currency to Rs. 450 of the Poona currency, and not for Rs. 450 of the British currency—Trimbak v. Sakharam, 16 Bom. 599 (603). Where in an old mortgage, the money had been advanced in shikkai coins, held that the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem on payment of money in British currency calculated according to the value of the shikkai coin—Hiralal v. Narsilal, 11 Bom. L.R. 318, 2 I.C. 469 (471).

Where there is a stipulation that no payment will be accepted by the mortgagee, unless on a registered receipt or endorsement on the back of the mortgage bond, the mortgagee can, when the stipulation is not fulfilled, refuse to appropriate the payment towards the mortgage-debt—Gopaljee v. Upendra, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 408, 23 P.L.T. 384.

Where no stipulation or covenant has been made between the contracting parties as to the payment of the sum in instalments, the lender is entitled to decline to receive payment in instalments, and can claim that the whole sum due be paid at one and the same time—Behari Lal v. Ram Ghulam, 24 All. 461.

366. Place of payment:—Where no specific contract exists as to place where the payment is to be made, it is the debtor's duty to seek out the creditor and to make payment where the creditor is—Motilal v. Surjamal, 30 Bom. 167; Mahadaji v. Pairia, 2 N.L.R. 62; and the creditor cannot be compelled to go to any place the debtor chooses—Mahadaji v. Pairia, supra. Where the mortgagee is deliberately keeping out of the way to avoid tender, in order that he might hold the property as long as he could, and after that, transfer it to a particular friend of his own, it will be sufficient if the money is tendered at the mortgagee's house or last place of abode—Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Ed., p. 717. The best course in such a case is to deposit the money in Court (Sec. 83).

366A. Evidence of payment:—Even where the mortgage-deed contains a stipulation that the only evidence which the parties could rely upon in support of any payments made in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt would be payments endorsed on the mortgage-deed itself, it is open to the mortgagor to rely on a receipt signed by the mortgagee or his agent—Ram Kripal v. Baleswar, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 246, 192 I.C. 861. A registered deed is not necessary to prove redemption. It can be proved by payment, conduct of the parties and other facts—Dattajirao v. Prahladas, A.I.R. 1956 Madh. B. 72.

366B. Effect of payment: Extinguishment of mortgage:—Once the payment of the full dues under a mortgage has been established, the extinguishment follows as an inference of law. A mortgage is not extinguished by a subsequent agreement between the parties. It is ordinarily extinguished by operation of law after satisfaction. It can come to an end without any subsequent registered agreement—Ram Kumar v. Ram Nath, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 315, 23 P.L.R. 143, 8 B.R. 519.

367. Tender :—A good tender cannot be made by a stranger, or generally, by any person not entitled to the equity of redemption—Watkins v. Ashwicke, Cro. Eliz. 132. A tender by one or more of several mortgagors is not such as a mortgagee is bound to accept, unless it is made conjointly by all the mortgagors, or on their behalf and with their consent—Ram Baksh v. Mohunt Ram Lall, 21 W.R. 428.

The practice of the Court is not to require a party to make a formal tender where from the facts stated or from the evidence it appears that tender would have been a mere form and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept it—Venkataraman v. Venkate, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 26, 46 Mad. 108, 28 C.W.N. 25, 71 I.C. 1035.

Actual production of money is not in all cases necessary to constitute a tender where it is shown that the creditor would not have accepted the money, even if produced—Maung Po Tun v. Maung E. Kha, 9 L.B.R. 18. Actual production of money may be dispensed with by the express declaration or equivalent act of the creditor, if the tender be otherwise sufficient; so that if the debtor says he has the sum ready in his pocket (stating the amount), and brought it for the purpose of satisfying the demand, or being in the house, offers to go and fetch it from another part of the house but the creditor desires him not to trouble himself to produce or to fetch the money, as he will not take it, or if the creditor not communicating personally with the debtor, refuses to authorize his agent to take the money, or to take it himself, the tender will be good—Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 719. Thus, a mortgagor went to the mortgagee on the due date to pay the money due on the mortgage. The money, though not actually produced, was ready there and then for the purpose. But the negotiations fell through because the mortgagee demanded three months' extra interest. Held that there was a sufficient tender of money by the mortgagor—Pestonjee v. Hurmasjee, 5 Bom. L.R. 387. But in some other cases it has been held that the money must be actually produced, unless the party entitled to payment waived it. A mere offer expressing willingness to pay is not sufficient—Chetan Das v. Govind, 36 All. 139; Mahammad Mushtag v. Banke Lal, 42 All. 420; Kamaya v. Devapa, 22 Bom. 440. In an English case it was held that generally the money should be actually produced, for though the creditor may at first refuse, yet the sight of the money must tempt him to take it—Thomas v. Evans, 10 East 101.

It is of the essence of a valid tender that it should be unconditional. If the offer is accompanied by a condition which prevents it from being perfect or complete in itself, it cannot be regarded as equivalent to payment and the promisee is under no obligation to accept it—Hira Lal v. Khizar, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 168 (175-176), 161 I.C. 251; Narain v. Abinash, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 347, 69 I.C. 273.

The mortgagor is not bound to pay the executor of the mortgagee's estate until the latter obtains probate. Therefore, where the mortgagor got the money ready for immediate payment and intimated to the executors that the money was waiting to be paid to them, but did not actually make payment because the executors had not yet taken probate, there was a valid tender as from the time the intimation was given, and the mortgagor was not bound to pay any interest after that date—Pandurang v. Dadabhay, 4 Bom. L.R. 453.

A tender of a smaller sum than is due is not a good tender—Chunder v. Jadoonath, 3 Cal. 468.

See also Note 509 under sec. 84.

368. Tender whether necessary before suit :—It was once held in an Allahabad case that the mortgagor was not entitled to bring a suit for redemption unless he had made a tender (i.e., offer of payment) of the mortgage-money; and in a suit for redemption it must be shown that he had made such a tender—Muhammed Ali v. Baldeo Pande, 38 All. 148, 14 A.L.J. 56; see also Md. Mushtaq v. Banke Lal, 42 All. 420. But this view has now been changed. The same High Court now lays down that all that sec. 60 means is that there is an inherent right in the mortgagor to require the mortgagee to deliver the mortgage-deed, etc., when the mortgagor pays the amount due at a proper time and place. It does not necessarily mean that before a suit for redemption can be instituted, the amount must be paid or tendered. In other words, his right to claim redemption on payment of the mortgage-money exists although he has not yet made any tender, provided the mortgage-money has become payable—Het Singh v. Behary Lal, 43 All. 95 (97), 59 I.C. 92; Saiyed Ahmad v. Dharmun, 43 All. 424 (426); Mewa Ram v. Ganga, 17 A.L.J. 910, 52 I.C. 229. All that this section lays down is a definition of the right of redemption; it does not prescribe the conditions under which a suit for redemption can be instituted, and does not require that a tender must be made before the beginning of the suit—Raghunandan v. Raghunandan, 43 All. 638 (641, 642) (F.B.), 19 A.L.J. 572; Dinanath v. Ramarai, 6 Pat. 102, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 512. The Madras High Court likewise holds that this section does not apply to a suit for redemption but to redemption by private arrangement alone, and therefore the non-payment or non-tender of the amount due on the mortgage previous to suit is not a bar to a suit for redemption—Butchanna v. Varahulu, 24 Mad. 408.

Where one of the terms of redemption was that the mortgagor should deposit the mortgage-money on or before a particular date, the non-deposit of the mortgage-money on that date is no ground for dismissing the redemption suit. The equities of the case, if necessary, may be settled by making a proper order for costs—Amba Prasad v. Mooga Ram, A.I.R. 1930 All. 523, 128 I.C. 235.

Where the mortgage-money is alleged to have been satisfied out of the usufruct, a tender is out of the question—Het Singh v. Behari Lal, 43 All. 95 (98).

Where the mortgagee in possession resists the right of the mortgagor to get release of the mortgaged property and to give up possession even after a valid tender made by the mortgagor has been refused by the mortgagee or a deposit is made by the former and the latter refused to withdraw the same, the suit which the mortgagor has to institute is a suit for redemption, and the mortgagor must include in such a suit his claim for over-payments to the mortgagee or excess profit received by him. If he does not do so, he would be debarred from claiming the same in a subsequent suit. The mortgagee does not become a trespasser from the moment of the tender or from the moment he receives the notice of deposit, and a suit for mesne profits after a suit for possession or redemption for a period anterior to the date of the institution of the suit for possession or redemption will not lie. After a tender or deposit the mortgagee still continues as a mortgagee; the only effect is that interest ceases to run and that a heavier burden in the matter of accounts is thrown on the mortgagee—Raj Mohan v. Saroda, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 200 (201, 202), 40 C.W.N. 627, 162 I.C. 709—per R. C. Mitter, J.

369. "Mortgage-money":—The term mortgage-money has been defined in section 58 as "principal money and interest." A mortgagee is entitled to treat the interest due under a mortgage as a charge on the mortgaged property, in the absence of any contract to the contrary; and the mortgagor is bound to pay, upon redemption, not only the principal debt but the interest also—Ganga Ram v. Nathu Ram, 5 Lah. 425 (427, 428) (P.C.), 80 I.C. 820, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 183. The word 'mortgage-money' includes all money which on taking an account between the parties may be properly allowed to the mortgagee; it includes costs of litigation properly undertaken by him—Nadershaw v. Shirinbai, 25 Bom. L.R. 839, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 264; it will include costs incurred by the mortgagee in defending an unsuccessful redemption suit brought by the mortgagor; and the latter is bound to pay the same before redemption. The Transfer of Property Act is not a consolidating statute; (note that the word 'consolidate' does not occur in the preamble); and the right of mortgagee to a general account of the moneys due to him under the mortgage-contract is saved by the provisions of sec. 2 (b) of this Act, and this right has not been cut down by sec. 58 to an account merely of the principal money and interest—Varadarajulu v. Dhanalakshmi, 16 M.L.T. 365, 26 I.C. 184. So also, a mortgagee of agricultural land spending money with the consent of his mortgagor in repairing a well on the property which had been rendered useless by natural causes is entitled to add the amount so expended to his mortgage-debt to be paid by the plaintiff before the latter could claim redemption—Durga v. Naurang, 17 All. 282. See also Notes under sec. 72. In case of a mortgage with possession with a lease back to the mortgagor the mortgagor was allowed on his application under the Travancore Debt Relief Act to redeem the mortgage in two years on 22nd. January, 1118. The mortgagee sued for possession with arrears of rent before and after 22nd. January, 1118 on the ground that the arrears of rent constituted charge on the properties and that such rent also had to be paid before redemption could be allowed. Held, that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem on payment of the statutory percentage of the debt under the Debt Relief Act and that the mortgagee lost his status as lessor with the disappearance of the mortgage on redemption—Sivany Chettiar v. Sivaram Iyer, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 13.

Where there have already been payments in part satisfaction of the mortgage, the payment of the balance will entitle the mortgagor to redemption—Hira Kuer v. Palku, 3 P.L.J. 490.

The mere fact that the mortgagor entered into a personal covenant to pay a certain sum does not prevent the said amount being taken into consideration in settling the total sums which would be paid by the mortgagor when redeeming the mortgaged property—Hardwar v. Sita Ram, A.I.R. 1934 All. 888, 150 I.C. 879.

Where a sale-deed by which the plaintiff conveyed his land to defendant for Rs. 600, contained a clause by which the purchaser undertook to "resell the land to the vendor at his request within three years for Rs. (blank)", held that the transaction amounted to a mortgage (by conditional sale); that the omission to insert the amount of the price for repurchase was either due to an oversight or intentional; and that in the absence of any specific agreement as to the payment of a different sum for redemption, the mortgagor was entitled to redeem on payment of the "mortgage-money" which in this case meant the amount actually due under the deed (i. e., Rs. 600)—Maung Pe Gyi v. Hakim Ally, 2 Rang. 113 (116).

Where a usufructuary mortgagee, instead of taking possession, granted a lease of the property to the mortgagor, the amount of rent payable under the lease being equal to the amount of interest payable under the mortgage, held that any arrears of rent must be treated as arrears of interest included in the mortgage-money and therefore a charge on the property, and the mortgagor is not entitled to redeem the property without payment of the arrears—Imdad Hasan v. Badri Prasad, 20 All. 401 (407). See also Chatter Mal v. Baij Nath, 28 All. 712. Cf. Altaf Ali v. Lalta Prasad, 19 All. 496 (498) cited in Note 403 under sec. 67.

Where it was stipulated that the mortgagor would pay interest until delivery of possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, held that after the mortgagee took possession the mortgagor was not bound to pay interest and was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal sum only—Partab v. Gajadhar, 24 All. 521 (531) (P.C.).

370. Mortgagor's right on redemption :—The mortgagor, after paying or tendering the money, can compel the mortgagee: (a) to deliver the mortgage-deed, if any; (b) to deliver possession of the property; and (c) either to reconvey the mortgaged property to the mortgagor; or to execute a registered acknowledgment.

(a) *Return of Mortgage-deed :—*The mortgagee is bound to return not only the mortgage-deed but also "all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in his possession or power". These words have been added by the Amendment Act, 1929. Similar amendment has been made in sec. 83.

(b) *Delivery of possession :—*Where the mortgagee was in possession of the mortgaged property, he is bound to deliver possession of the property to the mortgagor. Moreover, the mortgagee is bound to account for and to restore the property in its entirety, and he cannot be heard to say that he does not know what has happened to a portion of the property mortgaged—Ramchandra v. Makund, 3 Bom. L.R. 152. If a portion of the mortgaged lands is lost through the negligence of the mortgagee, he is bound to pay for it—Anandrao v. Bhikaji, 46 Bom. 218, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 156. It is the duty of the mortgagee to identify fully the property mortgaged; if he mixes the mortgaged property with his own, the onus will be upon him of distinguishing his own property, and if he is unable to do so, mortgagor will be entitled to the whole property—Ramchandra v. Makund, 3 Bom. L.R. 152 (following Wake v. Conyers, 2 W. & T.L.C. 438).

When a mortgage is redeemed, the mortgagee is bound to restore the property in the same position in which it was when he took possession. He must therefore restore the property free from the mortgage and all other incumbrances created by him. Where, therefore, he has transferred a portion of the mortgaged land under a lease, the lease comes to an end when the mortgage is redeemed—Ramchand v. Raj Hans, 3 A.L.J. 517; Subrao v. Munjapa, 16 Bom. 705; Alagirisami v. Akkulu, 41 M.L.J. 462, 69 I.C. 651.

Where a property is mortgaged and then a share in the same property is remortgaged to the same mortgagee and both the mortgages are with the stipulation that on default in paying the mortgage-money the mortgagee is to get possession and the mortgagee has on default obtained possession under the first mortgage only, then on redemption of the first mortgage he cannot claim to retain possession under the second mortgage for he has obtained no possession under that mortgage—Harihar v. Lachhman, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 246 (250), 149 I.C. 543. Where both the prior and subsequent mortgages are with the stipulation that on default in paying the mortgage-money the mortgagee is to get possession and the prior mortgagee obtained possession as against the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagee and afterwards purchases the rights of the subsequent mortgagee, then on redemption of the prior mortgage he cannot claim to retain possession under the subsequent mortgage, for the right which the subsequent mortgagee had was to redeem—Ibid at p. 251.

If the mortgagor is wrongfully dispossessed by the mortgagee from a plot comprised in the mortgage and acquiesces in such dispossession, he should not however be heard at the time of redemption in support of his claim as to loss of profits—Pranpati v. Hasiban, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 57, 135 I.C. 892. The mortgagor who is entitled to rents and profits of the property from the mortgagee in possession is a person entitled to possession in a limited sense, and if he is deprived of that possession to his knowledge by open hostile assertion by a stranger, the mortgagor's right to seek possession upon redemption would be barred after the period of 12 years—Gurunath v. Suryakant, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 453, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 225, 42 Bom. L.R. 399.

Where the mortgagee in possession obtains possession over some plots of land in addition to the mortgaged property, presumably doing so in his capacity as mortgagee, he must deliver over those plots of land to the mortgagor on redemption and is not entitled to retain possession thereof; and he is also bound to account to the mortgagor for mesne profits in respect thereof—Dildar v. Shukrullah, 46 All. 152 (153), 78 I.C. 1023, A.I.R. 1924 All. 444. Cf. sec. 63.

(c) Reconveyance of mortgaged property :—Such reconveyance can be demanded only in the case of an English mortgage. "I presume that, as there is no transfer of the mortgaged property itself, strictly speaking, except perhaps in the case of an English mortgage, a reconveyance can be demanded by a mortgagor only when the security takes the form of an English mortgage"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 271.

(d) The mortgagor can, after receiving possession of the property and paying under protest the amount demanded by the mortgagee, sue to recover surplus amount from the mortgagee if the amount paid is in excess of the amount due—Dattajirao v. Prahaladas, A.I.R. 1956 Madh. B. 72.

371. Extinguishment of right of redemption—By act of parties :—This section provides that the right of redemption can be extinguished only either by the act of parties or by a decree of Court—Kunhothi v. Koya, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 443 I.L.R. 1949 Mad. 276. The 'act of parties', a phrase used here and elsewhere in the Act in contradiction to "operation of law", must denote a release or other such transaction standing apart from the mortgage transaction under which the right of redemption comes into existence. There is no extinguishment of the right by act of parties when by virtue of a stipulation contained in the very contract under which the right is created, that right ceases to exist. Therefore, a condition in the mortgage-deed itself to the effect that on default of payment on a certain date, the mortgage shall be treated as an absolute sale, does not amount to an extinguishment of the right of redemption by act of the parties within the meaning of this section—Perayya v. Venkata, 11 Mad. 403. A mortgage by conditional sale does not become irredeemable after the expiry of the period fixed; the right of the mortgagor to redeem the property remains unaffected by the expiry of the term—Lalta Prasad v. Jagdish, 48 All. 787, 24 A.L.J. 1057, A.I.R. 1927 All. 137 (140), 98 I.C. 961; Balkissen v. Legge, 22 All. 119 (P.C.). But if the restrictive condition is entered into subsequently to the mortgage transaction, the contract will have the effect of extinguishing the right of redemption—Ram Singh v. Baij Nath, 17 A.L.J. 117, 49 I.C. 353. See also 27 Bom. 297 and 22 Bom. L.R. 965 cited in Note 362 (4), ante. The 'act of parties' means an act subsequent to the mortgage transaction; there can be no extinction of the right of redemption by an agreement contained in the transaction itself, for the law as codified in sec. 60 giving the mortgagor a right of redemption prevents him from contracting himself out of it—Ambu v. Kelu, 53 Mad. 805, 123 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 305 (313). If a mortgagor in a petition to the Municipality says that the transaction is a sale he will not thereby lose his right of redemption—Fulchand v. Kanhaiyalal, 1962 M.P.L.J. 423. Right to redeem is not extinguished by the mortgagor admitting the title of a third party to the mortgaged property in a suit between the mortgagor and the third party—Hirabai v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 172.

An agreement for sale entered into by a mortgagee with a purchaser does not extinguish the mortgagor's equity of redemption—Abraham v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 154; Kukaji v. Misri Lal, A.I.R. 1952 M.B. 6. See in this connection In re Vanraj, A.I.R. 1915 Bom. 161, 46 Bom. L.R. 921; Dadoo v. Venkatrao, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 84. Where a usufructuary mortgage contains a term that the mortgage will be converted into a sale if not redeemed on due date and after the due date the mortgagor grants a receipt to the effect that the property stands sold, the right to redeem is not extinguished by the receipt—Dulchand v. Dharanidhar, 1961 M.P.L.J. 404. Where a mortgagor sells the property to a usufructuary mortgagee by an unregistered deed, the possession of the mortgagee from the date of sale becomes adverse to the mortgagor and ripens into ownership after the lapse of the statutory period—Udaibhanusingh v. Shiv Narain, 1959 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 232.

Where the mortgagee purchased the mortgaged property under a deed and the sum of money due under the mortgage-deed exactly represented the purchase-money fixed under the deed of sale, it was held that the mortgage was redeemed—Kunj Behari v. Bisheshwar, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 98, 148 I.C. 68. In such a case the redemption was not required by law to be proved by a registered deed to that effect—Ibid., at p. 99. Where the mortgagee accepted a sale of some of the mortgaged properties from the mortgagor in satisfaction of the entire mortgage-debt and there was a clause in the sale-deed to the effect that the mortgage would be kept intact and on partial failure of the consideration by the mortgagee not getting part of the property he sued on the mortgage, it was held that the mortgage-debt was extinguished by the sale and the remedy of the mortgagee was one for breach of contract, the clause being intended merely to preserve to the mortgagee a shield against the claims of persons setting up a subsequent charge upon the same property—Kedar v. Bhagwat, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 404 (405), 15 Pat. 120, 163 I.C. 391.

A mere admission by a mortgagor or an understanding between him and the mortgagee that the latter has become the owner of the mortgaged property does not extinguish the mortgage or destroy the right of redemption of the mortgagor—Ram Singh v. Baij Nath, 17 A.L.J. 117, 49 I.C. 353. Sometime after the execution of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor entered into a registered contract to sell the equity of redemption to the mortgagee but the sale-deed was never executed. Held that there was no transfer of the equity of redemption and the right to redeem was not lost—Sitla Sahai v. Dhum Singh, 28 O.C. 100, 11 O.L.J. 543, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 114 (115), even if possession is transferred to the mortgagee—Eilappa v. Sivasubramaniam, A.I.R. 1937-Mad. 293, 169 I.C. 244.

Where the mortgagee in collusion with the Forest Department took other lands in exchange for the mortgaged lands from the Government (who acquired the mortgaged lands), held that the mortgagee would be deemed to be a trustee for the mortgagor in respect of the new plots of lands, which the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem, and the latter's right of redemption was not extinguished—Babaji v. Magniram, 21 Bom. 396. The mere fact that one of several co-mortgagors is the registered occupant of the mortgaged land does not entitle him to transfer the portion of the equity of redemption belonging to his co-mortgagors. Such a transfer in favour of the mortgagee does not operate to extinguish the right of the co-mortgagors to redeem their shares of the mortgaged land—Lalchand v. Khandu, 22 Bom. L.R. 1431, 59 I.C. 762 (763).

The withdrawal by the mortgagor of a previous suit for redemption does not extinguish the right of redemption or bar a second suit for redemption—Ramchandra v. Hanmanta, 44 Bom. 942, 58 I.C. 42. So also is the effect of a compromise—Basangouda v. Rudrappa, 28 Bom. L.R. 1507, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 87. Similarly where a redemption suit was dropped on the basis of two documents, one executed by the mortgagor and the other by the mortgagee, the right of redemption was not extinguished—Subba Rao v. Raju, A.I.R. 1950 F.C. 1, 1949 F.L.J. 398, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 752.

When a person who is not a mortgagor under a mistaken claim pays off a mortgage debt, he cannot extinguish it; for he has no right to do so. The only person who can extinguish the right is the person who is entitled to redeem the mortgage—Maramittath v. Kutteyil, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 451, 172 I.C. 47.

Though this section does not speak of extinguishment by operation of law, it may take place in that way, e.g., where the mortgagee obtains the right of redemption by succession or by adverse possession or the mortgagor gets the mortgagee's right by inheritance—Markanda v. Varada, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 197, 26 Pat. 717. But where a suit, if brought on the second mortgage-deed, is barred by limitation, the right of the mortgagee setting up such a deed in a suit for redemption of a prior usufructuary mortgage redemption of which is made conditional on payment of mortgage-dues thereunder and under subsequent mortgage-deed, is not extinguished—Jokhu v. Sitta, A.I.R. 1930 All. 416 (417), 52 All. 539, 122 I.C. 411; Kesar Kumcar v. Kashi Ram, 37 All. 634, 30 I.C. 777, 13 A.L.J. 889. Where the mortgaged property vests in the State free from incumbrance during the pendency of the suit for redemption the decree for redemption becomes infructuous—Raja Sailendra Narayan v. Kumar Jagat Prasad, A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 914.

The equity of redemption can only be lost either by a fresh agreement between the parties or by foreclosure proceedings. An entry recording the mutation of names of the mortgagee as owner is of very little help in the determination of the point—Harihar v. Lachhman, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 246 (248), 149 I.C. 543. Possession for however long a period by a mortgagee can give him no title other than the title which he has acquired by his mortgage—Basdeo v. Jaimangal, A.I.R. 1932 All. 53, (1931) A.L.J. 914, 136 I.C. 69. But where subsequent to a mortgage an oral arrangement was made whereby the mortgagee was to give up certain lands and retain certain other in full ownership in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt and other debts, and the mortgagee remained in possession as full owner for 12 years, he must be taken to have acquired a good title by prescription. Although in a suit for redemption such a transaction cannot be set up as having the effect of itself to transfer any interest in the property, it is permissible to consider, as showing the nature of the defendant's possession, that it is not as mortgagee but as full owner, and such possession having been ripened into a full title, the plaintiff's right of redemption is barred—Kandasami v. Chinnappa, 44 Mad. 253, 62 I.C. 603; Badri Singh v. Baldeo Singh, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 195.

In the case of a usufructuary mortgage the equity of redemption may be extinguished by adverse possession on the part of a stranger while the mortgagee continues in possession and the period of redemption is still running—Kanhoo Lal v. Mt. Manki, 6 C.W.N. 601.

372. Auction-purchase of mortgaged property by the mortgagee:— If a mortgagee has attached the mortgaged property in execution of a money-decree obtained by him against the mortgagor for a debt other than the mortgage, or in execution of a decree obtained by him upon a subsequent mortgage, and has himself purchased the property at the sale in execution of that decree, such sale does not extinguish the mortgage or destroy the right of redemption of the mortgagor—Martand v. Dhondo, 22 Bom. 624; Nand v. Hari Raj, 20 All. 23 (F.B.). The same reasoning applies to a mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption under a decree obtained on a collateral instrument to secure the same mortgage-debt—Martand v. Dhondo, 22 Bom. 624. The same principle applies also to a case when a mortgagee buys the equity of redemption at a Court-auction held in execution of a personal decree for money obtained by a third person against the mortgagor, even though there be no fraud or collusion between him and the third party—Erusappa v. Commercial Land Mortgage Bank, 23 Mad. 377; see also Bhailal v. Keshavji, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 1; Eapen v. Manachee, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 101, but see Mrutunjay Pani v. Narmada Bala Sasmal, A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1353 where it has been laid down that where the mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption in execution of his mortgage decree with the leave of court or in execution of a mortgage or money-decree obtained by a third party the equity of redemption may be extinguished. In all these cases, the mortgagee-purchaser does not acquire the property free from the equity of redemption, but it is liable to be redeemed by the mortgagor. The reason in support of this view is the "impossibility of the mortgagee by such sales and purchases as these freeing himself from his liability to be redeemed"—Martand v. Dhondo, 22 Bom. 624. Indeed, by reason of the advantage which his position as mortgagee gives him over competing bidders in respect of his presumably superior knowledge or better opportunities of knowledge of the mortgaged property and its value and otherwise, the mortgagee must be looked upon as availing himself of his position as mortgagee who obtained an undue advantage over the mortgagor or otherwise acting mala fide in the eye of law (whether there be actual fraud or collusion or not), and in contravention of the principle which underlies sec. 99 (old) of the Transfer of Property Act and which is given expression to in sec. 88 of the Indian Trusts Act—Erusappa v. Commercial Land Mortgage Bank, 22 Mad. 377; Naki Yathu Ummal v. Muhammad Mythun, 1963 Ker. L.J. 1177. In a recent case the Bombay High Court has, however, held that the purchase of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee does not ipso facto put an end to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee and that the sale is therefore not a nullity, and the mortgagor is bound to follow the procedure allowed by the law to get the sale set aside: otherwise his right to redeem is barred—Tukaram v. Nanaji, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 177, 38 Bom. L.R. 242, 162 I.C. 822. See also Jagadish v. Bhubaneswar, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 121, 27 C.W.N. 38, 76 I.C. 241; Gangaram v. Butrusao, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 202. Where the mortgagee, with the permission of the Court, purchases at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by a stranger on a prior hypothecation the mortgagor's right of redemption is extinguished—

Sankaran Lakshmi v. Adima Kunju, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 132. If under a usufructuary mortgage both the mortgagor and the mortgagee are liable to pay the rent but both commit default, then the purchase of the property by the mortgagee in execution of the rent decree obtained by the landlord extinguishes the right of redemption—Mt. Barti Kuer v. Brahmachari Singh, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 439. Where the shares of some of the mortgagors are effectively sold and purchased by the mortgagee in execution of money-decrees, the equity of redemption with respect to those shares is extinguished and the redemption of those shares cannot be claimed by the other mortgagors whose interests were unaffected by the decrees or the execution proceedings—Wajid Ali v. Alidad Khan, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 45, 184 I.C. 124.

The mortgaged property, occupancy raiyati lands, was part of a larger holding. The usufructuary mortgagee agreed to pay a portion of the rent of the entire holding, and the mortgagors agreed to pay the balance. The entire holding was brought to rent-sale by the superior landlord primarily on the ground that the mortgagors defaulted in paying their share of the rent. Held that the equity of redemption was extinguished even though the holding was purchased at the rent-sale by the mortgagee—Sachidananda v. Sheo Prasad, A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 126.

Where a simple mortgagee gets the mortgaged property by succession from an auction-purchaser of the property, the mortgage debt is not extinguished, and the mortgagee can enforce the personal covenant abandoning the security. Section 60 has no bearing on such a question—Ramgopal v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 354, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 284.

The mortgage-debt of a mortgagee who purchases for a small value the equity of redemption in an estate with a notification and subject to his debt is satisfied by the purchase of the village—Suraj Narain v. Bisheshwar Singh, 19 Pat. 688, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 707 (712), 191 I.C. 495.

Where a co-sharer who has become mortgagee of the entire holding purchases it in execution of a rent decree, the equity of redemption of the co-owners is not extinguished—Satdeo v. Kamal, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 27; Raman v. Cherian, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 53.

On the issue whether a suit for redemption was barred by adverse possession for more than 12 years by the purchaser at an execution sale of the equity of redemption, it was held by the Privy Council that as the evidence showed that the purchasers were nominees of the mortgagees and not independent third parties, their possession was not adverse—Khiraamal v. Daim, 32 I.A. 23, 32 Cal. 296. A Court has no jurisdiction to sell an equity of redemption unless the mortgagors are parties to the decree or proceedings which led to it, or are properly represented on the record—Ibid.

Where the mortgaged land was sold for arrears of revenue owing to the default of the mortgagee, and was purchased by him at the auction-sale, such sale did not deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem—Thakur Jai Karan v. Sheo Kumar, 50 All. 36, A.I.R. 1927 All. 747 (748); Kalappa v. Shivayya, 20 Bom. 492 (494); Lakshmayya v. Appadu, 7 Mad. 111 (112). But when between the mortgagor and the mortgagee there is an agreement that the mortgagee need pay only the Government-revenue on the land in the patta mortgaged, and as a result of default on the part of the mortgagor to pay the revenue on the other lands in the patta the land mortgaged is sold and purchased by the mortgagee, the right of redemption is extinguished—Minor Pachi v. Perumal Thevar, 1955 Mad. W.N. 662; Suraj Narayan Prasad v. Rameshwar Prasad, 1956 P.L.J.R. 495. Where, in execution of a rent decree for arrears of rent for the period prior to the mortgage the property is sold, the right of redemption is extinguished even if the property is purchased at the rent-sale by the mortgagee—Jay Prasad v. Mt. Jasoda, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 649. Where the mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property at a rent-sale he is not liable for the payment of any portion of the debt—Ibid.

Purchase by mortgagee of a portion of mortgaged property—Effect:— If several items of property are mortgaged and the mortgagee purchases one of the items, the question arises whether the mortgagee ought to give credit to the mortgagor for the value of the property purchased by him and proceed against the other items for the balance, or whether the mortgagee is entitled to proceed against the other items for the full amount of his mortgage-debt. The determination of this question depends on whether the mortgagee purchased only the equity of redemption or the entire interest of the mortgagor in that item of property. If the mortgagee purchased only the equity of redemption, he must allow proportionate reduction to the extent of the amount fairly chargeable upon the property purchased by him; and he cannot claim the entire debt from the other properties—Bisheshur v. Ram Sarup, 22 All. 284 (F.B.); Pannambala v. Annamalai, 43 Mad. 372 (379) (F.B.); Bhora Thakur Das v. Collector, 28 All. 593; Nyaunglebin Co-operative Bank v. Maung Ba, 6 Rang. 217, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 266; Somanatha v. Ananta, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 18, 135 I.C. 911; Munga Lal v. Sagar Mal, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 629, 15 Pat. 481, 166 I.C. 29. (This is in consonance with the doctrine of contribution enunciated in sec. 82). Where two joint owners with right of survivorship mortgage their land in equal shares and one of them transfers his share to the mortgagee, the mortgage is split up with the result that the other joint owner can redeem only his share of the land—Ramla Baldev v. Kiran Singh, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 420. But where the circumstances under which the purchase was made show that the purchase was made free from all encumbrances, the mortgagee can enforce his entire security against the remaining property, because the mortgagor impliedly agreed, by receiving the full value of the property, that no portion of the mortgage-debt would be extinguished by virtue of the purchase by the mortgagee—Jasodha v. Kali Kumar, 34 C.W.N. 673 (674, 675), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 619; Mir Eusuff v. Panchanan, 15 C.W.N. 800 (804, 805), 11 C.L.J. 639, 6 I.C. 842; Mahendra v. Harshamukhi, 40 C.W.N. 108.

If the mortgagee purchases only the equity of redemption, the purchase has the effect of discharging the mortgage-debt to an extent proportionate to the extent of the property purchased, i.e., the purchase will discharge a portion of the debt which bears the same ratio to the whole amount of the debt as the value of the property purchased bears to the value of the entire property comprised in the mortgage (even though the value of the property purchased be equal to the amount due on the mortgage—Pannambala v. Annamalai, 43 Mad. 372 (379, 380) (F.B.); Shamshad Ali v. Mahammad Ali, 21 O.C 172; Bisheshar Dial v. Ram Sarup, 22 All. 284 (F.B.); Nyaunglebin Co-operative Bank v. Maung Ba, 6 Rang. 417, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 263. Compare Lakshmi Das v. Jamnadas, 22 Bom. 304 (313); Sankaran Lekshmi v. Adima Kunju, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 132; Venkappa v. Gangadhar, A.I.R. 1959 Ker 112. In this respect there is no distinction in principle between a private sale and an execution sale, i.e., whether the mortgagee purchases a portion of the mortgaged property under a private contract or at Court-auction. The distinction is not so much between a private sale and an execution sale, as between a purchase of the equity of redemption and a purchase of the entire interest of the mortgagor in the property—Mir Eusuff v. Panchanan, supra; Mutty Lal v. Nanda Lal, 12 C.W.N. 745, 8 C.L.J. 92; Munga Lal v. Sagar Mal, supra. In spite of the integrity of the mortgage being broken by the mortgagee, one of several mortgagors or a purchaser of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, subject to the equities which other persons may have and due provision being made for their rights—Periakaruppa v. Satyanarayanamoorthi, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 136, 168 I.C. 899. When, however, the integrity of a mortgage is broken on account of purchase by the mortgagee of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged property, the right of redemption of each of the mortgagors is confined to his own interest therein—Abdul Wahib v. Raghunandan, A.I.R. 1945 All. 388, I.L.R. 1945 All. 637. See also Purna v. Gobinda, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 101.

373. Extinguishment of right of redemption by decree of Court:— The mortgagor's right of redemption is extinguished by a final decree of the Court for foreclosure. So long as such a decree has not been passed, the right to redeem is not extinguished by reason of non-payment of the money within the time fixed by the preliminary decree for foreclosure. The Court can extend the time for payment. See O. 34, r. 2 in the Appendix. The mortgagor can redeem at any time until the final decree is made under O. 34, r. 3—Parash Nath v. Ramjadu, 16 Cal. 246; Somesh v. Ram Krishna, 27 Cal. 705. Where in the final decree passed under Or. 34, r. 3 (2), C.P.C. there is no order of the Court to the effect that the mortgagor's right of redemption is extinguished, the right of redemption is not lost—Ram Rao v. Bhim Rao, A.I.R. 1955 Hyd. 190. When after the passing of the preliminary decree and before a final decree under Order 34, rule 3 (2) C.P.C. a mortgagee is allowed to stay in possession of the mortgaged property, the equity of redemption will not be extinguished—Ibid. See also Govinda v. Narain, A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 107. In a suit for sale a mortgagor has the right to redeem at any time before the actual sale, notwithstanding the fact that a final decree for sale has been passed—Syed Shah v. Ismail, 42 All. 517; Sukhi v. Gulam, 43 All. 469 (P.C.). See also Bibijan v. Sochi Bewa, 31 Cal. 863 (S.B.); Mistri Lal v. Mittu Lal, 28 All. 28; Adipurana v. Gopalasami, 31 Mad. 354. In Krishnaji v. Mahadev, 25 Bom. 104, the mortgagor was allowed to redeem the property even after its formal sale and before confirmation. This is now expressly provided in O. 34, r. 5 (1). See also Raghunath v. Krishnadas, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 196, 171 I.C. 612. But after a final decree for sale has been passed, the mortgagor cannot sue for partial or total redemption under sec. 60, his remedies being under Or. 34, r. 5 C.P.C.—Karam Chand v. Telu Ram, A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 473.

The word "decree" has been substituted for "order" in para 2 of this section, for the following reason:—"As the old practice of passing orders absolute in mortgagee-suits has been abolished by the enactment of O. 34, in the C. P. Code, 1908, we propose, in secs. 60, 67 and 67A of the Transfer of Property Act, to substitute the word 'decree' for the word 'order' wherever it occurs.—Report of the Select Committee (1929).

Where the purchaser of the equity of redemption at a Court-sale does not redeem the mortgage, his right of redemption as purchaser is extinguished by the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the mortgage-decree, and his suit for redemption after the mortgage-sale is wholly untenable—Baiju Lal v. Thakur Prasad, 18 Pat. 155, 19 P.L.T. 781, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 7 (12). If a property mortgaged by way of usufructuary mortgage is sold for arrears of land revenue and the auction purchaser sells the property to the mortgagee a suit for redemption is not maintainable unless the auction purchaser is the benamdar of the mortgagee—Mohon Chandra Datta v. Dinai Keot, A.I.R. 1963 Assam 176. But where a mortgagee in possession who is bound to pay rent under the terms of the mortgage commits default and purchases the mortgaged property at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent by the landlord the right of redemption is not extinguished—Mrutunjay Pani v. Narmada Bala Sasmal, A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1353.

The right of redemption is extinguished when the land is sold by order of the Government owing to non-payment of assessment under sec. 56, Bombay Land Revenue Code—Abdul Rahaman v. Vinayak, 29 Bom. L.R. 1056, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 540. Where as a result of revenue sale of the rights of the mortgagee were transferred to the auction purchaser it was not allowed to be contended that while the mortgagee parted with his mortgage rights in respect of the whole of the mortgage-debt, yet he could retain any part of his rights in respect of some part of the mortgaged property, whether the mortgagee sells himself, or the rights are sold by the paramount authority, the position is the same—Ghulam Sarwar v. Abdul Wahab, A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 330, 54 C.W.N. 386. Where the mortgagee takes settlement from an auction-purchaser in a revenue sale, the mortgagor is not deprived of his right of redemption—Ram Rup v. Jang Bahadur, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 566, 30 Pat. 391. But see Abdul Ghafoor v. Mt. Paharia, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 136 which says that where a tenant mortgages his property with possession and the holding is brought to sale by the landlord in execution of the rent decree, but later the property comes into the hands of the original mortgagee the mortgagor has no right of redemption in the absence of fraud.

The order (decree) of Court does not mean an order passed without any trial or ordinary hearing of the parties. Such an order does not extinguish the right of redemption. Where a prior suit for redemption was compromised, and the Court passed the order: "Compromised: Dismissed with costs," held that this dismissal did not invoke that the right of redemption was extinguished, and did not bar a subsequent suit for redemption—Basangouda v. Rudrappa, 28 Bom.L.R. 1507, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 87 (90). So also, a previous dismissal of a suit for redemption for default of appearance does not extinguish the right of redemption, nor prevents the mortgagor from bringing a fresh suit for redemption—Shridhar v. Ganu, 52 Bom. 111, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 67; Kashiram v. Maheshwar, 30 Bom.L.R. 1089, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 116 (118). An abatement of a previous suit brought by the father does not bar a second suit for redemption brought by the son—Ramchandra v. Shripatrao, 40 Bom. 248, 33 I.C. 771. The provision in a decree in a redemption suit that in case of default by the plaintiff in payment his case will stand “dismissed” cannot be construed as meaning that the plaintiff was to be debarred of all right to redeem and that the decree was an order of a Court extinguishing the right to redeem within the meaning of the proviso to this section. A second suit for redemption will be maintainable in such cases—Raghunath v. Mt. Hansraj, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 205 (207, 208), 56 All. 561, 61 I.A. 362, 39 C.W.N. 9, 151 I.C. 37. Unless it could be said that a decree involved a decision that the mortgagor’s right to redeem was extinguished, it cannot operate by way of res judicata so as to prevent the Court under sec. 11, C. P. C., from trying a second redemption suit—Ibid. at p. 207. Unless and until a final decree is passed in a redemption suit, the right of redemption is not extinguished and a second suit for redemption is not barred by res judicata—Jote Lal v. Sheo Dhayan, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 420, 15 Pat. 607, 163 I.C. 908; Ambalal Jasraj v. Ambalal Bodarmal, A.I.R. 1957 Raj 321; S. Krishnan Nambodiri v. Karunakaran, 1957 Ker. L.T. 1237.

374. Para 4—Notice before redemption :—The fourth para is merely an enabling clause, and does not make it compulsory on the part of the mortgagor to give notice, but merely validates it, if provided for in the deed. The object of notice is to give the mortgagee a reasonable time to enable him to find another borrower.

Where a mortgage contains a provision that the mortgagee, if he wanted payment of the mortgage-money, must give notice before the beginning of the cultivating season in any year, held that the provision did not affect the mortgagor who could bring a suit for redemption at any time—Rarichan v. Manakkal Raman, 44 M.L.J. 515, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 553 (556).

375. Para 5—Redemption of portion of mortgaged property :—The principle of the last para of sec. 60 is that in a mortgage-transaction the creditor values his security as one and indivisible, and if the mortgagor is allowed to redeem the property piecemeal, the mortgagee would suffer in the depreciation which may be caused to it in consequence.—Nilakanth v. Suresh Chandra, 12 Cal. 414 (423) (P.C.). But where the mortgagee acquires a part of the mortgaged property and thus a fusion takes place of the rights of the mortgagee and the mortgagor in the same person, the indivisible character of the mortgage is broken up, and one of several mortgagors may in such a case redeem his own share only on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-money—Kallan Khan v. Mardan Khan, 28 All. 155; Pawan Kumar v. Dulari Kocr, 5 P.L.R. 544.

Under this section, even before its amendment in 1929, the integrity of a mortgage is not broken except in the only case of acquiring by purchase or otherwise as proprietor a portion of the mortgaged property. Where the mortgagee has allowed a co-sharer of the mortgagor to redeem his part of the mortgaged property, any other co-sharer cannot redeem his part on payment of its proportion of the debt except where there is a contract to that effect—Shah Ram Chand v. Parbhu Dayal, A.I.R. 1942 P.C. 50 (54), 47 C.W.N. 1; Chiva Harakh v. Akbar Ali, A.I.R. 1948 All. 55, 1947 A.L.J. 224. Such is also the case where the property mortgaged belongs to, or after the mortgage becomes the property of, several persons as owners of different portions, and the mortgagee releases a part of the mortgaged property—Shah Ram Chand v. Parbhu Dayal, supra. But where there is no release of a portion of the mortgage-debt, the owner of a portion of the mortgaged property is not entitled to claim rateable abatement—Moideen v. Subromonia, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 283. See also Bagga Singh v. Lal Chand, A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu 6. Where the integrity of the mortgage is not broken it cannot be redeemed in parts, unless the mortgagee agrees—Dadoo v. Venkatras, A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 84.

The words "remaining due" in this para are, to some extent, misleading and must not be taken too literally. The right of a mortgagee of several properties to recover his money under the mortgage is, on his purchasing the equity of redemption in one of the properties mortgaged with him, extinguished pro rata, i.e., he can recover only a proportionate part of the amount due on the mortgage, that is to say, the portion of the debt which bears the same relation to the whole amount of the debt as the value of the property not purchased bears to the value of the whole properties comprised in the mortgage, unless it is found that it was to the benefit of the mortgagee to keep his mortgagee rights alive or that he declared his intention either expressly or by necessary implication, that he would keep his subsequently acquired rights distinct from his prior mortgagee-rights—Arunagiri v. Radhakrishna, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 520, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 44.

The general rule under this clause is that a mortgage in indivisible, and a suit by a co-mortgagor to redeem only his portion of the properties mortgaged is not maintainable—Naga Rao v. Naga, 10 N.L.R. 72; Aughore Kumar v. Mahomed Mussa, 2 I.C. 662; Jagabandhu v. Haladhar, 27 C.L.J. 110; Lala Ram Narain v. Lala Murlidhar, 5 P.L.J. 644, 1 P.L.T. 616, 58 I.C. 129; Mian Mohammad v. Abdul Karim, A.I.R. 1947 Pesh. 45. The Court has no power to compel the mortgagee to submit to a piecemeal redemption—Mirza Qaiser Beg v. Shero Shankar, A.I.R. 1932 All. 85 (90), 53 All. 391, 129 I.C. 708. A mortgage for an entire sum is from its very purpose indivisible; a division of such a mortgage is conceivable in theory, and may be carried out in practice. But in order that a mortgage may fully attain its end of securing satisfaction of the entire obligation in the rank and with the efficiency which the law or the will of the parties determined, it is essential that it should not suffer any dis-integration—Keelleber on Mortgage in Civil Law, pp. 11, 12; Huthasanam v. Parameswaran, 22 Mad. 209 (211, 212).

This section does not preclude the mortgagee himself from splitting up the mortgage and pray for a decree for sale of a portion only of the mortgaged property. In that case the lessees are entitled to redeem on payment of the proportionate part of the mortgage dues and are not bound to redeem the entire mortgage—Kamakshya v. Ramzan, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 106, 23 Pat. 648. See in this connection Bapurao v. Bulakidas; A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 225, I.L.R. 1945 Nag. 194.

The last para of this section does not apply to a decree which is not for a lump sum, as in the case of maintenance charge. Thus, by purchasing a portion of the property charged, the decree-holder does not split up the claim which had not accrued on the date of the purchase—Debendra v. Trinayani, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 278, 24 Pat. 245. But where a mortgagee has obtained a foreclosure decree against the proprietary interest of the mortgagor only, the provision of the last para of this section is attracted and the occupancy tenant of the mortgagor, if he has a right to redeem, can redeem his interest on paying a proportionate part of the mortgage dues—Pawankumar v. Jakdeo, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 210, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 740.

Piecemeal redemption must be allowed if once the integrity of the mortgage has been split up owing to redemption by one of several co-mortgagors—Phula Singh v. Harnaman, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 421. Where there has been a severance of the security and the integrity of the mortgage has been broken, it is the right of the mortgagee as well as of the mortgagor or the person having the equity of redemption to insist on the apportionment of the mortgage-debt upon the several mortgaged properties and on partial redemption—Mt. Azizunnissa v. Komal Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 579 (581), 9 Pat. 930; and when there are several owners of the equity of redemption the rights of all should be safeguarded and partial redemption of each one's share should be allowed—Ibid, at p. 582.

There must however be an acquisition of the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property or part thereof by a mortgagee qua mortgagee. The principle of this clause applies in whatever manner the equity of redemption is acquired by the mortgagee, whether by purchase in execution of a decree, by private treaty, inheritance or devise—Krishna Iyer v. Susai Reddiar, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 498, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 1003, 1940 M.W.N. 200. If before or at the time of acquisition the mortgagee renounces his character of mortgagee and purchases the property, this clause would have no operation. It is open to the mortgagor to agree that the amount paid for the purchase might go in reduction of any debt due to the mortgagee unconnected with the mortgage—Ibid; see also Perumal v. Raman, 40 Mad. 968 (F.B.). Therefore where A and B, distinct owners of properties X and Y, mortgage the same to C, who subsequently purchases the property Y free from mortgage in consideration of some other liability of B to C, this clause of sec. 60 has no application and C is entitled to recover the entirety of the debt from the rest of the mortgaged property. But that does not affect A's right of contribution against the person in possession of Y—Krishna Iyer v. Susai Reddiar, supra.

Where the consideration of a mortgage proceeds from different sources, but one lump-sum is saddled on an entire estate, the mortgage is a joint and indivisible one in which the mortgagees hold as tenants-in-common. Where one of the three mortgagees acquires in part a share in the property mortgaged without the consent of the other mortgagees, the mortgage is not split up so far as other mortgagees are concerned and they are entitled to proceed against the entire property—Sadasheo v. Rupchand, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 136, 1939 N.L.J. 142, 184 I.C. 719. In order that the integrity of the mortgage may be broken, it is necessary that all the mortgagees should have purchased a share in the mortgaged property. Where the mortgagor brings a suit for redemption against all the mortgagees, but the suit is not maintainable against one of the mortgagees (in this case the Court of Wards and no notice having been served on the Collector who was impleaded after the period of limitation), then it is not open to the mortgagor to claim a decree for redemption of the remaining property by payment of whole of the mortgage-money to the remaining mortgagees—Md. Bashir Uddin v. Waheed Uddin, A.I.R. 1939 All. 600, 1939 A.L.J. 590, 184 I.C. 862.

The integrity of a mortgage is necessary for the benefit of the mortgagee alone. Where the integrity has been broken by purchase of the shares of some of the mortgagors by the mortgagee, the only right which each mortgagor has, is to redeem his own share. There is no equity in favour of one of the mortgagors to redeem the remaining property—Durga v. Chuni, A.I.R. 1940 All 528, 1940 A.L.J. 793.

A mortgagor of an undivided share may redeem the entirety, at any rate if the mortgagee does not object, and will be compelled to do so, if required by the mortgagee—Chaudhuri Ahmed Baksh v. Seth Raghubar Dayal, 28 All. 1 (17) (P.C.). This section does not debar the owner of a part of the equity of redemption from offering to redeem the whole mortgage. Indeed, he is bound to offer to redeem the whole—Srikanta v. Jak Sah, 3 Pat. 818 (823), A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 57, 84 I.C. 293; Subbiah v. Ram Sabad, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 266, 14 Rang. 198, 163 I.C. 444. It is the law in India, as in England, that one of the several mortgagors can redeem the entire mortgage, without the consent of the owners of the other shares, subject to the safeguarding of the rights which those owners may possess—Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram, 48 Cal. 22 (29) (P.C.); H. V. Low & Co. v. Pulin, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 154, 59 Cal. 1372; but see Bai Keval v. Modhu Kala, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 319, 46 Bom. 535, 64 I.C. 972. As the owner of the equity of redemption of one of two estates comprised in the same mortgage cannot insist on redeeming that estate separately, so he cannot be compelled to redeem it separately, his right being to redeem the whole, subject to the equities of the other persons interested—Hall v. Heward, L.R. 32 Ch. D. 430; Pearce v. Morris, L.R. 5 Ch. 227.

So also, a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property is not at liberty to redeem that portion only without redeeming the rest—Kuppusami v. Papathi, 21 Mad. 369 (371); Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram, 48 Cal. 22 (28) (P.C.), 57 I.C. 585; Nainappa v. Chidambaram, 21 Mad. 18 (26); Huthasanam v. Parameshwaram, 22 Mad. 209 (212). The purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption is entitled to maintain a suit for redemption of the entire mortgage—Huthasanam v. Parameshwaram, 22 Mad. 209 (211); Baikuntha v. Mahesh, 22 C.W.N. 128 (129); Pratap Chandra v. Peary Mohan, 22 C.W.N. 800 (802); Rugad Singh v. Sat Narain, 27 All. 178 (179, 182); Chandu Agasta v. Chandrabali Kalar, A.I.R. 1965 Orissa 63.

A partial owner of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the whole mortgage—Fakir Chand v. Babu Lal, 39 All. 719 (721); Sankar v. Bhikaji, 53 Bom. 353; Baikuntha v. Mahesh, 22 C.W.N. 128 (129) (dissenting from Girish v. Juramani, 5 C.W.N. 83); Pratap Chandra v. Peary Mohan, 22 C.W.N. 800 (802); Rugad Singh v. Sat Narain, 27 All. 178 (182); and this he can do even against the will of the mortgagee—Fakir Chand v. Babu Lal, supra; Huthasanam v. Parameshwaram, 22 Mad. 209 (211); Velayudam v. Alangaran, 15 I.C. 605, 23 M.L.J. 475; Mustafa v. Shadi Lal, 10 O.C. 81 (84). As observed by the Privy Council, each and every one of the mortgagors who owns separate shares in certain mortgaged property is not merely interested in the payment of the mortgage-money and the redemption of the estate, but has a right by payment of the money to redeem the estate, seeking contribution from the others—Norendra v. Dwarka, 3 Cal. 397 (P.C.), 5 I.A. 18 (27).

"The character of indivisibility exists not only with reference to the mortgagee, who may generally be more benefited thereby, but also with reference to the mortgagor. And save as a matter of special arrangement and bargain entered into between all the persons interested, neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee, nor persons acquiring through either, a partial interest in the subject, can under the mortgage get relief, except in consonance with the principle of indivisibility"—per Subramania Ayyar, J. in Huthasanam v. Parmeshwaram, 22 Mad. 209 (212); Lachhmi Narain v. Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1935 All. 391, 154 I.C. 437.

Where four mortgages were consolidated, the consolidation gave rise to an anomalous mortgage; so the mortgagee was entitled to decline to be redeemed unless he was redeemed as to all—Chacko v. Subramania, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 552.

The mortgagor who redeems the whole property is entitled to a rateable contribution from the other mortgagors, and he is entitled to hold the entire property in charge until he is in turn redeemed by his co-sharers on payment of their quota of the debt, with all incidental expenses—Jagat Narain v. Qutab Hussain, 2 All. 807; Changa Das v. Gansing, 20 Bom. 615. Until then he is, to all intents and purposes, in the position of the mortgagee redeemed—Asansah v. Vamana, 2 Mad. 223. See secs. 92 and 95.

The rule as to indivisibility of a mortgage applies not only where there are several mortgagors but also where there are several mortgagees. And no redemption can be effected of a portion of the mortgaged property by paying to one of the mortgagees his separate debt—Sunitibala v. Dhara Sundari, 47 Cal. 175 (179) (P.C.). Their Lordships observed in this case: "It would of course be possible—though inconvenient—to execute in one document a mortgage of one-half of an entire property in favour of each of two mortgagees. By this means two independent mortgages would be combined in one deed, and in such a case independent relief might be granted to each mortgagee—Ibid, at p. 179; Lachhmi Narain v. Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1935 All. 391, 154 I.C. 437. A mortgage debt created by four mortgagees was settled by an award under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act at Rs. 3000. Thereafter a suit for mortgage was instituted by them claiming Rs. 11508 on the allegation that the award was a nullity. The award was held to be valid as against plaintiffs 1 and 2 and invalid as against plaintiffs 3 and 4 who were minors when the award was made. Consequently the mortgage debt had to be apportioned between the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs 1 and 2 got a decree in their half share on the footing that the amount of the mortgage debt was Rs. 3000, whereas plaintiffs 3 and 4 obtained decree in their half share on the basis of Rs. 11508. It was however held that the security could not be split up and that the plaintiffs would be entitled to proceed against the entire mortgaged property for the realisation of the total decretal amount—Hrishikesh v. Sushi Chandra, A.I.R. 1957, Cal. 211.

But the rule in this para should be applied subject to a contract to the contrary. Therefore, where one of the terms of a mortgage was that the mortgagor might redeem any portion of the mortgaged property upon payment of a proportionate part of the debt, one of the heirs of the mortgagor was allowed to redeem his own share of the property—Shafaat-ullah v. Izzatullah, 13 A.L.J. 372, 28 I.C. (678). As an instance of such a contract see Nathu Mal v. Raman Mal, A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 124, 67 I.A. 126, 41 C.W.N. 901, 167 I.C. 786, I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 245, where upon construction of the mortgage-deed their Lordships held that the mortgagor had power to redeem part without redeeming the whole of the mortgaged property—a power consistent with the preservation of the security—at p. 126. Where the mortgage is invalid for absence of a registered deed, the rules relating to partial redemption of a mortgage are not applicable, and a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property can obtain the area bought by him on re-payment of a proportionate amount of the debt. He will not be required to redeem the whole mortgage—Maung Tun v. Maung Aung Dun, 2 Rang. 313 (319).

The legal effect of the proviso to sec. 60 after the amendment of 1929 was considered by Kapur J. in Narain Singh v. Teza Singh, A.I.R. 1955 Punjab 96. There in 1945 one Ujagar Singh, mortgaged to Lehna Singh 86 kanals 12 marlas of land plus some other land for Rs. 2000. In 1949 the heirs of Lehna Singh transferred to Narain Singh for Rs. 1000 the mortgagee rights in 86 kanals 12 marlas, because the other land was allowed to be redeemed by Ujagar before that date for Rs. 1000. In 1950 Ujagar mortgaged 39 kanals 12 marlas out of 86 kanals 12 marlas to the plaintiff on receiving Rs. 2000. The plaintiff instituted a suit for declaration that they were entitled to redeem the whole of 86 kanals and 12 marlas of land. It was contended by the contesting defendants that the heirs of Lehna Singh having allowed a portion of the mortgaged property to be redeemed by the mortgagor there was a splitting up of the mortgage and that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem only 39 kanals 12 marlas of land. This contention was rejected and the suit was decreed. His Lordships has held that there is no splitting up of the mortgage in the following cases: (1) Where the mortgagee allows redemption of a part of the mortgaged property and (2) where there is a release of a part or a share by the mortgagee; and that only when the mortgagee acquires a share or part of the property mortgaged there will be a splitting up of the mortgage.

376. Acquisition by mortgagee of the share of a mortgagor:—If the indivisibility of the mortgage is broken by the mortgagee purchasing, inheriting or otherwise, the mortgagor, his successor or any other person entitled to redeem will be entitled to redeem his share only of the mortgaged property—Maulabux v. Sardarmal, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 341 (F.B.). The fact that the mortgagee releases a part of the mortgaged property does not however give rise to the right of partial redemption—Delansingh v. Darbarilal, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 346, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 376. Where the mortgagee acquires a share of the mortgaged property, one of the co-mortgagors can redeem the entire residue left in spite of the mortgagee's opposition—Pala Singh v. Attar Singh, A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 81. The inference as to release is appropriate where the purchase is made for an independent consideration. But when the substance of the transaction is the purchase of the equity of redemption there will be a splitting up of the mortgage—Ananthayya v. Hengsu, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 293. The mortgage security is split up only where there is a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property and seeking to redeem his own share only paying a proportionate part of the amount due, and a mortgagor whose share the mortgagee had acquired—Ibid; Patel Kempegowda v. Channaveeriah, A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 43. The mortgage-debt may be apportioned where circumstances have happened, the effect of which, in fact or in law, is to create a severance of the security; e.g., where the mortgagee himself has become the owner of a part of the equity of redemption or where by his own conduct there has been a break up of the entire security—Rajat Kamini v. Satya Niranjana, 23 C.W.N. 824. The test is, whether there has been a severance of the security at the instance or with the consent of the mortgagee, and an apportionment will not be imposed upon the mortgagee unless equitable considerations are established—Debendra Nath v. Mirza Abdul, 10 C.L.J. 150, 1 I.C. 264 (277). If a part of the mortgaged property be acquired by a sole mortgagee (or by all the mortgagees where there are more mortgagees than one), the integrity of the mortgage is thereby broken up, and each of the owners of the remainder of the property becomes entitled to redeem his own share upon payment of a proportionate part of the amount due on the mortgage—Kudhai v. Sheo Dayal, 10 All. 570; Shiam Saran v. Banarsi, 20 A.L.J. 258, A.I.R. 1922 All. 192; 66 I.C. 866; Nilakant v. Suresh, 12 Cal. 414 (P.C.); Debendra v. Mirza Abdul, 10 C.L.J. 150, 1 I.C. 264; Ranghunath v. Sadhu Saran, 5 P.L.T. 312, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 31, 75 I.C. 821; Nand Kishore v. Raja Hariraj, 20 All. 23; Moro v. Balaji, 13 Bom. 45. Thus, when a mortgage is split up by the mortgagee buying up the equity of redemption from some of the heirs of the original mortgagor, any one of the remaining heirs is entitled to redeem his share of the mortgaged property on payment of a proportionate sum due on his share—Mewa Ram v. Ganga Ram, 17 A.L.J. 910, 52 I.C. 229. This rule equally applies whether the mortgagee-decreeholder acquires a part of the mortgaged property before a decree for sale or after it—Sarju Kumar v. Thakur Prosad, 18 A.L.J. 690, 58 I.C. 743. This rule also enures to the benefit of the purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption; so that, when the mortgagee has destroyed the indivisibility of the original contract, the purchaser of the equity of redemption of a portion of the mortgaged property is entitled to redeem that portion on payment of a proportionate amount of the mortgage-money—Marana v. Pendyala, 3 Mad. 230; Makabir v. Moham-mad, 38 All. 103; Subramanyan v. Mandyan, 9 Mad. 453; Jagannath v. Jaipal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 257 (F.B.), 142 I.C. 410. Conversely, where one of two mortgagors purchases the entire mortgagee-rights, the integrity of the mortgage is broken up, and the other mortgagor is entitled to a decree for redemption in respect of his share in the mortgaged property—Sarfaraz v. Md. Salim, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 348, 150 I.C. 140.

But in such cases, (i.e., where the mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property, and a fusion takes place of the rights of the mortgagee and the mortgagor in the same person, and the indivisible character of the mortgage is broken up) neither a co-mortgagor nor the purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem more than his own share in the property. Each co-mortgagor or purchaser may redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-money; but he cannot claim to redeem the shares of other persons in which he is not interested, against the wishes of the mortgagee—Kullan Khan v. Mardan Khan, 28 All.155 (157); Munshi v. Daulat, 29 All. 262 (263); Dina Nath v. Luchmi Narain, 25 All. 446; Jagannath v. Jaipal, 55 All. 359 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1933 257 (259); Rathna Mudali v. Perumal 38 Mad. 310; Ahamad Husain v. Md. Qasim 48 All. 171, 24 A.L.J. 88, A.I.R. 1926 All. 46; Zaibunissa v. Parbhu Narain, 39 All. 618; Girish Chander v. Juramani, 5 C.W.N. '83; Mustafa v. Shadi Lal, 10 O.C. 81 (84); Jai Govind v. Abhai Raj, 26 O.C. 308, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 40; Mahomed Zaki Ali v. Ahmad Shah, 7 O.L.J. 585, 58 I.C. 983; Ramadhin v. Jokhan, 5 O.L.J. 248, 47 I.C. 115; and the mortgagee can claim from the co-mortgagor or his assignees only so much of the mortgage-debt as is proportionate to the portion of the mortgaged property owned by them—Ko Thina v. Ismail Cassim, 1 Bur. L.J. 117, 68 I.C. 887. If a mortgagee omits to implead persons interested in a portion of the mortgaged property and then brings about the property to sale and purchases it himself, he is bound to allow redemption of the portion on payment of the proportionate amount—Bhekdhari v. Radhika, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 648, 13 Pat. 364; Madhuram v. Bhotong, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 59, 86 I.C. 193. Where the integrity of the first mortgage was broken, the first mortgagee becoming also the purchaser of the property, the second (usufructuary) mortgagee could redeem only the portion mortgaged to him and had no right to redeem all the properties purchased by the first mortgagee—Amir Chand v. Moti, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 434, 134 I.C. 959. See also Ahmad v. Md. Qasim, A.I.R. 1926 All. 46, 90 I.C. 80. Although the suit be one for possession, the Court can grant redemption to prevent further litigation—Amir Chand v. Moti, supra, at pp. 435, 436. Where the rights of the mortgagors have vested partly in a prior mortgagee and partly in a subsequent mortgagee after a suit had been brought by each of them to enforce his own mortgage without impleading the other, neither the former can be compelled to redeem the whole nor can he compel the latter to give up his interest in the share which he has acquired. Each can redeem to the extent of the shares of his mortgagors acquired by him—Amba Prosad v. Wahidullah, 44 All. 708 (710, 711), A.I.R. 1922 All. 405, 68 I.C. 260.

But this rule does not apply where the mortgage is split up not by the mortgagee, but by the act of one of the mortgagors. Thus where by the terms of a mortgage-deed, one of the four mortgagors was allowed to redeem separately his one-fourth share by paying one-fourth of the mortgage-debt, the integrity of the mortgage was not broken up by any act of the mortgagee, and another mortgagor (who was entitled to $\frac{1}{2}$ share) could redeem the whole of the remaining $\frac{1}{2}$ share and to obtain possession of the same—Shafaatullah v. Izzatullah, 13 A.L.J. 372, 28 I.C. 677 (678).

A distinction has been drawn by the Bombay High Court between cases in which the mortgagors are the owners of distinct parcels of land, and cases in which the mortgagors are joint tenants or tenants-in-common in the mortgaged property; and the High Court lays down that in the event of the mortgagee becoming the owner of a portion of the equity of redemption, if the mortgagors are owners of distinct parcels of land, each of them can redeem only to the extent of his share, but if they are joint tenants or tenants-in-common in the mortgaged property, they must redeem the whole—Bhikaji v. Lakshman, 15 Bom. 27 Note; Narayan v. Ganpat, 21 Bom. 619. But the Allahabad High Court does not recognize such distinction and lays down that each of the mortgagors (whether they are owners of distinct parcels or are joint tenants or tenants-in-common) is entitled to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt. See Kullan v. Mardan, 28 All. 155; Dina Nath v. Luchmi 25 All. 446; Munshi v. Daulat, 29 All. 262; Zaibunnessa v. Parbhu, 39 All. 618 (621); Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., pp: 266-267, where this subject has been fully discussed. See also Md. Ismail v. Sharfutullah, 57 Cal. 872, 129 I.C. 310, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 810 (814).

Where the mortgagee has purchased the equity of redemption in one portion of the mortgaged property, but there has been no severance of the equity of redemption according to the shares of the mortgagors, one mortgagor can redeem the whole of the remaining portions of the mortgaged property—Sidheswar v. Ganpatrao, 50 Bom. 331, 28 Bom. L.R. 588, 96 I.C. 361, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 303

The rule in this section applies when the mortgagee acquires the 'share of a mortgagor' i.e., a portion of the mortgaged property. But where the mortgagee purchases that whole of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree in a suit on his mortgage, without impleading a purchaser of the equity of redemption in a portion of the property, there is no splitting up of the mortgage, and the purchaser of the equity of redemption is liable to redeem his portion of the mortgaged lands only on payment of the entire decree-amount—Venkat Reddy v. Kunjappa, 47 Mad. 551 (566). But see R. C. Sardar v. Tarubala, 69 C.W.N. 688, where it has been held that if a mortgagee obtains a decree for foreclosure without impleading one of the co-mortgagors having $\frac{1}{6}$ share, the latter can by a subsequent suit redeem his $\frac{1}{6}$ share by making a deposit of the proportionate amount.

The rule in this section does not apply where a mortgagor makes a deposit in Court of the whole mortgage-money under section 83. The owner of a share only of the mortgaged properties is entitled to deposit in Court the whole of the mortgage-debt and redeem the whole mortgage, in spite of the fact that the mortgagee has purchased the equity of redemption in some of the mortgaged properties. In such case, the part owner of the mortgaged properties becomes entitled upon such deposit, to all the mortgagee's rights including the right to possession (if the mortgagee was a mortgagee in possession) of the whole of the mortgaged properties, including those purchased by the mortgagee—Subba Rao v. Sarvarayudu, 47 Mad. 7 (11, 20).

This clause applies when all the mortgagees (when there are more than one) have acquired the share of a mortgagor. If, however, some only of the mortgagees have purchased a share of a mortgagor, there is no merger of interest, for the purchaser is not the sole mortgagee. In such a case, a co-mortgagor has no right to redeem his share of the mortgaged property by payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt but is bound to pay the entire mortgage-debt—Mahtab Rai v. Sant Lal, 5 All. 276; Mohan Lal v. Parshadi Lal, 45 All. 46 (48), 74 I.C. 999, A.I.R. 1924 All. 11; Subba Rao v. Sarvarayudu, 47 Mad. 7 (19); Jagmohan v. Harbans, 1 O.W.N. 637, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 609. The purchaser-mortgagee is in no different position from an outsider so far as his rights conferred by his purchase are concerned. The mortgage remains one and undivided, and if redeemed at all, can only be redeemed in its entirety—Jagmohan v. Harbans, (supra). If a mortgagee releases a portion of the mortgaged property by receiving the amount of money alleged to be due from such property, he does not thereby break the integrity of the mortgage, nor does it entitle the mortgagor to redemption of a portion only of the mortgaged property. The integrity of the mortgage can only be broken up in case the mortgagee or mortgagees purchase a part of the mortgaged property—Haji Ali Jan v. Majiduddin, A.I.R. 1923 All. 499, 45 All. 524.

“Acquired”:—The word ‘acquired’ in this section is not restricted to acquisition by purchase, but it also applies to acquisition by any other mode of transfer recognised by law. Thus, where the mortgagee has acquired a share of the mortgaged property by foreclosure, an owner of another portion of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem his portion without redeeming the whole mortgage—Brij Kishore v. Madho Sing, 28 All. 279 (280). So also, where the mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property by inheritance, there is a merger of rights, and the integrity of the mortgage is broken up. In such a case, a co-mortgagor will be allowed to redeem his own share only—Hamida Bibi v. Ahmed Husain, 31 All. 335; Zafar v. Zubaida, 27 A.L.J. 1114, A.I.R. 1929 All. 604 (606), 121 I.C. 398. Similar results follow where the mortgagee purchases a portion of the mortgaged property at a sale in execution of a money-decree—Ariyaputri v. Alamelu, 11 Mad. 304. Where the mortgagee who is entitled to possession of the mortgaged properties gets possession of only half of the properties by consent of the mortgagors, and the possession of the other half is withheld, it cannot be said that the mortgagee by accepting possession of half the property only had acquiesced in the integrity of the mortgage being broken up; and the mortgagors cannot claim to redeem the property piecemeal. The integrity of a mortgage can be broken up only in the case of a mortgagee acquiring a portion of the mortgaged property—Thakur Prosad v. Chandrika, 11 O.L.J. 436, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 150 (152), 81 I.C. 742.

Where the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to pay off a portion of the mortgage-debt and so releases a proportionate part of the mortgaged property, he does not thereby break up the mortgage so as to entitle the mortgagor to redeem the remainder of the property piecemeal—Ali Jan v. Majiduddin, 45 All. 524 (525), A.I.R. 1923 All. 449; Lachmi Narain v. Muhammad Yusuf, 17 All. 63 (66); Baldeo v. Jawahir, 2 O.C. 344 (348); Mt. Beti v. Tantiye, A.I.R. 1926 All. 136, 89 I.C. 574. Where a mortgagee voluntarily releases a portion of the property the debt is not reduced proportionately; hence he is entitled to recover the whole of the mortgage amount from any portion of the mortgaged property—Ananthayya Holla v. Thimaju Hengsu, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 293; M. Ramanna v. C. Butchamma, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 598.

But this rule was not followed in some cases. Thus, in a Madras case, where the mortgagee allowed the mortgagor to redeem a portion of the mortgaged property, it was held that the mortgagee destroyed the indivisibility of the mortgage—Subramanyan v. Mandayan, 9 Mad. 453 (454). The Bombay High Court held that an owner of a part of the equity of redemption of mortgaged properties was entitled to redeem that portion when the mortgagee had acted in such a way as to release a portion of the properties from the mortgage-debt—Mayashankar v. Burjorji, 27 Bom. L.R. 1149, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 31 (32). So also, where the three mortgagors made a partition of the property, by which each of them became entitled to a 1/3 undivided share, and two of the mortgagors redeemed their two shares by paying 2/3 of the mortgage-money, held that the other mortgagor must also be allowed to redeem his 1/3 share—Lakshuman v. Madhav, 15 Bom. 186. See also Mahadaji v. Ganpatshet, 15 Bom. 257. A Calcutta case expressed the view that if a portion of the property was released by the mortgagee, the mortgage should be treated as having been split up—Hari Kissen v. Veliat, 30 Cal. 755 (757). A mortgagee can not release a part of the mortgaged land and then seek to enforce his entire claim upon another in which third parties have become to his knowledge interested as assignees of the equity of redemption—Pranballav v. Bhagaban, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 775, following Surjeram v. Bahramdeo, 1 C.L.J. 337. The mortgage-debt could be always split up by consent, and on such splitting up, a mortgagee could sue one of the mortgagors for a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt, provided the burden of the mortgagor did not increase—H. V. Lowe & Co. v. Pulin Bihari, 59 Cal. 1372, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 154 (162); Waleyatunnissa v. Chalakhi, 10 Pat. 341, 132 I.C. 100, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 164 (168). But this view has been disapproved of by the Legislature, and the object of inserting the word "only" in this para has been thus stated by the Special Committee:—

"The last paragraph of the section relates to what is known as the principle of the indivisibility or integrity of a mortgage. 'Such integrity or indivisibility exists not only with reference to the mortgagee, who may be generally benefited thereby, but also with reference to the mortgagor. Save as a matter of special arrangement, neither the mortgagor, nor the mortgagee nor any person claiming through either of them should get relief except in consonance with the principle of indivisibility' [22 Mad. 209, (212).] We do not think it necessary to alter the last paragraph of the section except that the word 'only' should be inserted between the words 'except' and 'where' with a view to get rid of the effect of the decision in 27 Bom. L.R. 1449. The only case, therefore, when the integrity of a mortgage may be allowed to be broken, apart from special arrangement, is when a mortgagee acquires a share in the mortgaged property."

So under this section the integrity of a mortgage is not broken except where the mortgagee has purchased or otherwise acquired as proprietor a certain portion of the mortgaged property. So long as the integrity of the mortgage remains intact, each item of the property mortgaged is liable for the whole amount due under the mortgage—Ram Chand v. Parbhu Dayal, A.I.R. 1936 All. 595, (1936) A.L.J. 1116, 164 I.C. 613. But where a mortgagee-decreeholder purchases at the auction sale one of the mortgaged properties, such purchase has the effect of discharging and extinguishing a portion of the mortgage-debt which is chargeable on the property purchased by him. The decree-holder can in such a case proceed against the other property but only to that extent of the decretal dues which bears the same proportion to the total decretal dues as the absolute value of that property bears to the absolute value of the properties comprised in the mortgage. By "absolute value" is meant the value of the property free from a charge—Krishna Chandra v. Pabna Model Co., A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 319, 59 Cal. 76, 137 I.C. 260. But in Raghubir v. Panchaiti Akhara, A.I.R. 1937 All. 44, (1937) A.L.J. 113, 167 I.C. 783 it has been held that, where a mortgagor sells to a third person a portion of the mortgaged property and then sells an item thereof to the mortgagee, the integrity of the mortgage is broken and such third person can redeem his share in the mortgaged property on payment of a proportionate part of the amount due, not in proportion to the value of different items of the property but in proportion to the liabilities of the parties under the sale-deed. Where the mortgagee agrees to place himself in possession of a portion of the property so that the proportionate mortgage debt may be satisfied by the enjoyment of its usufruct for a certain term, a suit for possession of that portion of the property would not be bad for partial redemption as the mortgagee has already allowed the mortgage-security to be split up—Tarapada Mondal v. Hajai Khatum Bibi, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 625.

60A. (1) Where a mortgagor is entitled to redemption, then, on the fulfilment of any conditions on the fulfilment of which he would be entitled to require a re-transfer, he may require the mortgagee, instead of re-transferring the property, to assign the mortgage-debt and transfer the mortgaged property to such third person as the mortgagor may direct; and the mortgagee shall be bound to assign and transfer accordingly.

(2) The rights conferred by this section belong to and may be enforced by the mortgagor or by any encumbrancer notwithstanding an intermediate encumbrance; but the requisition of any encumbrancer shall prevail over a requisition of the mortgagor and, as between encumbrancers, the requisition of a prior

Obligation to transfer to third party instead of re-transfer to mortgagor.

encumbrancer shall prevail over that of a subsequent encumbrancer.

(3) The provisions of this section do not apply in the case of a mortgagee who is or has been in possession.

60B. A mortgagor, as long as his right of redemption subsists, shall be entitled at all reasonable times, at his request and at his own cost, and on payment of the mortgagee's costs and expenses in this behalf, to inspect and make copies or abstracts of, or extracts from, documents of title relating to the mortgaged property which are in the custody or power of the mortgagee.

Sections 60A and 60B have been added by section 23 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

"We have added, on the lines of sections 95 and 96 of the English Property Act, two new sections—sections 60A and 60B—to define the obligation of a mortgagee, when so required, to transfer the mortgage-debt to a third person named by the mortgagor, and also to make it clear that a mortgagor has a right to inspect and take copies of the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession of the mortgagee"—Report of the Select Committee (1929).

61. A mortgagor seeking to redeem any one mortgage shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled to do so without paying any money due under any separate mortgage, made by him or by any person through whom he claims, on property other than that comprised in the mortgage which he seeks to redeem.

61. A mortgagor who has executed two or more mortgages in favour of the same mortgagee shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, when the principal money of any two or more of the mortgages has become due, be entitled to redeem any one such mortgage separately, or any two or more of such mortgages together.

Illustration.

A, the owner of farms Z and Y, mortgages Z to B for Rs. 1,000. A afterwards mortgages Y to B for Rs. 1,000, making no stipulation as to any additional charge on Z. A may institute a suit for the redemption of the mortgage on Z alone.

(Omitted.)

Amendment :—This section has been redrafted by sec. 24 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929) for the following reasons:—

"Section 61 abolished the doctrine of the consolidation of mortgages. The section was based on section 17 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (corresponding to section 93 of the Property Act, 1925). In England before that statute was enacted, and in this country before Act IV of 1882 was passed, a mortgagee was allowed to consolidate securities in his hands and force a mortgagor to redeem all of them or to prevent him from redeeming one of them without redeeming the others. [Ghose on Mortgage, 5th Ed., Vol. I, p. 429; 6 B.H.C.R. (A.C.J.) 90.] This was inequitable and was altered by section 61 of the Act. But even that section is not exhaustive. It is proposed, therefore, that a mortgagor should be allowed to redeem simultaneously all debts or any one or more of them which have become due to the same mortgagee. The same principle ought to apply where portions of one and the same property are mortgaged separately. Accordingly, any reference to 'property' has been omitted and the words 'two or more mortgages' have been used and the illustration has been omitted."—Report of the Special Committee.

The effect of the amendment is to abolish the consolidation of mortgages whether in respect of the same property or different properties—Jai Narain v. Gokul Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 406. 168 I.C. 725.

Old Law :—Before the passing of the present Act, under the common law as recognised in the Cochin State, the mortgagor seeking redemption was bound to redeem all subsisting mortgages in favour of the same person in respect of the same property simultaneously—Narayana v. Raman, A.I.R. 1952 T.C. 150.

Scope :—Principle of this section was applicable in Cochin even before the introduction of the Act in that State. Where there were several mortgages on the same property in favour of the same person and the mortgagee's remedy in respect of one of them was barred, he can still insist on their redemption when redeeming others, because limitation bars the remedy, but does not extinguish the liability—Neelakantam v. Ummuni Pillai, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 295.

In respect of a deed of further advance, the mortgagee was entitled to consolidate the two documents and claim the amount due thereunder, before he was compelled to give up possession—Kunjuvarianthu v. Chacku Vareethu, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 363.

376A. Section whether retrospective :—This section, as it stood before the amendment in 1929 impliedly gave a statutory right that where there were two encumbrances (including charges) on the same property, the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem one without redeeming the other. This right of consolidation was a vested right in property. Hence the mere fact that sec. 24 of Act XX of 1929 which amended the present section was not included in the sections mentioned in sec. 63 of that Act does not make the present section retrospective, and the right of consolidation given by the old section was not taken away—Nachappa v. Samiappa, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 18, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 35; Chappan Nair v. Pariyaikutty, 1957 Ker. L.J. 726. A right of consolidation presupposes the union of several mortgages in the mortgagee and that at the time when he claims that right. But this does not mean that the law applicable in such cases is that which prevails at the date of the suit. The right accrues when the mortgages become combined in the mortgagee—Ibid.

377. Abolition of consolidation :—This section (both old and new) abolishes the consolidation of mortgages in this country in the same way as the Conveyancing Act (and recently the Property Act, 1925) has done in England. The doctrine of consolidation of mortgages over different properties was recognised by the Courts of India prior to the passing of this Act, and compelled the mortgagor who came to Court for redemption of a mortgaged property, to discharge all the debts due to the mortgagee and secured to him by mortgages on that or other property of the mortgagor. "If the owner of two or more different estates mortgaged them successively for distinct debts to the same person, the mortgagee had a right to insist that one security should not be redeemed alone, leaving him exposed to the risk of deficiency as to the others But Parliament intervened, and not a moment too soon, to put a stop to the flagrant injustice which was too often inflicted under the name of equity, and now in this country as well as in England, a mortgagee in the absence of a contract to the contrary, cannot consolidate his securities"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Ed., p. 429. Thus, where two mortgages were executed with respect to six items of property, and a third mortgage was executed with respect to the same six items and also two other items, held that a decree which consolidated the amounts due under all the three mortgage-bonds, and made all the mortgaged properties liable for the consolidated amount, was contrary to the provisions of this section. Such a consolidation impedes the right of redemption of the mortgagor and is illegal—Parmeshwar v. Raj Kishore, 3 Pat. 829 (837), A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 59, 80 I.C. 34.

A man may borrow money on the security of his property, and both the lender and borrower may agree that the property is capable of serving as a security for further loans. In such circumstances if there is a second loan on the security of the property, and the borrower repays one of the loans, the lender has nothing to lose.—per Mukerji J. in Lallu v. Ram Nandan, 52 All. 281 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1930 All. 136 (138), 124 I.C. 735.

The old section applied (as shown by the illustration and the marginal note), to cases where different properties were mortgaged, and not where the same property was mortgaged under several mortgages—Balasubramania v. Sivaguru, 21 M.L.J. 562, 11 I.C. 629; Dorasami v. Venkateshaya, 25 Mad. 108 (115). Therefore, a mortgagor seeking to redeem a mortgage on a property was not entitled to do so without paying the money due under a separate mortgage or charge relating to the same property—Ramarayanimgar v. Maharaja of Venkatagiri, 50 Mad. 180 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 670, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 32 (36) (overruling Ramarayanimgar v. Maharaja, 44 Mad. 301); Meloth Kannan v. Kodath Kannaran, 1914 M.W.N. 231, 22 I.C. 609; Ram Ratan v. Aditya, 3 Luck. 459, 112 I.C. 481, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 273 (276). Even a mortgagor could not redeem one mortgage on his property without at the same time paying off another mortgage or charge on the same and other properties as well—Ganga Rai v. Kirtanath, 33 All. 393; Tajjobibi v. Bhagwan, 16 All. 295; Ramara- yanimgar v. Maharaja of Venkatagiri, 50 Mad. 180 (P.C.). This view is no longer correct. In a recent Patna case where before the amendment of 1929 the same property was mortgaged to the same mortgagee, but in the second mortgage the first mortgage was stated to be kept alive, it has been held that the mortgagee had a right of consolidation of the two mortgages in one suit and a consolidated decree on them can be passed—Sm. Nathuni v. Dharanidhar, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 156, 15 Pat. 742, 165 I.C. 310.

The doctrine of consolidation can only apply where a mortgagee holds (say) a mortgage on property A and also a separate mortgage on property B belonging to the same mortgagor. In the case, however, of a mortgagee holding a first mortgage on property A and also a second mortgage on the same property, the mortgagor cannot on payment off of the first mortgage redeem the property, unless he repays what is due on the second mortgage. But this is not because of the doctrine of consolidation but by reason of the fact that he has a second mortgage on the property—Janaki Nath v. Pramatha Nath, 44 C.W.N. 261 (P.C.), I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 291, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 38 (43).

378. Covenant as to consolidation :—This section (both old and new) applies "in the absence of a contract to the contrary," so that the parties are left free to covenant among themselves that a mortgagor of two properties shall not redeem one property without redeeming the other. Tajjobibi v. Bhagwan, 16 All. 295 (299). Thus, where by each of two mortgages a separate property was mortgaged with possession and the second mortgage contained the clause: "and when the whole of the mortgage-money due under this deed together with the amount due under the previous deed shall be paid, then the mortgage shall be redeemable and the deed shall be taken back," held that the mortgagee was entitled to consolidate the two mortgages by the 'contract to the contrary'—Jadu Rai v. Ram Birch, A.I.R. 1922 All. 403, 70 I.C. 637. In Ganga Bai v. Kirtanath, 33 All. 393, however, such a covenant was not given effect to. But the circumstances of that case were peculiar; the properties in the two mortgages were partly identical and partly different; one of the mortgagors of the first mortgage did not join in the second mortgage; and the person who brought the suit for redemption of the prior mortgage was a purchaser of one of the properties mortgaged and had no interest in the property comprised in the second mortgage.

Where the stipulation was that possession obtained under the first mortgage would remain with the mortgagee till the second mortgage in his favour was redeemed the Collector could not order that the possession be handed over to the mortgagor without payment of the mortgage debt—Gurditte Mal v. Mohammad, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 278 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1947 Lah. 259.

Where a father in a joint family executes a mortgage and after his death his son, the then manager, executes another mortgage agreeing to repay the second loan along with the first, then the agreement amounts to a contract to consolidate, for the expression "mortgagor" includes also his heirs and survivors—Harihar v. Lachhman, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 246 (249), 149 I.C. 543. Where in a subsequent document there is a stipulation that without payment of the two sums the property previously mortgaged is not to be redeemed, the effect of the clause is to create a further mortgage or the property is made security for the additional debt—Jeut Koeri v. Mathura Koeri, A.I.R. 1926 All. 171, 24 A.L.J. 125, 90 I.C. 87.

Where after the execution of a mortgage-bond in favour of the mortgagor, the mortgagor takes further advances and executes a fresh bond creating a charge on the property, and in that bond he stipulates that he will not redeem the earlier mortgage without paying off the money due under the subsequent bond, held that the mortgagor, according to the terms of the contract, will not be entitled to redeem the earlier mortgage without paying off the subsequent charge. The covenant in the subsequent bond will not be treated as a clog on redemption—Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan, 31 All. 482; Brij Lall v. Bhawani, 32 All. 651; Har Prasad v. Ram Chandra, 44 All. 37 (42) (F.B.), A.I.R. 1922 All. 174; Jagannath v. Jaipal, 55 All. 359 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1933 All. 257 (258), 142 I.C. 410; Shib Narain v. Gajadhar, 48 All. 292, A.I.R. 1926 All. 506, 92 I.C. 772; Lal Bahadur v. Rameshwar, 3 Luck. 113, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 510 (511); Ganpat v. Abdulji, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 54, 169 I.C. 23; Ram Ratan v. Aditya, 3 Luck. 459, 112 I.C. 481, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 273 (276), affirmed Aditya v. Ram Ratan, 5 Luck. 365 (P.C.), 57 I.A. 173, 34 C.W.N. 625 (627), 59 M.L.J. 342, 28 A.L.J. 646, 123 I.C. 191, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 176; Janardan v. Anant, 32 Bom. 386 (390); Pramatha v. Janaki, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 194, 41 C.W.N. 472, 171 I.C. 747; Md. Khan v. Chandi Shah, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 864, 147 I.C. 193; Sultan v. Ladha Singh, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 633, 96 I.C. 844; Kanhaya v. Tulsi, A.I.R. 1931 All. 197, 129 I.C. 550. Such a covenant will be enforceable even against a subsequent transferee of the equity of redemption—Gaya Prasad v. Jagannath, supra. So also, where three successive mortgages were specifically charged on the same land and there was an express stipulation in the second mortgage that the first mortgage should not be redeemed without discharging the second mortgage, and in the third mortgage there was a stipulation that the mortgagor would pay the amount of that mortgage before discharging the earlier debts, held that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem the first mortgage without at the same time discharging the second, and that the third mortgage must be discharged before or simultaneously with the redemption of the first—Shib Narain v. Gajadhar, 48 All. 292; Punnu Ram v. Ghulam Hussain, 7 Lah. 297, 96 I.C. 630, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 494.

So also, a covenant in a subsequent mortgage or charge not to redeem that mortgage or charge without redeeming a prior mortgage created in respect of the same property is enforceable, and is not to be regarded as a clog on redemption—Jagesri v. Aftab Chand, 8 Pat. 68, 10 P.L.T. 41, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 582 (584); Imam Baksh v. Anwari Begam, 18 I.C. 718 (All.); Har Govind v. Tula Ram, 10 I.C. 222 (All.); Abdul Hamid v. Jairaj, 3 A.L.J. 768.

In order to enable the mortgagee to compel the mortgagor to redeem both the mortgages at one time, it is necessary that the mortgages should be enforceable, (by the mortgagee) i.e., not barred by limitation. Therefore, if at the date of redeeming the prior mortgage it is found that a suit on the subsequent mortgage if brought by the mortgagee would have been barred by limitation, the mortgagor will be entitled to redeem the earlier mortgage only, without paying any money due on the subsequent mortgage—Kesar Kunwar v. Kashiram, 37 All. 634; Ram Krishna v. Nekkar, 33 M.L.J. 581, 43 I.C. 286; Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram, 37 All. 634.

Moreover, in order that the covenant as to consolidation may be enforced, it is necessary that both the prior and subsequent mortgages have been created in favour of the same person. Thus, one N mortgaged his property to defendants 1, 2, 3 and 4 who traded as a firm. Subsequently he gave a second mortgage of the same property to defendant no. 2 alone for a loan advanced by him personally. The second mortgage-deed contained a stipulation that the debt due thereunder must be paid off before the prior mortgage-debt. Held that the subsequent mortgage-debt in the second defendant's favour being a personal one, in his individual capacity, he cannot insist on his being paid before redemption of the prior mortgage created in favour of the firm—Chhotalal v. Mathur, 18 Bom. 591.

Covenant must be express:—A covenant as to consolidation of mortgages must be express and unequivocal—Jiwandas v. Theraj, 1 Lah. 105, 55 I.C. 509; Bhartu v. Dalip, 3 A.L.J. 672 (674); Jai Narain v. Gokul Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 321, 160 I.C. 40. A mere undertaking by the mortgagor to pay the money advanced on the later mortgage to the same mortgagee with the money due on the earlier security is merely an indication of the time fixed for payment of the same and does not amount to a consolidation of the debt so as to preclude the redemption of the first mortgage without the redemption of the later one—Ibid at p. 322. If there is a mortgage with possession and a lease-back of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagor with arrears of rent charged on the equity of redemption the two transactions cannot be treated as one, and the mortgagor can redeem the mortgage without redeeming the charge on account of rent—Venkitasubramania Ayyar v. Vadasseril Thiruvad Karnavani, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 434.

379. Covenant as to consolidation of unsecured debts:—If a mortgagor, after executing a mortgage, takes a subsequent loan from the mortgagee under a simple money-bond, and in that bond stipulates that he will not redeem the mortgage without paying off the subsequent loan, the stipulation cannot be enforced—Sheo Shankar v. Parma Mahton, 26 All. 559; Lallu v. Ram Nandan, 52 All. 281 (F.B.), 124 I.C. 733, A.I.R. 1930 All. 136 (149); Rama v. Martand, 9 Bom. 236 (Note); Rajmal v. Shivaji, 27 Bom. 154 (156) (doubting Hari v. Balambhat, 9 Bom. 233); Durga Prasad v. Dukki Roy, 9 C.W.N. 789; Unni v. Nagammal, 18 Mad. 368; Jang Bahadur v. Mate Din, 46 I.C. 80, 5 O.L.J. 159; Rugad Singh v. Sat Narain, 27 All. 178; Kandhaiya v. Ram Charitar, 85 I.C. 328, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 593 (594). Such by-agreements to pay unsecured debts as a condition precedent to redeeming a mortgage are inconsistent with the general principles of justice, equity and good conscience—Lallu Singh v. Ram Nandan, 52 All. 281 (F.B.), 1930 A.L.J. 156, 1930 All. 136 (150), 124 I.C. 733. In England also the law is the same—Coote's Law of Mortgage, 8th Edn., Vol. II, page 1175. And so Dr. Ghose observes in his learned work: "To say that a mortgagee may not foreclose for anything beyond the debt on his security but that a mortgagor must pay, as the price of redemption, unsecured debts due to the mortgagee as well as the mortgage-debt, is not only to violate a homely English proverb, but also to postulate something that is not true, namely, that redemption is not a right of the mortgagor but a mere favour shown to him"—Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 242. The question as to whether the subsequent deed creates a further mortgage or charge on the property or merely amounts to a simple bond creating a personal liability, is to be decided with reference to the terms of the deed. See Lallu v. Ram Nandan, (supra); Aditya v. Ram Ratan, 5 Luck. 365 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 625 (627); Kandhaiya v. Ram Charitar, (supra); Ashraf Ali v. Chandrapal, (supra); Gaya Prasad v. Rachpal, 9 O.L.J. 484, 70 I.C. 66, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 24; Ramadhin v. Sitla, 17 O.C. 303, 25 I.C. 905. A stipulation by the mortgagors that they would not mortgage or sell the property previously mortgaged till the money due on the subsequently executed simple bond had been paid, has been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court to mean that the previously mortgaged property was made security for the payment of the money subsequently borrowed and the bond was an agreement creating a charge on the property previously mortgaged—Jannath v. Jaipal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 257 (F.B.), 142 I.C. 410.

Prior to the passing of the T. P. Act, no distinction was made between secured and unsecured debts, and a mortgagor was not allowed to redeem a prior mortgage without clearing off the subsequent debts, even though such subsequent advances were unsecured—Allu Khan v. Roshan Khan, 4 All. 85 (explained in 26 All. 559); Hari v. Balambhat, 9 Bom. 233 (235); Krishnaji v. Maheshwar, 20 Bom. 346 (367); Hiralal v. Narsilal, 11 Bom.L.R. 318, 2 I.C. 469 (471). But even after the passing of the T. P. Act, it has been held in certain Oudh cases that redemption of the mortgage cannot be allowed without payment of the money due under a subsequent simple bond—Raisunnissa v. Zorawar, 1 Luck. 92, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 228; Gaya Prasad v. Rachpal, 9 O.L.J. 484, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 24, 70 I.C. 66. This view is opposed to the trend of recent case-law, and can hardly be regarded as correct. See Ghose's Law of Mortgage, page 242.

But if the prior debt is unsecured, and the subsequent debt secured, and in that mortgage-bond he stipulates not to redeem the mortgage without paying off the debt under the earlier simple bond, held that the covenant will be enforced because the stipulation in respect of the earlier debt constitutes a part of the transaction of the mortgage—Hari v. Vishnu, 28 Bom. 349 (361) (F.B.). The prior debt on the simple money-bond may not strictly speaking be a charge on the land, but the equity of redemption is made conditional on the payment of both the debts; and the mortgagor cannot redeem the mortgage without paying off the prior debt—Yashvant v. Vithoba, 12 Bom. 231 (234). And the result is the same if the secured and unsecured debts are contemporaneous. See Sundar v. Bapuji, 18 Bom. 755 (757). In this case, the covenant as to payment of the contemporaneous unsecured debt was enforced even though the debt was barred at the time of the suit for redemption of the mortgage.

Covenant cannot be enforced against mortgagor's assignee:—In the case of a covenant in the mortgage to pay an unsecured debt, the assignee of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem without paying the unsecured debt which the original mortgagor had contracted to pay along with the mortgage-amount—Unni v. Nagammal, 18 Mad. 368. "It may be safely affirmed, whatever may be the liability of the mortgagor himself, that neither justice nor equity nor the rescripts of the Emperor Gordian can prevent an assignee of the equity of redemption from redeeming the mortgage on payment only of the secured debt"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 242. The contrary view taken in Allu Khan v. Roshan Khan, 4 All. 85 (which was decided prior to the passing of the T. P. Act) is no longer good law.

Invalid charge :—An invalid charge stands on the same footing as an unsecured debt. Consequently, the mortgagor cannot be compelled to pay off the debts created by a subsequent invalid charge, as a condition of redemption of the prior mortgage—Lallu Singh v. Ram Nandan, 52 All. 281 (F.B.), 1930 A.L.J. 156, A.I.R. 1930 All. 136 (149), 124 I.C. 733.

380. Conditional covenants :—A deed of subsequent mortgage contained a stipulation that the mortgagor could not redeem the earlier mortgage until the money due on the previous mortgage was first paid. There was an additional covenant allowing redemption independently of the previous mortgage, if the money due under the subsequent mortgage was paid within a certain period. Held that the mortgagor could redeem the subsequent mortgage, independently of the earlier mortgage, if he paid the amount due under the subsequent mortgage within the stipulated period ; but in default of payment within the period fixed, the two mortgages must be redeemed at one time—Suraj Balli v. Ram Dular, 6 O.L.J. 147, 50 I.C. 897. Such a covenant can be enforced not only against the mortgagor but also against his transferee—Ibid.

Similarly, where a property was mortgaged for Rs. 1,500 and the mortgage-deed recited an earlier debt of Rs. 5,000 due on a previous account and provided that if the mortgagor did not repay this Rs. 5,000 within two years from the date of the deed, he was not at liberty to redeem the property unless both the debts of Rs. 1,500 and Rs. 5,000 were paid, and the suit for redemption was brought after the expiry of 2 years, held that the charge as to Rs. 5,000 took effect on the expiry of two years from the date of the mortgage-deed ; that is, after the expiry of two years, the property must be deemed to be mortgaged for Rs. 5,000 as well as Rs. 1,500 ; but before that period the debt of Rs. 5,000 was merely personal ; and if the mortgagor had brought his suit for redemption before that date, he could have redeemed the mortgage by paying Rs. 1,500 only—Hari v. Vishnu, 28 Bom. 349 (358, 360) (F.B.).

62. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the property—

Right of usufructuary mortgagor to recover possession.

62. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the property together with the mortgage-deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee,—

Right of usufructuary mortgagor to recover possession.

(a) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself the mortgage-money from the rents and profits of the property—when such money is paid :

(b) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself from such rents and profits the interest of the principal money—when the term (if any) prescribed for the payment of the mortgage-money has expired, and the mortgagor pays or tenders to the mortgagee the principal money, or deposits it in Court as hereinafter provided.

(a) where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself the mortgage-money from the rents and profits of the property,—when such money is paid ;

(b) where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself from such rents and profits or any part thereof a part only of the mortgage-money, when the term (if any), prescribed for the payment of the mortgage-money has expired and the mortgagor pays or tenders to the mortgagee the mortgage-money or the balance thereof or deposits it in Court as hereinafter provided.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 25 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

"Together with.....mortgagee" :—"In order to make section 62 comprehensive, we have on the lines of section 60 provided that the mortgagor has a right to require the mortgagee to deliver back the title-deeds and other documents relating to the mortgaged property"—Report of the Select Committee (1929).

In clause (b) the italicised words have been substituted for the following reasons :—

"Section 62 which relates to a usufructuary mortgage requires to be amended on the same lines as section 58 (d)".

"Clause (b) of the section is limited to a case where out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property the mortgagee is entitled to recover only the interest due to him on his principal. The clause should also be made applicable to cases where the rents and profits are to be appropriated in payment of a part of the mortgage-money, i.e., in payment of either interest in part or principal in part or both in part. To effect this change, the words 'principal money' should be changed into the 'balance of the mortgage-money'."—Report of the Special Committee.

381. Scope and application :—This section should be read as supplemental to sec. 60. This section however is in marked contrast to sec. 60 which contemplates a subsisting mortgage and its redemption while the present section speaks of recovery of possession. At the moment when the rents and profits of the mortgaged property are sufficient to discharge the mortgage-money the mortgage comes to an end—Ram Prasad v. Bishambhar, A.I.R. 1946 All. 400, 1946 A.L.J. 175. Prior to the amendment of this section it was held that this section did not apply to cases where from the conditions contained in the mortgage, accounts had to be made up between the parties—Zahid Ali v. Kedar Nath 17 O.C. 388, 27 I.C. 427 (429). This ruling would now apply only to clause (a) which presupposes a case in which there would hardly be any need for elaborate accounts, but not to clause (b) which, as now amended, involves a more elaborate accounting, except in cases where the rents and profits are to be taken in complete satisfaction of the interest.

Where a usufructuary mortgage was followed by a deed of further charge to secure a subsequent advance, and the deed stipulated that the mortgagor could not get redemption of the usufructuary mortgage without paying off the amount due under the deed, it was held that sec. 62 did not apply, and that the mortgagor was not entitled to recover possession without paying off the sums due under the subsequent deed—per Lindsay, J.C. in Zahid Ali v. Kedar Nath, 17 O.C. 388, 27 I.C. 427 (429). But this view, it is submitted, is not correct. The right given by sec. 62 is absolute, notwithstanding any covenant to the contrary. Niamatullah, J., in his dissentient judgment in Lallu v. Ram Nandan, 52 All. 281 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1930 All. 136 (157), 124 I.C. 735, followed the Oudh case and read into this section the words “in the absence of a contract to the contrary”. This is unwarrantable, for had it been the intention of the Legislature, they might have easily inserted these words in the section, as they have done in sec. 61.

A fortiori, where the agreement creating a further charge contains no covenant to the effect that the usufructuary mortgage shall not be redeemed unless the charge is paid off, the mortgagor is entitled to redeem the usufructuary mortgage and recover possession under this section. If there is any money due under the further charge, the mortgagee may seek to enforce the hypothecation by a separate suit—Khuda Bakhsh v. Alimunnissa, 27 All. 313 (316, 318, 319).

But if the further advances are also secured by way of usufructuary mortgages over the property originally mortgaged, the mortgagor can redeem the first mortgage though he will not be entitled to recover possession by reason of the existence of the second or subsequent mortgages with possession. In the circumstances, if the mortgagor wants to take possession of the property, he must pay not only the amount secured by the first mortgage, but also the amounts secured by the second or subsequent usufructuary mortgages—Lallu Singh v. Ram Nandan, 52 All. 281 (F.B.), 1930 A.L.J. 156, A.I.R. 1930 All. 136 (139, 157), 124 I.C. 735. In a Privy Council case, where a usufructuary mortgagor borrowed a further sum from the mortgagee by executing a document which created a further charge on the property, and the document recited that the mortgagor would not redeem the usufructuary mortgage without payment of the amount borrowed under the subsequent document, it was held that the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem the usufructuary mortgage without payment of the subsequent debt—Aditya v. Ram Ratan, 5 Luck. 365 (P.C.), 34 C.W.N. 625 (627), A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 176, 123 I.C. 191. In this case the relevant sections of the T. P. Act were not specifically referred to as the transaction took place in 1881, prior to the passing of this Act, but the case was decided on general principles underlying the Act regarding covenant as to consolidation of mortgages (see Note 378 under sec. 61).

Where the usufructuary mortgagee grants a lease to the mortgagor and the payment of the rent reserved is a charge on the property, the mortgagor cannot redeem the mortgage without paying in addition to the mortgage money the amount due under the lease—Ramarayanimgar v. Maharaja of Venkatagiri, 50 Mad. 180 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 670, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 32 (36). But the Allahabad High Court applied this section to an exactly similar case, see Khuda Bakhsh v. Alimunnissa, 27 All. 313 (318, 319), where it was held that the lease-deed executed by the mortgagor was not a part of the mortgage but was an independent transaction.

382. Clause (a)—Satisfaction of the mortgage-money out of the usufruct :—Where the mortgagee is asked to pay himself the principal and interest out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, the general rule is that the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession till the mortgage-debt is wiped off from the rents and profits of the property—Narasimha v. Seshayya, 48 M.L.J. 363, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 825 (826), 90 I.C. 138.

Clause (a) contemplates a case in which no time is fixed for payment and the mortgage-deed provides for the mortgagee paying himself the debt (with interest) from the rents and profits of the estate—Tirug-nana v. Nallatombi, 16 Mad. 486 (488). In such a case the mortgaged property can be recovered immediately after the discharge of the mortgage-debt by means of the rents and profits of the property. And the same rule is to be applied even though a term of years is fixed—Seshayya v. Lakshminarasimha, 57 M.L.J. 800, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 160 (162), 124 I.C. 282. If a time is fixed, the time is not of the essence of the transaction but should be regarded as a protection for the debtor, and the mortgagor is entitled to recover possession before the fixed period on his showing that the principal and interest have been wholly discharged by the usufruct before the stipulated period—Kundan v. Thakurlal, 6 C.P.L.R. 43. Even if the usufructuary mortgage-deed expressly provides that the mortgagee will be entitled to remain in possession for 12 years notwithstanding that the mortgage-debt is satisfied out of the property before the expiry of the term, held that the mortgagor will be entitled to recover possession before that period as soon as the mortgage-debt is satisfied out of the usufruct—Ankinedu v. Subbiah, 35 Mad. 744 (748). Even a special agreement to the effect that the mortgagee shall remain in possession until the payment of the debt is made in one lump sum does not prevent the mortgage from being at an end whenever the mortgagee has realised both the principal and interest out of the usufruct—Jaijit Rai v. Govind, 6 All. 303. A usufructuary mortgagee has no right to remain in possession of the mortgaged property after the mortgage-money is satisfied from the usufruct, even though the parties may have wrongly calculated that the liquidation of the mortgage-money from the usufruct shall take a longer period and may have said so in the deed—Prag v. Mohanlal, 5 O.L.J. 263, 47 I.C. 161.

This clause provides for cases in which no term is fixed and the whole of the mortgage-money is stipulated to be recovered out of the rents and profits. The mortgagee can claim to retain possession until the discharge of the debt out of the usufruct. Until the debt is discharged in that manner, the mortgagor's suit to recover possession even by cash payment is premature—Tirugnana v. Nallatombi, 16 Mad. 486 (488, 490). The Oudh Chief Court, however, allowed the mortgagor to recover the property on payment of the balance found due to the mortgagee on taking accounts—Hardeo v. Dy. Commissioner, 1 Luck. 367, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 281 (285), 98 I.C. 542.

If the mortgage-deed provides for the payment of interest or a part of the mortgage-money only out of the usufruct, the mortgagor will be entitled to redeem by cash payment of the principal. See Clause (b).

Where the mortgagors are in possession of the mortgaged property as Adhidars under the usufructuary mortgagee or as labourers or as tenants, their possession in law is the possession of the mortgagee, and therefore they can claim to be restored to possession of the properties in their own right—Prafulla v. Soaru, 44 C.W.N. 726, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 499, 191 I.C. 720.

In the case of a usufructuary mortgage the onus lies on the mortgagee to prove what is due to him on the date of the application for redemption—Baffan Singh v. Ram Subhag, A.I.R. 1950 All. 466, 1950 A.L.J. 378.

383. Clause (b) :—If there is a balance left after satisfying the interest or part of the mortgage-money, the mortgagee should pay the balance to the mortgagor; if he does not pay it to the mortgagor, he is bound to apply it in further reduction of the principal. But he is not bound to accept the mortgage-amount from the mortgagor if he tenders it before the expiry of the term of the mortgage. See Narasimha v. Seshayya, 48 M.L.J. 363, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 825 (826), 90 I.C. 138.

Where a mortgage-deed has provided that the mortgage is for the duration of a certain period and that at its end the mortgagee can either claim possession or recover the mortgage-money with interest at the rate agreed upon, the mortgagee's failure in a suit for possession to claim the relief for recovery of the mortgage dues does not preclude him from seeking that relief in a subsequent suit—Mt. Har Kaur v. Udham Singh, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 112, 183 I.C. 745.

Clause (b) lays down that if it is stipulated in the mortgage-deed that the interest alone will be satisfied out of the usufruct, the mortgagor will be able to redeem on payment only of the principal money. Thus, where on the same day on which a usufructuary mortgage-deed is executed, the mortgagee executes a lease under which the mortgagor becomes a tenant of the mortgagee and is to pay rent in lieu of interest, the mortgagee takes the chance of the rent being greater or less than the interest reserved in the mortgage-bond, and the mortgagor will be entitled to redeem on payment of the principal sum only—Partab Bahadur v. Gajadhar, 24 All. 521 (P.C.). Where under a usufructuary mortgage (in which the interest was to be satisfied out of the usufruct) the mortgagee was placed in possession but shortly after was dispossessed of a portion of the mortgaged property by a person holding a superior title or in pursuance of a decree, and the mortgagee acquiesced in such dispossession, held that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal money only, and the mortgagee could not claim anything from the mortgagor on account of rents and profits in respect of the property of which he was dispossessed—Partab Bahadur v. Gajadhar, 24 All. 521 (P.C.); Khuda Buksh v. Alimunnissa, 27 All. 313; Jhunku v. Chhotkan, 31 All. 325; Dubri v. Ram Naresh, 3 O.W.N. 176, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 224, 93 I.C. 287. If a right of pre-emption is expressly given in the mortgage-deed that right cannot be set up as a defence to a suit for possession by the vendee of the mortgagor; a separate suit for specific performance is required to enforce the right of pre-emption—Md. Yusuf v. Sarifan Bibi, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 457.

Deposit in Court:—See section 83.

63. Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, received any accession, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled as against the mortgagee to such accession.

Where such accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee and is capable of separate possession or enjoyment without detriment to the principal property the mortgagor desiring to take the accession must pay to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring it. If such separate possession or enjoyment is not possible, the accession must be delivered with the property; the mortgagor being liable, in the case of an acquisition necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, or made with his assent, to pay the proper cost thereof, as an addition to the principal money, with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum.

In the case last mentioned the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall be credited to the mortgagor.

Where the mortgage is usufructuary and the accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be set off against interest, if any, payable on the money so expended.

Amendment :—By section 26 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), the italicised words have been substituted for “at the same rate of interest” in the second para. The Special Committee observes :—

“Section 63 relates to accessions and the second paragraph of the section provides for the payment of the costs of accessions by the mortgagor where such accessions are made in certain circumstances and are delivered to the mortgagor. It is stated that the proper cost payable by the mortgagor is to be added to the principal money 'at the same rate of interest'. Nothing is stated in the section about any rate of interest. Difficulty might also arise where a mortgage-deed is silent as to the rate of interest. For the words 'at the same rate' the following words should be substituted, viz.:—

'at the rate of interest payable on the principal, and, where no such rate is fixed in the mortgage-deed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum'."

384. Principle :—This section is an illustration of the maxim "Accessio cedit principali" (the increase follows the principal). It may be compared with sec. 90 of the Indian Trusts Act. The combined effect of sec. 90 Trusts Act and the present section is that till the redemption of the security the accession does not become the absolute property of the mortgagor—Maya Debi v. Rajlakshmi, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 1. In considering the question whether a purchase by the mortgagee in possession is an accession the Court must bear in mind the provisions of sec. 90, Trusts Act—Sho Pujan v. Bhagwati, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 99, 27 Pat. 705. But it is not an absolute rule that a benefit or interest acquired by the mortgagee must in all cases be held in trust for the benefit of the mortgagor—Parvali v. Cheriyan, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 94.

The general principle, well-recognised in England, is that any acquisitions by the mortgagee are treated as accretions to the mortgaged property, and therefore, subject to redemption—Maheshwar v. Babu Ram, 2 P.L.T. 225, 60 I.C. 308 (309). The principle recognised by English law is that most acquisitions by a mortgagor enure for the benefit of the mortgagee (see sec. 70); and, on the other hand, many acquisitions by the mortgagee are, in like manner, treated as accretions to the mortgaged property or substitutions for it, and therefore subject to redemption—Kishendat v. Mumtaz Ali, 5 Cal. 198 (210) (P.C.).

Accession :—The question whether a property acquired by the mortgagee in possession is an accession or not depends upon the entire facts and circumstances of the case. The test is whether the mortgagee availing himself of his position as such has gained any particular advantage—Sho Pujan v. Bhagwati, supra.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee brought to sale certain holdings of tenants for arrears of rent under the Madras Rent Recovery Act, ejected the tenants and obtained possession of the holding, held that these holdings were accessions to the mortgaged property—Vencatachariar v. Srinivasa Aiyangar, 4 I.C. 357 (358). Where a usufructuary mortgagee obtained a mortgage by conditional sale of a holding of a tenant, got a decree for foreclosure of the holding and in execution thereof obtained possession of the holding, held that the tenancy plot was an accession to the mortgaged land—Ketki v. Dinabandhu, 10 C.L.J. 83, 3 I.C. 395 (396); Mohanlal v. Chaodhry Pulandar, 14 C.P.L.R. 169. Large extensions into waste adjoining lands cannot be regarded as accessions. But if an extension is recent and of small area in comparison with the mortgaged land, it may be treated as an accession—The Dun v. The Zan, 4 Bur. L.T. 167, 11 I.C. 808 (809). But Government waste-lands adjoining the mortgaged property which are brought under cultivation by the mortgagee do not come within the category of an accession within the meaning of this section—Maung Shwe v. Ponniah, 1 Bur. L.T. 262, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 127, 82 I.C. 787; S. R. &c. Firm v. Ko Po Sin, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 127, 162 I.C. 383.

A building which has not been added but substituted for an existing one is not an accession but an improvement—Chhedi Lal v. Babu Nandan, A.I.R. 1944 All. 204; I.L.R. 1944 All. 302. If the mortgagor having only a life interest constructs new structure after the execution of the mortgage-deed the mortgagee is entitled to a mortgage decree in respect of the new structure—Atmukur Venkatasubbiah Chetty v. Thirupurasundari Ammal, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 185.

A tree falling down on the ground by natural causes is not an accession to the mortgaged property, as there is no addition to the property—Durga Shankar v. Ganga, 1932 A.L.J. 493, A.I.R. 1932 All. 500 (502).

Accession must take place during the mortgage :—For the purposes of this section as well as of sec. 70, the accession to the mortgaged property must take place before the mortgage becomes extinguished—Kap-niah Sivananjiah v. Sithay Goundan, 41 M.L.J. 490, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 627, 70 I.C. 367. Where the usufructuary mortgagee of a share in a village took a mortgage by conditional sale of a holding of a tenant, and after the expiry of the usufructuary mortgage got a decree for foreclosure of the holding, and in execution obtained possession thereof, held that this mortgagor was entitled to take the accession upon payment, in addition to the mortgage-money, of the costs of acquiring the holding—Keiki v. Dinabandhu, 10 C.L.J. 83, 3 I.C. 395 (396); Mohanall v. Chaodhry Pulandar, 14 C.P.L.R. 169.

385. Acquired accessions :—The second para deals with acquired accessions, i.e., accessions made at the expense of the mortgagee. These are divided into two clauses—(1) accessions capable of severance from the principal; the mortgagor according to his option may or may not redeem them along with the principal, but if he desires to take them, he must pay to the mortgagee the expenses of acquiring them—Khudadad v. Girdhari, 163 P.W.R. 1917, 42 I.C. 468; (2) accessions incapable of severance from the principal; these must be delivered by the mortgagee to the mortgagor along with the principal; but the mortgagor is bound to pay for them only when they are necessary for the preservation of the principal property, or when they were made with his consent.

386. Accessions acquired by mortgagee :—It has been held in some cases that a mortgagor can claim the accession if it was acquired by the mortgagee in his capacity as mortgagee. (Compare the words "by availing himself of his position as such" in sec. 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, cited in Note 384 above). A mortgagee who has acquired what any stranger or even the mortgagor himself could have acquired equally well despite the mortgage, cannot be compelled to hand over his acquisition to the mortgagor. Therefore, it is competent to a mortgagee, during the continuance of the mortgage, to purchase an absolute occupancy tenure for himself and to treat it as his separate property after the mortgage comes to an end—Girdhari v. Muhammad Karmdad, 63 P.R. 1918, 44

I.C. 266. When the estate mortgaged is a Zemindari out of which a patni tenure has been granted or within the ambit of which there is an ancient mokurari istemrari tenure, a mortgagee of the Zemindari with possession can purchase that patni or mokurari with his own funds and keep it alive as a separate property for his own benefit. In such a case, the mortgagee can hardly be said to have derived from the mortgagor any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase which would not be possessed equally by a stranger, and he may therefore be held, equally with a stranger, to make it for his own benefit—Kishen Dutt v. Mumtaz Ali, 5 Cal. 198 (204) (P.C.). This section does not entitle the mortgagor to recover acquisitions (e.g., occupancy rights) made by the mortgagee for his own benefit under circumstances which do not bring him within sec. 90, Trusts Act, i.e., when he did not have any special advantage by reason of his position as mortgagee in acquiring them—Sorabjee v. Dwarkadas, 36 C.W.N. 947 (953) (P.C.), 138 I.C. 557 A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 199. It cannot be affirmed that every purchase by a mortgagee must be regarded as an accession to the mortgaged property. If it appears that by reason of his position as mortgagee in possession, he has had peculiar facilities for acquiring the properties in question, such properties should be regarded as an acquisition to the mortgaged property. If, on the other hand, it appears that in regard to such acquisitions the mortgagee-in-possession is in the same position as any third person, then the properties so acquired should not be regarded as an accretion to the mortgaged property—Moghab Pande v. Ragho Pande, 10 P.L.T. 865, 118 I.C. 314, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 730. The question whether a property acquired by a mortgagee-in-possession is an accretion to the mortgaged property or not depends upon the intention of the mortgagee which has to be found from a careful appreciation of the entire facts and circumstances of each case—Moghab Pande v. Ragho, supra; Maheshwar v. Babu Ram, 2 P.L.T. 225, 60 I.C. 308 (310). If it appears from the evidence that the mortgagee, instead of merging the acquisitions in the mortgaged property, kept them distinct and apart from it for his own benefit, they should be treated as his own property and the mortgagor was not entitled to claim them on redemption—Maheshwar v. Babu Ram, 2 P.L.T. 225, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 69, 60 I.C. 308 (309). Where the mortgagee-in-possession purchased certain occupancy holdings which were transferable only by custom and could not be obtained by strangers, it must follow that the mortgagee could only have acquired them by reason of his position as a mortgagee-in-possession and not otherwise, and therefore the holdings formed part of the mortgaged property and liable to redemption along with it—Moghab Pande v. Ragho Pande, supra.

On the other hand, the Calcutta High Court holds that this clause applies to all cases whether the mortgagee makes the accessions (at his expense) either as mortgagee or in any other capacity. Thus, where the plaintiff's share in a mehal was mortgaged to the co-proprietor of the mehal, and the mortgagee purchased some of the raiyati holdings of the mehal from the tenants and obtained possession thereof, held that on redemption of the mortgage the plaintiff was entitled to get khass possession of the holdings to the extent of his share in the mehal, on payment to the mortgagee of the proportionate share of the expenses incurred by him in acquiring them. This section applies to all cases where the mortgagee holds the property either as co-proprietor or as mortgagee—Ram Brich Narain v. Ambika Prosad, 17 C.W.N. 586, 19 I.C. 90. This is also the view held by the Nagpur Court—Pyarelal v. Pannalal, 56 I.C. 193. But this view must be deemed as overruled by the Privy Council in Sorabjee v. Diwarkadas, cited above; see also Umraon Singh v. Chakauri Singh, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 302 (F.B.) where a subordinate interest purchased by the mortgagee in execution of a decree for rent payable to him has been held to be not an accretion.

Where certain khoti lands were mortgaged with possession and the mortgagee purchased khoti nibat lands in the village from the occupancy tenants without the permission of the khot and subsequently all the rights in the equity of redemption were sold to the mortgagee, it was held that whether the lands were to be regarded as khoti nisbat or khoti khasgi they must be treated as accretion to the mortgaged property and the mortgagee as purchaser of the equity of redemption was entitled to them—Kondu v. Mahidev, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 526, 139 I.C. 812.

387. Accessions capable of severance :—Where the accessions are made at the expense of the mortgagee, and capable of severance from the principal property without any detriment to it, they may, at the option of the mortgagor, be acquired by him on payment to the mortgagee of the expenses of acquiring them. If the mortgagor elects to take them, the mortgagee cannot refuse to part with their possession—See Dildar v. Shukrulla, 46 All. 152 (153), 78 I.C. 1023; and compare also section 90 of the Trusts Act.

In an Allahabad case it was stated that a building erected on the mortgaged land by the mortgagee in place of a kutch house which had fallen down, was an accession capable of separate enjoyment, and that if the mortgagor refused to pay for it, the mortgagee was entitled to remove the materials of the house—Gopi Lal v. Abdul Hamid, 26 A.L.J. 887, A.I.R. 1928 All. 381 (386), 116 I.C. 91. But in a Full Bench case of the same High Court, it has been ruled that a new house erected on the mortgaged land is not capable of separate possession or enjoyment as a house, and that the house is a good deal more than the mere building materials; it therefore follows that the mortgagor can insist on the house being delivered with the mortgaged land and the mortgagee can not claim compensation—Nannu v. Ram Chander, 53 All. 334 (F.B.), 132 I.C. 401, 1931 A.L.J. 273, A.I.R. 1931 All. 277 (283, 284). Where the mortgagee erected a stable on the mortgaged land, and the materials of the stable could be removed without injury to the other property, held that it was an accession capable of separate enjoyment and the mortgagee was allowed to remove the materials—Durga Shankar v. Ganga Sahai, 1932 A.L.J. 493, A.I.R. 1932 All. 500 (502). A mortgagee is not entitled to compensation for a kacha kotha built by him on the mortgaged property, he can only remove the materials—Pal Singh v. Bhola Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 242, 149 I.C. 969.

The mortgagee is entitled to claim only the costs incurred by him in acquiring the accessions and not their estimated market value. If the mortgagor desires to have possession of the accessions, he should immediately on the expiry of the mortgage, tender to the mortgagee the costs incurred by him in making the acquisitions. If the mortgagor never treats the lands as accessions or makes any claim on the expiry of the term of the mortgage, but allows the mortgagee to remain in possession of the lands as occupancy raiyat, he cannot subsequently claim the accessions—Ram Lagan v. Mary Coffin, 8 P.L.T. 23, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 572 (574), 97 I.C. 159.

388. Inseparable acquisitions :—The mortgagor on redemption is entitled to all acquisitions which are not capable of separate enjoyment without detriment to the principal property, but he is liable to pay for the expenses in two cases; (1) where the accessions are necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, or (2) where they were made with the mortgagor's consent.

*Accessions necessary to preserve the property :—*In a suit for redemption it was found that a certain grove was planted by the mortgagee-in-possession and that separate possession and enjoyment of the grove without detriment to the principal property was not possible. It was further found that the planting of the grove was not necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, and the grove was not planted with the consent of the mortgagor. Consequently, under this section, the mortgagor was entitled to obtain delivery of possession of the grove and the mortgagee was not entitled to be compensated for it—Zubeda v. Sheo Charan, 22 All. 83 (85); Nageswari v. Nanda Lal, A.I.R. 1926 All. 67; Ajodhya v. Indra, A.I.R. 1929 All. 330. So also, where the mortgagee, without the consent of the mortgagor, constructed a building which was in no way necessary for the maintenance or preservation of the property, the mortgagee could not recover the costs of the building—Sammo v. Abdul Wahid, 1883 A.W.N. 208, followed in Rupan v. Champa Lal, 37 All. 81 (85). See also Nannu v. Ram Chander, 53 All. 334 (F.B.), cited in Note 387, ante. So again, where the mortgagee excavated a new well and such excavation was not necessary for the preservation of the property, which was an agricultural land, he was not entitled to be compensated for the expenses—Raja Ram v. Vithal, 10 N.L.R. 166, 26 I.C. 712. If a house falls down, the rebuilding of it is not an accession necessary to preserve the property from destruction; for when it has fallen down, it is impossible to preserve it from destruction. The remedy of the mortgagee would lie under sec. 68—Kallu v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1929 All. 348 (349), 116 I.C. 747. But see Rupan v. Champa, 37 All. 81, where the building of a pucca room in place of a *kutch*a room which had fallen down was held to be an expense necessary for the preservation of the property, for otherwise the house would be uninhabitable.

63A. (1) Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, been improved, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled to the improvement; and the mortgagor shall not, save only in cases provided for in sub-section (2), be liable to pay the cost thereof.

(2) Where any such improvement was effected at the cost of the mortgagee and was necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration or was necessary to prevent the security from becoming insufficient, or was made in compliance with the lawful order of any public servant or public authority, the mortgagor shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be liable to pay the proper cost thereof as an addition to the principal money with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, and the profits, if any, accruing by reason of the improvement shall be credited to the mortgagor.

This section has been inserted by sec. 27 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929), because the Act before its amendment in 1929 contained no express provision allowing the mortgagee to make improvements to the mortgaged property. In the absence of any such provision, there was a great divergence of opinion as to the right of the mortgagee to claim compensation for improvements made. The present section has been inserted to set at rest the difference of opinion between the different High Courts.

This section closely follows the language of the preceding one, but differs from it in this respect that while sec. 63 makes a distinction between accessions capable of separate enjoyment and accessions not so enjoyable, no such distinction is recognised in the present section as to improvements. Further, the section says nothing about improvements made with the consent of the mortgagor.

389. Improvements by mortgagee :—Before the enactment of this section, the question as to whether and to what extent the mortgagee is entitled to make improvements on the mortgaged property was decided with reference to clause (b) of sec. 72. The present section is a statutory embodiment of the principles enunciated in some of those decisions.

Sub-section (1) lays down the general rule that ordinarily a mortgagee is not at liberty to effect improvements and charge the mortgagor therewith. See Arunachella v. Sithayi, 19 Mad. 327 (329); Jangi Ram v. Sheoraj, 2 O.L.J. 338, 30 I.C. 234 (237). The object of the law is to prevent the mortgagee from laying out large sums of money and thereby increasing his debt to such an extent as to cripple the power of redemption. The mortgagee has no right to lay out money in improving the property which may be done in such a way as to make it utterly impossible for the mortgagor with his means ever to redeem. This is called 'improving a mortgagor out of his estate'—Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 246; Dnyanu v. Fakira, 45 Bom. 1301 (1305), 64 I.C. 16, A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 250. Thus, where the amount of improvements was five times the mortgage-money, the mortgagee's claim for the value of the improvements was disallowed—Ramappa v. Yellappa, 52 Bom. 307, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 150 (152), 109 I.C. 532; Charan Dass v. Shadiram, A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu, 87. Where a mortgagee-in-possession under a usufructuary mortgage effects improvements in the property knowing fully well that he was the mortgagee and not the owner, the mortgagee is not entitled to compensation for the improvements in a suit for redemption by the mortgagor—Ganpat v. Abdulji, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 54, 169 I.C. 23.

The mere consent of the mortgagor to the improvement being made would not make him liable; unless given under circumstances to make it equivalent to a promise to re-imburse the cost to the mortgagee—Arunachella v. Sithayi, 19 Mad. 327 (329).

In some cases it was held, following Shepard v. Jones, (1882) 21 Ch. D. 469, and Henderson v. Astwood, (1894) A.C. 150, that the mortgagee was entitled to be repaid the expenses if the improvements were accretions within the meaning of sec. 63, or were necessary for the preservation of the property under sec. 72 (b) or were lasting improvements reasonably made for the benefit of the property and added to its selling value—Rahmatulla v. Yusuf, 10 A.L.J. 124, 16 I.C. 635 (638); Rupan v. Champa, 37 All. 81 (85); Durga v. Naurang, 17 All. 282 (284); Dnyanu v. Fakira, 45 Bom. 1301 (1305); Nijlingappa v. Chenabasawa, 43 Bom. 69 (74); Rikhi Kesh v. Jawal Sahai, 78 P.R. 1919, 52 I.C. 862; Labhu Ram v. Abdulla, 75 I.C. 183, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 587. See also Fisher on Mortgages, 6th Edn., p. 897. In allowing the costs of improvements, the Court must naturally be on its guard against extravagant and unfounded claims, and should enquire strictly into the facts and fairness of the claim in each particular case—Nijlingappa v. Chenabasawa, supra. Under the present section the question as to whether the improvement is reasonable or not must be decided with reference to the rule laid down in sub-section (2). See the Report of Special Committee quoted above.

Contract to the contrary :—This section applies only when there is no contract to the contrary; otherwise improvements are subject to the contract. Whether the mortgagor is liable for improvements depends upon the question whether the improvements come within sub-sec. (2). But the contract prevails over that sub-section—Chhedi Lal v. Babu Nandan, A.I.R. 1944 All. 204, I.L.R. 1944 All. 302. Where there was a contract that the mortgagee would make certain improvements some of which were effected and the others were not, the mortgagee was not entitled to more than a rateable proportion of the amount provided for in the document—Neelakantani v. Ummeni, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 295. As to the custom in Malabar, see this case and Sundaram v. Mannadiar, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 197, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 411. Where the mortgagee was directed to make some special improvements, he was not entitled to make other improvements and claim compensation for them—ibid. In some cases the mortgagee may be entitled to special repair costs incurred in keeping the house in sound condition—Jetha v. Ashpar, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 74.

If there is a contract between the parties as to making improvements, it must be given effect to. Thus, where the mortgage was of a katcha house, and the terms of the mortgage-deed expressly authorised the mortgagee to rebuild any portion of the house that might fall down during the rains, and the katcha house having tumbled down during the rains, the mortgagee rebuilt a pucca house which was not bigger than the old one but was of the same size and pattern, held that the mortgagee's claim to recover the cost of rebuilding the house was quite fair and must be allowed—Qasim v. Bhagwandeem, 7 O.W.N. 488, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 337 (338), 126 I.C. 397; Muhammad Mohideen v. N. N. H. Muhammad Mohideen, A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 24.

Mortgagor:—Where a person purchases property improved by the mortgagee from the mortgagor, he will be liable to pay the mortgagee the costs of the improvements if he claims possession with the improvements—Haraka v. Daya Naya, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch. 14.

Mortgagee:—Where a sub-mortgagee in possession in Travancore makes improvements in the mortgaged property, he is entitled to the value of the improvements, though the mortgagee was not authorised to effect improvements—Chandi v. Thomman, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 109.

If a certified guardian of a minor executes a mortgage on behalf of the minor without taking the permission of the Court under sec. 29, Guardians and Wards Act, and the minor on attaining majority avoids the mortgage, there is no relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee, and the latter making any improvement on the mortgaged property is not entitled to add the costs of the improvement on the mortgage-money—Bechu v. Bhabhuti 52 All. 831, A.I.R. 1931 All. 201 (202).

'Necessary to preserve the property,' etc.:—Sub-section (2) lays down that the mortgagor shall be liable to pay the cost of improvements if they are necessary to preserve the property from destruction, deterioration, etc.; compare clause (b) of sec. 72. What has to be determined is whether the expenditure was necessary to preserve the property from destruction—Arunachella v. Sithayi, 19 Mad. 327 (329). Thus, where a mortgagee of agricultural land had spent money in repairing a well on the property which had been rendered useless from natural causes, it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to add the amount so expended to the mortgage-debt—Durga Singh v. Naurang, 17 All. 282 (284). But it is otherwise where it is not so necessary—Fayaz v. Shafi, A.I.R. 1951 Aj. 10. Where the mortgaged property was a mill, the mortgagee was allowed the value of improved machinery in place of the old, on proof that it was necessary in order to run the mill in successful competition with other mills in the neighbourhood which contained such machinery—Pingrey on Mortgages, § 2117, 2120. If the mortgagee has rebuilt any fallen portion in order to retain the income which was derivable from the same, he can legitimately get the cost thereof and charge the same on the property in connection with which such expense was incurred—Amba Prasad v. Wahidullah, 44 All. 708 (712). Where the kutch room fell down and the mortgagee built a pucca room in place of it, the expense was held to have been properly incurred for the preservation of the property; for otherwise the house would have been uninhabitable—Rupan v. Champa, 37 All. 81 (84); especially when it appeared that the rebuilding was within the contemplation of the parties when the mortgage-deed was executed—Qasim v. Bhugwandeem, 7 O.W.N. 488 A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 337; but where the mortgagee also built a second storey, held that such a building altered the character of the house, and having been made without the mortgagor's consent and not being necessary for the preservation of the estate, the mortgagee was not entitled to the money spent on it—Rupan v. Champa, 37 All. 81 (84). Where the repairs made by the mortgagee was in the nature of improvements calculated to bring in increased rent and none of them were proved to be necessary within the meaning of this section, the mortgagee was not entitled to credit for the sum spent by him in effecting the repairs—Suraj Mal v. Chander Bhan, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 129, 41 P.L.R. 80. Where the mortgagee claimed the expenses incurred for building a granary and laying out water-pipes, held that the laying out of pipes was not a necessary improvement or substantial repair so as to make the mortgagor liable, and as the granary was a moveable object, the mortgagee could remove the same and no credit should be allowed for it—Narayanaswami v. Soranammal, 15 M.L.T. 374, 22 I.C. 635. The mortgagee will not be justified in demolishing the house and rebuilding it at a cost equivalent to several times the mortgage-debt, and charging the mortgagor therewith—Surapee v. Diwan Chand, 59 I.C. 764 (Lah.); Charan Das v. Shadiram, A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu, 87. The mortgagee has no right to charge for the cost of a gratuitous structure made without the consent of the mortgagor and in no way necessary for the maintenance or preservation of the mortgaged property—Sammo v. Abdul Wahid, 1883 A.W.N. 208. See also Bechu v. Bhabhuti, 52 All. 831, A.I.R. 1931 All. 201 (202), 124 I.C. 731; Gopi Lal v. Abdul Hamid, 26 A.L.J. 887, A.I.R. 1928 All. 381 (385, 386), 116 I.C. 91; and also the Full Bench case of Nannu v. Ram Chander, 63 All. 334 (F.B.), cited in Note 387 under sec. 63.

The law on the subject of improvements has been thus succinctly laid down by Fisher in his work on Mortgages § 1781: "The mortgagee will be allowed for proper and necessary repairs to the estate, and if buildings are incomplete or become ruinous so as to be unfit for use, he may complete or pull them down and rebuild them for the preservation of his security. And the rebuilding or repairing may be done in an improved manner and more substantially than before, so that the works be done providently, and that no new or expensive buildings be erected for purposes different from those for which the former buildings were used; for the property when restored ought to be of the same nature as when the mortgagee received it. And if it be thus wholly or in part converted from its original purposes, the money expended will not be allowed to be charged upon it." See also Charan Das v. Shadiram, A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu, 87.

The planting of trees on the mortgaged land is not an improvement necessary for the preservation of the property—Raghu-nandan v. Raghu-nandan, 43 All. 638 (643) (F.B.); Zubeda v. Sheo Charan, 22 All. 83 (85); and the mortgagor is entitled to the trees without paying any compensation for them. See Nageshwari v. Nand Lal, 48 All. 70, Zubeda v. Sheo Charan (supra), Ajodhya v. Indra, 113 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1929 All. 330 (331), Ma E v. Maung Po, 8 Rang. 233, and Jahangir v. Ram Har-akh, 13 O.L.J. 243 92 I.C. 263, cited in Note 388 under sec. 63. In Raghu-nandan v. Raghu-nandan (supra), it was held that the mortgagor was not entitled to trees, as they were not planted by him, but that the mortgagee should be allowed to cut down and remove the trees. A similar view was taken in Ram Birich v. Chhakaury, A.I.R. 1925 All. 748 (750), 86 I.C. 929. In a more recent Allahabad case it has been held that, the question as to whether the mortgagor should be allowed to remove the trees should be decided on a consideration whether it is practicable to remove the trees—Ajodhya v. Indra, supra. A mortgagee is not entitled to claim compensation for the amount spent in order to increase the yield of the mortgaged land—Rup Ram Dhan Singh v. Munshi Chillu, A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 480.

Costs of improvements :—Where under the terms of the mortgage executed before the insertion of this section the mortgagee could make improvements and repairs and to recover from the mortgagor the costs thereof, the question of such costs has to be determined with reference to the terms of the mortgage and principles of common justice—Kukaji v. Misri Lal, A.I.R. 1952 M.B. 6. Where the improvements are such that they are not severable from the land, the mortgagor is liable to pay the costs thereof—Sundaram v. Mannadiar, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 197, I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 411. The burden of proof in such cases is upon the mortgagee to show the execution of the improvements and the actual expenses incurred—ibid. Where the mortgagee in possession of a Kuchcha building demolishes it and constructs a pucca one at the place without the mortgagor's consent, it is an improvement, and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagor is entitled to the building and will not, save in the cases provided for in sub-sec. (2), be liable to pay the costs thereof—Ram Asray v. Hira Lal, A.I.R. 1949 All. 681. As to the value to be ascertained of buildings, fruit-bearing trees etc., see George v. Muthalier, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 507.

The value of improvements payable to a usufructuary mortgagee should not be restricted to the amount advanced under the mortgage—Francis v. Onseph, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 441. The costs of a suit for recovery of possession of the property do not come within any of the purposes mentioned in sub-sec. (2) and the mortgagee is not entitled to them—Palani Devasthanam v. Md. Gani, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 89.

In case of a mortgage with possession, although no condition is inserted in the mortgage-deed about crediting rents and profits to the mortgagor, this condition is implied. If the mortgagee has incurred the cost of the improvement which has yielded the rents and profits, he is of course entitled to claim the costs with interest, but the mortgagor should be given credit for the rents received by the mortgagee—Wasu Ram v. Md. Ramzan, A.I.R. 1940 Lah 199, 42 P.L.R. 196, 188 I.C. 570. The mortgagee can claim the value of those improvements which are on the land in a reasonably good condition at the time of actual redemption. So, where the value of improvements has been assessed in the redemption-decree, but some of the improvements have been destroyed between the date of decree and the date of actual redemption, the mortgagor would be entitled to obtain a reduction of the amount mentioned in the decree—Krishna v. Srinivasa, 20 Mad. 124 (126, 128). Similarly, the mortgagee can claim a revaluation if he can show that since the passing of the redemption-decree, the value of the improvements has increased—Ramunni v. Shanku, 10 Mad. 367.

64. Where the mortgaged property is a lease, * * *, and the mortgagee obtains, a renewal of the lease, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract by him to the contrary, have the benefit of the new lease.

Amendment :—The words "for a term of years" have been omitted by sec. 28 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), because they are unnecessary according to the opinion of the Special Committee. These words have also been omitted from sections 65 and 71.

389A. Scope of section :—This section embodies the law as laid down in Rawe v. Chichester, (1773) Amb. 719, where Lord Bathurst stated the rule thus : "If trustees, mortgagees and persons interested obtain renewal, the new lease is always subject to the trusts and limitations of the old lease".

This section may be compared with illustration (a) of sec. 90, Indian Trusts Act :—"A, the tenant for life of leasehold property, renews the lease in his own name and for his own benefit. A holds the renewed lease for the benefit of all those interested in the old lease." A similar illustration is appended to sec. 3 of the Specific Relief Act. The principle of this section is that if a trustee or a mortgagee obtains a lease during the continuance of the trust or mortgage, the benefit of the lease taken by the trustee or mortgagee enures to the benefit of the cestui que trust or the mortgagor—Baijnath v. Harikishen, 6-C.W.N. 372. Therefore, if the mortgagee obtains a renewal, the mortgagor has generally the benefit of the new term upon redemption; because, the additional term comes from the old root subject to the same equity of redemption—Rakestraw v. Brewer, 2 P. Wms. 510. The mortgagee is entitled to recover the costs of the renewal and may add the costs to the principal money; see sec. 72 (e).

Where the form in which a current lease was drawn up indicated that the lease was capable of being renewed, it was held that the current lease could not be said to be a renewal merely from the form—Lachhman v. Mt. Gulab, A.I.R. 1936 All. 270, 162 I.C. 143.

65. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagor shall be deemed to contract with the mortgagee—

Implied contracts by mortgagor.

- (a) that the interest which the mortgagor professes to transfer to the mortgagee subsists, and that the mortgagor has power to transfer the same ;
- (b) that the mortgagor will defend, or if the mortgagee be in possession of the mortgaged property, enable him to defend, the mortgagor's title thereto ;
- (c) that the mortgagor will, so long as the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay all public charges accruing due in respect of the property ;
- (d) and, where the mortgaged property is a lease * * *, that the rent payable under the lease, the conditions contained therein, and the contracts binding on the lessee have been paid, performed and observed down to the commencement of the mortgage ; and that the mortgagor will, so long as the security exists and the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay the rent reserved by the lease, or, if the lease be renewed, the renewed lease, perform the conditions contained therein and observe the contracts binding on the lessee, and indemnify the mortgagee against all claims sustained by reason of the non-payment of the said rent or the non-performance or non-observance of the said conditions and contracts ;

- (e) and, where the mortgage is a second or subsequent incumbrance on the property, that the mortgagor will pay the interest from time to time accruing due on such prior incumbrance as and when it becomes due, and will at the proper time discharge the principal money due on such prior incumbrance.

* * * * *

The benefit of the contracts mentioned in this section shall be annexed to and shall go with the interest of the mortgagee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

Amendment :—By section 29 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929) the words “for a term of years” have been omitted from clause (d), as they are unnecessary, and the last paragraph but one has been omitted. This para stood as follows :—

“Nothing in clause (c), or in clause (d), so far as it relates to the payment of future rent, applies in the case of a usufructuary mortgage.”

The reasons for omitting this para have been thus stated :—

“This section relates to the implied covenants by a mortgagor, and provides in the penultimate paragraph that covenants regarding payment of public charges and future rent in the case of leasehold property do not apply in the case of a usufructuary mortgage. This provision is not clear. Covenants specified in the section are binding on a mortgagor in consequence of his obligation to preserve the mortgage-security. No sufficient reason is apparent why, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage when possession is not delivered to the mortgagee, the mortgagor should not be under a duty to pay the public charges and future rent. It appears from the papers underlying the Act that the provision at present contained in this paragraph was first introduced in Bill IV of 1879, when clauses (c) and (d) did not contain the words ‘so long as the mortgagee was not in possession’. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, if the mortgagor has not put the mortgagee in possession, it is as much his duty as it is in the case of any other mortgage to preserve the property on the security of which he has obtained a loan. The words ‘so long as the mortgagee was not in possession’ were added in sub-clauses (c) and (d) of section 65 in the final Bill, but, apparently through inadvertence, this paragraph was not omitted.”—Report of the Special Committee.

390. Scope of section :—This section, like sec. 55, is to operate only when the parties have not entered into a contract to the contrary.

But the contract made by the parties must be a valid one. A contract that payments of the mortgage-money which are not entered on the back of the bond should not be recognised is not a valid one and cannot come within the section—Narayan v. Motilal, 1 Bom. 45 (49).

This section enumerates implied contracts by the mortgagor and does not cast any duty upon him to make any disclosure of previous encumbrances—Ramkrishna v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 149, 150 I.C. 20.

Not only the mortgagee but any one claiming under him is entitled to the benefit of the implied covenants under this section (see the last para of the section). But the contract is personal to the mortgagor; the purchaser of the equity of redemption from a mortgagor is not a party to such a covenant and therefore there is no obligation on him to pay the public charges accruing due in respect of what he has purchased, though it may be to his interest to do so and avert revenue sale of the mortgaged property—Srinivasachari v. Ganaprakasa, 30 Mad. 67 (71).

391. Clause (a)—Covenant for title :—Compare sec. 55 (2). This clause does not apply to a case where the mortgage was created prior to the passing of this Act though one of the further charges was subsequent to it—Saiyid Abdulla v. Saiyid Basharat Hussain, 35 All. 48 (P.C.), 17 C.W.N. 233, 17 I.C. 737.

The covenant implied in clause (a) is twofold—(1) as to the quantum of interest mortgaged and (2) as to the transferability of the interest by the mortgagee.

(1) The interest which the mortgagor profess to transfer will have to be construed in the light of section 8. The combined effect of that section and this clause is that in the absence of a contract to the contrary the interest which the mortgagor professes to transfer must be deemed to be all that the mortgagor has, which he shall be deemed to transfer unreservedly—Chiranji Lal v. Bhagwan, 8 I.C. 826 (All.).

(2) The power of transfer implies that the property is alienable, i.e., it does not fall within the category of non-transferable properties mentioned in section 6, and that the mortgagor is a person competent under section 7 to transfer it.

Where it was found that the mortgagor had no title, but the mortgagee took the mortgage bona fide without notice of the absence of title, the latter was awarded a decree on the mortgage against the property—Venkata Narasimha v. Gundu Sastrulu, 9 M.L.T. 365, 3 I.C. 504.

Once the mortgagor has mortgaged the property, he cannot, in a suit by the mortgagee take up the position that he had no power to transfer the property by mortgage. And this estoppel will operate also against the successors-in-interest of the mortgagor—Achhaibar v. Rajmati, 51 All. 802, A.I.R. 1929 All. 483 (484), 121 I.C. 111. Further, a mortgagor is estopped from asserting that he is not in possession of the property mortgaged—Jadunath v. Isar Jha, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 47, 178 I.C. 198; Bholanath v. Balaram, 27 C.W.N. 607 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 382, 70 I.C. 932; nor can he urge that he had no title to convey—Dhondappa v. Kasabai, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 206, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 936. In the absence of fraud etc. the question of title is irrelevant in a mortgage suit—ibid, per Bose J. A person named as the mortgagee in the mortgage deed is entitled to sue on the mortgage whether he has any interest therein or not—Shanta Bai v. Narayanrao, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 81, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 290.

If a person professes to have an interest in a property, whatever interest he may have is bound by the mortgage and he cannot claim that a personal decree should have been passed—Bholanath v. Balaram, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 382, 31 M.L.T. 306.

The purchaser at an execution-sale of the interest of the mortgagor is also bound by the same rule of estoppel as his judgment-debtor (mortgagor)—Debendra v. Mirza Abdul, 10 C.L.J. 150, 1 I.C. 264 (271).

For failure of the mortgagor's title, the mortgagee is entitled to compensation and interest—Babu Lal v. Mangat Rai, A.I.R. 1944 All. 195, I.L.R. 1944 All. 277. The cause of action arises when the event depriving the fruits of his mortgage occurs—ibid.

392. Substituted security—mortgage of undivided share:—Where the owner of an undivided share in a joint and undivided estate mortgages his undivided share, he cannot, by so doing, affect the interests of the other co-sharers; and the persons who take the security, i.e., the mortgagees, take it subject to the right of these co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby convert what is an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty—Byjnath v. Ram Oodeen, 1 I.A. 106, 21 W.R. 233 (P.C.). That is, a person who advances money upon a mortgage of property, which the mortgagor holds in an undivided share, must be deemed to take it subject to the liability of the property to be subsequently partitioned—Shahebzada v. Hills, 35 Cal. 388. Therefore, a mortgagee of an undivided share, when there takes place a subsequent partition, will be entitled, as his security after the partition, to the separate share allotted to his mortgagor, in place of the undivided share—Hem Chunder v. Thako Moni, 20 Cal. 533; Lakshman v. Gopal, 23 Bom. 385; Joy Sankari v. Bharat Chandra, 26 Cal. 343; Blup Singh v. Chkheda Singh, 42 All. 596 (599); Amolak Ram v. Chandan, 24 All. 483; Pullamma v. Pradosham, 18 Mad. 316; Mt. Imlianzunissa v. Abdur Qasim, A.I.R. 1942 All. 267; Deokinandan v. Aghorenath, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 400, 24 Pat. 268. The mortgage cannot, in the absence of a fraud in the partition, be enforced against the share originally mortgaged; the mortgagee's sole remedy is to proceed against the share which has been allotted to his mortgagor in lieu of the share mortgaged—Amolak Ram v. Chandan, 24 All. 483; Muthia Raja v. Appala Raja, 34 Mad. 175; Hakim Lal v. Ram Lal, 6 C.L.J. 46; Shahebzada v. Hills, 35 Cal. 388; Md. Afzal v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 235, 59 I.A. 405, 36 C.W.N. 1129, 13 Lah. 702, 139 I.C. 85; Dewan Chand v. Manak Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 809, 36 P.L.R. 185; Amar v. Bhagwan, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 771, 14 Lah. 749; Kharag Narain v. Janaki Rai, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 546, 16 Pat. 230, 169 I.C. 906; Ganga Prasad v. Dulari Saran, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 253, 170 I.C. 99; Naubat v. Hira, A.I.R. 1951 All. 654, 1951 A.L.J. 456; Issaku v. Seetharamaraju, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 1 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1948 Mad. 454. Even if the mortgagee happens to be one of the co-sharers, the same principle applies—Naubat v. Hira, supra. In the case of such substituted security the mortgagee's right is however not in the nature of a mortgage, but of a charge under sec. 100. Hence a bona fide transferee for value without notice of such substituted property would be protected against such a charge—Issaku v. Seetharamaraju, supra. Overruling Ramanna v. Manickam, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 1011. The fact that the mortgagee was not made a party to the partition proceedings makes no difference—Nirmal v. Sant Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 563 (566), 16 Pat. 622, 171 I.C. 715; Diwan Chand v. Manak Chand, supra. The mortgagee can neither compel a partition nor claim to be a party to the partition proceedings as of right. But where the share of his mortgagor has not received a proper allotment and the partition was the result of a collusive or fraudulent arrangement between the mortgagor and his co-sharers, the mortgage is enforceable against the proportionate share of the mortgagor in every item of property specified in the mortgage-deed whether such property is in the hands of the mortgagor's transferee or any transferee from him—Saradindu v. Jahar Lal, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 153 (163), 46 C.W.N. 73, 74 C.L.J. 61. The burden to prove that the partition was fair and equal lies upon the person relying upon the partition—Ibid, at p. 160. If the property as allotted to the mortgagor is subsequently transferred by him to third parties, that will make no difference as far as the mortgagee's rights are concerned—Amar v. Bhagwan, supra.

The mortgagee's main right is, after foreclosing or purchasing his mortgagor's rights, to get defined by partition what it is that is mortgaged. Any Court entertaining an application for partition would be bound to partition the joint property in accordance with justice and equity. The Court should, unless there are countervailing reasons, so divide the family property that the property mortgaged goes to the mortgaging co-parcener and the non-mortgaging co-parceners get other properties—Atmaramsao v. Bhupendranath, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 149 (154), 1940 N.L.J. 365. Where in such a case the mortgaged property has been allotted to the non-mortgaging co-parceners, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the mortgagee has his substituted security on the property allotted to his mortgagor. But if the non-mortgaging co-parceners have, as part of the partition-agreement undertaken to pay the mortgage-debt, they have obtained an equity of redemption only and the mortgagee may sue them on the mortgage—Ibid. Then the mortgagee of a share of joint property is not a necessary party in the partition-suit—Jadunath v. Parameshwar, 67 I.A. 11, 44 C.W.N. 233, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 11 (14). It is fundamental condition of this practice in partition cases in Bengal that the extent of the share should not be in dispute—Ibid.

Where there is a stipulation in the mortgage-deed that if the mortgagee was subsequently ousted from any portion of the land mortgaged, he would be entitled to make good the deficiency by appropriating an equal area to be chosen by him out of the other land belonging to the mortgagor, the mortgagee can choose any portion of the property coming to the mortgagor's share after partition as against the subsequent mortgagee. In such a case the question of notice is immaterial, for the subsequent mortgagee can take no wider rights than his mortgagor—Mohan Lal v. Wadhwa Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 660, 149 I.C. 1195. The only difference between a transfer of an undivided share and a transfer of specific items of joint property is, while in respect of the latter.

there is opportunity, available to the transferee to insist on that property being, without prejudice to the rights of the other members to the partition, assigned to the transferor's share, he has none in the case of a transfer of undefined undivided share—Liladhar v. Shiwaji, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 125 (127), 165 I.C. 550. Where a person mortgages part of his property from his undivided share and after partition he is given other property, the mortgagee can follow that proportion of the property allotted to the mortgagor that would bear the same ratio to the property mortgaged and unmortgaged held by him before—Bala Krishna v. Apurba Krishna, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 199, 175 I.C. 191.

As between two substituted security rights no question of priority arises—Krishnaveni v. Subrahmanyam, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 547 (550), (1938) M.W.N. 235. See Note 212 under sec. 48.

Before a finding is recorded as to what the substituted security is, the parties should be given an opportunity of placing their contentions before the Court and any evidence which they may seek to adduce. After such inquiry the Court should come to the conclusion as to what is the substituted security—Shyama Kant v. Ram Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 399, 22 P.L.T. 267, 193 I.C. 748.

In the case of a mortgage of undivided share the owelty money ordered to be paid to the other members whose shares were not subject to the mortgage must be paid first out of the substituted property—Rathnavelu v. Subramaniam, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 767 (769), 48 M.L.W. 215; see also Md. Kazim v. Hills, 35 Cal. 388 (F.B.), 12 C.W.N. 373.

Other cases of substituted security :—Where a zemindar, having mortgaged by way of usufructuary mortgage his zemindari together with his sir land, lost his zemindari rights and became an ex-proprietary tenant of the sir, it was held that the usufructuary mortgage did not become ineffectual, but took effect as a mortgage of the ex-proprietary rights—Sham Das v. Batul Bibi, 24 All. 538. If the mortgaged property is converted into money under circumstances which prevent the mortgagee from following such property, the security will attach to the purchase-money. As the security of the mortgage is indivisible, the charge would fasten upon the whole proceeds and not on any particular part—Tapan Das v. Jeso Ram, 17 P.R. 1907, 2 P.L.R. 1908. Thus, where a patni taluq had been sold for arrears of revenue and the mortgagee thereof claimed the surplus sale-proceeds, held that the sale-proceeds would be regarded as the shape into which the security was converted; and the mortgagee was entitled to realise his money out of the whole of it—Gosto Behary v. Shibnath, 20 Cal. 241. Two brothers K and T mortgaged their property to B. K again mortgaged his share to B. T's interest passed to other persons. B brought a suit for sale upon the first mortgage and obtained a decree. The sale of the property satisfied the first mortgage and left a balance. B applied for half the money so left as a second mortgagee of K's share. Held that B was so entitled—Bakhtawar v. Baru Mal, 4 A.L.J. 492.

After-acquired interests :—If the mortgagor professes to mortgage a property over which he has no title or has a defective title, then if he subsequently acquires title thereto, the mortgagee is entitled for the purposes of his security to all such subsequently acquired interests. See this subject discussed in Note 198 under sec. 43.

393. Clause (b)—Covenant for defence of title :—The mortgagor must defend his own title, if he is himself in possession of the mortgaged property; if the mortgagee is entitled to possession, the mortgagor must give him quiet possession and help him in defending his possession by coming forward to vindicate his title against all intruders. The mortgagee is therefore entitled to be reimbursed the expenses incurred by him in defending the title—Damodar v. Vamanrao, 9 Bom. 435. Where the mortgagee is deprived of a part of the mortgaged property by the act of the mortgagor, he is entitled to recover the mortgage-money from the latter—Haris Chandra v. Keshab Chandra, 54 I.C. 785 (Cal.). See clause (e) of section 68.

394. Clause (c)—Payment of public charges :—The covenant under this clause is personal to the mortgagor, and is not one arising by virtue of his being in possession of the mortgaged property. Hence, if after the creation of a simple mortgage, a stranger acquires the equity of redemption by adverse possession against the mortgagor, the acquirer is under no duty towards the mortgagee to pay the revenue payable on the property; and therefore if after allowing it to be sold for arrears of revenue he buys it himself, he holds it free from the mortgage—Subbiah v. Rami Reddi, 39 Mad. 959 (963, 964). Similarly, the purchaser of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor is under no obligation to pay the public charges, though it may be to his interest to do so to avert a revenue sale—Srinivasa v. Gnanaprakasa, 30 Mad. 67 (71). In other words, the liability of the mortgagor to pay the Government revenue continues, even though he parts with his equity of redemption. But this implied covenant of the mortgagor to pay the revenue comes to an end with the extinction of the equity of redemption by Court-sale—Balkrishna v. Vishwanath, 19 Bom. 528. If, however, the mortgagor himself purchases the land at the revenue sale, the original mortgage is not extinguished and the liability to pay the revenue will continue—Po Dwe v. K. M. T. S. Chetty, 12 Bur. L.T. 41, 51 I.C. 574. The effect would be the same if the property is purchased at the revenue sale by the heir of the mortgagor instead of by the mortgagor himself—Lakshmayya v. Bolla Reddi, 26 Mad. 385.

If the rights of a purchaser at a revenue sale become vested in the person for whose default the sale took place, the obligations would again attach to the property for the defaulter cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong—Narayana v. Raghavan, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 563; Sankaran v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 38.

395. Clause (d)—Payment of rent, etc. :—Where the mortgage is without possession, the mortgagor must pay the rent reserved by the lease and fulfil all other conditions necessary for its continuance so as not to impair the mortgagee's security. If the mortgagor makes any default to the prejudice of the mortgagee, the latter can maintain a suit for damages—Singjee v. Tirvengadam, 13 Mad. 192. But if the mortgagee enters into possession, his liability to pay rent to the mortgagor's lessor has to be determined with reference to sec. 108 cl. (j), and not with reference to this clause, because this clause deals only with the rights and liabilities of the mortgagor and mortgagee as between themselves, and not with the rights and liabilities as between the mortgagor's lessor and the mortgagee—Thethalan v. Eralpad, 40 Mad. 1111 (1117). The mortgage of a leasehold gives rise to question of privity of estate between the lessor and the mortgagee. This subject has been fully dealt with in Note 580 under sec. 108, sub-heading "Privity of estate."

396. Clause (e)—Covenant for payment of prior incumbrances :—The breach of the covenant under this clause is a default within the meaning of clause (b) of sec. 68, and the mortgagee will be entitled to sue for a personal decree, although there was no personal covenant in the mortgage—Singjee v. Tiruvengadam, 13 Mad. 192. Where the mortgagor left a sum of money with the second mortgagee for redemption of a prior mortgage, but the mortgagee was compelled to pay a much larger sum for redeeming that mortgage and obtaining possession, held that on the principle underlying this clause the mortgagor was bound to bear the whole expense incurred by the second mortgagee in obtaining possession from the first mortgagee—Gauri Shankar v. Bhairon, 13 O.L.J. 289, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 207, 92 I.C. 17.

396A. Last para—Covenants run with the land :—The last para declares that the rights conferred by this section are not personal to the mortgagee. Thus, in the case of an implied contract by the mortgagor under clause (c) to pay the public charges in respect of the mortgaged property, not only the mortgagee but any one claiming through him is entitled to the benefit of this covenant—Srinivasa v. Gnanaprakasa, 30 Mad. 67 (71). The covenant for title implied by clause (a) can be enforced not only by the mortgagee but also by a person purchasing the interest of the mortgagee—Ma Gun v. Mg. Lu Gale, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 130, 3 Bur. L.J. 282, 85 I.C. 223.

65A. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), a Mortgagor's power to mortgagor, while lawfully in possession of lease. the mortgaged property shall have power to make leases thereof which shall be binding on the mortgagee.

- (2) (a) Every such lease shall be such as would be made in the ordinary course of management of the property concerned, and in accordance with any local law, custom or usage.
- (b) Every such lease shall reserve the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, and no premium shall be paid or promised and no rent shall be payable in advance.
- (c) No such lease shall contain a covenant for renewal.
- (d) Every such lease shall take effect from a date not later than six months from the date on which it is made.

(e) In the case of a lease of buildings, whether leased with or without the land on which they stand, the duration of the lease shall in no case exceed three years, and the lease shall contain a covenant for payment of the rent and a condition of reentry on the rent not being paid within a time therein specified.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage-deed; and the provisions of sub-section (2) may be varied or extended by the mortgage-deed and, as so varied and extended, shall, as far as any be, operate in like manner and with all like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in that sub-section.

397. This section has been inserted by sec. 30 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The reasons have been thus stated:—

“In the absence of an express provision in the Act, a question is sometimes raised whether a mortgagor in possession is competent to grant a lease of the mortgaged property during the continuance of the mortgage and whether such a lease is binding on the mortgagee. In England, before the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was passed, a mortgagor could not grant leases which were binding on the mortgagee [Keech v. Hall, 1 Smith L. C., 12 Edn., 577; Corbett v. Plowden, 25 Ch. D. 678; Robbins v. Whyte, (1906) 1 K.B. 125]. This view was followed in the case of an English mortgage in Bombay (I.L.R. 30 Bom. 250) and it was observed as follows :—

‘If a mortgagor left in possession grants a lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee, the lessee has a precarious title, inasmuch as, although the lease is good as between himself and the mortgagor who granted it, the paramount title of the mortgagee may be asserted against both of them.’

“In Allahabad, it was held that a mortgagor ordinarily cannot, without the concurrence of his mortgagee, execute a lease which would be binding upon the mortgagee. He may execute a lease which may be binding upon himself and so long as the mortgagee does not interfere with the possession of the lessee, so long may the lessee enjoy the benefit of the lease; but ordinarily without the concurrence of the mortgagee the mortgagor cannot grant a lease which will be binding upon the mortgagee (2 A.L.J. 294). This view was not accepted in Calcutta. In 40 C.L.J. 500, following the observation in Ghose on Mortgage (Vol. I, p. 213), it was held that a mortgagor may make a lease conformable to usage and in the ordinary course of management, and the tenancy so created will be binding on the mortgagee. The Conveyancing Act, 1881, expressly authorises a mortgagor to grant leases of the mortgaged property for particular periods (section 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and section 99 of the Property Act 1925). In our opinion, it is necessary to provide expressly in the Transfer of Property Act that a mortgagor shall, subject to express conditions in the mortgage-deed, be entitled to grant a lease of the mortgaged property. In order, however, to protect the interests of the mortgagee, we propose to provide certain restrictions, mostly taken from section 99 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, with variations suitable to the conditions of this country."—Report of the Special Committee.

Clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (2) of this section have been taken from Kiran Chandra v. Dutt and Co., 40 C.L.J. 500, 29 C.W.N. 94, 85 I.C. 522, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 251 (252, 253), in which the following observations have been made : "The powers of a mortgagor to grant leases after the execution of the mortgage are very limited. He may no doubt make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management ; for instance, he may create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses ; but it is well settled that a mortgagor cannot, after the date of the mortgage, and in the absence of an express power in that behalf or the concurrence of the mortgagee, create, except as stated above, a lease or a tenancy which will bind the mortgagee, and if he purports to create such a lease or tenancy, the mortgagee or his transferee may proceed to eject the lessee or tenant. If that is so, the payment of rent in advance by virtue of a lease granted by the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage is not binding on the mortgagee." See also M. P. M. S. Firm v. Ko Pyu, 10 Rang. 210, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 113 (114), 138 I.C. 213 ; Ram Ratan v. Sew Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 823 (827) ; Chettyar Firm v. Sein Htaung, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 420, 159 I.C. 1038. The law is also laid down by Mookerjee J. as follows : "It cannot be maintained that the mortgagor has anything like a general authority to deal with or affect the mortgaged property during his possession thereof. The true position thus is that the mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management, for instance, he may create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses. But it is not competent to the mortgagor to grant a lease on unusual terms, or to authorise its use in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgagee"—Madan Mohan v. Raj Kishori, 21 C.W.N. 88 (92), 39 I.C. 182 ; followed in Anand Ram v. Dhanpat, 1 P.L.J. 563 (569), 38 I.C. 37, Beni Prasad v. Gangoz, 7 Pat. 349, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 372 (374), 110 I.C. 287 ; and Mathura v. Mandil, 1 P.L.T. 392, 56 I.C. 805 (806). See also Tulshi Ram v. Muna Kaur, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 146, 12 Luck. 161, 162 I.C. 225. A mortgagor cannot create a right in the tenant to hold the land rent-free—Rup Narain v. Sheo Sagar, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 258, 180 I.C. 105, or a perpetual lease—Ram Sahai v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 407, (1943) O.W.N. 320. In order that a mortgagor may lease the mortgaged property, it is necessary that the mortgagor must be in possession and the lease must be the usual mode of management of the property—Moidunni v. Poothari, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 876 (878), 65 M.L.J. 826.

This section would not apply if the mortgage took place before it was inserted into the Act, even if the lease was actually granted after the section was introduced—Pundarikakshudu v. Kondayya, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 601, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 669, 51 M.L.W. 481.

Although a defendant mortgagor in a mortgage suit has power, so long as he retains possession to grant leases in the ordinary course of management of his property, he cannot make transfers to enure to the benefit of the mortgagee. Such a transfer, if made, can undoubtedly be avoided under sec. 52—Niser v. Sunder, A.I.R. 1927 All. 657, 25 A.L.J. 1025, 104 I.C. 292. A lease is void, unless it is one granted in the ordinary course of management—Pundarikakshudu v. Kondayya, supra.

Even when the mortgagee is an equitable mortgagee, a lessee from the mortgagor who takes a lease which is not granted in the usual course of management, is bound by the mortgage, even if he had no notice of it—Ram Ratan v. Sew Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 823 (828).

Before the enactment of this section the question whether the mortgagor in possession had power to grant lease had to be determined with reference to the authority of the mortgagor as bailiff or agent of the mortgagee to deal with the mortgaged property in the usual course of management and not on the distinction between the English mortgage and a simple mortgage or on consideration germane to sec. 66—Kamakshaya Narayan v. Chohan Ram, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 401. The burden of proof in such a case is however on the lessee—ibid. In this case the lessee did not allege that the permanent lease granted by the mortgagor was in his usual course of management; therefore it was held by the Supreme Court that the lease could not prevail against the mortgagee. See in this connection Gobinda v. Sasadhar, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 73, 51 C.W.N. 323 and Mallappa v. Shivappa, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 71, 51 Bom. L.R. 820. In the following cases it was held that, granting of a lease was not an act of waste within the meaning of sec. 66 and was valid—Ramlal v. Muhammad Irshad, 1890 A.W.N. 59; Tana Peena v. Mamakkantakath, 8 L.B.R. 413, 34 I.C. 24 (25); Chotey Singh v. Baldeo, 2 O.W.N. 457, 12 O.L.J. 527, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 542 (544), 88 I.C. 947. In a case decided under secs. 66 and 68 it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that, a mortgagee in possession is entitled to lease the mortgaged property permanently irrespective of its effect on the mortgagee provided that it is not destructive or permanently injurious of the property so as to render the mortgagee's security insufficient and the purchaser of the property in execution of the mortgage-decree cannot turn the lessee out—Niader Singh v. Ram Chander, A.I.R. 1935 All. 511, 154 I.C. 1009. Thus, it appears that the right to lease given to the mortgagor by this section being hedged in by the restrictions imposed therein are narrower than what he enjoyed under sec. 66.

Clause (b) lays down that no rent shall be payable in advance; and the fact that the lessee paid rent for 3 years in advance is no answer to the mortgagee's suit for ejectment. See M. P. M. S. Firm v. Ko Pyu, 10 Rang. 210, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 113 (114). The above Burma case (8 L.B.R. 413) and Rowther v. Uma, 34 I.C. 24 in which a grant of a lease with receipt of rent in advance for the whole period was upheld, are no longer good law.

Clause (c) prohibits the mortgagor from making a covenant for renewal. Even before the amendment, it was also held in a Madras case that the mortgagor could not grant a renewal, as the effect of the renewal was to materially diminish the security—Moidunni Haji v. Madhavan, 65 M.L.J. 826, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 876 (877).

Clause (e) lays down that in the case of buildings, the duration of the lease shall not exceed three years. In Rustomji v. Keshavji, 28 Bom. L.R. 1162, 98 I.C. 436, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 567 (569), a lease of certain premises for 12 years was held to be invalid under sec 66. Similarly, a lease of a building for 20 years with a covenant for renewal was held to be not binding on the mortgagee—Mangtula v. Upendra, 57 Cal. 82, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 335 (338), 125 I.C. 661. So also, it was held that a permanent lease of the mortgaged property rendered the security insufficient within the meaning of sec. 66—Bank of Upper India v. Jaggan, 4 O.W.N. 228, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 148 (149), 100 I.C. 728; Manthura v. Jagmohan, 6 Luck. 546, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 256, 132 I.C. 532. The lease of a house-site by the mortgagor is invalid when it is not granted in the ordinary course of management—Chettyar Firm v. Sein Htaung, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 420, 159 I.C. 1038.

Where a mortgagor in possession acts in contravention of sub-sec. (2) the lease so created is not binding on the mortgagee. He can treat it as a nullity, there being nothing to set it aside as a condition precedent to his right of action—Surya Kumar v. Girish Chandra, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 101.

But although a lease may be for a period of more than three years, still as between the mortgagor and his tenant, the tenancy will be valid until the mortgagee chooses to exercise his paramount rights. Until a suit for ejectment has been brought by the mortgagee, the tenant will be estopped from disputing his landlord's title on the ground of invalidity of the lease—Rustomji v. Keshavji, supra. But see Kamakshya v. Ramzan, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 106, 23 Pat. 648, where it has been held that in such a case, it is not open to the mortgagee to eject the lessee. The mortgagee's right is merely to cause the mortgaged property sold for the mortgage-debt. A lease granted by a mortgagor under this section pending a suit by the mortgagee would be subject to the rules of lis pendens—M. Sathianesan v. M. Sankaran, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 292. In the case of a lease granted by the mortgagor prior to the enactment of sec. 65A, out of the ordinary course of management, during the pendency of a suit for sale by the mortgagee, the lessee could apply for being joined as a party and ask for opportunity to redeem. But if he allowed the property to be sold in execution of the decree he lost his right of redemption—Mangru Mahto v. Thakur Taraknathji Tarkeswar Math, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1390.

This new section has no retrospective operation—Dasain v. Ramdulari, 10 Pat. 332, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 210, 133 I.C. 169; Korlapalli v. Sethraji, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 942, 71 M.L.J. 638, 165 I.C. 951. Thus a lease executed before the Amending Act of 1929 came into force (i.e., 1st April, 1930) is not governed by this section, but by sec. 66—Tulshi Ram Mt. Muna Kuar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 146, 12 Luck. 161, 162 I.C. 225.

66. A mortgagor in possession of the mortgaged property is not liable to the mortgagee for allowing the property to deteriorate; but he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto, if the security is insufficient or will be rendered insufficient by such act.

Explanation.—A security is insufficient within the meaning of this section unless the value of the mortgaged property exceeds by one-third or, if consisting of buildings, exceeds by one half, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage.

The equitable principle enunciated in this section is applicable to the Punjab—Bhagwan Dei v. Secretary of State, 124 P.L.R. 1902.

Scope :—This section has nothing to do with a mortgagor's power to lease. It is a statutory provision of the powers of the mortgagor in possession in regard to waste of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor under this section is not liable for what is called "permissive waste" in English law, i.e., omission to repair or to prevent natural deterioration; but he is liable for destructive waste, i.e., acts which are destructive or permanently injurious to the mortgaged property if the security was insufficient or would be rendered insufficient by such acts—Kamakshaya v. Chohan Ram, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 401.

397A. Lease :—Before the enactment of sec 65A the power of a mortgagor to lease mortgaged property in his possession was limited by the rule that the mortgagor must not by his act render the security insufficient, or do anything that was not necessary for prudent management, and the burden of proving that the security was unimpaired by the lease was on the lessee—Moiduni v. Poothari, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 876, 65 M.L.J. 826. A covenant against a lease in a mortgage-deed could not put the mortgagee in a better position as regards his rights which are laid down in secs. 66 and 68—Naider Singh v. Ram Chander, A.I.R. 1935 All. 511, 154 I.C. 1009. Where a mortgagor executed a lease of mortgaged property without any premium or reserving any rent and the lessees were to hold the land not only so long as a single tree stood on the land, but also for a further period of 5 years, the lease could not be said to be necessary or even expedient in the interests of proper management of the property and as such, it was invalid under this section as well as sec. 65A—Tulshi Ram v. Muna Kuar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 146, 12 Luck. 161, 162 I.C. 225. Where a mortgagor executed a Zuripeshgi lease for 30 years prior to the Amending Act of 1929 it was governed by this section and not by sec. 65A. So it could not be enforced against the mortgagee auction-purchaser as the mortgage-security was rendered insufficient—Ibid at p. 149.

398. Security rendered insufficient :—This section is intended to apply generally to all cases where a mortgagor has done some acts which either destroy or injure the property in his possession and by such act the security is rendered insufficient—Ramasray v. Atkins, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 189 (192), 175 I.C. 279. The onus is not on the lessee—Ibid. The only test is to see whether the mortgagor's act impairs the security so as to render it insufficient. If it does not, the act is within the mortgagor's competence and is binding on the mortgage, even if it amounts to a destructive or permanently injurious act—Mallappa v. Shivappa, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 71, 51 Bom. L.R. 820.

A mortgagor in possession can prima facie exercise the ordinary rights of an owner in possession, save that he should not commit any act which will be destructive or permanently injurious to the property, and which will thereby render the security insufficient—Tana Peena v. Mamakkantakakath, 8 L.B.R. 413, 34 I.C. 24 (25). Therefore, the mortgagee is entitled to maintain an action for damages for any act done by the mortgagor, such as cutting timber, tearing down houses, fixtures and the like, although such fixtures may have been placed on the premises by the mortgagor after the making of the mortgage, and likewise against strangers whose wrongful acts affect injuriously the mortgage-security—Aiyappa Reddi v. Kuppusami Reddi, 28 Mad. 208. The mortgagor may also be restrained by injunction if he attempts to remove valuable fixtures where such removal is likely to reduce the value of the security—Ackroyd v. Mitchell, (1860) 3 L.T. (N.S.) 236.

B was both a mortgagee and lessee of a glass factory with its fixtures, fittings and tools belonging to A. C for satisfying a decree obtained against A attached the factory and removed and sold part of its roofing: held, that B's rights as mortgagee and lessee were infringed by the action of C which resulted in diminution of the value of the premises. B was therefore entitled to damages against C measured by the loss of value of the mortgaged premises—Ratti Ram v. Moti Lal, A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 68, 75 I.A. 160, I.L.R. 1948 All. 343.

399. Acts of waste :—The following have been held to be acts of waste which permanently impair the value of the security:—

(a) Minings under buildings so as to endanger their stability—Dugdale v. Robertson, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 627.

(b) Removal of valuable fixtures—Ackroyd v. Mitchell, 3 L.T. (N.S.) 236.

(c) The cutting of timber—Usborne v. Usborne, 1 Dick. 75; Aiyappa v. Kuppusami, 28 Mad. 208. (cited above); even though the timber be ripe for cutting and may deteriorate if left standing, still the cutting of such timber is an act of waste—Harper v. Aplin, (1886) 54 L.T. 483.

(d) Working new mines—Clavering v. Clavering, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 757.

(e) Pulling down buildings and appropriating the materials or their price—Punnayya v. Chilakalapudi, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 343; 91 I.C. 754.

Acquiescence :—If a mortgagee does not take steps in time, say for two years, calling upon the mortgagor to furnish additional security, the mortgagee would be deemed to have acquiesced in the diminished security—Prosanna v. Girish, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 149, 37 C.W.N. 1162, 149 I.C. 667.

Onus of proof :—When the mortgagor does any act which is likely to prove destructive or permanently injurious to the mortgaged property, the onus lies on the mortgagor or his representative to prove that the act is lawful and valid and that the security has not been rendered insufficient—Bhagwan Dei v. Secretary of State, 85 P.R. 1902, 124 P.L.R. 1902.

400. Explanation :—The Explanation is the same as that appended to sec. 10 of the Indian Easements Act. It follows an old distinction made in England between land and houses. See King v. Smith, 2 Hare 239; Usborne v. Usborne, 1 Dick. 75. "This Explanation lays down an authoritative rule for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of a security, based on the practice of the prudent man of business not to lend money on mortgage unless the property is worth at least one-third more than the amount of the loan. If the property consists of houses which are subject to many casualties from which land is free, the ideally prudent mortgagee would seldom lend more than half the value of the building"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 217.

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee.

67. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee has at any time after the mortgage-money has become due to him, and before a decree has been made for the redemption of the mortgaged property, or the mortgage-money has been paid or deposited as hereinafter provided, a right to obtain from the Court a decree that the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the property, or a decree that the property be sold.

A suit to obtain a decree that a mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the mortgaged property is called a suit for foreclosure.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- (a) to authorise any mortgagee, other than a mortgagee by conditional sale or a mortgagee under an anomalous mortgage by the terms of which he is entitled to foreclose, to institute a suit for foreclosure, or an usufructuary mortgagee as such or a mortgagee by conditional sale as such to institute a suit for sale ; or
- (b) to authorize a mortgagor who holds the mortgagee's rights as his trustee or legal representative, and who may sue for a sale of the property, to institute a suit for foreclosure ; or
- (c) to authorize the mortgagee of a railway, canal, or other work in the maintenance of which the public are interested, to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale ; or
- (d) to authorize a person interested in part only of the mortgage-money to institute a suit relating only to corresponding part of the mortgaged property, unless the mortgagees have, with the consent of the mortgagor, severed their interests under the mortgage.

Amendment :—The following changes have been made by sec. 31 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929) :—

(1) The word 'due' has been substituted for 'payable'. For the reasons stated in the notes under sec. 60, the word 'payable' should be replaced by the word 'due'—Report of the Special Committee. See Note 359 under section 60.

(2) The word 'decree' has been substituted for 'order' in several places, as the old practice of passing an order absolute has been abolished by the enactment of O. 34, C. P. Code, under which a final decree is now passed in a mortgage-suit. See Note 373 under sec. 60.

(3) Clause (a) has been redrafted. The old clause stood as follows :—

“(a) to authorize a simple mortgagee as such, to institute a suit for foreclosure, or a usufructuary mortgagee, as such, to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale, or a mortgagee by conditional sale, as such, to institute a suit for sale ;”

The present clause (a) gives the following remedies to the mortgagees in respect of the several classes of mortgages :—

(a) Simple mortgage :—Remedy by sale, and not by foreclosure. This was so under the old section.

(b) Mortgage by conditional sale :—Foreclosure, and not sale. The remedy was the same under the old section.

(c) Usufructuary mortgage :—No foreclosure or sale. Under the old section the law was the same.

(d) English mortgage :—Sale only, and not foreclosure. Under the old section the remedy was both by foreclosure and sale.

(e) Equitable mortgage :—Sale only and not foreclosure. There was no express provision under the old section 59.

(f) Anomalous mortgage :—Ordinarily, sale ; foreclosure allowed, if it is provided by the terms of the mortgage.

402. Mortgage-suit :—The person who has a right to sue on a mortgage is the mortgagee named in the mortgage-deed whether the fund used is his own or of some other person—Subramanian v. Shivalker, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 508 (510).

A mortgage is indivisible and if all the parties entitled to a share in the money due on the mortgage are not upon the record, the suit must be dismissed in its entirety—Girdhar v. Motilal, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 5, 1941 N.L.J. 151 ; see also Girwar Narain v. Mt. Makbunnessa, 1 Pat. L.J. 468, 36 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1916 Pat. 310 ; Gangaram v. Balbhadrasai, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 370, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 42, 173 I.C. 44 ; Gobinda Chandra v. Jamaluddin, 60 Cal. 777, 37 C.W.N. 478, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 621. Similarly in a mortgage-suit it is the manifest duty of the mortgagee to bring on record persons representing the equity of redemption, and if he fails to do so, the decree obtained by him is a nullity as against those who represent the equity of redemption—Matinuzzaman v. Hunter, 14 Luck. 548, A.I.R. 1939

Oudh 161, 1939 O.W.N. 420 relying on Khiraajmal v. Daim, 32 I.A. 23, 32 Cal. 296, 9 C.W.N. 201.

Where in a mortgage suit instituted by one co-mortgagee impleading the other co-mortgagee as defendant as the latter was not willing to join as plaintiff, his right is not extinguished automatically on the passing of a decree irrespective of whether or not his right was the subject of adjudication—Gopalaswami v. Nataraja, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 17, I.L.R. 1948 Mad. 190. Where the prior and the subsequent mortgagees have in their respective suits obtained decree and purchased the mortgaged property in Court sale, the remedy of the subsequent mortgagee who is a later purchaser is to redeem the prior mortgagee who however will have the right to redeem the subsequent mortgagee retaining possession of the mortgaged property—Pyli v. Varkki, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 36. If a puisne mortgagee impleaded in a suit on a prior mortgage, fails to redeem that mortgage and allows his property to be sold, his security ceases and he can no longer claim to redeem the prior mortgage—Shamsher v. Lal Batuk, A.I.R. 1953 All. 147.

Where in a suit by a co-mortgagee for his share of the mortgage-money other co-mortgagees are impleaded as defendants and in execution of his mortgage decree sells the entire mortgaged property, whether the co-mortgagee defendants would be entitled to withdraw their shares in the surplus sale proceeds or be compelled to institute a separate suit for the purpose, there is a divergence of opinion (see Lachmi Narain v. Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1935 All. 391 and Bansiram v. Gunia, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 985)—Mati Lal v. Bejoy Lal, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 455, I.L.R. (1943) 1 Cal. 59.

The circumstances that the mortgagee filed a suit against a wrong person does not affect the rights of the real owners of the equity of redemption. So the latter cannot be heard to say that a second suit is not maintainable against them. But a decree in the first suit not being binding against the owners of the equity of redemption, the mortgagee in the second suit would not be entitled to recover possession on the footing of that decree—Chandramma v. Guna Sethan, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 542 (548, 459), 133 I.C. 497. If a mortgagee takes no steps for the execution of his mortgage decree but files another suit within the period of limitation for the sale of the mortgaged property, the subsequent suit is maintainable—Somasundaram Pillai v. Raman Pillai, A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 273. Likewise a second suit for redemption in the absence of a final decree in the first suit is not barred by res judicata—Ghaithu Mohamed v. Ennasi, I.L.R. (1967) 2 Mad. 124.

One co-mortgagee can sue to recover his share of the mortgage-money if he makes the other co-mortgagees defendants when they refuse to join as plaintiffs, and if he values the suit according to the full amount due under the mortgage and pays court-fees thereon. The same principle applies to charges also—Kailas v. Sundaram, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 438.

Where the claim for a mortgage-decree fails, the mortgagee cannot be allowed to set up an alternative claim for a decree against the representatives of the deceased mortgagor for the moneys advanced under the mortgage, for the first time in the Privy Council appeal—Bank of Khulna v. Joti Prakash, 67 I.A. 317, 45 C.W.N. 259, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 147 (150).

In a suit for foreclosure or sale a personal representative of a deceased mortgagor, as much as the mortgagor himself, is estopped from denying the mortgagor's right to mortgage the property, and this is so although the personal representative has a right independent of such capacity but has been sued only in his representative capacity—Champabati v. Md. Yakub, 39 C.W.N. 1100.

As a general principle the mortgagee can relinquish the security and can sue on the personal covenant to pay—Moti Ram v. Basheshwar, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 34, 1939 Pesh.L.J. 42, 183 I.C. 833; see also Sukhdiv v. Lachman, 24 All. 456, Candu v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1083, 87 I.C. 557; Ramaswami v. Subbaraya, 49 M.L.J. 490, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1101, 88 I.C. 648. The mere recital in the plaint that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the mortgagors that the defendants should sell their property to the mortgagees is not tantamount to an admission that the mortgage is no longer in existence—Satyanarayanamurthy v. Krishnamoorthy, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 346, 1940 M.W.N. 896, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 884.

Onus:—In a suit on a mortgage executed by the members of a joint Hindu family on behalf of themselves and their minor sons for paying their antecedent debts, the burden remains heavily upon the mortgagee to establish compliance with the conditions under which the Hindu law permits the interests of the minor members to be taken from them—Kishori Lal v. Bhawani Shankar, 44 C.W.N. 1013, 1940 A.L.J. 667, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 145, 189 I.C. 443.

Limitation:—There is no legal presumption that a mortgage was executed on any particular day within the month in which it is proved to have been executed. There must be positive proof of the actual starting point, when a suit is challenged as barred by limitation—Shankara v. Kuttani A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 639, 1940 M.W.N. 446.

An acknowledgment made by a mortgagor after he has transferred the mortgaged property, though made before the expiry of the period of limitation, will not bind the transferee, and the suit against the latter instituted after the period prescribed by Art. 132, Limitation Act will be barred—Bank of Upper India v. Skinner, 47 C.W.N. 43 (P.C.).

Contract to the contrary:—For the meaning of this expression see Mohamedali Jaffer Karachiwalla v. Noorally Rathansi Ranjan Nanji, (1958) 3 W.L.R. 572.

Paramount title:—As a general rule, the ordinary scope of a mortgage-suit is to cut off the equity of redemption and bar the rights of the mortgagor and those who derive title from him. A stranger who sets up a title independent of the mortgage and paramount or adverse to it is not a proper party to the mortgage-suit—Suraj Chandra v. Behari Lal, I.L.R. 1939, 2 Cal. 551, 43 C.W.N. 1126, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 692; Jajneshwar v. Bhuban Mohan, 33 Cal. 425. Where there is an allegation in the plaint derogatory to the title of the prior mortgagee and if he consents to have the title decided, then he will be bound by the decision in that suit. But if the paramount title is in conflict with the title of the mortgagor as well as the mortgagee, that is a matter which should not ordinarily be decided in a mortgage-suit—Rameshwar v. Harakhilal, 20 Pat. 841. A person claiming a paramount title is bound to be discharged from the suit—Shakuntalabai v. Roshanlal, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 133, 1941 N.L.J. 81; see also Devidas v. Nilkanthrao, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 157, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 73. But the rule is not an absolute one. Questions of title may be investigated in a mortgage-suit, if it is necessary to give complete relief to the plaintiff or to secure to him, as a result of the decree in the mortgage-suit, a quiet unobstructed possession—Laxmanrao v. Madho Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 60, 1942 N.L.J. 156. In proceedings for a final mortgage-decree when the person claiming paramount title is in possession, it is convenient to make him a party and decide the rights of the parties inter se—Ibid.

Ordinarily, the title of persons who set up a claim adverse to the mortgagor and mortgagee should not be investigated in a suit on a mortgage. The joinder of such persons, as stated by the Privy Council in Radha v. Reoti (38 All. 488, 43 I.A. 187, 35 I.C. 939) is irregular and leads to confusion. But when such question of paramount title has been gone into by the trial Court, the appellate Court should not reverse the decision on that ground alone unless the decision has affected the jurisdiction of the Court or caused a prejudice to the parties by the trial on the merits—Veeraraghavalu v. Suryanarayana, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 338 (340), 43 M.L.W. 525, 163 I.C. 303. The question whether issues of title paramount should or should not be decided in a mortgage-suit depends on each particular case. Where in a mortgage-suit against the legal representatives of the deceased mortgagor the former contested the suit saying that the mortgagor had no right to mortgage the property which was the self-acquired property of the defendant's father (brother of the mortgagor), it was held that it was an eminently fit case where the question of paramount title should be tried and decided before the mortgage-security was brought to sale—Kasi Chettier v. Ramasami, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 176, 44 M.L.W. 706, 165 I.C. 1006. Where the auction-purchaser of the mortgaged property in a rent-sale was made a party in a suit on the mortgage and he claimed a discharge on the ground of paramount title, it was held that as the auction-purchaser was in possession, the mortgagee would merely get a paper-decree if the respective rights of the mortgagee and the auction-purchaser was not settled. It was quite allowable, instead of driving the mortgagee to another suit, to combine two reliefs and two causes of action in such a suit and to pass a decree in the special form as provided in Form No. 10, C. P. Code—Gauba v. Ganpatrao, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 376 (377, 378), I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 498. Where a lessee is added as a party to the mortgage-suit as purchaser of the equity of redemption, and there is nothing in the plaint to suggest that his title, if any, as tenant was challenged, it is not incumbent on him to set up his tenancy right in the mortgage-suit and as such he is not precluded from raising this question in a subsequent suit—Suraj Chandra v. Behari Lal, supra, relying on Radha Kishan v. Khurshed Hossein, 47 I.A. 11, Cal. 662, A.I.R. 1920 P.C. 81.

Composition:—A mortgagee having once accepted a trust-deed by which a composition of debt was made between the debtor and the creditor, cannot fall back on any remedy on the footing of the original mortgage—Nath Mal v. Gokul Chand, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 768 (776).

403. Mortgage-money:—'Mortgage-money' does not mean the whole of the mortgage-money; if a mortgage is payable by instalments, it is open to a mortgagee to bring a suit for foreclosure for an instalment of the principal and interest—Karnidan v. Meghraj, 11 N.L.R. 153, 30 I.C. 981. Where a subsequent loan is taken by the mortgagor on a promissory note with a stipulation not to redeem the mortgage before discharge of the subsequent loan, the mortgage debt is not thereby augmented and the mortgagee cannot ask for a mortgage decree for that loan—Radhaswami Satsang Sabha, Dayalbag v. Hanskumar, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 172.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee granted a lease of the property to the mortgagor, the amount of rent payable under the lease being exactly the amount of interest payable under the mortgage, and the mortgage-deed contained a covenant to the effect that any arrears due by the lessee would be a charge on the mortgaged property, held that the arrears of rent were included in the mortgage-money—Altaf Ali v. Lalta Prasad, 19 All. 496 (498, 409); Cf. Imdad Hasan v. Badri Prasad, 20 All. 401 (407) cited in Note 369 under sec. 60. See also Jafar Husen v. Ranjit, 21 All. 4 (9), and Ramarayaningar v. Maharaja, 50 Mad. 180 (P.C.). But see 27 All. 313.

404. When mortgage-money becomes due :—Neither sec. 67 nor any other section in this Act lays down any provision in regard to the time when the mortgage-money is to become due. It is to be determined in each case upon the terms of the contract between the parties—Raghibir v. Kumwar Rajendra, 8 Luck. 488, 144 I.C. 279, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 237 (238). The mortgagee is not entitled to foreclose (or to bring a suit for sale) before the mortgage-money becomes due. When a mortgage contains a covenant not to redeem for a fixed period, the mortgagee cannot foreclose before the expiration of the term—In re Hone's Estate, (1875) Ir. R. 8 Eq. 65. See Note 359 under sec. 60.

Where no time is fixed for payment, the mortgage-money becomes payable on the date of execution—Nilcomal v. Kamini Kumar, 20 Cal. 269 (272). Where a mortgage is payable 'on demand', and fixes no time for payment, the mortgage-money is deemed to be payable forthwith from the date of execution of the mortgage, no previous demand by the mortgagee being necessary—Barkatunnissa v. Mahboob Ali, 42 All. 70 (73). But it is equitable that the mortgagee must give reasonable notice to the mortgagor to enable him to find the money—Toms v. Wilson, (1862) 4 B. & S. 442; Brightly v. Norton, (1862) 32 L.J.Q.B. 38; Fitzgeralds' Trustee v. Mellersh, (1892) 1 Ch. 385 (390); Moore v. Shelley, (1883) 8 App. Cas. 285.

A hypothecation bond stipulated that the principal was to be paid in two years and the interest in the meantime monthly; it further provided that on default in the payment of interest, the principal with interest would become payable 'on demand'. Held that as soon as default was made in the payment of interest in any month, the money became due forthwith, and no actual demand was necessary to complete the plaintiff's cause of action—Perumal v. Alagirisami, 20 Mad. 245 (248). But if the bond provided that in default of payment of interest, the principal would become due with interest at an enhanced rate on demand by the obligee, the cause of action did not arise until a demand was actually made by the plaintiff—Nellakaruppa v. Kumarasami, 22 Mad. 20 (22).

It has been held in two cases that if a mortgagee, who is entitled to obtain possession, fails to get possession of the mortgaged property, he has a right to sue for the mortgage-money under sec. 68; that is, the mortgage-money 'becomes payable'; and he is entitled to sue under this section, either for foreclosure or for sale, as the case may be—Sita Nath v. Thakurdas, 46 Cal. 448 (454); Subbamma v. Narayya, 41 Mad. 259 (264) (F.B.). But this is no longer good law; because clause (d) of sec. 58, as now amended, makes it clear that a usufructuary mortgagee does not cease to be a usufructuary mortgagee by reason of the fact that possession has not been delivered to him by the mortgagor; consequently, he is not entitled to the remedy either of foreclosure or of sale, by virtue of clause (a) of this section. See Note 342 under sec. 58.

When mortgagee may sue before expiry of the term:—Where a mortgage-deed provided that if two instalments of six-monthly interest be not paid in full, the mortgagee would have the option, before the expiry of the period fixed, to recover the whole of the amount due through Court, held that the mortgagee could exercise his option when the mortgagor committed default—Raghubir v. Kunwar Rajendra, 8 Luck. 488, 144 I.C. 279, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 237 (238, 239). Where a deed of mortgage by conditional sale provided that the mortgage-amount would be paid in two instalments, that if the mortgagor failed to pay at the stipulated time, he would pay compound interest, and that if the amount was not paid as stipulated the mortgage would be foreclosed, held that the parties intended that there should be foreclosure only after failure to pay the whole amount due in the manner stipulated, i.e., on failure to pay the whole amount on the due date of payment of the second instalment.—Karindan v. Maghraj, 11 N.L.R. 153, 30 I.C. 981 (982). Compare Kannu v. Natesa, infra. But if a mortgage-bond contains a stipulation that "if the property be found to have been mortgaged or transferred to any one or if there should arise any case which might be considered likely to cause total or partial loss of this principal money and interest, the mortgagee shall have power to realise the entire mortgage-money from the mortgagor and from his property without waiting for the expiration of the term," held that such a covenant would enable mortgagee to recover his mortgage-debt before the expiry of the term in the event of the discovery of a prior mortgage or of anything which may be considered likely to cause loss of the debt—Bhawani v. Sheodihal, 26 All. 479 (481). Where by a deed of mortgage a mortgagor covenanted to repay the principal within one year and the interest every month, and on default in paying interest, to pay both at once, held that as soon as default was made in the payment of interest, both the principal and interest became payable at once and the suit could be instituted forthwith without waiting for the expiry of the year—Yeo Htean v. Abuzaffar, 27 Cal. 938 (P.C.).

Where the mortgagee found that some of the properties mortgaged did not belong to the mortgagor and the latter failed to furnish additional security, the mortgagee could sue under this section even before the mortgage-money became due—Venkat Rao v. Mahableshwar, 26 Bom. 241 (245).

Suit for interest before principal money is due:—Where a mortgage-document provided for payment of interest every month and for enhanced interest on default, held that there was a 'contract' to the contrary' within the meaning of this section, and a suit for interest was maintainable even before the principal money became due. Failure to pay interest at the stipulated time would, in a mortgage prepared in the most ordinary form, release the mortgagee from the necessity of waiting for the expiry of the term—Seaton v. Twyford, (1870) L.R. 11 Eq. 591. Where a deed provided that the mortgage-debt was to become payable at the expiration of 15 years, and that in the meantime interest was to be paid yearly, held that the failure on the part of the mortgagor to pay the stipulated interest as agreed upon would entitle the mortgagee to bring the mortgaged property to sale before the expiry of the term of the mortgage—Venkatarao v. Mahableshwar, 26 Bom. 241 (245), following Seaton v. Twyford, (1870) L.R. 11 Eq. 591. But where the mortgage-bond provided that in default of payment of interest at 8 per cent. on the due dates interest at 9 per cent. should be charged on the interest in arrears as well as on the principal, it was held that the true intention of the parties was to postpone the sale of the mortgaged property until the principal became due, and to give the mortgagee, on default of payment of interest, only a right to the enhanced rate of interest—Kannu v. Natesa, 14 Mad. 477.

"Before mortgage-money has been deposited":—Where the mortgage-money was deposited by the mortgagor and a notice was issued under sec. 83, but before it was served on the mortgagee, he filed a suit: held that the mortgagee would not be debarred from obtaining a decree with costs—Sitaramayya v. Venkataramanna, 11 Mad. 371. See this subject discussed in Note 504 under sec. 83.

405. Instalment mortgage-bond:—In the absence of an express stipulation, a mortgagee is not bound to receive payment by instalments—Behari v. Ram Gholam, 24 All. 461.

Where the amount is stipulated as payable in instalments, and the mortgagor personally covenants to pay each instalment as it falls due, the mortgagee is clearly entitled to sue him for the recovery of each instalment remaining unpaid by sale of the mortgaged property and personally from the mortgagor. This right is not curtailed by the fact that there is a further provision in the mortgage-deed entitling the mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged property if at the end of the date fixed for the last instalment the debt remains wholly unsatisfied—Ramayya v. Venkatarama, 13 M.L.J. 2.

If the mortgagee has accepted irregular payments of instalments without objection, he must be taken to have waived his right to enforce the payment of the whole amount, which he had an option to enforce under the deed—Sakhawat v. Gajadhar, 28 All. 622.

405A. Security bond:—The relationship between a decree-holder and a judgment-debtor who has executed a security bond under sec. 545, cl. (c) (now O.41, r. 5), C. P. C., mortgaging certain properties for the due performance of the decree or order that may ultimately be passed by the appellate Court, is not that of mortgagee and mortgagor and in the event of the appeal being dismissed, the decree-holder is entitled to realize his decretal money by the sale of the properties given in security without instituting a suit under this section—Shyant Sundar v. Bajpai, 30 Cal. 1060 ;

Jyoti Prakash v. Mukti Prakash, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 485, 51 Cal. 150, 81 I.C. 734. A security bond executed by a judgment-debtor for the purpose of removing an attachment before judgment can also be enforced in the course of execution and a suit under this section is not necessary—Rajendra v. Bipin, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 64, 37 C.W.N. 973, 60 Cal. 1298. So, where a money-decree is ordered to be paid by instalments on the judgment-debtor executing a security bond hypothecating immoveable property for the satisfaction of the decree and default is committed in payment of the instalments, the hypothecated property can be sold in execution of the decree and a fresh suit is not necessary—Narottam v. Krishna Prasad, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 289 (291), 15 Pat. 545, 162 I.C. 830.

406. Money-decree—Execution against mortgaged property :—A mortgagee can obtain a simple money-decree on his mortgage; but he cannot by virtue of sec. 99 (now O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the C. P. Code) bring the mortgaged property to sale except by instituting a suit under this section—Ram Keshab v. Sonatan, 2 C.W.N. 320; Madho Prasad v. Baij Nath, 2 A.L.J. 356; Shib Das v. Kali Kumar, 30 Cal. 463; Babu Lal Sahu v. Ram Parshad, 7 O.C. 314; Ram Prashad v. Ram Prashad, 4 O.C. 231; Kaveri v. Ananthayya, 10 Mad. 129. In this respect the law before and after the passing of the C. P. Code (1908) is the same.

But if the mortgagee obtains a money-decree on a claim not arising under the mortgage, can the mortgagee bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree, without instituting a regular suit under this section? In this respect the law has undergone a change after the passing of the C. P. Code of 1908 and the re-enactment of sec. 99 of the T. P. Act as O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the Code. Under the previous law, a mortgaged property could not be sold in execution of such a decree (though it could be attached) except by instituting a suit under this section—Jadub Lal v. Madhab Lal, 21 Cal. 34; Chundra Nath v. Burroda Shoon-dury, 22 Cal. 813; Durgayya v. Anantha, 14 Mad. 74; Sethuvayyan v. Muthusami, 12 Mad. 325; Kaveri v. Ananthayya, 10 Mad. 129; Azimullah v. Naimunnessa, 16 All. 415. But now as sec. 99 has undergone certain amendments in O. XXXIV, r. 14, the above prohibition will no longer attach to the procedure, and there will be no longer any impediment in the way of the mortgagee bringing the mortgaged property to sale in execution of a decree obtained otherwise than under his mortgage. (See this subject fully discussed under O. XXXIV, r. 14 in the Appendix.)

407. Decree creating charge on property—Execution against the property :—Where a decree creates a charge on a property, the property cannot be sold solely in pursuance of that decree. It will be necessary to bring a fresh suit for sale under this section before the property can be brought to sale—Rameshar v. Subbakaran, 8 A.L.J. 418. Where a consent decree orders payment of the decretal amount by instalments and creates a charge on the estate of the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor is precluded from selling the properties in execution proceedings. He is bound to file a fresh suit under this section for bringing the properties to sale—Aubhoyessury v. Gouri Sunkur, 22 Cal. 859. When a charge is created by a decree for maintenance, the enforcement of the same can only be effected by instituting a suit under this section—Matanguni v. Chooneymoney, 22 Cal. 903. Where a suit for sale upon a mortgage instituted under this section is compromised and a simple money-decree is passed, the decretal amount being made a charge upon the property, held that sec. 99 (O. 34, r. 14) will prevent the property from being brought to sale in execution of such a decree, but the mortgagee must institute a second suit upon his decree under this section—Hem Ban v. Behari Gir, 28 All. 58.

407A. Different kinds of mortgages :—It is the intention of the parties which determines the nature of a mortgage. The incidents of mortgages of various kinds which are laid down in this section are the normal incidents that may be deemed to be included in the intentions of the parties where there is no indication to the contrary. The Amending Act of 1929 did not import any new principle—Bishan Das v. Nand Ram, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 48, 161 I.C. 155.

408. Clause (a) Rights of simple mortgagee :—In a simple mortgage, there being no transfer of ownership, the simple mortgagee can bring the mortgaged property to sale only through Court—Papamma v. Vira Pratapa, 19 Mad. 249 (252) (P.C.). He cannot sue to obtain possession of the property; he can only sue for sale. If the Court erroneously gives him possession, that possession does not amount to foreclosure, and the mortgagor can subsequently redeem the mortgage—Ibid (at pp. 252, 253).

Under this section a simple mortgagee is entitled to institute a suit for sale subject only to the conditions prescribed therein. Such a suit is not barred by res judicata by reason of a decree for sale passed on the same mortgage in a previous suit. The same principle applies to a charge under sec. 100—Ammenumma v. Chelampiriyarath, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 32. If in a suit to enforce a simple mortgage a receiver is appointed to collect rents and profits of the mortgaged property and the rents collected are deposited to the credit of the suit the mortgagee decree holder cannot claim any right over such deposit unless there is an order of appropriation towards the mortgage debt and a crown debt on account of income tax due from the mortgagor is to be paid out of such deposit in preference to the claim of the mortgagee—Collector of Tiruchirapalli v. Trinity Bank Ltd., A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 59 (F.B.)

The mortgagee is entitled to bring the mortgaged properties to sale in any order he chooses. The Court cannot scrutinize his motives—Subba Rao v. Lakshminarayana, 22 L.W. 389, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1214, 92 I.C. 593.

Where in a simple mortgage it was provided that if the mortgagor failed to pay the interest in any year (the interest being payable annually) or any instalment of principal (in case of an instalment mortgage-bond), the mortgagee would be entitled to take possession of the property, held that the mortgagee would be able either to bring a suit for sale or to sue for possession, on default of payment by the mortgagor; his remedy was not limited to a suit for possession—See Lingam Krishna v. Sri Mirza, 21 M.L.J. 1147 (P.C.), 15 C.W.N. 441 and other cases cited in Note 336 under sec. 58.

A mortgagee's suit for sale may comprise two reliefs, one by way of sale of the properties mortgaged and the other by way of a personal decree, against the mortgagor for what may remain due after the mortgaged properties have been sold—Palaniappa v. Narayanan, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 34 (37) (F.B.), 59 Mad. 188, 160 I.C. 270.

Where the mortgagee in his suit on the mortgage asks for a repayment of the amount due on the mortgage and a sale in default of it and also for such further and other reliefs as the Court might think fit and the suit for sale is dismissed, the Court has power to make order of repayment under sec. 65 of the Contract Act—Nisar Ahmad v. Mohan Manucha, 67 I.A. 431, A.I.R. 1940 O.L.R. 714, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 204 (207) I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 419. In the circumstance of the case 8 per cent. compound interest on the mortgage-loan with half-yearly rests was held not to be unreasonable—Ibid.

As regards a mortgage-suit for sale, the rights of the second mortgagees are very limited. He has his rights to redeem the prior mortgagee or to receive his mortgage-money out of the surplus sale-proceeds after satisfaction of the prior mortgage, treating the suit as one for his benefit. But he cannot ask for a sale of the property, if the prior mortgagee's claim is satisfied before the sale, nor can he ask for the sale of some other property included in his own mortgage, and for either of these purposes he might bring a separate suit for sale on his own mortgage—Wan Taik v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 26 (29), 155 I.C. 954. At a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree the interests of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee pass to purchasers—Ma Kin v. R. C. Dey, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 183, 4 Rang. 96, 97 I.C. 243. Where in the suit on the prior mortgage the subsequent mortgagee was not made a party and vice versa, in a contest between the two auction purchasers in execution of the two mortgage-decrees, the first purchaser can retain possession and obtain a decree for perpetual injunction restraining the second purchaser from getting delivery of possession—Bogi Arijisup v. Kannappa, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 266.

Where during the pendency of a suit on a simple mortgage one of the mortgagors dies and no legal representative of the deceased mortgagor is brought on the record by the mortgagee within the period of limitation, the whole suit does not abate, though it may have abated against the deceased mortgagor. The mortgagee is entitled to a decree for sale of the remaining mortgaged property (i.e., excluding the deceased mortgagor's share), and is entitled to sell the same to recover a proportionate amount of the mortgage-money—Haibat v. Tara Chand, A.I.R. 1931 All. 235 (236), 132 I.C. 31.

Certain property of an idol was mortgaged by its mutwali. The property was ordered to be sold in execution of a mortgage-decree against the idol, and in order to save it from sale the mutwali borrowed a sum of money from the plaintiff and executed a mortgage-deed in his favour in respect of the property along with his brother and nephew in their personal capacities and as owners of the property : held that the property belonging to the idol could not be sold in a suit on the mortgage as it was not binding on the idol—Thakurdwara v. Man Mohan, I.L.R. 1939 All. 24, A.I.R. 1939 All. 141 (151, 153), 1939 A.L.J. 1199.

Limitation:—The period of limitation for a suit on a simple mortgage is, under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act, 1908, twelve years from the date when the mortgage-money becomes due. Where an earlier mortgage is kept alive by a subsequent mortgage which is stated to be subject to the earlier mortgage, limitation runs from the due date of the subsequent mortgage—Singheshwar v. Medni Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 65, 187 I.C. 339.

Appointment of Receiver:—The Patna High Court has held that a simple mortgagee has merely the right to sue upon the personal covenant or to bring the mortgaged property to sale; he cannot satisfy his claim out of the rents and profits of the property; he has no right to possession and no right to apply for the appointment of a Receiver—Nrisingha v. Rajniti, 13 P.L.T. 525, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 360 (362). The same view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Swarup v. Anandi Lal, 58 All. 949 F.B., 1916 A.L.J. 605, A.I.R. 1936 All. 495 (F.B.). But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that though a mortgagee under a simple mortgage is not entitled to possession, still he may invite the Court to appoint a Receiver, if the demands of justice require that the mortgagor should be deprived of possession—Rameshwar v. Chuni Lal, 47 Cal. 418 (424); Ram Kumar v. Chartered Bank, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 664 (666), 41 C.L.J. 203, 87 I.C. 357. The same view has been taken by the Bombay Court in Damodar v. Radhabai, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 82, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 54, 40 Bom.L.R. 1266 where it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver in the case of a simple mortgage whether before or after a preliminary decree. See also Gobind Singh v. Punjab National Bank, 16 Lah. 366, 37 P.L.R. 529, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 17. Where a mortgage-bond provides that on breach of its covenants a Receiver would be appointed, in a suit on the bond if it is established prima facie that some covenants have been broken, a Receiver should be appointed in the absence of circumstances showing that such a course would not be "convenient"—Badin v. Upendra, 39 C.W.N. 155. In a mortgage-suit when interest is in arrear the Court will normally appoint a Receiver as, of course, whether or not the property appears to be of sufficient value to cover the mortgage-debt and interest, and whether or not the right of the mortgagee to obtain a personal decree subsists or has been lost—Ally Ramzan v. Balthazar & Sons, Ltd., A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 290 (292), 14 Rang. 292, 163 I.C. 850. A Full Court of the Rangoon High Court has held that the Court has jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver in a simple mortgage-suit.—Ma Hnin Yeik v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 321 (F.B.), 1939 R.L.R. 403, 183 I.C. 728. If the mortgagee is a mortgagee by conditional sale and he obtains a decree for foreclosure, a Receiver cannot be appointed at his instance. But if it is a simple mortgage and the decree is one for sale, and it is established that the security is not sufficient to satisfy the judgment-debt, a Receiver will be appointed as a matter of course, specially if there had been a default in the payment of interest. See Rameshwar v. Chuni Lal, supra; Khubsurat v. Saroda, 14 C.L.J. 526, 12 I.C. 165. The Madras High Court was previously opposed to the appointment of a Receiver—Venkata Rajagopala v. Basivi Reddy, 1914 M.W.N. 771, 26 I.C. 986; but in a recent case it has expressed the opinion that where a mortgagor is personally bound to pay the debt as in a simple mortgage, and either he has defaulted to pay the interest while enjoying the property or the property has diminished in value so as not to be sufficient to satisfy the whole debt, the mortgagee may in a suit on the mortgage obtain a Receiver for the taking of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property and paying them into Court for the benefit of the mortgagee. The same would be the case if the mortgagor is damaging or wasting or not taking proper care of the property. A simple mortgagee is not disentitled to obtain the appointment of a Receiver, if other circumstances are such as to justify it, merely on the ground that no personal remedy subsists to proceed against the other properties of the mortgagor. The appointment of a Receiver is only a mode of execution to be used with caution and sound judicial discretion—Paramasivan v. Ramasami, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 570 (575, 576) (F.B.), 56 Mad. 915; Subramanian v. Ethirajulu, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 325, (1938) M.L.J. 249.

A Receiver appointed for the benefit of the mortgagee and at his instance, cannot be removed by the Insolvency Court, the insolvent not having the present right to remove him. It is, however, to the interest of the mortgagee decree-holder to make the Receiver in Insolvency a party to the pending proceedings, it is also required of the Receiver in Insolvency to have himself added as a party to the same, as the person in whom the equity of redemption has vested by operation of law—Nrishingha v. Deb Prosanno, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 460, 62 Cal. 483, 39 C.W.N. 384.

It is the necessary concomitant of the office of a Receiver that he should be able to lease the property and that if he is obstructed by the mortgagor he can seek the aid of the Court. Where in a previous application the Court did not see fit to eject the mortgagor from possession, the mortgagee could not be held to be estopped by the principle of constructive res judicata from again applying to the Court for that relief—Subramanyam v. Ethirajulu, supra. at p. 426.

A preliminary decree was passed in a suit ordering the sale of the premises by public auction or by a private sale by the Receiver in the mortgage-suit. The Receiver made an application to the Court for a direction as to whether he was bound to insure the mortgaged property with P. company as provided in cl. (3) of the mortgage-deed: held that cl. (3) was still a part of the contract which P. company could resort to when they so chose at the end of any particular period of insurance. The order appointing the Receiver only meant that the property was in the custody of the Court and the parties were still governed by the contract—Galstain v. Prudential Assurance Co., A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 366, 54 C.L.J. 566, 137 I.C. 523.

The Court will not appoint a Receiver in execution of a mortgage-decree unless the circumstances are such as to make the sale of the properties a matter of serious difficulty—In re Renula Bose, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 93 (96), 42 C.W.N. 266, 175 I.C. 908.

409. Rights of usufructuary mortgagee:—The primary feature of a usufructuary mortgage is the possession of the property by the mortgagee with the right to retain the usufruct. Where a mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money, the mortgage cannot fail within the definition of usufructuary mortgage—Bishan Das v. Nandram, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 48 (50; 51), 161 I.C. 155. A pure usufructuary mortgagee can sue neither for foreclosure nor for sale, since his contract is to realise his money out of the usufruct of the property—Subbamma v. Narayya, 41

Mad. 259 (263) (F.B.) ; Subbaraya v. Subramanyam, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 856. Sec. 68 only confers a right on the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money in case the mortgagor fails to deliver possession of the property or where a superior title is claimed by any person—ibid. As there is no covenant or agreement for payment in a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee cannot compel payment of the mortgage-money by a suit for sale—Chathu v. Kunjan, 12 Mad. 109 (110) ; Luchmeswar v. Dookh Mochan, 24 Cal. 677 (681). The principle underlying the statutory prohibition of sale by a usufructuary mortgagee is that the mortgagee looks to the rents and profits for satisfaction of his advance, and in as much as no time is fixed for payment, there is no forfeiture. It is the forfeiture that gives rise to the remedies of foreclosure and sale and in its absence the mortgagee is not entitled to the remedies that spring out of it—Mohan Devi v. Talib Mehdi, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 145 (146). [In the old clause (a) it was provided that a usufructuary mortgagee was not entitled to bring a suit for "foreclosure or sale" ; and in an early Madras case, these words were interpreted to mean that this clause prohibited a usufructuary mortgagee from bringing a suit in which he prayed alternatively for a decree for foreclosure or for sale ; but that there was nothing to prevent him from bringing a suit for foreclosure or from bringing a suit for sale—Venkatasami v. Subramanya, 11 Mad. 88 (90). The language of the present clause is perfectly clear and does not admit of such ingenious interpretation.] It has recently been held by the Patna High Court, however, that it is not a proper construction of this section to say that a usufructuary mortgagee is excluded entirely from the operation of the section—Raikumar v. Surajdeo, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 585, 19 P.L.T. 787, 177 I.C. 533.

But where the mortgagor makes a personal covenant to pay the money on a certain date, the transaction ceases to be a purely usufructuary mortgage, and becomes what is known as simple mortgage usufructuary, i.e., a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to bring a suit for sale—Ramayya v. Guruva, 14 Mad. 232 (234) ; Sivakami v. Gopala, 17 Mad. 131 (133) (F.B.) ; Chathu v. Kunjan, 12 Mad. 109 (112) ; Udayana v. Senthivela, 19 Mad. 411 ; Kangayya v. Kalimuthu, 27 Mad. 526 (527) (F.B.) ; Rangappa v. Thammayappa, 26 M.L.J. 514, 24 I.C. 372 ; Mahadaji v. Joti, 17 Bom. 425 ; Umda v. Umra Begum, 11 All. 367 ; Jafar Hussain v. Ranjit Singh, 21 All. 4 (8) ; Parashram v. Putlajirao, 34 Bom. 132 (135) ; Dattambhat v. Krishnabhat, 34 Bom. 462 (466) ; Jag Sahu v. Ram Sakhi, 1 Pat. 350 (355), A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 167 ; Sardar Singh v. Collector, 10 O.C. 14 ; Ram Khilawan v. Ghulam, 8 Luck. 190, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 35 (36), 141 I.C. 464 ; Pargan Panday v. Mahatam Mahto, 6 C.L.J. 143 ; Fida Ali v. Ismailji, 6 N.L.R. 20, 5 I.C. 701 ; Bhabani v. Kadambini, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 304, 33 C.W.N. 279, 119 I.C. 292 ; Ramachandra v. Sarvajanavardhini Co., A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 125 ; Ramakammal v. Sabbarathnam, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 13. In Kashi Ram v. Sardar Singh, 28 All. 157 and Krishna v. Hari, 10 Bom. L.R. 615, it has, however, been held that in order to entitle a usufructuary mortgagee to sue for sale of the property, there must be not only a personal covenant to pay the money but also express stipulation in the deed entitling the mortgagee to recover the money by sale of the property. This proposition has been re-affirmed in the recent Full Bench case of Kanhaiya v. Mt. Hamidan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 418, 176 I.C. 492. If the terms do not provide for sale, a suit for sale is not maintainable. See also Lal Narsingh v. Yakub, 4 Luck. 363 (P.C.), 56 I.A. 299, 33 C.W.N. 693, commented on in Note 415 under sec. 68.

Where in a usufructuary mortgage there is no stipulation for recovery of the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged property, and the mortgagee was merely given the right to sue for his money in certain circumstances, the mortgagee can get a simple money decree only and not a decree for sale—Ram Lal v. Mt. Genda, A.I.R. 1942 All. 326, 1942 A.L.J. 411. Where a usufructuary mortgagee leases back the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, gets a decree for rent against him and thereafter sues him on a covenant of repayment, the mortgagee can get a money decree only after deducting the amount of the rent-decree—ibid. If a usufructuary mortgage contains a covenant to pay on a certain date, coupled with a further stipulation that "if the money be not paid by the executant in due time, then this bond will remain in force and intact (i.e., the mortgagee will continue in possession) till the repayment of the money, with all conditions set forth herein," held that this stipulation did not amount to an absolute covenant to repay; consequently, the mortgagee was not entitled to sue for sale, upon the mortgagor's failure to pay on the date fixed—Kamal Nayan v. Ram Nayan, 11 P.L.T. 74, 120 I.C. 308, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 152; Damodar v. Chandapur Pujari, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 613, 56 Mad. 892. A mere insertion of a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt on demand would not alter the character of the mortgage and give the mortgagee a right to sell the mortgaged property in the event of non-payment. The test in such cases is the remedy provided in the deed for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt—Md. Abdullah v. Md. Iasin, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 151, 141 I.C. 377. It has been held in Peshwar that where the mortgagee was to remain in possession of the mortgaged property for a fixed period only, it necessarily implies a personal covenant—Saifulla v. Chaman Lal, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 43, 160 I.C. 986.

The right of the puisne usufructuary mortgagee unaffected by the auction sale in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree (he not being impleaded in that suit) is determined by the date of such suit and not by the date of sale. Where the prior mortgagee is not impleaded in the puisne mortgagee's suit and the latter purchases the mortgaged property in execution of his decree, the priority of the right to redeem is in the prior mortgagee—Sheikh Bikala v. Sheik Ali, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 210, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 486.

In a Madras Full Bench case it was held that a usufructuary mortgagee was entitled to sue for sale of the property mortgaged to him, when the mortgagor failed to deliver possession of the said property to him—Subbamma v. Narayya, 41 Mad. 359 (F.B.) (overruling Samayya v. Nagalingam, 15 Mad. 274 and Arunachalam v. Ayyavayan, 21 Mad. 476). (See also Ram Khelwan v. Ghulam Husain, 8 Luck. 190, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 35, 141 I.C. 464). The reason for the above decision was that a mortgagee could not be called a usufructuary mortgagee if the mortgagor had not given him possession of the mortgaged property so as to enable him to realise his security out of the rents and profits; and consequently proviso (a) of this section did not apply and he could sue for sale or foreclosure—Ibid. But this decision is no longer good law by reason of the addition of the words "or expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession" in clause (d) of sec. 58. The effect of this amendment is that a usufructuary mortgagee, notwithstanding that possession has not been given to him, does not cease to be a usufructuary mortgagee. See Note 342 under sec. 58. A usufructuary mortgagee who has been dispossessed of the mortgaged property has no remedy either by foreclosure or by sale, but his remedy is confined only to a money-decree against the mortgagor (under sec. 68)—Lazarannessa v. Mahomed Jafar, 13 I.C. 336 (Cal.); Aghore Nath v. Natabar, 41 I.C. 406 (Cal.); if, however, the usufructuary mortgage-deed expressly provides that upon failure to get possession, the mortgagee should be entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged property, then of course, the Court will grant a decree for sale of the property, if the mortgagee is dispossessed—Bhabani Charan v. Kadambini, 33 C.W.N. 279 (280), 119 I.C. 292, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 304; Narpat v. Ram Saran, 30 All. 162.

If a usufructuary mortgagee retains his right to sue on his previous simple mortgage he does so in accordance with the rule of limitation applicable to that bond. He does not get a fresh right to sue from the date of the usufructuary bond or from his date of dispossession after that—Mt. Anpurna v. Ram, A.I.R. 1927 All. 417, 49 All. 430, 100 I.C. 670.

410. Rights of mortgagee by conditional sale :—In a mortgage by conditional sale the mortgagor's interest in the mortgaged property passes at the date of the mortgage and is lost on failure to pay on the due date. But the law steps in and allows a further period of grace. In such a case the mortgagee is to take steps to perfect his title to the mortgaged property by instituting a suit for foreclosure—Dau Baluwantsingh v. Mt. Bindabai, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 88, I.L.R. 1942 Nag. 357.

Where the mortgage is by conditional sale, the only decree that can be made is for foreclosure—Venkatasami v. Subramanya, 11 Mad. 88 (89); Kalika v. Ajudhia, 51 All. 780, 1929 A.L.J. 448, A.I.R. 1929 All. 421 (428), 121 I.C. 211; Kunwarlal v. Rekhlal, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 83, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 321. In the case of a mortgage by conditional sale the right conferred on the mortgagee is not to sue for money but to take steps to perfect his title to the property—Dau Balwant Singh v. Mt. Bindabai, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 88 (90); I.L.R. 1942 Nag. 357, 1942 N.L.J. 303, 200 I.C. 709. In such a mortgage a mere promise to pay the money within a certain fixed period does not per se import a personal liability, for such a covenant is entered into in every form of mortgage, and the test in each case is the remedy provided in the deed for satisfaction of the mortgage-debt—Bhikam Lal v. Janak Dulari, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 517 (519), 171 I.C. 296.

In the case of a lahangahan mortgage the Court can, however, pass a decree either for sale or for foreclosure. High rate of interest is one of the grounds on which the Court can exercise its discretion in favour of allowing a sale in place of foreclosure—Sitaram v. Krishnarao, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 156, 1940 N.L.J. 179, 190 I.C. 641 following Haji Mohammad v. Ramappa, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 254 (F.B.), 119 I.C. 684.

Where a mortgagee was in possession and liable for the rent of the mortgaged property for a certain period, in a suit upon the mortgage the purchaser of the mortgaged property was not entitled to claim a set off in respect of the amount due as rent, though it could have been claimed by the mortgagor—Gulab Chand v. Ram Kumar, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 296, 22 P.L.T. 230, 193 I.C. 533.

A mortgagee of intangible property is entitled to foreclose the mortgage quite as much as a mortgagee of chattels—Mahamaya v. Haridas, 42 Cal. 455.

410A. Anomalous mortgage :—The remedy of foreclosure is not exclusive to a mortgage by conditional sale. It is equally applicable to an anomalous mortgage Ujagar Lal v. Lokendra Singh, A.I.R. 1941 All. 169, 1941 A.L.J. 111.

411. English mortgage :—A decree for sale may be made in favour of the mortgagee when the mortgage is an English mortgage—Askaran v. Gobordhan, 26 C.W.N. 318, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 52, 70 I.C. 158. Under the old section the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for foreclosure. This remedy has now been taken away. But English mortgages executed prior to 1st April, 1930 are outside the scope of the amendment made by substitution of the new cl. (a) in this section—Saradindu v. Jahar Lal, 46 C.W.N. 33 (41), 74 C.L.J. 61, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 153. Consequently a suit to enforce such a mortgage is governed by Art. 147 of the Limitation Act—Ibid.

Where in a suit to enforce an English mortgage the mortgagor makes default in paying the mortgage dues on the date fixed for redemption by the preliminary decree for foreclosure, the rents collected by the mortgagor or the Receiver after the date of default will go to the mortgagee—Imperial Bank, Petitioner in Prudential Assurance Co. v. Galstam, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 197, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 429, 191 I.C. 559.

The Receiver in a mortgage-suit holds the property for the person who can eventually make out title thereto. His appointment prima facie is for the benefit of the mortgagee. When a decree for foreclosure is passed and any money in the hands of the Receiver representing the rents of the mortgaged property would belong to the mortgagee—Ibid.

411A. Equitable mortgage :—Clause (a) now provides that the remedy of a mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds is to bring a suit for sale and not for foreclosure. See also Sreenath v. Gadadhar, 24 Cal. 348; Oo Nong v. Maung, 13 Cal. 322 (326); Badiar Rahman v. Chetty Firm, 8 L.B.R. 450, 35 I.C. 288; see also Marcar v. Sigg, 2 Mad. 239 (255) (P.C.). In Bombay, a decree for foreclosure was allowed—Manekji v. Rustomji, 14 Bom. 269. But this is no longer good law. An equitable mortgage stands on the same footing as a simple mortgage. Cf. sec. 96.

Appointment of a Receiver :—A mortgage by deposit of title-deeds has all the incidents of a simple mortgage including that of the appointment of a Receiver—Chettyar Firm v. Vyaravan, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 400, 164 I.C. 751; Nrisingha v. Rajniti, 13 P.L.T. 525, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 360 (362); Venkata Kumara v. Gokuldoss, 54 Mad. 565, 133 I.C. 504, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 626. A Receiver may be appointed on an interlocutory application but it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that interest is in fact in arrear—V. M. R. P. Firm v. Nagoor Ganny, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 399 (400); Venkanna v. Mangammal, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 296, 163 I.C. 856. Where in a suit on a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds a Receiver is appointed at the instance of the mortgagee, the latter is entitled, in the event of his suit being decreed, to the rents and profits in the hands of the Receiver.—Ally Ramzan v. Balthazar & Son, Ltd., A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 290 (291), 14 Rang. 292, 163 I.C. 850. See also Chettyar Firm v. Vyaravan Chettyar, supra. For other cases see Note 408, ante. Where a Receiver has been appointed at the instance of a holder of a money-decree in execution of the decree against certain mortgaged property of the judgment-debtor, and the same person has also been appointed to act as Receiver in a suit instituted by the equitable mortgagee to enforce his mortgage against the judgment-debtor, then if the mortgaged properties are insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt, the equitable mortgagee has preferential rights as against the holder of the money-decree in respect of profits of the mortgaged property in the hands of the Receiver. The fact, whether the mortgaged property is insufficient to discharge the mortgage-debt, must however, be ascertained with certainty before any order for payment out is made—Khader Mohideen v. Nagu Bas, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 496, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 402 (404), (1939) 1 M.L.J. 730.

412. Clause (c) :—No foreclosure or sale in respect of mortgage of railway, etc. :—The exemption in this clause is founded on a consideration of the inconvenience which would be caused to the public by the sale or foreclosure of a work constructed and maintained for the convenience of the public—Furness v. Caterham Ry. Co., 25 Beav. 614.

The remedy of the mortgagee in these cases would be to have a Receiver appointed. See Select Committee's Report, 2nd Feb. 1878, para 25.

413. Clause (d)—No foreclosure or sale as to portion of mortgaged property :—This clause, like para. 5 of sec. 60, is an illustration of the rule of indivisibility of mortgage. It is an established principle that the whole of the mortgaged property is liable for any and every portion of the mortgage-debt, however small—Arunachalam v. Ramasamy, 30 L.W. 723, 112 I.C. 501, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 933 (935). One of the mortgagees cannot maintain the suit without impleading his co-mortgagees either as plaintiffs, or, where they refuse, as defendants—Rameshwar v. Ganga Bux, A.I.R. 1950 All. 598 (F.B.), 1950 A.L.J. 632. In the absence of a covenant in the mortgage-deed for payment of separate amounts or fractions of the mortgage-money to the mortgagees separately, a suit by one of several co-mortgagees for his share of the mortgage-money is not maintainable—Ramchandra v. Sivarama, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 895 (897), 44 M.L.W. 502. The mere fact that a portion of the mortgaged property happens to be excluded from the mortgage security by operation of law cannot affect the mortgagee's right to enforce his whole charge against the rest—Daulatram v. Panna, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 79, 172 I.C. 565 ; Mati Lal v. Bejoy Lal, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 455, I.L.R. (1943) 1 Cal. 59 ; Seth Bansiram v. Naga Ayyar, infra and Kailasa v. Sundaram, infra. This section does not, however, prohibit a person interested in part only of the mortgage-money from instituting a suit to recover his share of the mortgage-money, provided he frames his suit in such a way as to relate to the whole of the mortgaged property and not to a corresponding part of the property. All that this section prohibits is his bringing a suit relating only to a part of the mortgaged property. If he frames his suit (for recovery of his share of the mortgage-money) praying his relief for foreclosure or sale so as to operate upon the whole of the property, the obstacle of this section disappears. A person interested in part of the mortgage-money may sue for the whole of the mortgage-money or for his portion of the money, but he must take care to see that he proceeds against the whole of the mortgaged property—Seth Bansiram v. Naga Ayyar, 59 M.L.J. 928, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 985, 129 I.C. 45; Kailasa Ayyar v. Sundaram Pattar, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 205 (207), (1941) 2 M.L.J. 986, 1941 M.W.N. 1055. In the case of purchase by one co-mortgagee, without the consent of the other co-mortgagees, of the equity of redemption, the former for the purpose of recovering his share of the mortgage money can bring the entire mortgaged property to sale and not merely his proportionate part of the mortgaged property—Sadasiv v. Govind, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 351, I.L.R. 1945 Bom. 390. A co-mortgagee suing to recover his individual share of the mortgage must ask the Court to decide what is due on the mortgage as a whole and to fix a period of redemption of the mortgaged property in its entirety. He must ask for a preliminary decree in respect of the entire debt. There can be no redemption in part. Therefore the plaintiff cannot get his share until the mortgagor has paid into Court what he owes on the mortgage or the mortgaged properties have been sold—Ibid. As to the Court-fee to be paid by the plaintiff in such a case, see this case.—Mati Lal v. Bara Buri, 46 C.W.N. 1015, per Mitter and Biswas, JJ. In this case their Lordships have laid down what is to be stated in the preliminary and final decrees as well as the procedure to be followed in sale of the mortgaged properties, and the provision for a personal decree under O. 34, r. 6 of the C. P. Code. After sale the purchaser will get the property free from the mortgage and the rights of the co-mortgagees defendants would necessarily be transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds—Ibid.

By enacting this rule, the Legislature has intended to protect the mortgagor from being harassed by a multiplicity of suits where the severance of the interests of the mortgagees has taken place without the consent of the mortgagor—Vijayabhushanammal v. Evalappa, 39 Mad. 17 (20). But there is nothing to prevent a sole mortgagee from foreclosing the mortgage as a whole by proceeding against a part only of the mortgaged property, and abandoning the remainder of his security—Sheo Tahal v. Sheo Dam, 28 All. 173 (F.B.). So also, it is competent for a sole mortgagee to abandon a part of his security and sue for the sale of the remainder—Sheo Prasad v. Behari Lal, 25 All. 79. Where portions of the mortgaged property have, subsequently to the mortgage, passed to different owners, the mortgagee, provided that he himself has not been a party to the destroying of the integrity of the mortgage, is entitled to realise his whole debt from any portion of the mortgaged property—Sati Suraj Mal v. Than Singh, 41 All. 146 (150), 19 A.L.J. 917.

So also, a purchaser of the mortgage-right of one of the joint mortgagees cannot bring a suit for sale of a portion of the mortgaged property in respect of his share of the mortgage-debt—Parshotum v. Mulu, 9 All. 68; Laljee v. Jangjal, 1887 A.W.N. 233.

Severance of interest provided by this clause is nothing but a special application of the ordinary law of novation, and requires as a pre-requisite the consent of all parties concerned, and unless a co-mortgagee consents to such severance or does some act which under the law effects a severance, the usual rule about the integrity of the mortgage must be observed—Sadasheo v. Roopchand, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 136, 1939 N.L.J. 142, 184 I.C. 719. Omission to reply to a notice does not amount to consent—Ibid. Where there has been a severance of the interests of the mortgagees with the consent of the mortgagor, one of several mortgagees is entitled to enforce by suit the payment of his portion of the mortgage-money—Vijayabhushanammal v. Evalappa, 39 Mad. 17 (19). This section is unhappily worded, because it refers only to severance of the interests of the mortgagees with the consent of the mortgagor. But this principle can be extended. Thus, a mortgage-debt can be said to be severed under this clause where in a suit brought by one of the co-mortgagees for his share of the debt the Court passed a decree for sale to recover his share of the debt, though the mortgagor did not give his consent to the passing of the decree. On the basis of such severance, another co-mortgagee can legally maintain a suit to recover his share of the mortgage-debt—Vijayabhushanammal v. Evalappa, 39 Mad. 17 (20), 25 I.C. 91. Where one of two mortgagees, each having a half share in two simple mortgages, took a usufructuary mortgage of the whole of the mortgaged property from the mortgagors, the consideration being the amount of his share in the two simple mortgages, held that there was a severance of interests, and the other mortgagee was entitled to recover his share of the amount due under the simple mortgages—Jauhari Singh v. Ganga Sahai, 41 All. 631 (634), 17 A.L.J. 731, 51 I.C. 107. See also Narayansao v. Chattibai, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 262 (263, 264), I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 503, 171 I.C. 978 and Mohan Lal v. Prasadi Lal, A.I.R. 1924 All 11, 45 All. 46, 74 I.C. 999. Similarly, where the co-mortgagors made a partition of the mortgaged property by mutual consent and agreed with one another that each would be responsible only for his share and that the portion of the mortgaged property allotted to each should bear that much only of the debt, it would be competent to the mortgagee, should he be so minded, to accept this arrangement as between the co-mortgagors, and validly release each mortgagor on payment of his quota of the debt, and proceed against such of them as might make default for what is due by them according to the arrangement—Venkatashella v. Srinivasa, 28 Mad. 255; Mahadaji v. Ganpatshet, 15 Bom. 257. But the mere acceptance by the mortgagee from one of the mortgagors of payment of his portion of the debt does not sever the mortgage, and the mortgagee cannot be allowed to foreclose the shares of the remaining mortgagors for the remaining portion of the debt—Chandika v. Pohkar, 2 All. 906.

Where a mortgage is split up, by the sale to the mortgagee of the equity of redemption of a portion of the property mortgaged, the mortgagee can foreclose, in respect of the portion not sold to him for a proportionate amount of the mortgage-money—Bisheshar v. Laik Singh, 5 All. 257 (258). But where there are two mortgagees, and the mortgagor has conveyed the property to one of them without the consent of the other mortgagee, held that though the debt due to one mortgagee has been satisfied as the result of the conveyance, still the mortgage has not been split up, and the other mortgagee is entitled to enforce his portion of the debt against the whole of the mortgaged property—Arunachalam v. Ramasamy, 30 L.W. 723, 1928 M.W.N. 518, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 933 (935, 939), 112 I.C. 501.

Where there are two mortgagees, and one of them desires to realise the debt, then if the consent of the co-mortgagee cannot be obtained, he may be added as a defendant, and the mortgage-decree will provide for all the necessary accounts and payments, excepting that there can be no judgment for a sum of money entered as between the co-mortgagee-defendant and the mortgagor—Sunitibala v. Dhara Sundari, 47 Cal. 175 (179, 180) (P.C.), 24 C.W.N. 297, 53 I.C. 131, A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 24, followed in Arunachalam v. Ramasamy, supra. Where a prior mortgagee files a suit impleading the puisne mortgagee and the claim of the prior mortgagee is satisfied by the mortgagor before sale, the puisne mortgagee is entitled to institute a separate suit, because the earlier suit was not for his benefit—Soli Restonji v. Gangadha Khemka, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 100.

67A. A mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages executed by the same mortgagor in respect of each of which he has a right to obtain the same kind of decree under section 67, and who sues to obtain such decree on any one of the mortgages, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be bound to sue on all the mortgages in respect of which the mortgage-money has become due.

Mortgagee when bound to bring one suit on several mortgages.

414. This section has been inserted by sec. 32 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). It compels a mortgagee, who holds several mortgages of different dates executed by the same mortgagor to bring a consolidated suit on all the mortgages at one and the same time. His omission to do so precludes him from filing a second suit—Gadiram v. Punamchand, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 171.

Prior to the enactment of this section, there was a conflict of opinion. Thus, it was held in some cases that a mortgagee holding several mortgages over the same property could not sue on one mortgage to obtain an order for sale of the property subject to the other mortgage—Keshavram v. Ranchhod, 30 Bom. 156 (163); Dorasami v. Venkateshchayyar, 25 Mad. 108 (115). He must either enforce both the securities in one suit, or sue on one giving up his rights under the other. If he sued on the first mortgage without mentioning the existence of the second mortgage, and obtained a decree, he was precluded from enforcing the second mortgage in another suit—Krishnamachaiar v. Annongarachaiar, 30 Mad. 353 (355). But in Sundar Singh v. Bholu, 20 All. 332, Nilu Ray v. Asirbad, 25 C.W.N. 129, 60 I.C. 809, Tabarak Ali v. Dilip Narain 8 P.L.T. 255, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 117 (120), 98 I.C. 968, and Dwarka Nath v. Mritnjoy, 3 I.C. 175 (176) (Cal.), it was held that a holder of two mortgages over the same property who had obtained a decree for sale in a suit on the prior mortgage was not precluded from instituting a fresh suit on the second mortgage, but he could not sell the property twice over nor sell it under the second decree subject to the first. See also Subramania v. Balasubramama, 38 Mad. 927 (939, 940) (F.B.), where it is held that it is open to a mortgagee to bring a suit on a puisne mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property subject to a prior mortgage in his favour, since a mortgagee holding separate mortgages is entitled to treat them as separate causes of action (following Radhakrishna v. Muthusaamy, 31 Mad. 530). In Raghunath v. Jamna Prasad, 29 All. 233, it was held that a mortgagee holding two deeds of mortgage could institute a suit on one mortgage and bring a portion of the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree, and then institute another suit on the other mortgage for sale of the remaining portion of the property. See also Laxmibai v. Kondba, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 226, 159 I.C. 758 (F.B.); Narayan-asami v. Vellayya, 47 Mad. 688; Lasa Din v. Md. Abdul Shakoor, 15 Luck. 399, A.I.R. 1740 Oudh 235, (1940) O.L.R. 127.

To avoid this divergence of views the present section has been enacted.

Where a person executes two mortgages, one after the other, in favour of the same mortgagee then unless there is something in the second deed to show a contrary intention, the creditor must be presumed to have intended to keep the earlier security alive for his own protection, and prima facie this section is applicable in such a case—Dau Kin v. Ko Ba Tin, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 247, 1939 R.L.R. 207, 184 I.C. 284. But if in such a case a suit on both the mortgages cannot be brought in the same Court, this section does not apply—Ibid following Premisuch v. Mangal Chand, 41 C.W.N. 854. Where objection is taken to the suit on the ground that it was on only one of two mortgages held by the plaintiff an amendment of the plaint may be allowed—Prabhulal v. Godawari Bai, A.I.R. 1953 Aj. 50 (2).

Where a mortgagor after mortgaging certain property, mortgages the same property along with some other property in favour of the same mortgagee by way of second mortgage and the property is sold in execution of the second mortgage subject to the decree in the first mortgage, what is sold is the equity of redemption and the mortgagee is not precluded from selling the same property in execution of a decree on the first mortgage—Munna Lal v. Komal Chandra, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 3, 1940 N.L.J. 568. The principle of this section does not apply to the case of a mortgage-loan payable in instalments—Subbayya v. Venkatasubbayya, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 296, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 924, 1939 M.W.N. 1239.

As this section restricts the rights of mortgagees, it must be construed strictly—Corporation of Calcutta v. Arun Chandra, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 862, 61 Cal. 1047, 38 C.W.N. 917, 60 C.L.J. 312. This section does not apply to securities created by operation of law and in particular to statutory charges created by sec. 205 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (Beng. Act III of 1923)—Ibid.

The principle of consolidation applied by this section has no bearing upon the interpretation of sec. 17 of the Court Fees Act. The very basis of sec. 67A is that there is more than one subject; hence where a suit is filed on two mortgages over the same property the suit relates to two subjects and not merely to one subject for the purposes of sec. 17 of the Court Fees Act—Pollachi Town Bank v. Krishna Ayyar, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 262, 68 M.L.J. 316, 156 I.C. 435.

This section has no retrospective effect. It does not apply to mortgages created before the 1st April 1930—V. R. S. Chettiar Firm v. Ya Ya, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 377 (378); Ko Aung v. Ko Po, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 208, 131 I.C. 725; Laxmibai v. Kondba, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 226, 159 I.C. 758 (F.B.); Mt. Fazal v. Hukam Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 1020; Bhau Nana v. Ravappa, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 196, 40 Bom. L.R. 109, 174 I.C. 474; Lasa Din v. Md. Abdul Shakoar, 15 Luck. 399, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 235, (1940) O.L.R. 127; Corporation of Calcutta v. Arun Chandra, 60 Cal. 1470, 38 C.W.N. 153, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 325; Singheshwar v. Medni Parsad, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 65, 187 I.C. 339.

The rule of this section is not applicable where the parties in the two mortgage-deeds are not the same—Ko Aung v. Ko Po, supra; The Bank of Karaikudi v. Karaikudi, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 537. In fact, a mortgagee cannot bring one suit in respect of mortgages of the same property executed by two different persons. Such mortgages can not be joined under Or. 1, r. 3, C. P. Code, as the right to relief arises out of different acts. They cannot even be joined under Or. 1, r. 3, C. P. Code, as the right to relief arises out of different acts. They cannot even be joined under Or. 2, r. 3, as they are not jointly liable on each mortgage—Bhaiyalal v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 99 (100), I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 349, 170 I.C. 106. In this case the property belonged to one B and after his death one mortgage in respect of the property was executed by a person who claimed to be his adopted son and the other mortgage by B's widow.

Upon the strict wording of the section its operation cannot perhaps be confined only to mortgages upon the same property—see Bhau Nana v. Revappa, supra.

If due to the failure of the mortgagor to take the objection at the proper time the mortgagee proceeded in the belief that the objection had been waived, the mortgagor cannot be heard to say that a subsequent suit by the mortgagee on the second mortgage should be dismissed in limine—Moolha Mohonraj Sowcar v. Manicka Goundar, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 467. The section imposes no prohibition against institution of suit on one of the mortgages in a case where no objection to the form of the suit was taken on earlier occasion—Puttamadamma v. Puttappa, A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 20; Har Sharan Lal v. Surajmal Kundanmal, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 426.

68. The mortgagee has a right to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money in the following cases only—

(a) where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the same;

(b) where the mortgagee is deprived of the whole or part

68. (1) The mortgagee has a right to sue for the mortgage-money in the following cases and no others, namely:—

(a) where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the same;

(b) where, by any cause other than the wrongful act or of his security by, or in consequence of, the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor ;

(c) where, the mortgagee being entitled to possession of the property, the mortgagor fails to deliver the same to him, or to secure the possession thereof to him without disturbance by the mortgagor or any other person.

Where, by any cause other than the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor or mortgagee, the mortgaged property has been wholly or partially destroyed or the security is rendered insufficient as defined in section 66, the mortgagee may require the mortgagor to give him, within a reasonable time, another sufficient security for his debt, and, if the mortgagor fails so to do, may sue him for the mortgage-money.

default of the mortgagor or mortgagee, the mortgaged property is wholly or partially destroyed or the security is rendered insufficient within the meaning of section 66, and the mortgagee has given the mortgagor a reasonable opportunity of providing further security enough to render the whole security sufficient, and the mortgagor has failed to do so ;

(c) where the mortgagee is deprived of the whole or part of his security by or in consequence of the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor :

(d) where, the mortgagee being entitled to possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor fails to deliver the same to him, or to secure the possession thereof to him without disturbance by the mortgagor or any person claiming under a title superior to that of the mortgagor :

Provided that, in the case referred to in clause (a), a transferee from the mortgagor or from his legal representative shall not be liable to be sued or the mortgage-money.

(2) Where a suit is brought under clause (a) or clause (b) of sub-section (1), the Court may, at its discretion, stay the suit and all proceedings therein, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, until the mortgagee has exhausted all his available remedies against the mortgaged property or what remains of it, unless the mort- gagee abandons his security and, if necessary, re-transfers the mortgaged property.

Amendment :—This section has been redrafted by sec. 33 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), but the actual changes are very few. The words “the mortgagor” have been omitted; the last para of the old section is now enacted as clause (b) with certain verbal alterations; clauses (c) and (d) of the new section correspond to clauses (b) and (c) of the old section; the italicised words in clause (d), the proviso and sub-section (2) are new. The reasons are stated below in proper places.

415. Scope of section :—The provisions of this section apply only to mortgages, and not to a charge—Fatick Chunder v. Foley, 15 Cal. 492.

The remedy provided by this section is alternative and additional to any to which the mortgagee may be entitled. Thus, if the mortgagor fails to deliver possession to the mortgagee, the latter is not bound to sue under clause (d) of this section but is at liberty to bring a suit for possession—Sankata v. Jagat Narain, 2 O.C. 24. The usufructuary mortgagee, who is entitled to possession but does not get possession, may sue at once for the money under sec. 68 instead of suing for possession—Linga Reddi v. Sama Rau, 17 Mad. 469 (471). If a mortgagee by conditional sale who is entitled to obtain possession fails to get possession of the mortgaged property, he is not obliged to sue at once for the mortgage-money under sec. 68, but it is open to him to sue for foreclosure under sec. 67—Sita Nath v. Thakurdas, 46 Cal. 448 (454). See also sub-section (2).

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has laid down that the words “sue for the mortgage-money” mean and include a suit for foreclosure or sale under sec. 67. When the mortgagee has become entitled to sue for the mortgage-money under any clause of sec. 68, it means that the mortgage-money has become “payable”; and consequently there can be no reason for refusing to give effect to sec. 67 which allows of a suit for foreclosure or sale at any time after the mortgage-money has become payable—Subbamma v. Narayana, 41 Mad. 259 (264) (F.B.). But this proposition does not apply to a usufructuary mortgage. See this case under Note 409 in sec. 67. But if the mortgage is a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage, and the mortgagor fails to deliver possession to the mortgagee, the latter can sue for the money under sec. 68, i.e., the money becomes payable; and if the money becomes payable, a decree for sale can be made under sec. 67—Lal Narsingh v. Yakub, 4 Luck. 363 (P.C.), 33 C.W.N. 693 (699), 116 I.C. 414, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 139; following in Ram Khilawan v. Ghulam, 8 Luck. 1190, 141 I.C. 464, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 35 (36). But it is submitted that under the new clause (g) of sec. 58, such a mortgage would be treated as an anomalous mortgage, and the rights and liabilities of the parties would be determined by the terms of the mortgage (sec. 98). This section does not apply to a case of combination of three mortgages—usufructuary, simple and mortgage by conditional sale—Ramsarup v. Gaya Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 178, 139 I.C. 61. Thus, where according to one clause of the mortgage-deed the mortgagor had power to repay the mortgage-money during the period of five years following the execution of the deed and according to another clause the mortgagees had the right to recall the mortgage-money and to sue for foreclosure only in the event of the mortgagor's default in redeeming the mortgage on the expiry of five years: held that the combined effect of the two clauses was that the mortgagor had neither the right to repay the mortgage-money nor to redeem the mortgaged property and the mortgagees had no right to call the mortgage-money and to sue for foreclosure before the expiry of the five years—Ibid.

Section 68 applies only where the claim is based on a valid mortgage—Bhikhan Lal v. Janak Dulari, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 517, 171 I.C. 296; Jowand v. Sawan, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 836.

A mortgage-bond contained the following terms: "As we have received Rs. 500, you will, in lieu of the said amount and interest, enjoy the said property for three years, and we have executed this Arakattu otti on condition that on the expiry of the said three years, we should redeem the land without paying either principal or interest. You will, on the expiry of the said three years, deliver possession of the said property without raising any objection." The mortgagee obtained possession of only a part of the land, and when the mortgagor sued to recover possession on the expiry of three years, the mortgagee claimed that as possession of the whole property had not been delivered he was entitled to get back the money under clause (c) of this section before the mortgagor could redeem. Held that sec. 68 did not apply. The only right the mortgagee had was to recover damages for the breach of the contract by the mortgagor, in not delivering possession of the whole of the land to him—Visvalinga v. Palaniappa, 21 Mad. 1 (3).

This section enumerates cases in which a usufructuary mortgagee is entitled to sue for the mortgage-money, but there is nothing in the section to show that the mortgagee can only get a simple money-decree and not a mortgage-decree. By instituting a suit for mortgage-money under this section a mortgagee does not lose his right to proceed against the security—Jamna Das v. Mani Ram, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 439 (441), 162 I.C. 15.

The position of a usufructuary mortgagee would not be better under this section where the nature and terms of the mortgage-deed were such as to show that it was not originally intended that the mortgagor should be personally liable—Ram Narayan v. Adhindra, 44 Cal. 388 (P.C.); Mon Koch v. Dhaniram Bora, A.I.R. 1968 Assam 10.

The word "mortgagor" in this section is not limited to the actual mortgagor himself. The section applies equally to the heirs or assignees of the equity of redemption—Janki v. Md. Ismail, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 273 (274), 139 I.C. 525.

416. Clause (a)—Personal covenant to pay :—A personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt is the usual incident of a simple mortgage. Such a covenant is implied by the very definition of the simple mortgage as given in section 58 (b). See also Wahidunnissa v. Gobardhan, 22 All. 453

(461) (F.B.); Jangi Singh v. Chander, 30 All. 388; Abbakke v. Kunhi-amma, 29 Mad. 491; Bhugwan v. Parmeshwari, 5 C.L.J. 287; Sochet v. Hadayatullah, 13 Lah. 508, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 630 (632). Such is also the case with an English mortgage where according to the definition in sec. 58 (e), the mortgagor "binds himself to repay the mortgage-money" in order to effectively safeguard his right of redemption. But in a mortgage by conditional sale, all that the mortgagor says is that if he pays, he will recover his property, but if he does not, the sale shall become absolute; but that does not imply a covenant to pay and does not confer on the mortgagee any right to personal relief—Balkrishna v. Legge, 22 All. 149 (P.C.); Nazim v. Mahabir, 30 I.C. 224. In arriving at a determination whether the mortgagor is personally liable, a mere determination that a mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage or an anomalous mortgage does not bring the matter to an end; but the nature of the transaction and the terms of the deed must be considered—U San v. Maung Sein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 151, 14 Rang. 685, 69 I.C. 295. The test is not how the mortgage is described but what it is in fact and is law—Narayan v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 624 (625), 152 I.C. 897. An action claiming the mortgage-money simpliciter must be made under this clause—Ibid at p. 626.

It has been broadly stated in a number of cases that every loan implies a promise to pay, and that an unqualified admission of indebtedness is equivalent to an express covenant and creates a personal obligation and that therefore in every mortgage there is a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt, unless the contrary is expressly stated or appear by implication—Kali Pershad v. Raye Kishori, 19 W.R. 281; Musahab Zaman Khan v. Inayetullah, 14 All. 513; Miller v. Runganath, 12 Cal. 389; Parbati v. Govind, 4 C.L.J. 246; Bhugwan v. Parmeshwari, 5 C.L.J. 287; Jivañdas v. Janki, 18 N.L.R. 145, A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 98; Seth Gopikishen v. Mankuerbai, 20 N.L.R. 46, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 97. A personal covenant is presumed in all mortgages of whatever form. The only difference that can arise would be that in certain forms of mortgages (e.g., usufructuary mortgages) the Court might, in the absence of an express covenant, demand a much more clearly implied covenant than it might require in other cases—Parashram v. Brij Mohan, 13 Lah. 250, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 164, 135 I.C. 33; Qudir v. Mehr Nur, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 103, 16 Lah. 612, 158 I.C. 206. This view is taken from the English law, under which a personal covenant to repay the money is implied and presumed in law from the very fact of accepting the loan—Sutton v. Sutton, 22 Ch. D. 511. But, it is submitted, this is too general a view. It may apply to the case of a simple mortgage as well as to an English mortgage, where a personal liability is imposed by the very language of clause (b) and (e) of sec. 58; but to apply the rule to all classes of mortgage would be to make too wide an assertion. So also, in a mortgage by conditional sale the mere promise to pay the money within a fixed period does not import a personal liability—Nazim Hussain v. Mahabir Prosad, 30 I.C. 224 (Oudh); Mohamed Haji v. Ramappa, 25 N.L.R. 187 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 254 (255), 119 I.C. 684; Govind v. Jagannath, 12 N.L.R. 19, 33 I.C. 753; Bhikam Lal v. Janak Dulari, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 517, 171 I.C. 296. And in a case of usufructuary mortgage their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have expressed the opinion that 'although a loan prima facie involves a personal liability, and although such liability is not displaced by the mere fact that security is given for the repayment of the loan, still the nature and terms of such security may negative any personal liability on the part of the borrower's—Ram Narayan v. Adhindra, 44 Cal. 388 (400, 401) (P.C.). But if in a usufructuary mortgage there is expressly a personal covenant to pay, then the mortgage ceases to be a pure usufructuary mortgage and becomes a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage; and the mortgagee would be entitled to a decree for the money under this clause as well as to a decree for sale under sec. 67—Kangayya v. Kalimuthu, 27 Mad. 526 (528). See also Note 409 under sec. 67. The personal covenant should be clear and unconditional in the undertaking to pay; otherwise it cannot entitle the mortgagee to sue for sale of the property—Damodara v. Chandapur, 56 Mad. 892, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 613 (615). If a usufructuary mortgage-bond expressly states that the mortgage is for a definite term of years, and that the mortgagee is to retain possession for that period, the bond cannot be treated as a usufructuary mortgage; and a personal covenant to repay the loan is implied in such a transaction. Consequently the mortgagee is entitled to sue for the mortgage-money on the implied contract, after the expiry of the term—Chhathi v. Bindeshwari, 8 Pat. 16, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 605 (608), 120 I.C. 32, 11 P.L.T. 68; Rajkumar v. Surajdeo, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 585 (588), 19 P.L.T. 787, 177 I.C. 533.

This is an enabling section. Ordinarily a mortgagee has no right to sue for the mortgage money, in the absence of a personal covenant. This section provides under what circumstances the mortgagee is entitled to exercise this right—Parbati v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 487. This right is very much restricted by the present section. Where the personal liability to repay the loan is conditioned by the provision of the mortgaged property being insufficient for the purpose, the mortgagee cannot get a personal decree where no sale has taken place at all. Sub-section (2) makes it clear that the remedy given by this section is by way of a suit—Mt. Sukra v. Ram Harakh, A.I.R. 1951 All. 195 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 241 overruling Bisheshwar v. Chandu Lal, A.I.R. 1928 All. 71, 50 All. 321. A usufructuary mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession even after his right to execute a decree for sale obtained by him has become barred by limitation—Gangaram Madhav v. Dwarkibai, A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 44.

In an equitable mortgage the mortgagee is entitled under this section to sue for the mortgage-money and the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money—Nityananda v. Rajpur C. B. Cinema Ltd., A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 208, 90 C.L.J. 123. The mere fact that the mortgagee acquires the mortgaged property would not disentitle him to recover the debt under the personal covenant unless the acquisition had the effect of extinguishing the debt—Ramgopal v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 354, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 284. This right of recovering the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged property is not affected by a decree obtained by a stranger against the mortgagor declaring that he is not the owner of the property—Doddarangappa v. Kenchegowda, A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 111, I.L.R. 1953 Mys. 98. After the expiry of the term of a usu-fructuary mortgage, the mortgagee's remedy under this section is a suit for recovery of the mortgage-money and not a suit for possession or for recovery of rent in lieu of interest—Bishun v. Anup, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 166, 20 P.L.T. 132. See also Ramakkammal v. Subbarathnam, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 13. See also in this connection Gopiram v. Shankar, A.I.R. 1950 M.B. 72. A mortgagor cannot avoid his liability to pay interest on mortgage-amount on the ground that his suit for redemption was earlier—Puttananjamma v. P. M. Channabasavanna, A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 41.

A charge-holder is not entitled to avail himself of the privilege conferred by this section to sue for the mortgage-money, in execution proceedings without bringing a suit for the purpose even if the security is impaired by the conduct of the person creating the charge—Kesar Chand v. Uttam Chand, A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 91, 49 C.W.N. 685, I.L.R. 1945 Lah. 411.

Even if the mortgagor be in the first instance under no personal liability, such liability may arise under clause (b) or (c) [now cl. (c) or (d)] of this section—Ram Narayan v. Adhindra, 44 Cal. 388 (400) (P.C.).

The personal covenant can be enforced against the mortgagor as well as against his legal representatives, but not against the transferees from the mortgagor nor against the transferees from the legal representatives of the mortgagor. See the proviso and Note 424, infra.

417. Instances of personal covenants:—The question whether a mortgagor binds himself personally to repay the loan or not must depend upon the construction of the mortgage-bond in each case and the intention of the parties as evidenced by the circumstances—Rajagopalachariar v. Thiagaraja, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 991, 86 I.C. 481; see also Jamuna v. Sheonandan, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 486, 22 P.L.T. 529, 194 I.C. 392. There is a personal covenant if the deed contains the words "On the expiry of the term I shall pay the said Rs..... and redeem the lands"—Udayana v. Senthivelu, 19 Mad. 411; or "It is settled that I shall pay the principal amount to you in three instalments within the aforesaid period"—Ramaya v. Guruva, 14 Mad. 232; or "the mortgagees shall be competent to recover the amount in any way they like"—Parashram v. Brij Mohan, 13 Lah. 259, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 164, 135 I.C. 33. A usufructuary mortgage-deed ran as follows: "I shall pay you the said mortgage-amount in the Chittrai Kalavadi of year 1883 and take back this deed of mortgage. If I fail to pay the mortgage amount in the said Kalavadi, then you shall receive the money in the Chittrai Kalavadi of whatever year I may pay it, deliver the said lands to my possession and also give back the bond," held that there was a sufficient covenant to pay in the first clause, and that the second clause did not limit the discretion of the mortgagor—Sivakami v. Gopala, 17 Mad. 131 (133) (F.B.); Rangappa v. Thammayappa, 26 M.L.J. 514, 24 I.C. 372 (per Seshagiri Iyer J.). But where a usufructuary mortgage contained the clause: "Having paid the principal money in the month of Chait 1297 we shall take back the bond and the land," held that these words did not imply a personal covenant to pay the money. It was merely a provision for redemption—Luchmeswar v. Dookh Mochan, 24 Cal. 677 (679); Damodara v. Chandapur, 56 Mad. 892, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 613 (615); see also Jamuna v. Sheonandan, supra. Similarly under the terms of a mortgage-bond the mortgagors covenanted to repay the principal and interest within 3 years from the date of execution and in default the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for foreclosure and the mortgage-bond would be regarded as a deed of sale, the consideration whereof would be the unpaid portion of the money advanced under the mortgage: held that there was no personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt—Bishan Datt v. Mathura Prasad, I.L.R. 1939 All. 313, A.I.R. 1939 All. 260 (262), 1939 A.L.J. 362. Where the mortgagor first covenants to transfer the hypothecated properties indefeasibly to the mortgagees (under an English mortgage) and this is followed by the redemption clause, and then the mortgagor further covenants to pay the mortgagee at a certain date the mortgage-debt or any portion thereof then remaining due, with interest, the mortgagee is entitled to a personal decree—Askaran v. Gobardhan, 26 C.W.N. 318, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 52 (53), 70 I.C. 158. But where under a mortgage the mortgagor agrees to pay the mortgage-money within a fixed period, and provides that in default of payment within that period the mortgagee would be entitled to foreclose, held that the agreement for payment cannot be construed into a personal covenant on the part of the mortgagor, and the remedy of the mortgagee is by foreclosure—Harlal v. Sheik Rahim, 70 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 53. Where it was provided in a deed of usufructuary mortgage that in case of default in the payment of the mortgage-money on the due date, the mortgagee should continue in possession and enjoyment of the mortgaged property till realisation of the mortgage-money, held that there was nothing in the deed in the nature of a personal covenant—Damodara v. Chandapur, 56 Mad. 892, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 613 (616); Ganeshram v. Gajraj Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 178.

Where a promise to pay is made contingent on the happening of a certain event, e.g., sale of the mortgaged property for arrears of revenue, no personal decree can be passed if the contingency does not happen—Bunseedhur v. Sujaat Ali, 16 Cal. 540.

Where the mortgagee has the right to realise the rents of the mortgaged properties to satisfy interest and part of the principal and in case of difficulty in realization to sell the mortgaged properties he may either sue the tenants or sue for the sale of the mortgaged properties—Buttokristo v. Gobindaram, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 540, 182 I.C. 132; Ramchandra Naidu v. Hassina Bai, (1968) 1 Mad. L.J. 139. Where in a mortgage-deed there is a promise to repay and it is executed not for payment of the principal but to secure payment of interest, there is no objection to giving the plaintiff a money-decree for the amount of the principal—Mathura Singh v. Palakdhari Raj, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 512, 21 P.L.T. 770, 187 I.C. 484.

418. Invalid mortgages :—Where a simple mortgage is invalid for non-registration, it will be ineffectual as a mortgage but will take effect as a personal covenant to pay, and will enable the mortgagee to get a simple money-decree against the mortgagor. See Note 349 to sec. 59 under heading "Effect of non-registration."

So also, where a mortgage is invalid for want of attestation, it will still be admissible as evidence of personal covenant to repay the loan, and a simple money-decree can be passed on such covenant—Mahadeo Prosad v. Gajraj Singh, 3 O.L.J. 164, 34 I.C. 397; Mathura Prosad v. Cheddi Lal, 13 A.L.J. 553, 29 I.C. 363. If a mortgagee is induced by the fraud of the mortgagor to enter into a mortgage-transaction, the mortgage is invalid, but the mortgagee will be entitled to recover the money, by virtue of the personal covenant contained in the mortgage. See Shahzad v. Narain, 25 A.L.J. 37, A.I.R. 1927 All. 190 (191).

Where a mortgage is void in its entirety, the personal covenant contained in the mortgage is also void—Har Prasad v. Sheo Gobind, 44 All. 486, A.I.R. 1922 All. 134, 57 I.C. 792; Kanhai v. Tilak, 16 I.C. 42 (All.).

419. Clause (b)—Alternative security:—This clause provides for accidents such as flood, fire, diluvion or other vis major destroying the property wholly or partially, without any fault on the part of the mortgagor or mortgagee. A creditor in whose hands a pledge has perished by accident and without negligence on his part is entitled to proceed against his debtor personally for recovery of the debt—Vithoba v. Chotalal, 7 B.H.C.R. A.C., 116. Thus, the mortgagee would be entitled to call for his money if he were deprived of the possession of the property by diluvion—Ram Sewak v. Sheo Naik, 45 All. 388 (390), A.I.R. 1923 All. 433; Bhawani v. Jang Bahadur, 7 A.L.J. 391, 6 I.C. 569; or by accidental fire—Venkateswara v. Kesava, 2 Mad. 187. Where a portion of the mortgaged property is sold in revenue sale by reason of the mortgagor's default and the mortgagee brings a suit for money-decree on the personal covenant, the Court has no power to insist upon his filing a mortgage-suit even when he does not wish to have a mortgage-decree—Chinnaswami v. Kannia, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 132, 46 M.L.W. 728, 175 I.C. 593.

This clause applies to an anomalous mortgage as well when the mortgaged property is wholly destroyed—Hundaldas v. Balukhan, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 59, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 452.

This clause would not apply if the property is destroyed owing to the negligence of the mortgagee, or if he is under an obligation to restore it in case of such destruction, for his statutory right would then merge in the contractual obligation to repair or restore the property—Venkateswara v. Kesava, 2 Mad. 187.

Under this clause, the mortgagee must, prior to suit, call upon the mortgagor to furnish other security. He cannot, without demanding an additional security, sue at once for the mortgage-money—Kruppier v. Peria Karuppa, 42 Mad. 578, 36 M.L.J. 286; Kamalambal v. Purushottam, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 644 (645), 152 I.C. 437. A usufructuary mortgagee, if he does not take steps in time (in this case for 21 years) calling upon the mortgagor to furnish additional security, cannot claim interest on the mortgage-money on account of dispossession from a portion of the mortgaged premises—Parosanna v. Girish, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 149, 37 C.W.N. 1162, 149 I.C. 667.

A suit for return of mortgage-money on the ground of failure of security is barred under O. 2, r. 2, C. P. Code if the mortgagee first sues for possession and, having failed there, institutes the second suit for money—Laiqa Ram v. Gokal Chand, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 86, 161 I.C. 698.

420. Clause (c)—Wrongful act or default of the mortgagor :—This clause as well as clause (d) provides for relief, where the mortgagee is deprived of his security otherwise than by his own default. Where, therefore, the property mortgaged is lost owing to the default of the mortgagee himself, he cannot sue for the mortgage-money—Chitkali v. Mathura, 3 C.L.J. 220 ; Hamadyar Khan v. Shankar, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 357, 85 I.C. 802. Thus, where the mortgaged property is sold away for arrears of revenue, owing to the default of the mortgagee-in-possession, he cannot bring a suit for the mortgage-money—Kashi Lal v. Nural Huq, 8 Pat. 569, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 209 (210), 121 I.C. 466. But where the mortgagee is deprived of his security in consequence of the default of the mortgagor in paying the land-revenue due on the land, time would not begin to run against the mortgagee until the default in payment of land-revenue which resulted in sale of the land took place. Inability of the mortgagor is a default within this clause—Alagan v. Maung Po, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 227, 151 I.C. 426. See also Rai Mohan v. Comilla Union Bank, A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 530, (a case of rent-sale). The suit for mortgage-money in such cases can be brought against any person liable to repay it and it is not limited to the mortgagor—Ibid. The suit is governed by Art. 120 Limitation Act and the right to sue accrued from the date on which the rent sale took place—Ibid. A purchaser from the mortgagor is personally liable under this clause if the mortgagee is deprived of his security by his wrongful act—Gajadhar v. Rishabhumar, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 319, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 122.

Mortgage security will be considered diminished in value within the meaning of this section if its letting value is decreased. When the value of the security has diminished, it amounts to a deprivation of part of the security—Mathura Devi v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 210 (211), (1938) O.W.N. 806. A usufructuary mortgagee has no remedy either by foreclosure or sale. If he is deprived of the security in whole or in part he can only get a simple money-decree for the mortgage-money—Ibid.

Although this clause does not specifically provide for a case in which the mortgagee of an undivided share is deprived of it in consequence of a subsequent partition, yet the provisions of this clause are sufficient to cover such a case—Nand Bahadur v. Sita Ram, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 174, 160 I.C. 27. It is not obligatory on the mortgagee to claim possession of the land allotted to the mortgagor, by way of substituted security—Ibid.

The right of personal recovery conferred by clauses (c) and (d) exists independently of and is not taken away by any personal covenant to repay contained in the mortgage-deed. The mortgagee is entitled to sue the mortgagor whenever he is deprived of his security, in spite of the fact that a suit under a personal covenant contained in the mortgage-deed is barred at that time—Appasami v. Virappa, 29 Mad. 362.

If it is implicit in the mortgage-deed that the mortgagee shall get possession, and the mortgagee does not get possession he may sue either for possession or for the mortgage-money—Ram Padarath v. Nimar Singh, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 172 (174), 197 I.C. 164.

Under this section a mortgagor is liable to the extent to which the security has been rendered insufficient by him. The cost of materials removed by the mortgagor resulting in depreciation of the security is not the criterion—Haridas v. Jagannath, I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 63, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 256 (258), 1939 N.L.J. 338.

Where after it was found that the mortgagor had no title to one of the mortgaged properties which were leased back to the mortgagor, the mortgagee recovered actual possession of the other properties and continued in possession for 30 years without any complaint against the diminution of security. Held that the mortgagee was not entitled to any relief on account of diminution because he must be deemed to have acquiesced in the diminution—L. C. Pais v. Mapanna, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 128.

Instances of mortgagor's wrongful act of default:—If the mortgagor conceals that the property mortgaged to him is subject to a prior incumbrance, the mortgagee may sue for the return of the money without waiting for the expiry of the stipulated period—Bhugwan Acharjee v. Govind, 9 Cal. 234; Ahmadulla v. Salar Baksh, 27 All. 488. Where a mortgagor must have known that the property he was mortgaging was non-transferable, while the mortgagee believed that it was transferable, the act of the former was a default within the meaning of this section—Ganesh v. Sujhari, 10 All. 47. Where an unregistered mortgage was effected in favour of the mortgagee, and afterwards the property was sold by a registered deed the mortgagee was held to be deprived of his security—Appasami v. Virappa, 29 Mad. 362. A breach of the duty imposed by section 65 on the mortgagor is a 'default'. Sec. 65 implies a covenant by the mortgagor to pay off the prior mortgage. If he allows the first mortgagee to bring the property to sale, the second mortgagee can sue for the mortgage money—Singjee v. Tiruvengadam, 13 Mad. 192. The obligation of a mortgagee-in-possession to pay the revenue does not extend beyond the portion mortgaged to him; therefore, if the mortgagor fails to pay the revenue in respect of a portion not mortgaged, and in consequence the whole mortgaged property is sold, the mortgagee can enforce his claim against the mortgagor personally, having also under sec. 73 a claim on the sale-proceeds—Sawaba v. Abaji, 11 Bom. 475; Jhabhu Ram v. Girdhari, 6 All. 298. A defect of title of the mortgagor entitles the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage-money—Amirullah v. Rasulkaksh, 17 A.L.J. 474, 50 I.C. 744. An act of waste committed by the mortgagor makes him liable to be sued for the mortgage-money under this clause—Ramakrishnama v. Chengu Aiyar, 27 M.L.J. 494, 33 I.C. 321. Where, in a case of usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor prevented the mortgagee from realising the full rents and profits, and realised certain rents himself, held that the mortgagee was deprived of a part of his security—Ram Narayan v. Adhindra, 44 Cal. 388 (402) (P.C.).

421. What is not a 'wrongful act or default':—If the mortgagor sells his equity of redemption and the usufructuary mortgagee is deprived of the possession of a part of the property in consequence, he cannot sue for the mortgage-money; the sale of the equity of redemption is not a wrongful act under this section—Jhabhu Ram v. Girdhari, 6 All. 298; Gokul v. Shrimal, 6 Bom. L.R. 288. When a property mortgaged with possession is attached and sold in execution of a money decree and the mortgagee is dispossessed by the auction purchaser, the mortgagee cannot sue for the mortgage money, because the mortgagor by allowing his equity of redemption to be sold did not commit a wrongful act—Gopalasami v. Arunachella, 15 Mad. 304 (305). Where in a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagor holds part of the property as tenant of the mortgagee, mere non-payment or reduction of rent by the mortgagor-tenant is not a wrongful act of depriving the mortgagee of possession of the land so as to attract the provisions of this clause—Ram Kumar v. Mahapal, A.I.R. 1938 All. 188, (1938) A.L.J. 18, I.L.R. (1938) All. 218, 174 I.C. 292; Boochi v. Nathi Ram, A.I.R. 1932 All. 51, 133 I.C. 402. Where in a suit against the mortgagor by a third party it was declared that the mortgagor was not entitled to any of the mortgaged properties, a subsequent compromise by which the mortgagor obtained certain rights could not be considered a wrongful act—Gajanand v. Prayog Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 48 (51)—per Lord Williams, J. The co-sharer mortgagors could not be made liable under this clause for diminution of the mortgage security caused by the wrongful act of the lambardar who is appointed and removable by a revenue officer—Gajadhar v. Rishabhkumar, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 319, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 122. If the security is rendered insufficient as a result of the reduction of the jama on the application of the mortgagee who is also the tenant for the commutation of the excessive bhooli rent to money rent, the insufficiency is not due to any misconduct on the part of the mortgagee—Chand Bihari Gope v. Shyam Nandan, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 235. The right to sue under this section can be enforced in a separate suit, as well as in a suit to enforce the mortgage—ibid.

422. Clause (d)—Failure to deliver or secure possession to mortgagee :

—Under this clause, if the mortgagor fails to give possession of the property or to secure to a usufructuary mortgagee quiet possession thereof, he is entitled to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money—Abdul Iasalam v. Rafiat, 2 C.L.J. 493; Pinto v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 558, 34 Bom. L.R. 984; Ranba v. Bansilal, A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 231. Where the mortgage-bond contained an express stipulation that the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for the mortgage-money upon being dispossessed, and the mortgagee was dispossessed by the mortgagor before the due date of payment, held that the mortgagee was entitled to sue for the mortgage-money both under the stipulation in the bond and under the provision of this section—Afiruddin v. Joy Chandra, 35 C.W.N. 103 (104). In a Madras Full Bench case it was held that a usufructuary mortgagee, who was not given possession by the mortgagor, ceased to be a usufructuary mortgagee, and was entitled to sue for foreclosure or sale—Subbamma v. Narayya, 41 Mad. 259 (263) (F.B.). But this decision is no longer correct in view of the amendment of clause (d) of sec. 58. See Note 342 under that section. But the new clause (d) of sec. 58 would not apply to a mortgage executed before the Amendment Act of 1929, and, if such a mortgage-deed contained a personal covenant to repay the mortgage-money in the event of the mortgagor failing to secure the mortgagee in possession of the property, the mortgage was not a purely usufructuary one, and the mortgagee was entitled to sue for the sale—Ram Khilawan v. Ghulam, 8 Luck. 1190, 141 I.C. 464, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 35 (36), following 41 Mad. 259 (F.B.). In a mortgage by conditional sale after the expiry of the stipulated period it is not the duty of the mortgagor to put the mortgagee in possession and the latter is not entitled to sue for the mortgage-money for the mortgagor's failure to do so—Badri v. Besu, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 174, 145 I.C. 159. But where a mortgage comprises the features of simple and usufructuary mortgages and the mortgagor deprives the mortgagee of part of his security by failing to deliver up possession, the mortgagee has a right under this section to sue for mortgage-money or to sue under sec. 67 for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property—Kanhaiya v. Mt. Hamidan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 418 (F.B.), 176 I.C. 492; Lal Narshingh v. Md. Yakub, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 139, 4 Luck. 363, 33 C.W.N. 693, 56 I.A. 299, 116 I.C. 414.

In the case of a combination of a usufructuary and simple mortgage, if the mortgagee is dispossessed he can sue as a usufructuary mortgagee under cl. (d). He may also as a simple mortgagee sue on the covenant to repay—Hundaldas v. Balukhan, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 59, I.L.R. 1949 Kar. 452; M. Ramnath Pillai v. K. V. Annamali Chettiar, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 342. Where the prior usufructuary mortgagee is not made a party in the suit of a subsequent simple mortgagee and the latter dispossesses him in execution of the decree, the usufructuary mortgagee has a right to sue for recovery of possession—Sarju v. Parbhu, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 34. A mortgagee of an undivided share of coparcenary property, not being entitled to joint possession under the Hindu law cannot recover mortgage money under this clause—Kanailal v. Dhanji, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 18.

In the case of a usufructuary mortgage of occupancy rights which is void from its inception if the mortgagee is dispossessed by the landlord through the intervention of the Court, he can have no claim against the mortgagor under this section—Sana Ullah v. Jai Narain, A.I.R. 1942 All. 409, 1942 A.L.J. 390.

Where the mortgagor fails to deliver possession to the mortgagee, the right to sue for the mortgage money accrues under this clause immediately, that is, on the date of the mortgage, and a suit by the mortgagee filed after 12 years from that date will be barred by limitation though it may be within 12 years of the due date—Gangaram v. Balappa, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 152, 48 Bom. L.R. 629; Puttamadamma v. Puttappa, A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 20.

Before a mortgagee brings an action under this clause for the mortgage-money he must prove his mortgage. If it cannot be tendered in evidence for want of valid registration, then the mortgagee cannot succeed—Kesari v. Musafir, A.I.R. 1937 All. 711, (1937) A.L.J. 815, 171 I.C. 825.

Where a usufructuary mortgage has been put in possession by the mortgagor but is afterwards dispossessed of a portion by a third party claiming under a purchase from the mortgagor, the mortgagee's right is only to sue to recover possession. He cannot sue for the mortgage-money unless the dispossession was owing to the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor—Ma Pwa v. Ma Me, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 80 (81), 161 I.C. 461. But see Contra Parbati v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 487.

If it is found that the mortgagee is not in possession, the Court will give him a money-decree, and it is not necessary to find out on what particular date he was dispossessed, or whether he was or was not dispossessed on the particular date alleged in the plaint—Sadhu Saran v. Barhamdeo, 8 P.L.T. 355, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 230, 103 I.C. 592. The failure of the mortgagor to deliver possession will not deprive the mortgagee of his right to interest merely because he takes no steps to enforce his right of possession—G. Joseph Mottom v. Free India Bank, A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 234.

But the mortgagee cannot sue for the money unless he is actually out of possession. Thus, the mere Court-sale of the property in execution of a decree against the mortgagor cannot give the mortgagee a right to sue (assuming such to exist) unless the purchaser dispossessed him—Janki v. Sheomangal, 1881 A.W.N. 59. So also, the mortgagee cannot sue for the money where the dispossession is due to his own default. Thus, a usufructuary mortgagee who fails to make a defence to a suit by a subsequent mortgagee which would have preserved the security, is not entitled to sue for the mortgage-money—Dunnia Lal v. Nowratan, 2 P.L.J. 490, 41 I.C. 806; Chitkali v. Mathura, 3 C.L.J. 220.

The remedy provided in this clause is an alternative remedy and does not debar the mortgagee from bringing a suit for possession—Sankata v. Jagat Narain, 2 O.C. 24; Linga Reddi v. Shama Rao, 17 Mad. 469; Thakur Chowdhury v. Manup Mahton, 16 I.C. 735. The Allahabad High Court has held that if the mortgagor fails to give possession of a portion of the mortgaged property, the remedy of the mortgagee is to sue for possession and mesne profits—Gouri Singh v. Bechu Singh, 1932 A.L.J. 1092, A.I.R. 1933 All. 97 (98), 142 I.C. 779.

Claim to interest by usufructuary mortgagee:—If a usufructuary mortgagee, who under the terms of the mortgage-deed is entitled to receive interest out of the profits of the property mortgaged, has not succeeded in obtaining possession he cannot claim interest on his money at the time of redemption unless the claim for interest is provided for in the deed—Dubri v. Ram Naresh, 3 O.W.N. 176, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 224, 93 I.C. 297; Bhawani Prasad v. Saheb Din, 9 O.C. 144; Mahadeo v. Sittla Baksh, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 102, 65 I.C. 408; Mahadaji v. Joti, 17 Bom. 425. (But see Sitanath v. Thakurdas, 46 Cal. 448 (453) where under such circumstances, the mortgagee was held to be entitled to interest.) A usufructuary mortgagee cannot claim interest in lieu of rents and profits owing to the failure of the mortgagor to deliver possession of a portion of the property mortgaged. If the mortgagee does not sue for additional security in time he shall be deemed to have acquiesced in the diminished security—Dubri v. Ram Naresh, (supra); Sheo Shankar v. Raj Jas, 2 Luck. 676, 4 O.W.N. 744, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 594 (595), 105 I.C. 164, following Partab v. Gajadhar, 24 All. 521 (P.C.); Prasanna v. Girish, 37 C.W.N. 1162. But see Subramania v. Panchananda, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 175 (176), 136 I.C. 785 where it has been held that if the mortgagor is guilty of a breach of covenant to deliver possession, the mortgagee can claim interest by way of damages so long as the claim for the principal is not barred—Ibid, at p. 177.

Where a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee sues for redemption against a prior usufructuary mortgagee, the former can be made liable for reasonable interest also along with the principal amount only if the latter can claim interest in a suit under sec. 68 coupled with sec. 67—Kumarappa v. Suppan, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 672, 145 I.C. 744.

Instances of failure to deliver or secure possession:—The inclusion in the mortgage-deed of plots not belonging to the mortgagor entitles the mortgagee to sue for his money—Fateh Din v. Kishen Lal, 73 I.C. 902, A.I.R. 1923 All. 584. Where a mortgage-deed provided that on default of payment of interest the mortgagee would be given possession, then the failure of the mortgagor to give possession, on the interest falling into arrears, would entitle the mortgagee to sue for the amount due—Saravana v. Chinnammal, 15 Mad. 65. This clause is wide enough to include every instance of failure by a mortgagor to secure a mortgagee in undisturbed possession, at any time during the period for which the mortgagee was entitled to remain in possession. The subsequent dispossession of the mortgagee after possession has been delivered to him is a failure on the part of the mortgagor to secure him in undisturbed possession—Hiralal v. Ghasita, 16 All. 318 (F.B.); Jainandan v. Baijnath, 2 P.L.T. 229, 63 I.C. 297 (300); Pargan Panday v. Mahatam, 6 C.L.J. 143. Where the mortgagee granted a lease for a fixed term to his mortgagor with an option to renew on fulfilment of certain conditions, but the mortgagor, on the expiry of the term failed to fulfil such conditions and also refused to give up possession, the mortgagee was held entitled to a money-decree for the amount due under the mortgage—Hiralal v. Ghasita, 16 All. 318. Where a usufructuary mortgagee in possession comes to know of a decree on a prior unregistered mortgage for the sale of the mortgaged property the mortgagee can sue for money even after himself purchasing the property in execution—Ahmadullah v. Salar Baksh, 27 All. 488 (491). A usufructuary mortgagee can sue for the mortgage-money on dispossession by a co-sharer of the mortgagor who obtained the mortgaged property on partition—Tilak Singh v. Jalai Singh, 11 C.L.J. 136, 5 I.C. 130. The mortgagee has a cause of action under this clause when the mortgagor, on being called upon to give additional or substituted security, entered into occupation and deprived the mortgagee of the possession—Pargan Pandey v. Mahatam Mahto, 6 C.L.J. 143. Where the mortgagee is dispossessed by a stranger claiming adversely to the mortgagor, who fails to defend his title and restore the mortgagee to possession, the latter is entitled to recover the mortgage-money—Maung Po v. Maung Kyauk, 2 Bur. L.J. 47, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 143, 79 I.C. 815.

423. Disturbance of possession:—By the mortgagor:—The mortgagee is entitled to sue for the mortgage-money if he is disturbed in his possession by the mortgagor or by a person in collusion with the mortgagor—Nakchedi v. Ramcharitar, 19 All. 191 (193). If the usufructuary mortgagee leases back to the mortgagor on his agreeing to pay monthly rent in lieu of interest and the mortgagor not only fails to pay rent but continues in possession after the expiry of the lease against wishes of the mortgagee the mortgagee will be entitled to sue the mortgagor for recovery of possession and such a suit will not be barred by a previous suit to recover the rent in arrears—Shivajee Prosad v. Mohant Darsan Das, A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 87. But cl. (d) has no application to a case where the dispossession is due to the mortgagee's own default—Bharat Ram v. Beni Dutt, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 263, 161 I.C. 821. A provision in a mortgage-deed making the mortgagor liable to pay in the event of the mortgagee being dispossessed applies only when the mortgagee's possession is interfered with and is not applicable to the case where the mortgagor has failed to deliver possession initially—Kesari v. Musafir, A.I.R. 1937 All. 711 (713), (1937) A.L.J. 815, 171 I.C. 825.

By person claiming superior title:—The provisions of this clause apply to the case of dispossession of the mortgagee by a person holding a better title than the mortgagor, and so where a mortgagee is thus dispossessed and deprived of his mortgage-security, he is entitled to recover the mortgage-money personally from the mortgagor—Ram Surat v. Gur Prasad, 43 All. 484, 19 A.L.J. 357, 63 I.C. 998. This is now made clear by the italicised words added to this clause. Before the amendment it was held in Labh Singh v. Jamnum, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 694, 134 I.C. 116, following Kulla Mal v. Umra, 61 I.C. 604 that where an occupancy holding is resumed by the landlord after it had been mortgaged the mortgagee had no right to obtain compensation. But this seems to be no longer good law.

By other persons:—This clause applies when the disturbance of the mortgagee's possession is caused by a person having some title and not by third parties—Gopalasami v. Arunachella, 15 Mad. 304 (306); Nakchedi Ram v. Ram Charitar, 19 All. 191 (193); Jhabbu v. Girdhari, 6 All. 298 (302).

Thus, if the tenants of the mortgaged property who had to pay rent to the mortgagee wrongfully refused to do so, and if any one of them with whom the mortgagor was not in collusion disturbed the possession of the mortgagee, the mortgagor could not be made liable for the acts of such third persons—Nakchedi Ram v. Ram Charitar, 19 All. 191 (193). Therefore, where the possession of the mortgagee has been disturbed by a person without title, the mortgagee is entitled to sue the trespasser for declaration of title and recovery of possession without suing the mortgagor for the mortgage-money—Bechu Sahu v. Arjun, 3 P.L.J. 162, 43 I.C. 917. Where the usufructuary mortgagee is deprived of the mortgaged property by a third party claiming under a purchase from the mortgagor, the mortgagee's right is only to bring a suit against that person to recover the possession of which he has been deprived. He cannot sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money, for the mortgagor is at perfect liberty to sell his equity of redemption—Jhabbu v. Girdhari, 6 All. 298 (302); Gokul v. Shrimal, 6 Bom.L.R. 288. Similarly, if the mortgagee is deprived of the possession of the mortgaged property by reason of a creditor of the mortgagor obtaining a decree against the mortgagor and bringing to sale the mortgagor's equity of redemption in execution of that decree, the mortgagee is not entitled to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage-money—Gopalasami v. Arunachella, 15 Mad. 304 (306). But a person claiming adversely to the mortgagor is not a person claiming without title; and therefore if the mortgagee is dispossessed by such person, the mortgagor is bound to defend the mortgagee's possession. If he fails to do so, he must repay the mortgage-money—Maung Po Kin v. Maung Kyaukye, 2 Bur.L.J. 47, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 193, 79 I.C. 815. Where a mortgagee entitled to possession under a usufructuary mortgage has been put in possession by the mortgagor, but is afterwards dispossessed of a portion of the property by a third party claiming under a purchaser from the mortgagor, the mortgagee's right is only to sue to recover possession from him. He cannot sue for the mortgage-money unless the dispossession was owing to the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor—Ma Pwa v. Ma Me, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 80 (81), 161 I.C. 461.

A usufructuary mortgagee or a mortgagee who is entitled to retain possession until the discharge of the debt under an anomalous mortgage can also sue for recovery of possession instead of suing for the mortgage-money—Kiran Swaroop v. Raghunath Prasad, A.I.R. 1956 Madh. B. 110.

424. Proviso—Suit against mortgagor's transferees and legal representatives :—The words "the mortgagor" have been omitted from sub-section (1), and the proviso has been added, to make it clear that in case of clause (a) the liability of the mortgagor to be sued for the mortgage-money can be enforced only against the mortgagor (or against his legal representative) but not against a transferee from the mortgagor nor against a transferee from the legal representative of the mortgagor; whereas under the other clauses the suit for recovery of the money may or may not be brought against the transferees according to the circumstances of each particular case.

Leaving clause (a) out of consideration, the general rule is that the liability of the mortgagor to be sued for the mortgage-money under the circumstances mentioned in this section attaches to the mortgagor's representatives also. Therefore, clause (c) of this section applies also to the heir of the mortgagor; and such heir is liable to pay the mortgage-money under clause (c) when he commits waste to the prejudice of the security—Ramkrishna v. Chengu Aiyer, 27 M.L.J. 494, 33 I.C. 321. But where a mortgagee bringing a suit under sec. 67 for sale of the mortgaged property impleading not only the sons of the mortgagor but also the subsequent transferee from them, entered into a compromise with the latter under which after accepting a certain sum of money from him, the mortgagee discharged him from the suit and agreed to give up the remedy against the mortgaged property, he could not after realizing the amount turn round and claim the balance personally from the mortgagor's sons relying on the personal covenant—Mt. Boota v. Gur Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 20 (23, 25), 12 Luck. 313, 164 I.C. 817.

A personal covenant does not run with the land, no personal decree can be passed against a purchaser of the equity of redemption—Ibid, at p. 23.

425. Sub-section (2) :—For the purpose of a stay of the proceedings under sub-section (2) the suit must be a suit by the mortgagee for the mortgage-money in his capacity as a mortgagee. If the mortgagor creates a personal liability by an independent transaction such as a promissory note or other independent transaction completely dissociated from the mortgage, then he does not come within the scope of sub-section (1) (a) of this section and the defendant cannot pray for stay of suit under sub-section (2)—Nityananda

v. Rajpur C. B. Cinema Ltd., A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 208, 90 C.L.J. 123. A mortgagor cannot deny the mortgage and at the same time invoke the discretionary relief under sub-section (2)—ibid.

Relative scope of sec. 68 and 98:—Section 68 not being subject to a contract to the contrary sec. 98 must be read subject to sec. 68—Chand Behari v. Shyam Nandan, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 235.

69. A power conferred by the mortgage-deed on the mortgagee, or on any person on his behalf, to sell or concur in selling, in default of payment of the mortgage-money, the mortgaged property or any part thereof, without the intervention of the Court, is valid in the following cases, and in no others, (namely)—

(a) where the mortgage is an English mortgage, and neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee is a Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist, or a member of any other race, sect, tribe, or class from time to time specified in this behalf by the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, in the local official Gazette ;

(b) where the mortgagee is the Secretary of state for India in Council :

(c) where the mortgaged property or any part thereof is situate within the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein, Akyab or in any other town which the Governor-General in council may,

69. (1) * * * A mortgagee, or any person acting on his behalf, shall subject to the provisions of this section, have power to sell or concur in selling the mortgaged property or any part thereof, in default of payment of the mortgage-money, without the intervention of the Court, in the following cases and in no others, namely :—

(a) where the mortgage is an English mortgage, and neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee is a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist or a member of any other race, sect, tribe or class from time to time specified in this behalf by the "State Government", in the "Official Gazette" ;

(b) where a power of sale without the intervention of the Court is expressly conferred on the mortgagee by the mortgage-deed and the mortgagee is the "Government" ;

(c) where a power of sale without the intervention of the Court is expressly conferred on the mortgagee by the mortgage-deed and the mortgaged property or any part thereof was on the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed, by notification in the Gazette of India, specify in this behalf.

stuate within the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, * * *, or in any other town or area which the "State Government" may; by notification in the "Official Gazette", specify in this behalf.

(2) No such power shall be exercised unless and until—

(a) notice in writing requiring payment of the principal money has been served on the mortgagor, or on one of several martgagors, and default has been made in payment of the principal money, or of part thereof, for three months after such service ; or

(b) some interest under the mortgage amounting at least to five hundred rupees is in arrear and unpaid for three months after becoming due.

(3) When a sale has been made in professed exercise of such a power, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable on the ground that no case had arisen to authorize the sale, or that due notice was not given, or that the power was otherwise improperly or irregularly exercised ; but any person damnified by an unauthorized or improper or irregular exercise of the power shall have his remedy in damages against the person exercising the power.

(4) The money which is received by the mortgagee, arising from the sale, after discharge of prior incumbrances, if any, to which the sale is not made subject, or after payment into Court under section 57 of a sum to meet any prior incumbrance, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be held by him in trust to be applied by him, first, in payment of all costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him as incident to the sale or any attempted sale ; and, secondly in discharge of the mortgage-money and costs and other money, if any, due under the mortgage ; and the residue of the money so received shall be paid to the person entitled to the mortgaged property, or authorized to give receipts for the proceeds of the sale thereof.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies to powers conferred before this Act comes into force.

(5) Nothing in this section or in section 69A applies to powers conferred before the first day of July, 1882.

The powers and provisions contained in sections 6 to 19 (both inclusive) of the Trustees' and Mortgages' Powers Act, 1866 shall be deemed to apply to English mortgages wherever in British India the mortgaged property may be situate, when neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee is a Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist, or a member of any other race, sect, tribe, or class from time to time specified in this behalf by the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council in the local official Gazette.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 34 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

This section has been adapted from time to time by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 by A.L.O. 1948 and by A.L.O. 1950.

In the beginning of sub-sec. (1) the words "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act 1866" have been omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act XLVIII of 1952.

425A. Application :—This Act does not apply to the Punjab, and therefore in that province there is nothing to prevent the parties from making a stipulation in a mortgage-deed allowing sale without the intervention of Court, and such stipulation is unfettered by the restrictions of this section—Kanhaiya Lal v. National Bank of India Ltd., 4 Lah. 284 (P.C.), 75 I.C. 7, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 114.

"Town of Bombay" :—Property situate at Mahim within the island of Bombay, and within the local limits of the Bombay High Court's original civil jurisdiction falls under this section—Trimbuk v. Bhagwandas, 23 Bom. 348.

426. Object and scope of section :—This section has been enacted to set at rest the conflict of decisions which existed prior to the passing of this Act regarding the mortgagee's power to sell the mortgaged property without the intervention of the Court.

427. Power of sale :—The power of sale contemplated by this section is a power to sell privately, i.e., without the intervention of the Court; whereas the power conferred by sec. 58 (b) in a simple mortgage is a power to 'cause the mortgaged property to be sold' i.e., to have the property sold through the intervention of the Court—Kishanlal v. Gangaram, 13 All. 28. A simple mortgagee cannot sell the mortgaged property privately, unless the mortgage-deed expressly empowers him to do so, and even then he can sell only under the circumstances enumerated in clause (b) or (c) of this section. So is the case with usufructuary, conditional, equitable and anomalous mortgages. In an English mortgage, the power need not be expressly conferred, but it cannot be exercised unless the parties are Europeans.

A managing member of an undivided Hindu family can create a mortgage for family necessity and can give power of sale under cl. (c) to the mortgagee in places where this clause applies—Parmanand v. Nannulal, I.L.R. 1942 Mad. 287.

In a simple mortgage, the power of sale must be actually conferred by the mortgage-deed. A mere provision that the mortgagee "shall have all the rights conferred upon a mortgagee by the Transfer of Property Act" is not sufficient to confer such a power, and a private sale by the mortgagee is invalid and gives no title to the purchaser—Mataprasad v. Kunnon, 6 Rang. 134, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 128, 110 I.C. 698.

There is nothing in this section to prevent a mortgagor giving to a second mortgagee a power of sale, even when he has not given one to the first mortgagee—Paramanand v. Nannulal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 232 (236), (1941) 2 M.L.J. 923, 54 M.L.W. 656.

The power of sale given to the mortgagee under the mortgage-deed cannot be taken away without some substantive legislation. Where the mortgagor has not exercised his right of redemption and the mortgagee has option to ask for sale after a mortgage decree has been passed, the latter cannot under sec. 15D, Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act be debarred from exercising his power of sale—Govindram v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 49, 51 Bom.L.R. 828. A mortgagee who has entered into a contract of sale of the mortgaged property in exercise of his power of sale under this section is not an agent of the mortgagor—Mansoor v. Usman, A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 156, 46 Bom.L.R. 159. Such a mortgagee is not at liberty to purchase the mortgaged property himself even if there is a contract to that effect between the mortgagor and the mortgagee—Damodara v. Aburupammal, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 301, (1943) 1 M.L.J. 92; Sree Yallamma Cotton etc. Mills Co. Ltd., In the matter of, A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 280.

A mortgagor must file a suit for redemption and offer to pay the mortgage-debt after the due date has expired, if he wants the relief of injunction restraining the mortgagee from exercising the power of sale—Mulraj v. Nainmal, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 46 (48), 43 Bom.L.R. 1034. He cannot get this relief unless he pays the mortgage amount to the mortgagee or tenders the same to him—Babamiya v. Jehangir, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 339 (341), 43 Bom.L.R. 553. But if the mortgagee exercised the power of sale in a wrong and improper manner contrary to the terms of the contract, the mortgagor can bring a suit for such injunction—Ibid. The equitable relief by way of injunction cannot be refused merely because the mortgagor was unable to pay in the past and might be unable to pay in the future.—Ibid at p. 344.

A mortgagee who has contracted to sell in exercise of his power of sale, and who (the land not having become vested in the purchaser) rescinds the contract, is not accountable to the mortgagor—Wright v. New Zealand F. C. Association, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 181, 183 I.C. 18.

A mortgagee with power of sale is, strictly speaking, not a trustee of the power of sale, which is for his own benefit to enable him the better to realize his mortgage-debt. If he exercises it bona fide the Court will not interfere unless the price is so low as in itself to be evidence of fraud—Pichai Moideen v. Chatturbhuj, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 736 (741), 65 M.L.J. 491, 145 I.C. 1023; Haddington Island Quarry Co. v. Aiden Wesley, (1941) A.C. 722.

When power can be exercised:—The power of sale can be exercised when there has been a "default of payment of the mortgage-money". Where nothing is stated as to when it is to be repaid, there can be no default in payment of the principal sum due until it is demanded.—Purasawalkam H. J. S. Ltd. v. Kuddas, 23 L.W. 476, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 841, 94 I.C. 860.

Power on assignment:—The power of sale passes with the assignment of the mortgage, so that it can be exercised by the assignee. If the mortgagee sub-mortgages his interest, transferring his power of sale, the sub-mortgagee can exercise that power—Ram Krishna v. Official Assignee, 45 Mad. 774, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 390, 69 I.C. 407. In fact, in such a case the proper person to exercise the power is the sub-mortgagee and not the original mortgagee—Stevens v. Theatres Ltd., [1903] 1 Ch. 857. Similarly, if the mortgagor transfers his interest, the power may be exercised against the transferee—Exchange and Hop Warehouse Ltd. v. Association of Land Financiers, 34 Ch. D. 195.

Cl. (b) of sub-sec. (1):—The clause, before the amendment, conferred a power of private sale where the mortgagee was the Secretary of State. A Local Government was therefore not within the scope of this clause as it originally stood—Muthu Karuppan v. Sinnappa, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 130, (1947) 2 M.L.J. 157.

Clause (c) of sub-section (1):—The words "power of sale" in this clause refer to a clause to be expressly included in the mortgage. It would be wrong for the Court to find out its meaning as judicially interpreted. A power of sale must include all steps which are necessary to be taken in that connection. This power cannot be exercised if there are words making it invalid.—Mulraj v. Nainmal, supra at pp. 48, 49. A power of sale necessarily includes a power to postpone a sale. The power to buy or rescind or vary any contract of sale is not bad. The mortgagee cannot buy the property for himself—Ibid at p. 49. The mortgagee has express power to sell when the deed says that the "mortgagee shall be entitled to cause mortgaged property to be sold as a defaulter by revenue sale"—State of Mysore v. Basappa Naidu, (1968) 1 Mys. L. J. 69.

This section does not offend Article 14 of the Constitution nor does it offend Art. 19(1)(f)—Narasimhachariar v. Egmore Benefit Society, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 135.

428. Notice:—Clause (a) of sub-section (2) providing for service of notice is taken almost word for word from sec. 20 (i) of the English Coveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41).

The mortgagee must give three month's notice before sale, and this period cannot be curtailed by agreement—Babamiya v. Jehangir, A.I.R.

1941 Bom. 339, 43 Bom.L.R. 553. Therefore, if a deed of mortgage provides that the power of sale may be exercised after 15 days' notice, the condition as to notice is invalid—Madras Deposit and Benefit Society v. Passanha, 11 Mad. 201. But if the property is sold before the expiry of three months from the notice, the sale is not necessarily invalid, but it only affords a ground for damages—Ibid. So also, a sale is not invalid even if due notice was not given ; see sub-section (3).

The mortgage-money can only become due and payable as soon as the option is exercised upon an intimation to the mortgagor. He should also know which of the rights under the mortgage the mortgagee wishes to exercise. The advertisement of the sale of the mortgaged property in the newspaper is not a sufficient intimation to the mortgagor—Babamiya v. Jehangir, supra.

Although the money is due and should be claimed within the period of limitation which commences on the date of the bond, the power of sale is not to be exercised unless and until the statutory notice has been given—Kamalambal v. Purushattam, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 644, 152 I.C. 437.

The mere fact of a long delay having taken place between the maturity of the notice and the actual sale does not make a fresh notice necessary even when the delay is nearly two, three or four years—Major v. Ward, 5 Hare 598 ; Muncherji v. Noor Mahomedbhoy, 17 Bom. 711 ; Metters v. Brown, 33 L.J. Ch. 97.

Where the mortgagor has assigned his interest of which the mortgagee is aware, the notice must be served on the assignee ; but if the assignment has taken place after a notice has already been served on the mortgagor, no fresh notice on the assignee is necessary—Muncherji v. Noor Mahomedbhoy, supra.

A first mortgagee exercising power of sale under sec. 69 is not required to give any notice of the sale to the second mortgagee, though under sec. 59-A the second mortgagee may be regarded as a person deriving title from the mortgagor—Guruswamiah v. Ramakrishna, I.L.R. (1964) 1 Mad. 735.

429. Sale for arrears of interest :—Under clause (b) the power of sale can be exercised even if there is no default of payment of principal money—Firm of A. C. Kundu v. Rookanand, 11 Bur.L.T. 147, 43 I.C. 921. [This view does not, however, appear to be correct as the power of sale arises “in default of payment of the mortgage-money”—see sub-section (1) ; Clause (a) or (b) of sub-section (2) seems to be an additional condition precedent.] But if there is a covenant in the mortgage-deed that the power of sale is not to be exercised unless default is made in the payment of the principal sum or any part thereof on the day appointed for payment, the power cannot be exercised unless there has been a default in the payment of the principal, and the fact that interest has remained unpaid for 3 months will not entitle the mortgagee to sell the property—Jerup Teza & Co. v. Peerbhoy, 23 Bom.L.R. 1241, 64 I.C. 634, A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 421.

A stipulation for payment of interest on arrears of interest at a higher rate is not penal. It is an independent and secondary contract which is enforceable—Damodara v. Aburupammal, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 301, (1943) 1 M.L.J. 92.

430. Conduct of sale :—A mortgagee exercising a power of sale must take as much care as an owner would reasonably take in the sale of his own property—Chabildas v. Dayal Mowji, 6 Bom.L.R. 557. A mortgagee having a power of sale, provided he acts bona fide and takes reasonable precautions to obtain a proper price, can realise his security by sale in such manner as he thinks most conducive to his own benefit—Farrar v. Farrars, 40 Ch. D. 395. But he must not look after his own interests alone, nor should he recklessly sacrifice his mortgagor's property—Chabildas v. Dayal Mowji, 5 Bom.L.R. 247; Kennedy v. De Trafford, (1896) 1 Ch. 762 (772). The property may be sold privately or by public auction; if it is sold publicly, the mortgagee must give reasonable publicity to the sale—Chabildas v. Dayal Mowji, 6 Bom.L.R. 557. He must not impose depreciatory condition on the sale which are likely to shy off intending purchasers. If the auction-purchaser fails to pay the balance of the purchase price within the stipulated time, time being the essence of the contract, the mortgagee has a right to resell the property, and the auction-purchaser cannot get a decree either for specific performance or for damages—P. S. Duraihanoo v. M. Saravana Chettiar, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 468.

431. Suspension of sale :—The mortgagee under an English mortgage cannot be restrained by an injunction from exercising his power of sale, merely because a suit for redemption has been filed against him by the mortgagor—Jagjivan v. Shridhar, 2 Bom. 252; the sale though held during the pendency of the redemption suit is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens embodied in sec. 52—Rama Krishna v. Official Assignee, 45 Mad. 774, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 390, 69 I.C. 407. Such a sale pendente lite can be stayed only by the mortgagor paying into Court the amount due, or by giving prima facie evidence that the power of sale is being exercised in a fraudulent or improper manner—Jagjivan v. Shridhar, 2 Bom. 252. So also, a sale can be stayed where it is proved that the mortgagee is selling the property in contravention of the terms of the mortgage-deed; and the sale can be stayed not only at the suit of the mortgagor but also at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee—Jerup Teja & Co. v. Peerbhoy, 23 Bom.L.R. 1241, 64 I.C. 634, A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 421.

432. Grounds for impeaching the sale :—If the property is purchased by the mortgagee himself benami, the sale is void—Vallabhdas v. Pranshankar, 30 Bom.L.R. 1519, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 24 (26), 113 I.C. 313. Where a mortgagee puts up the mortgaged property to sale, under a power given him by the mortgage-deed, he cannot sell it to himself, either alone or with others, nor to a trustee for himself—Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 21, p. 257. If a sale is held before the expiry of the three months from the date of notice as provided in clause (a) of sub-section (2), the sale is not liable to be set aside, but the mortgagor's remedy lies only by way of damages—Madras Deposit and Benefit Society v. Passanha, 11 Mad. 201. A mortgage was executed in favour of M to secure a loan of Rs. 1,500, and it conferred a power of sale on the mortgagee. M transferred the mortgage to D. Afterwards D made a new advance of Rs. 800 to the mortgagor and secured it by an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds of the same property. As D could get no repayment of the money after repeated demands, he sub-mortgaged the property to X, who purporting to act in exercise of the power of sale conferred by the original mortgage, sold the property to Y, not only for the original debt of Rs. 1,500 but also for the subsequent advance of Rs. 800 (with interest in both cases). Held that X could exercise the power of sale only in respect of Rs. 1,500. But the mortgagor is not entitled to have the sale set aside; he can only bring a suit for damages under this para, if he can show that he has been in any way damnified by the improper exercise of the power of sale—Ramkrishna v. Official Assignee, 45 Mad. 774, 43 M.L.J. 506, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 390, 69 I.C. 407. Where there is absolutely no power of sale a private sale of the property is absolutely void. This clause is intended to protect the purchaser in the event of an unauthorised exercise of a power of sale, but it does not apply to a case of purported exercise of a non-existent power—Mataprasad v. Kunnon, 6 Rang. 134, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 128, 110 I.C. 698.

A sale is, however, impeachable where the purchaser had notice of the improper exercise of the power prior to the sale of the property—Chibaldas v. Dayal Mowji, 6 Bom.L.R. 557; or where the power of sale was exercised in a fraudulent or improper manner contrary to the terms of the mortgage—Jagjivan v. Sridhar, 2 Bom. 252; Clara Mookerjee v. Surendra Manilal Mehta, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 208. Thus, where the sellers (mortgagee's agents) suddenly stopped the sale under such circumstances as naturally led bidders to suppose that the sale was over and to go away from the place of auction and the purchaser was present, held that the purchaser was affected with the notice of the impropriety of the sale; and the sale, not being a bona fide one, must be set aside—Chabildas v. Dayal, 31 Bom. 566 (P.C.). When a person purchases a part of the mortgaged property with knowledge that the mortgagee is entitled to sell the property without the intervention of the court he cannot challenge the validity of the sale for want of notice to him when it has been sold with notice to the mortgagor; neither can he claim under sec. 51 the value of the improvement made—R. S. Nadar v. Indian Bank Ltd., A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1296.

432A. "Remedy in damages":—Unless there is a fraud, the only remedy of the mortgagor is by way of damages against the mortgagee who brings the mortgaged property improperly to sale—Govindaswami v. Pukhraj, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 281, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 903, 1940 M.W.N. 722. In a suit by the mortgagor for an injunction restraining the mortgagee from putting the mortgaged property to sale the purchaser of the property at an improper sale by the mortgagee cannot be impleaded.—Ibid.

433. Appropriation of sale proceeds:—Sub-section (4) is taken from sec. 21 (3) of the English Conveyancing Act, 1881. After applying the sale proceeds to the payment of the costs of the sale, and in liquidation of the mortgage-money, the mortgagee must refund the surplus sale proceeds to the mortgagor. With regard to such money he is in the position of a trustee for the person entitled to it (Pichu Vadhiar v. Secretary of State, 40 Mad. 767), and he must pay the money to such person immediately after the sale; otherwise he will be liable to pay interest at 6 per cent. (i.e., Court rate) from the date of sale—Haji Abdul v. Haji Noor Mahomed, 16 Bom. 141. If he pays it to a wrong person, he does not exonerate himself from the liability to pay it to the rightful claimant—Tanner v. Heard, 23 Beav. 555; Matheson v. Clark, 3 Drew. 3; Charles v. Jones, 35 Ch. D. 25; Magnus v. Queensland National Bank, 37 Ch. D. 466.

69A. (a) A mortgagee having the right to exercise a power of sale under section 69 shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), be entitled to appoint, by writing signed by him or on his behalf, a receiver of the income of the mortgaged property or any part thereof.

(2) Any person who has been named in the mortgage-deed and is willing and able to act as receiver may be appointed by the mortgagee.

If no person has been so named, or if all persons named are unable or unwilling to act, or are dead, the mortgagee may appoint any person to whose appointment the mortgagor agrees; failing such agreement, the mortgagee shall be entitled to apply to the Court for the appointment of a receiver, and any person appointed by the Court shall be deemed to have been duly appointed by the mortgagee.

A receiver may at any time be removed by writing signed by or on behalf of the mortgagee and the mortgagor, or by the Court on application made by either party and on due cause shown.

A vacancy in the office of receiver may be filled in accordance with the provisions of this sub-section.

(3) A receiver appointed under the powers conferred by this section shall be deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor; and the mortgagor shall be solely responsible for the receiver's acts or defaults, unless the mortgage-deed otherwise provides or unless such acts or defaults are due to the improper intervention of the mortgagee.

(4) The receiver shall have power to demand and recover all the income of which he is appointed receiver, by suit, execution or otherwise, in the name either of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee to the full extent of the interest which the mortgagor could dispose of, and to give valid receipts accordingly for the same, and to exercise any powers which may have been delegated to him by the mortgagee in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(5) A person paying money to the receiver shall not be concerned to inquire if the appointment of the receiver was valid or not.

(6) The receiver shall be entitled to retain out of any money received by him, for his remuneration and in satisfaction of all costs, charges and expenses incurred by him as receiver, a commission at such rate not exceeding five per cent, on the gross amount of all money received as is specified in his appointment, and, if no rate is so specified, then at the rate of five per cent; on that gross amount, or at such other rate as the Court thinks fit to allow, on application made by him for that purpose.

(7) The receiver shall, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee, insure to the extent, if any, to which the mortgagee might have insured, and keep insured against loss or damage by fire, out of the money received by him, the mortgaged property or any part thereof being of an insurable nature.

(8) Subject to the provisions of this Act as to the application of insurance money, the receiver shall apply all money, received by him as follows, namely :—

- (i) in discharge of all rents, taxes, land revenue, rates and outgoings whatever affecting the mortgaged property ;*
- (ii) in keeping down all annual sums or other payments, and the interest on all principal sums, having priority to the mortgage in right whereof he is receiver ;*
- (iii) in payment of his commission, and of the premiums on fire, life or other insurances, if any, properly payable under the mortgage-deed or under this Act, and the cost of executing necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee ;*
- (iv) in payment of the interest falling due under the mortgage ;*
- (v) in or towards discharge of the principal money, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee ;*

and shall pay the residue, if any, of the money received by him to the person who, but for the possession of the receiver, would have been entitled to receive the income of which he is appointed receiver, or who is otherwise entitled to the mortgaged property.

(9) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage-deed ; and the provisions of sub-sections (3) to (8) inclusive may be varied or extended by the mortgage-deed, and, as so varied or extended, shall, as far as may be, operate in like manner and with all the like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in the said sub-sections.

(10) Application may be made, without the institution of a suit, to the Court for its opinion, advice or direction on any present question respecting the management or administration of the mortgaged property, other than questions of difficulty or importance not proper in the opinion of the Court for summary disposal. A copy of such application shall be served upon, and the hearing thereof may be attended by, such of the persons interested in the application as the Court may think fit.

The costs of every application under this sub-section shall be in the discretion of the Court.

(11) In this section, "the Court" means the Court which would have jurisdiction in a suit to enforce the mortgage.

This section has been inserted by sec. 35 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

Sub-sec. (1) :—This clause does not give the plaintiff an unqualified right to have a Receiver appointed in the circumstances mentioned in the clause. It would be for the Court to deal with the situation on its merits—per Panckridge, J. in In re Renuka Bose, Sub-non. Kameshwar v. Anath, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 93 (95), 42 C.W.N. 266, 175 I.C. 908. In the case of English mortgages a Receiver can be appointed in execution in cases where Sub-Rule (2) of Order 40, Rule 1, C. P. Code, would operate to prevent such an appointment—Ibid. The Court will not appoint a Receiver in execution of a mortgage-decree unless the circumstances are such as to make the sale of the properties a matter of serious difficulty—Ibid.

433A. Court's power to appoint receiver :—The Court has under the provisions of the Act an implied power to appoint a receiver subject to restrictions imposed on the power of such a receiver under Or. 40, r. 1, C. P. Code. Receivers can be appointed by the Court in execution of a final decree for sale—Amarnath v. Abhoy Kumar, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 24, 27 Pat. 534. As to the directions to be given by the Court to such a receiver, see this case.

A receiver is entitled to his expenses properly incurred ; but payments made by the mortgagee to the receiver privately, without the sanction of the court cannot be added to the mortgage amount—Venkata Satheyya v. Mulibai, A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 274.

Sub-sec. (3) :—A Receiver appointed under this section, although he is to be deemed to be an agent of the mortgagor, is not liable or entitled to pay the latter's prior unsecured debts, merely qua such Receiver. Consequently, in the absence of express or implied authority conferred by the mortgagee on the Receiver to pay such a debt, it is not legally recoverable from him and so when the Receiver sues a person having such prior claim for a debt due under a new contract with himself, the defendant is not entitled to set off his old debt due from the mortgagor, unless the Receiver assents—N. Banerjee & Co. v. Younie, 45 C.W.N. 169. The terms of an indenture of appointment bodily incorporating the provisions of sub-sec. (8) of this section do not show any express authority to pay any other debt before the dues of the mortgagee are satisfied, nor does a provision empowering the Receiver to carry on the mortgagor's business as before contain an implied authority to pay existing business debts—Ibid, per Mukherjea, J.

The existence of the receiver under sec. 69A is no impediment to the exercise by the mortgagee of the concurrent power of sale out of court under sec. 69—Saraswathi Bai v. Varadarajulu Naicker, (1956) 1 M.L.J. 223; Champalal v. Gian Kaur, A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 379. A receiver under this section cannot sell the mortgaged property—Krishnammal v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 424. A finding by the court on an application under sec. 69A for the appointment of a receiver that the applicant is not entitled to any mortgage right over the disputed property, being a finding in a summary procedure, does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent mortgage suit by the mortgagee—Venkatasubbiah v. Thirupurasundari, A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 185.

70. If, after the date of a mortgage, any accession is made to the mortgaged property, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to such accession.

Accession to mortgaged property.

Illustrations.

(a) A mortgages to B a certain field bordering on a river. The field is increased by alluvion. For the purposes of his security, B is entitled to the increase.

(b) A mortgages a certain plot of building land to B and afterwards erects a house on the plot. For the purposes of his security, B is entitled to the house as well as the plot.

434. Principle :—This section is converse to sec. 63.

The principle of this section is in accordance with the following observations of the Privy Council: "Most acquisitions by the mortgagor enure for the benefit of the mortgagee, increasing thereby the value of the security, and similarly, any acquisitions by the mortgagee are accretions to the mortgaged property or substitutions for it, and therefore subject to redemption"—Kishen Dut v. Mumtaz, 5 Cal. 198 (210) (P.C.). Where an accession to the mortgaged property takes place, it becomes incorporated in the original security as though it has been in existence at the time when the original subject of the security was given.—Krishna Gopal v. Miller, 29 Cal. 803.

Scope :—This section regulates the rights of the mortgagor and the mortgagee inter se, and of course applies to their representatives. Third parties who have nothing to do with the security and between whom and the mortgagor and the mortgagee there is no privity of contract, are not affected by the provisions of this section. If a stranger, under a bona fide but mistaken belief that he has an absolute title to a land, which belongs to somebody else, puts up a building upon it, without any knowledge that the land is mortgaged, the mortgagee cannot claim the building against this stranger third party; but the latter will be entitled to remove the materials—Nannu Mal v. Ram Chander, infra. There is no reason to restrict the scope of the section to accessions made by the mortgagor personally. The representatives of the mortgagee and the mortgagor would be governed equally by the rule, it being immaterial whether they are merely heirs or subsequent transferees—Chettyar Firm v. Sein Htaung, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 420 (422), 159 I.C. 1038.

But an auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree passed on the foot of a prior mortgage, to which the second mortgagee was no party, acquires all the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, and must be treated as a representative of the mortgagor; consequently if he erects a building on the land the building will be liable to be sold as an accession to the second mortgage. The fact that he had no notice of the second mortgage is immaterial.—Nannu Mal v. Ram Chander, 53 All. 334 (F.B.), 1931 A.L.J. 273, 132 I.C. 401, A.I.R. 1931 All. 277 (284-286).

Application :—This section cannot apply to the case of a mortgagee who has purchased a share of the equity of redemption and sues to enforce his mortgage—Arunagiri v. Radhakrishna, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 44 (47), (1941) 2 M.L.J. 520.

Contract to the contrary :—In the case of a charge created by a compromise decree, there can be a "contract to the contrary"—Jagadeesa v. Bavamamlal, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 293, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 143.

435. Instances :—Where a village, without specification of boundaries is mortgaged as a whole, the mortgagee is, on the one hand, entitled to it as a security with any casual increase which may accrue to it; and is, on the other hand, subject to redemption by the mortgagor to the same extent—Sadashiv v. Vithal, 11 B.H.C.R. 32.

Where after the execution of two mortgages in respect of a house and certain lands appurtenant thereto, the mortgagor erected two other houses on the lands, and subsequently executed various mortgages in respect of the several houses, it was held that for the purposes of the security of the two prior mortgages, the two new houses were accessions to the mortgaged property, and became incorporated with the original subject of security—Krishna Gopal v. Miller, 29 Cal. 803. Where two houses and a bungalow and other property were first mortgaged to one person, and later on the houses and the bungalow were pulled down and seven new houses were built thereon, which were mortgaged to another, the first mortgagee had a right to sell the seven new houses under a decree for sale obtained by him on his mortgage—Bhooresao v. Mahomed, 1 C.P.L.R. 38. Where a shop mortgaged with its site is destroyed by fire and a new shop is constructed on the site, it will be regarded as an accession to the mortgaged property—Shripad v. Kashibai, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 248, I.L.R. 1945 Bom. 294. Where a site only is mortgaged and not the building thereon or where after mortgage of the site, a building is erected thereon by the mortgagor and the mortgagee obtains the site in execution of his mortgage decree, he is entitled to have possession of the site after removal of the building, the value of which he need not pay unless he wants it and the mortgagor is willing to sell it at an agreed price—Anthony

v. George, A.I.R. 1950 Tr.-Coch. 78. Where the land containing a building is at first mortgaged, and machinery is subsequently planted in the building for permanent use, such machinery is an accession to the mortgaged property—R. M. P. M. Chettyar Firm v. Siemens Ltd., 11 Rang. 322, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 195. Improvements, e.g., electric installation effected on the mortgaged property, which are in the nature of fixtures and immoveable, are accessions to the mortgaged property and are liable for the mortgage charges—Punjab & Sind Bank v. Kishen Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 350, 16 Lah. 881, 156 I.C. 795. But where the property mortgaged included a rice-mill and various parts of machinery pertaining to the engine or other huller which was intended to be set up with the help of the engine and the schedule referred to all "samans" necessary to fit up the mill and the puller and all accessories, and for sometime the concern worked only as a huller but later on the mortgagors decided to work as a sheller also with the power derived from the engine and connected the sheller system with the huller by a belt and the two could be separated by taking away the belt: it was held that the machinery pertaining to the sheller system was not comprised in the mortgage security and the principles of this section did not apply—Satyanaryanamurthi v. Gangayya, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 692, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 684, 1939 M.W.N. 383. A theatre erected on a leasehold land after the execution of the mortgage thereof, would be included in it, unless there was a contract to the contrary. The fact that the land mortgaged is a leasehold is immaterial, for this Act makes no distinction between freehold and leasehold property—Macleod v. Kissan, 30 Bom. 250. As a rule, buildings erected on the mortgaged land will be treated as an accession to the mortgaged property. But if a building is erected merely for temporary use, there being no intention that it should be attached to the land even slightly, the mortgagee will acquire no interest in it—Jones on Mortgage, §433; Nannu Mal v. Ram Chander, 53 All. 334 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1931 All. 277. A semi-pucca house built on the mortgaged land is however an accession to the land—Chettyar Firm v. Sein Ttaung, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 420, 159 I.C. 1038; see also Abdul Qayum v. Mt. Turi, A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 49. Where an undivided share in a property is mortgaged and in partition the mortgagor is allotted a specific property as substituted security, the improvement effected and new buildings constructed on such allotted property by the mortgagor or his transferee must be treated as accession and are available for satisfaction of the mortgage-debt—Amar v. Bhagwan, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 771, 14 Lah. 749. The mortgage of the "entire taluka B" assessed to a certain revenue was held to comprise an alluvial mahal appertaining to the taluka, although it has been separately assessed—Ganpat v. Saddat Ali, 2 All. 787. Where accretion to the original holding by clearing new land is considerable, the clearing is not however accretion within the meaning of this section—Tay Gyi v. Maung Yan, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 81, 146 I.C. 674. So Government waste lands, adjoining the mortgaged property, which are brought under cultivation, do not become subject to the mortgage and secs. 63 and 70 have no application to such extension of cultivation—S. R. & C. Firm v. Ko P. Sin, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 127, 162 I.C. 383.

Where a co-sharer of a Touzi taking advantage of frequent alluvion and diluvion of lands dispossessed his co-sharers and possessed all the reformed lands adversely to them, and though his title did not extend to the whole, he mortgaged the entire Touzi, but later on after another diluvion the mouza was again formed into thrice as big as the old one actually mortgaged and recorded as such in the settlement record: held that by his possession the mortgagor added the reformed land to the mortgage-security and as such the whole of the enlarged area must go to the mortgagee as security—Saila Bala v. Swarna Moyee, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 275 (277), 68 C.L.J. 528, 181 I.C. 867. But if the interest of the recorded persons is that of licensees or tenants-at-will, there is no accession to the mortgaged property if the mortgagee acquires the interest by buying those persons out and the landlord on redemption is entitled to the possession of the plots in their original condition, because he can bring about the disappearance of these persons without any costs—Gaya Prasad v. Ram Prasad, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 358, 179 I.C. 923.

The purchase of mokarari interest is an accession to the shikmi right already mortgaged, and the purchaser at a sale in execution of the decree on the mortgage is entitled to claim the right to the mokarari interest as well, basing his right to it as an accession—Surja Narain v. Nanda Lal, 33 Cal. 1212. If, after the mortgage, the mortgagor sells a portion of the mortgaged land to the mortgagee and then repurchases it from the mortgagee, the mortgage attaches to the portion for the benefit of the mortgagee—Deolie Chand v. Nirban, 5 Cal. 253. The enlargement of, or the removal of incumbrances from, the estate of a mortgagor, effected by himself, will generally enure for the benefit of the mortgagee by increasing the value of the security—Shyama Charan v. Ananda, 3 C.W.N. 323. Where a mortgagee sub-mortgages his mortgage-rights and afterwards purchases from his mortgagor the right of redemption in the mortgaged property, such accession in interest enures for the benefit of the sub-mortgagee and he will be entitled to sue for the sale of the entire proprietary right in the same way as if the proprietary interest had been mortgaged to him from the first—Ajudhia Pershad v. Man Singh, 25 All. 46. A subsequent mortgagee who has foreclosed stands in the position of the mortgagor in relation to the prior mortgagee. If he is also in the position of a landlord with regard to the original mortgagors after the foreclosure, and the mortgagors (i.e., his tenants) surrender the occupancy holding to him, the surrender operates as an accretion to the mortgage—Bhagwantrao v. Subh Karan, 25 N.L.R. 12, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 225 (226). In a mortgage deed the security was described as "Municipal S. N. 222-B-1 together with the cinema theatre building being built on items 1 and 2". The mortgagee himself purchased the property in execution of his mortgage decree. The mortgagee claimed not only the building but anything fixed to the building as a cinema, such as ceiling boards and exhaust fans: Held that what was sold was the building and not the cinema theatre and consequently the ceiling boards and exhaust fans did not pass to the purchaser—Insurance & Banking Corpn. v. S. Paramasiva Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 610.

436. Accession after decree :—The accession to the mortgaged property must take place before the mortgage becomes extinguished. Where acquisitions are made by a mortgagor after the decree for sale has been passed or after the mortgaged property has been sold, such acquisitions do not form accretions to the mortgaged property so as to pass to the mortgagee or to the purchaser in Court-auction, but belong only to the mortgagor, as the mortgage-interest had ceased to exist at the time the acquisitions were made—Kapniah Sivananjiah v. Sithay Gounden, 41 M.L.J. 490, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 627, 70 I.C. 367; Haradhan v. Hargobind, 2 P.L.T. 665, 63 I.C. 552. But in another Madras case, where a property was mortgaged by a Muhammadan woman and her eldest son, and after the decree on the mortgage was passed, the shares of the mortgagors were increased by inheritance of the share of another son who died after the passing to the decree, it was held that the increased shares were liable to be attached and sold in execution of the mortgage decree—Ajijuddin v. Sheik Budan, 18 Mad. 492; Kastoori Devi v. Guru Granth Saheb, A.I.R. 1965 All 193. A mortgage decree for sale does not extinguish the mortgage. Consequently, under this section, the mortgagee-decree-holder is entitled to have his decree satisfied by sale of an accession made after the passing of the decree—Shripad v. Kashibai, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 248, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 294; Sidheswar Prasad Singh v. Ram Saroop Singh, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 412 (F.B.).

71. When the mortgaged property is a lease * *, and the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to the new lease.

Amendment :—The words “for a term of years” have been omitted by sec. 36 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), as they are unnecessary. These words have also been omitted from secs. 64 and 65.

This section is supplementary to sec. 64.

437. Principle :—The principle of this section is that a renewed lease is a graft upon the old stock and is therefore subject to the same equities regarding foreclosure and redemption as the old lease—Moody v. Mathews, 7 Ves. 174. The mortgagor of a renewable lease can hold a renewed lease only subject to the mortgage—Leigh v. Burnett, 29 Ch. D. 231. The mortgagee gets the benefit of the renewed lease as security for his mortgage, although the renewal may have been obtained without any covenant for renewal—Visnu Trimbak v. Tattia Vasudeb, 1 B.H.C.R. 22; Mahomed Assudollah v. Karamoottoolah, 4 N.W.P. 11. The rule equally applies though the renewal was obtained after the original term had expired—Pickering v. Bowels, 1 Br. C. C. 197; or though the new lease was not to commence till after the expiration of the old one—Rakestraw v. Brewer, 2 P. Wms. 115. If a new lease or other interest of a like nature be obtained by the mortgagor or his representative or successor, either on a forfeiture (by any contrivance or otherwise) of the original lease, or by other means, the owner of the mortgage or charge will have the benefit for the purpose of the security, whether he be a volunteer or purchaser for valuable consideration, and although money was expended by a volunteer in obtaining the new interest—Moody v. Mathews, 7 Ves. 174.

If the mortgagor renders the renewal impossible by purchasing the reversion, the whole of the estate so acquired will be subject to the mortgage—Trumper v. Trumper, 14 Eq. 295.

72. When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he may spend such money as is necessary—

(a) for the due management of the property and the collection of the rents and profits thereof ;

(b) for its preservation from destruction, forfeiture, or sale ;

(c) for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property ;

(d) for making his own title thereto good against the mortgagor ; and,

(e) when the mortgaged property is a renewable lease-hold for the renewal of the lease ;

and may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money at the rate of interest payable on the principal, and, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum.

Where the property is by its nature, insurable, the mortgagee may also, in the absence of a contract to the contrary,

72. A mortgagee may spend such money as is necessary—

(b) for the preservation of the mortgaged property from destruction, forfeiture or sale ;

(c) for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property ;

(d) for making his own title thereto good against the mortgagor ; and,

(e) when the mortgaged property is a renewable lease-hold, for the renewal of the lease ;

and may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money at the rate of interest payable on the principal and where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum.

Provided that the expenditure of money by the mortgagee under clause (b) or clause (c) shall not be deemed to be necessary unless the mortgagor has been called upon and has failed to take proper and timely steps to preserve the property or to support the title.

Where the property is by its nature insurable, the mortgagee may also, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, insure and keep insured against loss or damage by fire the whole or any part of such property, and the premiums paid for any such insurance shall be a charge on the mortgaged property, in addition to the principal money, with the same priority and with interest at the same rate. But the amount of such insurance shall not exceed the amount specified in this behalf in the mortgage-deed, or (if no such amount is therein specified) two thirds of the amount that would be required, in case of total destruction, to reinstate the property insured.

insure and keep insured against loss or damage by fire the whole or any part of such property; and the premiums paid for any such insurance shall be added to the principal money with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal money or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum. But the amount of such insurance shall not exceed the amount specified in this behalf in the mortgage-deed or (if no such amount is therein specified) two thirds of the amount that would be required in case of total destruction to reinstate the property insured.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize the mortgagee to insure when an insurance of the property is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor to the amount in which the mortgagee is hereby authorized to insure.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize the mortgagee to insure when an insurance of the property is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor to the amount in which the mortgagee is hereby authorized to insure.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 37 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The reasons are stated below in proper places.

438. Application of section :—The rules contained in this section only reproduce the doctrine which the Courts of justice in India have uniformly adopted prior to the passing of this Act—Girdhar Lal v. Bhole Nath, 10 All. 611; Bohra Thakur Das v. Collector, 28 All. 593. Therefore the doctrines of this section will be applied to mortgages created before the enactment of the T. P. Act—Ibid.

This section, like sec. 69 of the Contract Act, is based upon the fiction of an implied request by the mortgagor—Ram Tahal Sing v. Bissesar, 23 W.R. 305 (P.C.); Chedilal v. Bhagwan Das, 11 All. 234. It will not however apply if the parties enter into an agreement to the contrary. Thus, where by the terms of a mortgage, the mortgagor personally covenanted to pay the municipal taxes, the mortgagee who pays the same cannot add them to the mortgage-amount under clause (b)—Sayed Ibrahim v. Arumugathayee, 38 Mad. 18 (23), 16 I.C. 877. So again, where the mortgagee has specially undertaken to incur the expenses of the litigation necessary to recover the lands, he is not entitled to claim such costs from the mortgagor under clause (c)—Thekkamanengath v. Pazhiot, 28 M.L.J. 184, 27 I.C. 989.

Where the mortgage-deed was silent as to the payment of rent to the Zemindar and it stated that interest on the mortgage-money and the profits from the property mortgaged would be equal, this section had no application nor could sec. 76 (h) apply and the mortgagee who had paid the rent was not entitled to tack it on to the mortgage-money. The case was governed by sec. 77 and according to which sec. 76 (h) could not apply to such a case—Durga Shankar v. Ganga Sahai, A.I.R. 1932 All. 500, (1932) A.L.J. 493. The mortgagee can recover costs, charges and expenses incurred subsequent to the preliminary decree with interest—Sultan Pillai v. Madhavan Pillai, 1968 Ker. L.T. 248.

439. Mortgagee need not be in possession :—The language of the old section shows that it was limited to cases "where during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee took possession of the mortgaged property." In spite of these words, it was held that this section was not exhaustive and that a mortgagee making payments to save the mortgaged property from being sold for arrears of revenue had an additional charge on the property for the sums so paid by him, although he was not a mortgagee "in possession"—Rakhohari v. Bipradas, 31 Cal. 975; Upendra v. Tara Prasanna, 30 Cal. 794. The Bombay High Court also held that this section could not be taken to imply that a mortgagee not in possession had no similar right to charge the mortgaged property for payment made by him in relation to the security and to add the amount to the original loan—Nadershaw v. Shirin Bai, 25 Bom.L.R. 839 (843), A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 264. So also, in an old Privy Council case it was held that a mortgagee, who was not a mortgagee in possession, had a right to tack to the mortgage the amount of revenue paid by him to save the estate—Nagendra Chunder v. Kaminee, 11 M.I.A. 241 (259).

These words have therefore been omitted from the present section.

If a usufructuary mortgagee fails to obtain possession, he has no charge on the property for the mortgage-money, but is only entitled to a money-decree under sec. 68, and consequently any amount paid by him to save the estate from sale cannot be charged on the mortgaged property—per Subramania Ayyar, J. in Periantha v. Marudainayagam, 22 Mad. 332 (336), following Arunachalam v. Ayyavayyan, 21 Mad. 476 (F.B.).

A usufructuary mortgagee, who grants a lease of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor at a rent equal to the interest on the mortgage, is entitled to a charge on the mortgaged property for payment of Government revenue made by him, which ought to have been paid by the mortgagor—Imdad Hasan Khan v. Badri Prosad, 20 All. 401 (407, 408).

440. Necessary expenses :—The question whether the expenditure was 'necessary' is one of fact—Kadir Moidin v. Nepean, 26 Cal. 1 (P.C.); Jagannath v. Jagjiban, 28 O.C. 221, 87 I.C. 829, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 429.

The mortgagor and the mortgagee may enter into an agreement in the mortgage-deed that a fixed sum shall be charged annually for expenses to be incurred by the mortgagee in possession for certain specified purposes (e.g., repairs to canals, expenses on account of village headmen, service inams of village headmen, etc.).—Chalikani v. Venkatarayanam v. Zemindar of Tuni, 46 Mad. 108 (113) (P.C.), 71 I.C. 1035, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 26. See also Md. Rahimtulla v. Esmail, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 133 (135), 48 Bom. 404, 51 I.A. 236, 80 I.C. 411.

Proviso :—The proviso curtails the power of the mortgagee to make the expenses under clauses (b) and (c). Unless he gives notice to the mortgagor, the expenses will not be deemed to be 'necessary'.

The proviso added by the Amending Act of 1929 is not retrospective. Therefore a mortgagee who had paid prior to 1929 the municipal taxes could add the amount to the principal even if no notice had been served by him on the mortgagor—Narayanaswami v. Perumal, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 720, (1953) 2 M.L.J. 150. Under the Proviso the mortgagee who was out of possession could not pay the land revenue without calling upon the mortgagor to pay it—Dal Singh v. Sunder Kunwar, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 208, (1944) O.W.N. 58. See also Vasudevayya v. Bhagirathi Bai, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 333 (1950) 1 M.L.J. 5. The words "add such money to the principal" in this section do not exclude the personal right of the mortgagee to sue the mortgagor under sec. 69 of the contract Act—ibid and Dal Singh v. Sundar Kunwar, supra.

Clause (a) omitted :—Clause (a) relating to expenses for the management of the property and the collection of rents and profits has been transferred to clause (h) of sec 76.

442. Clause (b) :—Expenses for preservation from destruction :—If the mortgagee of a thatched house reconstructs and repairs it to keep it habitable he is entitled to a charge for the money spent with interest—Jogendranath v. Raj Narain, 9 W.R. 488; Lakshman v. Hari Denkar, 4 Bom. 584. Where the mortgagee rebuilds the mortgaged house destroyed by accidental fire in terms of the deed of mortgage, the mortgagor must pay the cost of rebuilding before redemption—Sakharam Shet v. Amtha, 14 Bom. 28. Where the mortgagee rebuilds a katcha house after it has fallen down into a pucca house as contemplated by the parties at the time of the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagee can recover the cost of rebuilding—Qasim v. Bhagwandeem, 7 O.W.N. 488, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 337 (338), 126 I.C. 397. See also Notes under the new sec. 63A for improvements. As regards repairs, see sec. 76 (d).

443. Preservation from forfeiture or sale :—A mortgagee in possession is entitled to claim sums paid for arrears of Government revenue or of rent or in satisfaction of a decree, before the property which he saves from the revenue or execution sale can be redeemed by the mortgagor because such payments are small in the nature of salvage payments—Girdhar v. Bholanath, 10 All. 611; Upendra v. Tara Prasanna, 30 Cal. 794; Manohar v. Hazarimal, 35 C.W.N. 1040 (1044) (P.C.); Anandi v. Dur Najaf Ali, 13 All. 195; Imdad Hasan v. Badri Prosad, 20 All. 401 (408); Ram Sewak v. Sheo Naik, 45 All. 388 (390); Rakhohari v. Bipra Das, 31 Cal. 975 (978); Nilawa v. Krishnappa, 8 Bom.L.R. 350; Rajkumar Lal v. Jaikaram Das, 5 P.L.J. 248, 57 I.C. 653; Ma Pwa v. K. P. S. A. R. P. Firm, 12 Bur.L.T. 36, 43 I.C. 190; Venkata Narasimha v. Kuppa Chetti, 40 M.L.J. 524, 63 I.C. 24; Ambika v. Ramgati, 14 I.C. 418; Ramakrishnaiah v. Chandrasekhara, A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 114; Venkata Setteyya v. Muli Bai,

A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 274. The principle of salvage lien is applicable to payment of rent and other dues the non-payment of which would obliterate all subsidiary interests. For the application of this principle and that of subrogation and waiver of charge, see Swaminatha v. Ramanatha, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 573, I.L.R. 1944 Mad. 44. Where the mortgagee professes to pay rent payable by the mortgagor, not as mortgagee but under a purchase afterwards found by the court to be invalid, must be credited with the amounts paid as rent, because the conveyance having failed he made payments as mortgagee—Foodeni v. Azhar Hussain, 10 Pat. 210, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 325 (326), 131 I.C. 814.

The right of the mortgagee under this clause will be subject to the obligation imposed upon him by sec. 76 (c). This section imposes an obligation to pay the revenue and Government charges when they can be paid out of the income. If they can be so paid, the mortgagee cannot recover them under this section as a lien upon the property. It is only when they cannot be paid and the mortgagee has paid them out of his own pocket that he can recover them as a lien under this clause—Farzand Ali v. Kaniz Fatima, 22 O.C. 270, 54 I.C. 264.

The word 'sale' in this clause is a sale ejusdem generis with destruction and forfeiture, that is, a sale by which the mortgagee's security is likely to be imperilled. It does not, therefore, contemplate a sale merely of the equity of redemption. This section includes only payments made to save the security itself—Venkata Narasimha v. Kuppa, 40 M.L.J. 524, 63 I.C. 24 (per Ramesma J.; Spencer, J. contra); Hardeo v. Deputy Commissioner, 1 Luck. 367, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 281 (286); Rajendra Prosad v. Bahuria, 1 P.L.J. 589, 38 I.C. 232; Sheo Dulare v. Batasha, 16 O.C. 48, 19 I.C. 744. In other words, a sale which does not affect the interest of the mortgagee is not covered by this section—Gaya Prosad v. Gur Dayal, 22 O.C. 32, 51 I.C. 549. In Allahabad, however, a sale merely of the equity of redemption is not permitted where the property is subject to a usufructuary mortgage, but the entire property is sold, and therefore a usufructuary mortgagee paying off a decree for sale of the property can be said to have saved his security from sale, and is entitled to tack the amount so paid to his mortgage-money—Abdul Qaiymu v. Saddruddin, 27 All. 403. Where a prior mortgagee deposited money under O. 21 r. 89 to set aside a sale made at the instance of a puisne mortgagee, he must be allowed to add the amount to the mortgage-money, because the sale proclamation purported to sell not merely the equity of redemption but the entire property—Jagannath v. Jagjiwan, 28 O.C. 221, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 429 (431).

A subsequent mortgagee, who makes a payment to the prior mortgagee who has got a decree for the sale does not acquire any additional charge on the property but is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee—Perianna v. Marudainayagam, 22 Mad. 332 (335). See sec. 92.

A payment of a public charge for non-payment of which the property is not liable to immediate sale (e.g., road-cess) does not constitute a charge upon the property—Rajendra Prosad v. Bahuria, 1 P.L.J. 589, 38 I.C. 232, following Upendra v. Tara Prasanna, 30 Cal. 794. So also, money paid for municipal tax is not allowed to be charged on the property (for it is only the moveable and not the immoveable property which is liable to be sold in the first instance for non-payment of tax)—Syed Ibrahim v. Arumugathayee, 38 Mad. 18 (23); Gopala Krishna v. Sanjeera, 38 M.L.J. 228, 55 I.C. 333.

445. Clause (c)—Supporting the mortgagor's title:—A mortgagee is allowed proper costs, charges and expenses incurred by him in relation to the mortgage debt or mortgage security including the costs of litigation properly undertaken by him—Nadershaw v. Shrinibai, 25 Bom.L.R. 839, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 264, 87 I.C. 129; see also Sir Md. Ejaz Rasul v. Saigid Ali, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 498 (501), 1941 O.W.N. 768, 194 I.C. 615; Venkata Setteyya v. Mulilai, A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 274. Where the mortgagor's title is impeached (e.g. by tenants) the costs incurred by the mortgagee in defending such title constitute a charge upon the property mortgaged—Pokree Saheb v. Pokree Beary, 21 Mad. 32. Where the mortgagee had to take criminal proceedings against persons disputing mortgagor's title and setting up the title of a stranger, he could recover the costs from the mortgagor—Venkataswami v. Muthusami, 34 M.L.J. 177, 45 I.C. 949. But where a mortgagee with knowledge that a third person had an interest in the mortgaged property accepted a mortgage of the property, he cannot claim from the mortgagor the costs incurred by him in the litigation for opposing the claim of that person—Ram Ditta Mal v. Karm Devi, 190 P.L.R. 1912, 17 I.C. 243.

446. Clause (d)—Defence of mortgagee's title against mortgagor:—The mortgagee is further entitled to add to his mortgage-money the necessary expenses of defending his own title against the mortgagor, for instance, the expenses of defending an action brought by the mortgagor to set aside the mortgage, which was dismissed with costs—Eardley v. Knight, 41 Ch. D. 537; Dattaram v. Vinayak, 28 Bom. 181; or the costs incurred by the mortgagee in defending an unsuccessful redemption-suit brought by the mortgagor—Vanadgrajulu v. Dhanalakshmi, 16 M.L.T. 365, 26 I.C. 184. When a mortgagee files a suit to assert his title against the mortgagor denying his title the amount spent in litigation may be added to the mortgage money—Minakshi v. Janaki, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 592 (594), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 124, 55 M.L.W. 413.

447. Clause (e)—Renewal of leases:—A mortgagee is entitled to charge the mortgagor for renewal though there be no covenant to that effect—Lacon v. Mertins, (1743) 2 Atk. 1 (at p. 4). A mortgagee of a Kanomdar paying the renewal fee of the landlord is, in addition to his right under this section of adding such amount to the mortgage money, entitled to a prior charge by the doctrine of salvage lien—Swaminatha v. Ramanatha, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 573, LL.R. 1944 Mad. 44.

448. "May add such money to the principal":—The mortgagee, instead of adding the expenses incurred to the principal money, is entitled to sue the mortgagor personally—Venkataswami v. Muthusami, 34 M.L.J. 177, 45 I.C. 949. See also Munnabai v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 259, I.L.R. 1952 Nag. 366. Thus, where the mortgagee has spent money to preserve the property from sale under clause (b), this section does not take away from him the right to recover the money personally by a separate suit—Parsotam v. Jaijit, 1890 A.W.N. 90; Nikka Mal v. Sulaiman, 2 All. 193; Murray v. M. S. M. Firm, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 47, 161 I.C. 626; Tirumalai v. Muthusami, supra, at p. 952. A darpatnidar making deposit and obtaining possession of the patni under sec. 13 of the Bengal Patni Regulation, 1819, can under this section, add the subsequent payments made by him for head rents of the patni, to his original deposit—Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Saradindu, A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 250, 52 C.W.N. 724. So also, where the mortgagee had to institute criminal proceedings against the tenants who had cut off and carried away the crops on the land asserting the title of a stranger as owner, he was entitled to recover the expenses of the prosecution by bringing a suit against the mortgagor or his heir personally—Venkatasami v. Muthusami, 34 M.L.J. 177, 45 I.C. 949. The mortgagee can elect either to sue for the money separately or to add it to the mortgage-money under this section. Consequently when he has obtained a personal decree for such sum, he cannot add it again to the mortgage-debt—Imdad Hasan v. Badri Prosad, 20 All. 401 (408). If he relinquishes his lien for the sum spent, he cannot afterwards enforce it; but he is not precluded from bringing a suit to recover the money personally from the mortgagor. Thus, where the mortgagor deposited in Court under sec. 83 the mortgage-money only but not the money paid by the mortgagee for Government revenue, and the latter accepted the deposit and gave up possession of the property, held that he could not afterwards sue for the recovery of the amount by sale of the mortgaged property, but he might bring a simple money suit for the amount—Anandi Ram v. Dur Najaf Ali, 13 All. 195.

Where by the terms of a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagees were to pay to the mortgagors nothing but Malikana and that they were not accountable to the mortgagors otherwise, it was held in a suit for redemption by the mortgagors that they were entitled to redeem on payment of the principal amount of the mortgage after deducting the Malikana not paid—Behary Lal v. Shib Lal, A.I.R. 1924 All. 591, 46 All. 633, 82 I.C. 25.

Under the English law, the expenses cannot be recovered from the mortgagor personally, by a separate suit, except where there is an express agreement by the mortgagor to that effect. The mortgagee can only add the money to the mortgage amount—Ex parte Fewings, 25 Ch. D. 338; Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1. The same view has been taken in Sheo Dulari v. Batashā, 16 O.C. 48, 19 I.C. 744; Jagennath v. Jagjiwan, 12 O.L.J. 289, and Nadershaw v. Shirinbai, 25 Bom. L.R. 839, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 264, 87 I.C. 129. But see Bhuneswari Devi v. Sheogovind Lall Missir, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 185 where it has been laid down that a separate suit for reimbursement under sec. 69 of the Contract Act has not been barred by this section.

449. Interest :—All money spent under this section by the mortgagee shall carry interest at the same rate as the principal, and where no such rate is fixed, at 9 per cent. per annum. The interest shall be calculated from the time the expense was incurred—Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Maddock 281; Gaya Prasad v. Gur Dayal, 22 O.C. 32, 51 I.C. 549. The interest shall be simple and not compound—Kishori Mohun v. Ganga Babu, 23 Cal. 228 (P.C.). See also Sakharam v. Ram Chandra, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 19, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 209. No interest is allowed on money spent on improvements—Ibid; Bhabhanbai v. Kanji Ravji, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 90. Where the mortgagee is in possession but the mortgage is not a usufructuary one the interest on the cost of improvement will have to be calculated—Ibid. A mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to interest on the money paid in respect of the Government revenue in excess of the amount payable as such on the date of the original mortgage—Kaniz Fizza v. Datadin, 2 O.W.N. 650, 90 I.C. 184, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 678.

Costs :—Where the mortgagee's right to possession was challenged and he was compelled to file a suit which was decreed with mesne profits and costs, the mortgagee could claim actual cost incurred by him in the suit; but he was not entitled to add the amount of mesne profits to the mortgage debt—Ramakrishnaiah v. Chandrasekhara, A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 114. Where the mortgagee was allowed costs against the other party in the former's suit for defending his title but he made no attempt to execute the decree, he was not entitled to debit the mortgagor in his accounts with these costs Sakharam v. Ramchandra, supra.

Insurance :—The last two paras of the section are taken from sec. 101 (1) (ii) of the English Law of Property Act, 1925.

The proportion of two-thirds has been fixed upon because mortgagees seldom lend more than two-thirds of the value of the property which is given as security.

73. Where mortgaged property is sold through failure to pay arrears of revenue or rent due in respect thereof, the mortgagee has a charge on the surplus (if any) of the proceeds, after payment thereof of the said arrears, for the amount remaining due on the mortgage, unless the sale has been occasioned by some default on his part.

Charge on proceeds of revenue-sale.

73. (1) Where the mortgaged property or any part thereof or any interest therein is sold owing to failure to pay arrears of revenue or other charges of a public nature or rent due in respect of such property, and such failure did not arise from any default of the mortgagee, the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage-money, in whole or in part, out of any surplus of the sale-proceeds remaining after payment of the arrears and of all charges and deductions directed by law.

(2) Where the mortgaged property or any part thereof or any interest therein is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (I of 1894), or any other enactment for the time being in force providing for the compulsory acquisition of immoveable property, the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage-money, in whole or in part, out of the amount due to the mortgagor as compensation.

(3) Such claims shall prevail against all other claims except those of prior encumbrancers, and may be enforced notwithstanding that the principal money on the mortgage has not become due.

Amendment :—This section has been re-drafted by sec. 38 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The reasons are stated below.

The section as so-re-drafted in 1929 has retrospective effect—Girdhar Lal v. Alay Hasan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 221 (F.B.), (1938) A.L.J. 313, 174 I.C. 702.

450. Principle :—The principle embodied in this section is the principle of substitution of properties and securities in favour of a person who through no fault of his own is deprived of the original properties and securities—Subbaraju v. Seetharama Raju, 39 Mad. 283 (287); Penumeta v. Veegesena, 28 I.C. 232. This section contemplates that when a mortgaged property is sold for arrears of revenue or rent not through any fault of the mortgagee, the mortgage lien is transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds—Nim Chand v. Asutosh, 9 C.W.N. 117. The surplus sale-proceeds in the hands of the Collector after sale of the mortgaged property for arrears of revenue must be taken to represent the property itself, so that a decree obtained by the mortgagee declaring his lien on the property will have the effect of giving him a lien on the surplus money itself—Krishtodas v. Ramkant, 6 Cal. 142 (147); Gosto Behary v. Shib Nath, 20 Cal. 241 (244). The object of this section is to relieve the mortgagee of the effects of the injury which he would suffer by reason of the property being sold, and to give him a right over the residue of the sale-proceeds—Beni Prasad v. Rewat Lal, 24 Cal. 746 (749).

451. Scope and application of section :—The whole object is that the mortgagee's security should not be diminished. If portions of the property are converted into cash that cash also should be available to him as a part of his security—Mukhram v. Bateswar, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 307, 169 I.C. 805. The right given to the mortgagee by this section is over and above the right he has under the law to realize the mortgage-debt by enforcing his security against the mortgaged property or property substituted therefor—Girdhar Lal v. Alay Hasan, supra, at pp. 223, 226. This section is intended to refer to cases where the effect of a sale for arrears of revenue or rent is to nullify the mortgage—Beni Prasad v. Rewat Lal, 24 Cal. 746 (749). Where the sale is not free from incumbrances, the mortgagee can lay no claim to the surplus sale-proceeds but must enforce his lien against the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser—Prem Chand v. Purnima, 15 Cal. 546; Narotam v. Sukhraj, 3 Luck. 719, 5 O.W.N. 791, 116 I.C. 49, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 442 (448); Krishna Chandra v.

Bipin Behari, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 176, 16 Pat. 299, 174 I.C. 474. Thus, the sale, in execution of a rent-decree under sec. 152, Oudh Rent Act, of an under-proprietary holding which has been mortgaged by the judgment-debtor passed only the interest of the judgment debtor, i.e., his equity of redemption; that is, the holding is not sold free from incumbrances, and consequently this section has no application—Narotam v. Sukhraj, supra.

Where in spite of acquisition of a portion of the property by the municipality and the substitution thereof by another plot as compensation, a decree is passed creating a charge over the entire property without mentioning the substituted property the auction purchaser cannot claim any title to the substituted property—Nallamuthu v. Aravamuthu, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 263.

Where a Zamindar mortgages his zamindary with his sir lands, and by losing his Zemindary rights becomes an exproprietary tenant in respect of the sir lands, the usufructuary mortgage does not become ineffectual and takes effect as a mortgage of the ex-proprietary rights—Shamsher v. Lad Batuk, A.I.R. 1953 All. 147.

So long as the mortgagee's claim is not satisfied, the unsecured creditor of the mortgagor will not have any right to the surplus sale-proceeds—Gosto Behari v. Shib Nath, 20 Cal. 241 (244). See sub-section (3).

This section applies also where the lien instead of being actually destroyed is in jeopardy. Thus, where the property is sold with power to avoid all incumbrances, as in a rent-sale under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the mortgagee may abandon his lien upon the mortgaged property and claim to realise the demands from the surplus sale-proceeds (even though the purchaser has not yet avoided the incumbrance)—Nim Chand v. Asutosh, 9 C.W.N. 117 (118). Whether the property is sold with or without the power to annul incumbrances, in either case the mortgagee has a right to claim payment out of the surplus sale-proceeds. The mortgagee's right under this section is not affected by anything contained in secs. 159, 161-169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Gobind Sahai v. Sibdul, 33 Cal. 878 (880).

The remedy of the mortgagee is not confined only to the surplus sale-proceeds. So, where a property is sold for arrears of rent with power to annul all incumbrances, then so long as the incumbrances are not validly annulled under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, the mortgagee has a right to proceed against the property in the hands of the purchaser—Rasik Chandra v. Jagabandhu, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 392 (394), 113 I.C. 904.

When a property is sold under a decree obtained by a first mortgagee in a suit in which the puisne incumbrancers were parties, it passes into the hands of the purchaser discharged from all incumbrances. But equity regards the rights of the puisne incumbrancers not as extinguished or discharged by the sale but transferred thereby to the surplus sale-proceeds. The principle laid down in this section should be applied.—Berhamdeo v. Tara Chand, 33 Cal. 92 (111, 112).

452. Acquisition of property under Land Acquisition Act :—See sub-section (2). Even prior to the enactment of this sub-section it was held.

that the rule in this section would equally apply if the security was otherwise destroyed, e.g., if the property was taken under the Land Acquisition Act. In such a case the mortgagee's right in the land so acquired was transferred to the compensation money and he could lay claim to the said money. —Viraraghava v. Krishnasami, 6 Mad. 344; Jotoni Chowdhurani v. Amar Krishna, 13 C.W.N. 350, 1 I.C. 164; Venkatarama v. Esumsa, 33 Mad. 429; Prag Din v. Nankau, 7 O.W.N. 217, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 292 (294), 123 I.C. 56. Thus, were during the pendency of a suit by the mortgagee in which he obtained a preliminary decree, a part of the mortgaged property was compulsorily acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, the mortgagee was held to be entitled to an injunction restraining the mortgagor from taking the purchase money out of the hands of the Land Acquisition Collector—Asutosh v. Babu Lal, 5 P.L.J. 650, 59 I.C. 513, 2 P.L.T. 110. (Contra—Basa Mal v. Tajammal, 16 All. 78). Where a charge is created by a decree other than a compromise decree, the decree holder can claim like a simple mortgagee payment out of the amount due to the judgment-debtor as compensation—Syed Shah Safiul Alam v. Syed Shah Mohammad Aminul Alam, A.I.R. 1969 Pat 162; Nirmal Sundari v. Mrinalini, 63 C.W.N. 869.

The new sub-section (2) gives effect to this view; see Girdhar Lal v. Alay Hasan, A.I.R. 1938 All. 221 (227) (F.B.), (1938) A.L.J. 313, 174 I.C. 70.

A mortgagee can bring a suit to enforce his security as against the compensation money withdrawn by the mortgagor provided that he brings his suit within 12 years of the cause of action as prescribed by Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. Sec. 68 is inapplicable to such a case—Girdhar Lal v. Alay Hasan, supra, at p. 226. Where, however, only a portion of the mortgaged property is acquired and the mortgagee brings a suit after 6 years but within 12 years of the cause of action for sale of the mortgaged property and for a simple money-decree for the compensation money, the proper decree to be passed is a decree for sale of the available mortgaged property under O. 34, r. 4, with a direction that in the event of the non-realization of the entire mortgage-debt by sale the mortgagee will be entitled to a simple money-decree for an amount not in excess of the amount withdrawn—Ibid, at p. 227. The West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act is an enactment providing for the compulsory acquisition of immovable property as mentioned in sec. 73 (2)—Abdul Khaleque v. Medaswar Hosain, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 56.

In some cases it was held that if the mortgaged property was taken under the Land Acquisition Act, the property was to be considered as 'destroyed' within the meaning of sec. 68, and the mortgagee's remedy was to require another security from the mortgagor, in default of which, he was to sue for the mortgage-money—Sajjada v. Janki, 20 O.C. 256, 42 I.C. 793; Prakash v. Hasan Banu, 42 Cal. 1146 (1152).

This view is no longer correct.

453. Mortgagee's remedy :—In the old section it was said that the mortgagee had a "charge" on the surplus sale-proceeds; in the present section the word 'charge' has been omitted, and it is provided that the mortgagee can claim payment out of the sale-proceeds.

Under the old section also it was held in a Patna case that the existence of statutory charge upon the surplus sale-proceeds was no bar to the mortgagee's seeking a money-decree against the mortgagor or his successors—Benarasi v. Mohiuddin, 3 Pat. 581 (590).

The new section gives to the mortgagee rights against the sale-proceeds. If the sale is of the whole estate, then the rights given under this new section correspond to the right of substitution. Where, however, the sale is of a portion of the mortgaged property, the right of the mortgagee nevertheless to go against the sale-proceeds is conferred by the new section—Kapuri v. Mathura, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 209, 148 I.C. 972. The mortgagee has a right to claim the mortgage-money out of the sale-proceeds in execution of his mortgage-decree and if he files a fresh suit court can convert it into a petition for execution—Ramnathan Chettiar v. Abdul Hameed, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 73. Where a portion of the mortgaged property had been sold for arrears of revenue and the sale of a portion was subject to encumbrance under sec. 54 of the Revenue Sale Act (XI of 1859): held that notwithstanding the claim against the sale-proceeds, the mortgagee had the right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of the purchaser—Ibid, at p. 210. The right of the mortgagee under this section to proceed against the surplus sale-proceeds in the hands of a money decree-holder cannot be taken away by the revenue sale being held either by or without annulling the encumbrances—Mukram v. Bateswar, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 307, 169 I.C. 805. A mortgagee who had purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the landlord's decree (obtained after impleading the mortgagee) is only entitled to his mortgage-money out of the sale-proceeds after satisfaction of the claims of the prior encumbrances—Central Bank of India v. Sachindra, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 257 (259), 144 I.C. 760; Dhirendra Nath De v. Naresh Chandra Ray, A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 453.

In the circumstances mentioned in this section the question frequently arises, what would be the remedy of the mortgagee if the surplus sale-proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy his debt? Acceptance of the surplus sale-proceeds do not amount to a relinquishment by the mortgagee of his right to recover by all means the remaining mortgage-money due to him—Ganga Sahai v. Tulsi Ram, 25 All. 371 (373). The remedy of the mortgagee must be determined according to the circumstances of each particular case. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that if the mortgagee obtains a decree on his mortgage, and before that decree is executed the property is sold under sec. 165, Bengal Tenancy Act in execution of a rent-decree obtained against the mortgagor, and the surplus sale-proceeds are insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-decree, the mortgagee is entitled to have the balance of his decree satisfied out of the property in the hands of the purchaser; in other words, the property in the hands of the purchaser is liable to be sold again to satisfy the deficiency of the mortgage-debt—Parameshwar v. Anath Bandhu, 51 I.C. 333 (335). But if the mortgaged property sold for arrears of rent under sec. 165, Bengal Tenancy Act is purchased by the mortgagee himself the inference is that the charge in respect of this property is extinguished (old sec. 101 of this Act), although he may not have taken steps to annul the incumbrance under sec. 167, B. T. Act, and if the surplus sale-proceeds are insufficient to satisfy his mortgage-debt, he is entitled to proceed for the satisfaction of the balance of his mortgage-decree against the other properties of the mortgagor—Mastulla v. Jan Mamud, 28 Cal. 12 (16, 17). Where the mortgaged property sold for arrears of revenue was purchased by the mortgagor benami in the name of a third person, so that the property returned into the possession of the mortgagor, the mortgagee would be entitled to put up the same property to satisfy the balance of the mortgage-money that remained due after taking out the surplus proceeds of the previous revenue-sale—Ganga Sahai v. Tulsi, 25 All. 371 (374); S. Lakshmayya v. Intoory Bolla Reddy, 26 Mad. 385 (387). The proprietor of a revenue-paying estate executed a mortgage, and then subsequently granted a putni in favour of another person who had it registered under sec. 40 of Act XI of 1859 (Bengal Revenue Sales Act). The mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage in a suit in which the putnidar was made a party. After the decree the estate was sold for arrears of revenue subject to the incumbrance of the putni, and was purchased by the mortgagee himself. He then withdrew the surplus sale-proceeds, by which his decree was partly satisfied, and for the unsatisfied balance he applied for sale of the putni interest. Held that the putni interest was liable to be sold for the balance of the mortgage-debt—Susilabala v. Dinobandhu, 14 C.W.N. 186 (190), 5 I.C. 70.

Where the mortgaged property has been sold for arrears of revenue, the mortgagee will be entitled to the surplus sale-proceeds not only in the hands of the Collector, but also in the hands of certain money-decree holders of the mortgagor who have drawn out the sale-proceeds from the Collectorate—Gosto Behary v. Shib Nath, 20 Cal. 241 (244).

If after a sale of the mortgaged property for arrears of revenue, the mortgagor's interest in the property is revested in him in consequence of the sale being set aside, the mortgagor ceases to have any interest in the sale-proceeds, and the mortgagee can fall back upon his original security—Rash Behari v. Kusum Kumari, 86 I.C. 882, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1145. If the property is sold for arrears of rent and purchased by the mortgagee himself, the mortgage is extinguished, and the mortgagee's claim is transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds—Hem Chandra v. Tafazzal, 8 C.W.N. 332 (336).

This section applies to partition. On partition the mortgagee of an undivided share prior to the partition gets as his security only the properties allotted to the mortgagor on partition—Bhuyan Shyam Sunder v. Nilkantha Das, A.I.R. 1956 Orissa 165; Rup Chand Mullick v. Madan Mohan Dutt, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 351.

454. Sub-section (3) :—The doctrine of substituted security applies to a charge. Thus where a decree for money against a motor transport company creates a charge on the buses and thereafter the company is wound up and its buses are sold by the liquidator, the charge in favour of the decree-holder can be enforced against the sale-proceeds of the buses—Union of India v. Official Liquidator, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 555.

So long as the mortgagee's claim is not satisfied, the unsecured creditors will not be entitled to take any portion of the surplus sale-proceeds, and if any one takes any portion of the money, he does so under the liability of being sued in case the mortgagee finds any difficulty in getting himself paid. The unsecured creditors are not entitled to draw any portion of the sale-proceeds, even though they leave enough in the hands of the Collector—Gosto Behary v. Shib Nath, 20 Cal. 241 (244). Where a puisne mortgagee, not a party to a suit by the prior mortgagee, intervenes at the stage of the sale and the security is sold subject to the puisne mortgage, the puisne mortgagee cannot claim payment out of the surplus sale proceeds—Jayaben v. Bhanumati, A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 222.

74-75. [Omitted.]

These two sections have been omitted here but re-enacted as sections 92 and 94, with substantial amendments.

"These sections are based on what is known as the principle of 'subrogation'. For reasons stated in the notes in the proposed new sections 92 and 94, we propose to delete these sections."—Report of the Special Committee.

76. When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property,—

Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.

- (a) he must manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own ;
- (b) he must use his best endeavours to collect the rents and profits thereof ;
- (c) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, all other charges of a public nature and all rent accruing due in respect thereof during such possession, and any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold ;
- (d) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, make such necessary repairs of the property as he can pay for out of the rents and profits thereof after deducting from such rents and profits the payments mentioned in clause (c) and the interest on the principal money ;
- (e) he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property ;
- (f) where he has insured the whole or any part of the property against loss or damage by fire, he must, in case of such loss or damage, apply any money which he actually receives under the policy or so much thereof as may be necessary, in reinstating the property, or, if the mortgagor so directs, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money ;

- (g) he must keep clear, full and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee, and, at any time during the continuance of the mortgage, give the mortgagor, at his request and cost, true copies of such accounts and of the vouchers by which they are supported ;
- (h) his receipts from the mortgaged property, or, where such property is personally occupied by him, a fair occupation-rent in respect thereof, shall, after deducting the expenses properly incurred for the management of the property and the collection of rents and profits and the other expenses mentioned in clauses (c) and (d), and interest thereon, be debited against him in reduction of the amount (if any) from time to time due to him on account of interest * * * and, so far as such receipts exceed any interest due, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money ; the surplus, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagor ;
- (i) when the mortgagor tenders or deposits in manner hereinafter provided, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage, the mortgagee must, notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section, account for his * * * receipts from the mortgaged property from the date of the tender or from the earliest time when he could take such amount out of Court, as the case may be and shall not be entitled to deduct any amount therefrom on account of any expenses incurred after such date or time in connection with the mortgaged property.

If the mortgagee fail to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by this section, he may, when Loss occasioned by his default. accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree made under this chapter, be debited with the loss, if any, occasioned by such failure.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 40 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (XX of 1929). Besides the addition of the italicised words in clauses (c), (h) and (i), the words "on the mortgage-money" have been omitted from clause (h), and the word "gross" has been omitted from clause (i).

463. Scope of section :—Section 76 does not apply to a mortgage by the lessee. This section defines the duties of the mortgagee to the mortgagor but has no bearing on his liabilities to the lessor. Even sec. 109, which defines the rights and liabilities of the lessor's transferee, is curiously silent as to the assignee of the lessee—Ardeshir v. K. D. & Bros., 27 Bom.L.R. 553, 88 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 330.

This section is not restricted to usufructuary mortgages. Where under a deed of mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagee took possession of the mortgaged property with the consent of the mortgagor when the latter failed to pay the money on the date, held that this section should be applied in reduction of the mortgage-debt in view of clause (i) of this section—Afsar Shaik v. Saurava Sundari, -25 C.L.J. 560, 40 I.C. 371. The Allahabad High Court has said that this section applies to a case where during the continuance of the mortgage the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property; and that therefore it cannot apply where the mortgage is in its inception usufructuary—Kallu v. Ganesh, 116 I.C. 747, A.I.R. 1929 All. 348 (349). But this view has not been accepted by the Oudh Chief Court, which interprets the expression “during the continuance of the mortgage” as meaning “after the contract establishing the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties has been entered into and established, and till the time the mortgage comes to an end or is extinguished”; and consequently it does not exclude a mortgage which is in its inception usufructuary—Lakshmi v. Mohamdi, 7 Luck. 454, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 123 (132), 137 I.C. 102.

It should be noticed that this section uses different terms in the different clauses, such as “rents and profits” “income” “receipts” “all sums received” according to the context in which they occur.

Until the final decree is passed, a mortgagee in possession has the liabilities imposed by this section—Satyanarayana v. Suryanarayana, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 613, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 116. Plea that a suit under S. 76 is not maintainable because an earlier proceeding under sec. 83 has been finally decided by High Court in appeal against preliminary decree and that judgment has become final, cannot be raised in appeal against final decree—Manickchand v. Saleh Mohamed Sait, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 751: (1969) 1 S.C.C. 206: (1969) 2 S.C.J. 147.

464. What amounts to mortgagee's “taking possession” :—“It is not necessary that the mortgagee should be in actual physical occupation of the property. He may equally effectually be in possession through his agent or receiver.”—per North, C. J. in Richards v. Overseas of Kidderminster, (1896) 2 Ch. 212 (219, 220). He may be said to be in possession by receiving rent from the tenants who occupy the lands. But the simple receipt of rents and profits by a mortgagee will not make him a mortgagee in possession. It ought to be shown that he has intercepted the power of the mortgagor to manage his estate, and has received the rents as part of the management of the estate—per Cotton L. J. in Noyes v. Pollock, (1886) 32 Ch. D. 53 (61). If the agent of mortgagor realises rents from the tenants of the mortgaged property and pays them to the mortgagee, the latter cannot be said to be a mortgagee in possession—Ibid.

The possession taken by the mortgagee may be independent of the provision of the mortgage-deed. Thus, where a mortgage-deed is silent as to possession and the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he is accountable for the rents and profits received—Madari v. Baldeo Prosad, 27 All. 351. Where possession by a person is attributable to a mortgage or charge or where the mortgagee is let into possession by the mortgagor, possession can be retained by such person against any one including the landlord till the dues under his mortgage or charge are paid—Creet v. Gangaraj, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 129 (138, 139), I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 203, 170 I.C. 214.

Effect of mortgagee's taking possession:—A mortgagee who enters into possession of the mortgaged property in his capacity as a mortgagee can never, during the continuance of the mortgage, assert any adverse possession against the mortgagor whose right to redeem remains alive for 60 years and no question of adverse possession arises until after expiration of that period—Wajid Ali v. Alidad Khan, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 45, 184 I.C. 124 relying on Khiraajmal v. Daim, 32 I.A. 23, 32 Cal. 296 and Bakha Singh v. Ram Narain, 47 All. 73, 22 A.L.J. 905, A.I.R. 1925 All. 133. Where during the subsistence of a mortgage a mortgagee is proved or admitted by both parties to have come into possession with the consent of the mortgagor, the possession must be taken to be possession as a mortgagee and cannot be said to be adverse possession—Angnu Ram v. Bhikhi, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 84, 1941 O.L.R. 13.

Possession by mortgagor in any other capacity:—Where the mortgagor is allowed to remain as a tenant of the mortgagee under what is called an attornment clause, in regard to such occupation the mortgagee does not stand in the position of a mortgagee in possession—Chunilal v. Abdul Karim, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 483 (487) 39 Bom.L.R. 795, 172 I.C. 584. Where a usufructuary mortgagee never obtained possession or after obtaining possession was dispossessed by the mortgagor who was at fault, the mortgagee is entitled to claim interest from the mortgagor on the amount advanced by the former for the period during which the mortgagor has been in possession—Dal Singh v. Sunder Kunwar, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 208, (1944) O.W.N. 58. The principle of this section would apply to all mortgagees who get into possession by way of further security for the payment of their debt. Thus, where the mortgagee was let into possession of the mortgaged house under a lease, for the same period as the mortgage, on the footing that the estimated rent of the house should be set off month by month against the monthly interest, held that this section applied and the rent of the house would be set off against the interest in taking accounts. And it makes no difference to this proposition that the mortgagee-lessee was in the position of a tenant holding over after the lease-period had expired—Vengubai v. Ramaswami, 26 L.W. 450, 1927 M.W.N. 749, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 964 (965), 105 I.C. 419. Where the mortgagee entered into possession of the mortgaged property by virtue of a lease under which the rent was appropriated by the lessee towards the reduction of the mortgagor-debt held that the substance of the transaction was that the lessee had taken possession in his own interest in order to secure payment of the amount due to him, and the relation of the parties was that of mortgagor and mortgagee; the latter was therefore bound to pay the Government revenue payable in respect of the property under clause (c) of this section—Kishundial v. Mahabir, 5 P.L.J. 492, 1 P.L.T. 711, 58 I.C. 291. A prior mortgagee who takes a lease of the mortgaged property subsequent to the execution of a puisne mortgage is chargeable as a mortgagee in possession and not as a lessee—Ibid. If a tenant inducted by the mortgagor before the mortgage pay rent to the mortgagee such tenant cannot be dispossessed in execution of a decree for redemption.

465. Clause (a)—He must manage with ordinary prudence:—The mortgagee in possession is in equity considered in some measure in the light of trustee and thus the same measure of prudence is prescribed in the clause as in sec. 15, Trusts Act. A mortgagee in possession has his own right of managing the lands; and he is not in any sense dependent upon the consent of the mortgagor in determining as to what rent he should reasonably seek from a tenant in respect of a particular land and what tenant he should keep—Barjorji v. Shripatprasadji, 29 Bom.L.R. 215, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 145 (148), 100 I.C. 1033. A usufructuary mortgagee may enter into any arrangement which will facilitate the recovery of what he may consider to be a reasonable return for the money; and for this purpose he may lease out the mortgaged property either to third parties or to the mortgagor himself—Md. Karamat Ali v. Ganeshi Lal 49 All. 658, A.I.R. 1927 All. 552 (554), 25 A.L.J. 467, 101 I.C. 516. But he cannot create a right beyond his own term, i.e., he cannot grant a permanent lease or a lease for a period lasting beyond the term of his mortgage. Such a lease is inoperative so far as the mortgagor is concerned, and he is entitled to eject the lessee—Jhagru v. Raghunath, 10 P.L.T. 625; 119 I.C. 551, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 630 (632); Purshottam v. Ramcharanlal, A.I.R. 1967 Madh. Pra. 237. Where a usufructuary mortgagee has settled bakasht land, the right of the tenant cannot be determined by a contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, but is to be determined by the rule of law. If these tenants are occupancy raiyats, their right to remain on the land will continue in spite of the mortgagor going into possession—Rameshwar v. Naramdeshwar, supra.

It is not permissible for the mortgagee to create an interest in the mortgaged property which will enure beyond the termination of his interest as mortgagee. Further, a mortgagee in possession must manage the mortgaged property as a person of ordinary prudence and as if it were his own—Mahabir v. Harbans, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 205; Rashtaria Baratan Bhundar v. Harikishan, 1966 cur. L.T. 395. A permissible settlement by a mortgagee in possession and the springing of rights in the tenant conferred or created by statute based on the nature of the land and possession for the requisite period is an exception to the general rule. In such a case the tenant cannot be ejected by the mortgagor even after redemption of the mortgage. He may become an occupancy or non-occupancy raiyat—ibid; Prabhu v. Ramdeo, A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1721. Where the terms of the mortgage prohibit the mortgagee from making any settlement on the land either expressly or by necessary implication, this exception will not apply—ibid. If the lease is one which could have been made by the owner in the course of prudent management it is binding on the mortgagor even after the mortgage has been redeemed. But the lease cannot continue beyond the period for which it was granted—Harihar Prasad v. Deonarain, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 305; Habib Seth v. Kasinath, 1968 All. L.J. 446. The general rule is that a lessee from a mortgagee cannot continue after redemption—Aladat Khan v. Kaji Nasaruddin, 1961 M.P.L.J. 924.

A darpatnidar in possession of the patni under sec. 13 of the Bengal Patni Regulation of 1819 can at the request of the mortgagor patnidar apply the income of any year to the purchase of subordinate tenures for the purpose of enhancing the value of the security—Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Saradindu, A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 250, 52 C.W.N. 724. A mortgagee in possession of a shop can let it out and the appertaining room on a monthly tenancy, and the tenant does not become a trespasser after redemption of the mortgage—Hardei v. Wahid Khan, A.I.R. 1954 All. 16. But where a mortgagee in possession was not authorised to change the incidents of the bhaoli holding, a commutation of the bhaoli rent into nagdi and its amalgamation with other lands would not be binding on the mortgagor after redemption—Jhalki v. Bachu, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 246, 29 Pat. 180. Where the mortgagor allows the mortgagee to let the mortgaged premises on hire he cannot make vacant possession as the condition precedent for the tender of the mortgage money—Abdul Hamid v. Manilal, 1968 M.P.L.J. 451.

A mortgagee in possession is bound to cultivate the ordinary crops which the land is capable of yielding. But he is not bound to cultivate any other particular crop. He may cultivate it as he likes, and with as little profit to himself as he likes, and no objection can be made that he is not doing his best to help the former to pay off the debt. The general rule is that the mortgagee in possession is only accountable for what he receives and is not bound to take any particular trouble to make the most of another man's property—Girjoji v. Keshavrao, 2 B.H.C.R. 211 (212, 213). He will not be liable for deterioration of the property arising from ordinary decay owing to the lapse of time which has caused a diminution of the annual value—Richards v. Morgan, 4 Y. & C. 510. A mortgagee ought not to be charged exactly with the same degree of care as a man is supposed to take who keeps possession of his own property. But if there be gross negligence, by which the property is deteriorated in value, the mortgagee who is in possession is responsible for that deterioration—Wragg v. Denham, (1836) 2 Y. & C. Ex. R. 117 (at pp. 121, 122). The mortgagee is responsible for waste, for the consequence of wilful default, and for all loss resulting from negligence amounting to breach of trust—Girjoji v. Keshavray, 2 B.H.C.R. 211. If he is shown to be negligent, he will be accountable not only for what he has received, but for what he might or ought to have received but for his wilful default—Caplin v. Young, 33 Beav. 330; Parkinson v. Hanbury, L.R. 2 H.L. 1. He is not bound to engage in and will not be allowed for, speculation and adventure in respect of the property—Hughes v. Williams, 12 Ves. 493 (496). Thus, in the case of open mines, the mortgagee has undoubtedly the right to work them but he cannot be called upon to speculate by making a large outlay. And in no case is he bound to spend more than a prudent owner would do—Rowa v. Wood, (1822) 2 J. & W. 553.

A mortgagee in possession can create a right in the tenant to hold the land rent-free as a tenant, but it would not be binding against the mortgagor, unless the settlement is made bona fide in the ordinary course of business—Rup Narain v. Sheo Sagar, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 258, 180 I.C. 105; Asa Ram v. Mst. Ram Kali, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 183. See also Mohabir Gope v. Harbans Narain, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 205; Mathra Puri v. Hukam Chand, A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 231. On redemption the tenant is liable to be evicted—Ram Kailash Singh v. Baliram Singh, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 26. A monthly tenant inducted by the mortgagee cannot claim protection under the Rent Control Act after the passing of the decree for redemption—Kamalakar & Co. v. Gulamshafi, A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 42. Where the mortgage deed provides that the mortgagee is not entitled to settle the mortgaged land for more than 12 years so as to entitle the settlee to claim occupancy rights, the settlee cannot claim those rights even if he is in occupation for more than 12 years—Sheo Sunder Kuer v. Dulhim Suroya Mukha, A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 279.

466. Clause (b)—Collection of rents and profits :—Where the mortgagee comes into possession of the mortgaged property in the capacity of a mortgagee, it is his duty to collect the rent from the lessee and to eject him in proper course of law. The mortgagee is liable to account for the profits and credit the same to the mortgagor—Ram Kishan v. Badri Bishal, A.I.R. 1937 All. 337, I.L.R. 1937 All. 685, 170 I.C. 624. A mortgagee in possession must be diligent in collecting the rents and profits. But failure to get the highest possible rent does not necessarily show want of prudence on his part. He is liable only for wilful default—Ram Pratap v. Sher Ali, 3 N.L.R. 106 (following Hughes v. Williams, 12 Ves. 493).

The mortgagee is not an assurer of the continuation of the same rate of profits which his mortgagor was able to raise. The mortgagee in possession is liable for only so much of the land as he has actually cultivated unless it be proved that but for his gross mismanagement or fraud he might have received more—Shah Makhan Lal v. Shri Kishen Singh, 12 M.I.A. 157 (193). The mortgagee is not responsible for the total recorded rental of the property, but only for such sums as were actually received by him or on his behalf and for such sums, if any, as might have been received by him but for his own neglect or fault—Banarsi Prasad v. Ram Narain, 25 All. 287 (P.C.); Parkinson v. Hanbury, (1867) L.R. 2 H.L. 1; Gouri Nath v. Fateh Singh, 3 O.L.J. 689, 38 I.C. 537. But where the mortgagee in possession fails to recover rent by a suit which proves abortive he cannot be charged with the rent merely because he failed to recover it—Burke v. O'Connor, (1855) 4 Ir. Ch. R. 418.

Where the mortgagor takes the mortgaged property on lease from the mortgagee and makes default in payment of rent, which according to the mortgage bond is to be credited towards interest the mortgagee can recover the rent even though time-barred—Ghulam Mohammad v. Rajeshwar, I.L.R. 1940 Lah. 658, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 333, 192 I.C. 505. If a mortgagor takes the mortgaged property on lease from the mortgagee, the mortgagee as landlord can file a suit on the basis of a rent note—Bharoselal v. Daryao, 1961 Jab. L. J. 207; Jagta v. Hari Chand, A.I.R. 1959 J. & K. 103.

Where a mortgagee in possession instead of letting the property to raiyats and realising rents in the ordinary way, cultivates it himself, he is not liable to account for the whole of the profits arising to him by farming the land but only for such profits as he would have realised had he let it to a tenant, or as the mortgagor would have realised had he let it—Raghunath v. Baraik Geereedharee, 7 W.R. 244.

Where in the case of a usufructuary mortgage the jenmi failed to recover the michavarom payable to him and allowed it to be barred, his inaction would enure to the benefit of the mortgagee and not of the mortgagor—Kochu Kunju v. Sankara, A.I.R. 1954 Tr.-Coch. 53. But where the mortgaged property fetching rent lay vacant for some period and the usufructuary mortgagee was allowed interest during the period, credit for fair rent was given to the mortgagor for that period—Damji v. Devsi, A.I.R. 1953 Katch, 77.

The mortgagee in possession will be liable for the gross negligence of an agent employed by him for the purpose of collecting the rents, although proper care was taken in the selection of such agent—Jones on Mortgages § 1123.

467. Clause (c)—Payment of revenue :—Even before the Act a mortgagee in possession was bound to manage the property as a person with ordinary prudence would manage as if it were his own, and unless there was an agreement to the contrary he was bound to pay out of the income of the property the Government revenue and such charges of a public nature as might accrue due in respect of the property and be payable by the person in possession of the rents and profits, and he was not entitled to charge such payments against his mortgagor in the accounts—Mirza Abid Hussain v. Mt. Kaniz, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 102 (106), 46 All. 269, 51 I.A. 157, 29 C.W.N. 214, 80 I.C. 1019; Rameshwar v. Naramdeshwar, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 627. But where under the terms of the mortgage-deed as well as those of a lease of the mortgaged properties taken from the mortgagee by the mortgagor the Government revenue was payable by the latter, but had actually to be paid by the mortgagee, he is entitled to add the same for the purpose of ascertaining his total dues under the mortgage—Sahib Chandra v. Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 243 (245), 51 All. 686, 56 I.A. 339, 33 C.W.N. 1091, 119 I.C. 612. This clause is the counterpart of clause (c) of section 65. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee in possession must pay revenue and other public charges in respect of the mortgaged property, and he is the person primarily responsible for payment of the same. He has no right to appropriate the income without paying the revenue—Md. Hadi v. Parbati, 25 O.C. 2, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 91, 68 I.C. 549; Kannye v. Nistarini, 10 Cal. 443; Kundanmal v. Kashibai, 26 Bom. 363; Vithal v. Sriram, 29 Bom. 391, 7 Bom. L.R. 313. A Kanom deed could not be read as embodying a contract to the contrary to the provisions of this section and where the revenue payable to the Government was increased, the kanomdar and not the jenmi was liable to pay the enhanced revenue—Sankunni v. Tavazi, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 627, (1943) 2 M.L.J. 127. Where at the time of the execution of the mortgage, no revenue was assessed on the land, but it was subsequently assessed, the mortgagee in possession was bound to pay the revenue—Md. Hadi v. Parbati, (supra). If owing to the default of the mortgagee in paying the revenue, the property is sold away, the mortgagor would not lose his right of redemption—Kalappa v. Shivayya, 20 Bom. 492 (494); Lakshmaya v. Appadu, 7 Mad. 111 (112). Where the mortgaged property is sold for arrears of rent due to the mortgagee's default and is purchased by the mortgagee himself, the mortgagor is entitled in equity to redeem the mortgage—Jaikaran v. Sheo Kumar, A.I.R. 1927 All. 747 (748), 103 I.C. 370. This decision has been distinguished by Harris, C.J. and Agarwala, J.

of the Patna High Court in a case, where the landlord was the purchaser at the rent sale, but later on it came into the hands of the mortgagee and the mortgagor claimed redemption, on the ground that the equity of redemption had for ever been extinguished and did not revive when the mortgagee eventually obtained the property—Fekua v. Babu Lal, 18 Pat. 133, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 382, 183 I.C. 374. Where on default of the mortgagee to pay the revenue, the mortgagor pays it in order to avert the forfeiture or sale of the property, he may take credit for the amount when the accounts are adjusted and sue him every year in order to force him to make regular payment—Jaijit Rai v. Govind, 6 All. 303; Hari v. Sridhar, 10 N.L.R. 9, 23 I.C. 131. If the mortgagee fails to pay the revenue and the mortgagor pays it, he is entitled to be reimbursed not only for the money expended but also for the interest thereon by way of damages—Krishan v. Ambu Kurup, 51 M.L.J. 633, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 59, 98 I.C. 802, even where at the date of the mortgagor's suit for recovery of the amount, a preliminary decree had been passed in his suit for redemption against the mortgagee and a final decree was passed later on, because the mortgage-deed subsisted at the date of the mortgagor's suit for recovery of the amount—Duraiswami v. Venkata Reddy, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 283, 50 M.L.W. 889. In such a case the mortgagee will be debited with the loss caused to the mortgagor and the compensation will be allowed for the whole period of the accounting—Misri Lal v. Gajodhar, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 433, (1943) O.W.N. 347. But unless the mortgagee has actually collected rents or profits for a period prior to his getting into possession or unless he is so authorized to do, the mortgagor must pay the revenue for period prior to the possession of the mortgagee—Jagat v. Sheonarain, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 196 (198), 174 I.C. 1001.

The mortgagee however is not bound, in the absence of an express contract, to pay enhanced revenue if the enhancement is made subsequently to his mortgage. Such enhancement must be paid by the mortgagor—Krishnier v. Arrappulli, 14 M.L.J. 488; Panigattan v. Raman Nair, 17 M.L.J. 517; Thippa v. Krishnaswami, 9 M.L.T. 206, 8 I.C. 845; Panambatta v. Kalathipodkil, 16 M.L.T. 317, 25 I.C. 641; Hari v. Sridhar, 10 N.L.R. 9. (But see contra—Tuppan Numbudri v. Chinna Pari Kutti, 18 M.L.J. 31; Nathuwath v. Kolli Vallapil, 22 M.L.J. 151, 12 I.C. 140; Nanu Nair v. Ashta Moorthi, 29 M.L.J. 772, 29 I.C. 386; Vesteva v. Mahabala, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 405, 91 I.C. 943; Chempathoor Raman v. Nagalaseri, 24 I.C. 870; Kolli Valapil v. Natuwath, 14 I.C. 590). Thus, where there was nothing in the mortgage-deed to show that the terms as to the amount to be paid by the mortgagee had reference to any other than the revenue under the settlement in force at the time of the mortgage, the ultimate responsibility in respect of any addition to the land revenue must devolve on the mortgagor—Krishnier v. Arrappulli, 14 M.L.J. 488.

The mortgagee is bound to pay the revenue under this clause, if he is able to pay it "out of the income of the property" in his hands—Panigattan v. Raman Nair, 17 M.L.J. 517. If it cannot be paid out of the income, he is certainly not bound to pay it; but if he does pay it out of his own pocket, he can add the money so paid to the amount of the mortgage-money under sec. 72—Farzand Ali v. Kaniz Fatima, 22 O.C. 270, 54 I.C. 264. He cannot, however, get credit for any rents payable to the landlord which are not actually paid by him—Prosanna v. Girish, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 149 (150), 37 C.W.N. 1162, 149 I.C. 667. So also, in case of enhanced revenue, if the mortgagee pays it out of his own funds, he will be entitled to tack the amount to his mortgage-money—Kamayya v. Devapa, 22 Bom. 440; Bohra Thakur Das v. Collector, 28 All. 593.

The rule that the mortgagee of a lease-hold property becomes liable on the covenant for payment of rent, though he has never occupied or become possessed in fact of the property, applies only if there is no special provision to the contrary—Fala Krista v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 775 (782), 36 C.W.N. 709, 59 Cal. 1314, 140 I.C. 788.

This clause does not apply where there is an express contract to the contrary, e.g., where the deed of mortgage distinctly provides that the Government revenue shall be paid by the mortgagor. In such a case the mortgagee will not be bound to pay the revenue, and if the property is sold on account of the revenue falling into arrears, the sale cannot be set aside—Ooppath Naramparambath v. Koya Kutti, 29 I.C. 344. So also in the case of enhanced revenue, although the decisions are not consistent as to which party is liable to pay it in the absence of any express contract (see supra), there can be no question that if the mortgagor expressly undertook the liability to pay the enhanced revenue, he must pay it, and cannot at the time of redemption claim the difference between the original and the enhanced rate that he had to pay—Akbar Khan v. Kali Bhan, 39 I.C. 437 (Oudh).

'Other public charges' :—For instance, the mortgagee is bound to pay tagavi claims, for non-payment of which the property is liable to be sold away—Chitta Bhula v. Bai Jamni, 40 Bom. 483; Jhalliram v. Daulatsingh, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 254, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 862. The irrigation and other cesses charged upon the land are part of the land revenue and are therefore 'public charges'—Gunnam Dorayya v. Vadapillari, 27 M.L.J. 295, 25 I.C. 797. Where the mortgagee in possession pays municipal taxes, and there is an agreement between the mortgagee and mortgagor that the rent is to be set off against the principal and interest, he is entitled to set off the amount paid as municipal taxes in the mortgage account so that he can remain in possession till the liquidation of the sum paid as taxes—Kesho Ram v. Ram Lal, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 312, 163 I.C. 55. See also Ram Asray v. Hira Lal, A.I.R. 1949 All. 681.

Rent :—The amendment by Act XX of 1929 which imported the words "and all rents" in cl. (c) did not really change the law and create a new liability on the part of the mortgagee in possession. Even under the old law, it was the duty of such a mortgagee to pay the rent of the mortgaged property—Jagat v. Sheonarain, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 196, 174 I.C. 1001. See Kannye v. Nistarini, 10 Cal. 443 and Vithal v. Shriram, 29 Bom. 391.

The word "summarily" occurring in the latter portion of this clause implies that the proceedings for realization of rent by sale of the property are of a summary nature; for instance, as in the case of a certificate proceeding under the Public Demands Recovery Act—Jagat v. Sheonarain, supra, at p. 198; Jay Prasad Choubey v. Mt. Jasoda, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 649.

This section deals with the relative rights and duties of the mortgagor and mortgagee and a third party, e.g., the landlord cannot recover arrears or rent directly from the mortgagee—Sachindra Mohan v. Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 21, 41 C.W.N. 1141; Govindarajulu v. Gopalaswamy, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 401, 1941 M.W.N. 185. Where the mortgage-deed is silent as to the liability to pay rent, the mortgagee is liable—Deo Saran v. Barhu Singh, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 286.

Arrears of rent :—The mortgagee is bound to pay arrears of rent even though they were for a period prior to the execution of the mortgage—Kshetra Nath v. Durgapada, 52 I.C. 902 (Cal.). The mortgagee is bound to pay arrears of rent which fall due in respect of the mortgaged property, but he is not bound to pay arrears of rent which accumulate in respect of that portion of the holding which is not mortgaged to him—Ram Dulare v. Sahdeo, A.I.R. 1925 All. 189, 83 I.C. 188. A usufructuary mortgage-deed provided that out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, rent payable to the jenmi by the mortgagor should be paid every year by the mortgagee and the balance should be appropriated in lieu of interest. The mortgagee did not pay the rent: held in the suit for redemption the mortgagor was entitled to claim an adjustment of these unpaid rents due to the jenmi against the mortgage-amount and that interest should be allowed on these arrears—Kelu Kurup v. Manail Paru, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 693, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 686, 1940 M.W.N. 55. See in this connection Ram Ranbejoy v. Badri Upadhyaya, A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 36, 24 Pat. 545.

Even where no money was left with the mortgagee to pay the arrears of rent, the mortgagee is bound to pay the rent during the continuance of the mortgage and in case of default he cannot take advantage of it and purchase the property in the name of a benamidar—Narain v. Mahant, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 421. See also Bira Naik Mahanta Sidhakamal, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 300, I.L.R. (1949) 1 Cut. 21.

468. Clause (d).—Repairs :—Under this clause, his duty to make the repairs lies to the extent of the surplus rents and profits in his hands—Richards v. Morgan, (1753) 4 Y. & C. 570 Appx. It is a paramount duty of the mortgagee to make the necessary repairs out of the surplus profits, and the Court will not accept the excuse that to do so would diminish his interest or profits—Shiva Devi v. Jaru, 15 Mad. 290 (291). If he fails to make the necessary repairs, the amount of the loss caused to the mortgagor by such non-repair is an item which must be considered in determining the accounts in settlement of the mortgage at the time of redemption—Shiva Devi v. Jaru, supra. The duty of the mortgagee to make repairs arises only if he is in actual possession of the property; therefore where the mortgagee instead of taking possession leased the property to the mortgagor, held that not having been in possession he was not liable for damages for neglecting to keep the house in repair—Baquar Ali v. Nisar Husain, 1885 A.W.N. 262.

But the mortgagee is bound to make such necessary repairs as he can pay for out of the rents and profits. Especially, where the mortgage-deed places the duty of doing the repairs on the mortgagor, the mortgagee is not entitled to spend money on repairs out of his own pocket, and add the amount to the mortgage-money—Kallu v. Ganesh, 116 I.C. 747, A.I.R. 1929 All 348. Sec. 76(d) merely limits the amount to be spent on repair, it is not concerned with the question of priorities dealt with by sec. 76(h); hence there is no conflict between sec. 76(d) and sec. 76(h)—Anandram Jivraj v. Premraj Mukunddas, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 250. Mortgagee is not bound to repair if there is no surplus after deducting interest and public charges—Laxmiamma v. Narasimha, 11 Law Report, 767.

Under this section a possessory mortgagee is entitled to make constructions on the land independently of any contract, provided it does not amount to waste. The amount spent on such construction is recoverable as mortgage-money at the time of redemption—Rukmangal v. Mt. Durga, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 101, 21 Luck. 43. But see Venkatashiah v. Venkatakrishnah, A.I.R. 1958. Mys. 20 where it has been held that the money so spent cannot be recovered.

469. Clause (e):—Act destructive or injurious to the property:— The rule in clause (e) may be compared with sec. 66, in which a similar obligation is laid on the mortgagor in possession.

The mortgagee is prevented by this clause from doing any act likely to destroy or injure the property. Thus, he cannot cut down any trees which already existed on the property when it was mortgaged; but the removal of trees planted by the mortgagee himself is not an act destructive or permanently injurious to the property—Ranchandra v. Shripati, 50 Bom. 692, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 595 (596), 99 I.C. 400; Krishna v. Srinivasa, 20 Mad. 124 (127, 128). Cutting of timber and clearing the ground for purposes of improvement will not constitute waste. If the trees have existed before possession was made over to the mortgagee the mortgagor will have the right to value the trees cut—Chandi v. Thomman, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 109. The Babul tree when cut down does not grow again from the trunk. Having regard to its uses it is "timber" and the cutting of it by the mortgagee amounts to an act of waste—Ram Kumar v. Krishna Gopal, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 106, 21 Luck. 48. There is however no prohibition in this clause against taking the wood of a fallen tree which fell from natural causes. Such wood is part of the profits of the property and a mortgagee in possession is entitled to take the profits—Durga v. Ganga, A.I.R. 1932 All. 500, (1932) A.L.J. 493. If the land is not agricultural land, it cannot be said that the utility of the land has been injured by the tree-roots or stumps remaining on the land after the removal of the trees planted by the mortgagee—Ramchandra v. Shripati, (supra). The mortgagee's act of cutting bamboo-clumps planted by the mortgagor amounts to waste, unless the bamboos were of a mature age and ripe for cutting. The cutting of bamboo of a particular class may amount to sayer produce like the cutting of jungle, and does not constitute an act of waste—Mahabir v. Sheoshankar, 112 I.C. 434, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 124. But while the mortgagee is forbidden to commit ruinous acts, he is not liable for the losses caused by accident or vis major, e.g., loss of the mortgaged premises by accidental fire. In such cases, the mortgagee is not only not liable for the loss, but is, on the other hand, entitled to get an additional security from the mortgagor and in default to recover the mortgage-money (sec. 68)—Venkataswara v. Kesava Chetti, 2 Mad. 187. The mortgagee is liable for the timber value of the trees that fall during his possession due to natural causes if he neglects to give notice to the mortgagor asking the latter to remove the trees—Nani Kunjukrishna v. Padmanava Pillai, A.I.R.

1959 Ker, 38. Where the mortgagee in possession is to apply the whole income towards interest he cannot be made liable in damages for not erecting protective works to prevent the silting of the mortgaged fields caused by water-channels constructed by the Government—Velayudhan Narayanan v. Krishna Sankaran, A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 298.

Where two houses were divided by a partition-wall and there was a communication-door between the two houses, and the owner mortgaged them to two different persons after closing the door, held that neither of the two mortgagees could re-open it, and that if one attempted to open it, the other could restrain him from doing so. An act like the opening of this door materially altered the condition of the property, and unless it could be clearly shown to be an improvement, it was destructive of the property within the meaning of this clause. For if the door of communication was left open by one party, the house was of no use to the other—Lachmi Narain v. Jethu Mal, 16 All. 386 (387).

A mortgagee is not entitled to act in a manner detrimental to the mortgagor's interests such as by giving a lease which may enable the tenant to acquire permanent or occupancy rights in the land, thereby jeopardising the mortgagor's right to get khas possession. Such an act will fall within sub-cl. (e) of this section—Mahabir v. Harbans, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 205. A mortgagee in possession as such has no right to create tenancies, permanent or otherwise, and whatever tenures are created by him during his possession would ipso facto come to an end when the mortgage is redeemed—Ram Chand v. Raj Hans, 3 A.L.J. 517; Gauri v. Mangla, A.I.R. 1926 All. 463, 94 I.C. 442 (creation of occupancy right). The termination of the lease is subject to any right that might be conferred on the tenant by statute—Bhanshali Kushalchand Ramji v. Sha Shamji Jivraj, A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 53.

Although a lease granted by the mortgagor after the mortgage which is permanent and not in the usual course of management or which is against the covenants in the mortgage is not binding on the mortgagee, and he can take steps to put an end to the lessee's possession, still such a lessee has a right to redeem and having that right he has also the right to restrain waste on the part of the mortgagee in possession, such as would depreciate the value of the equity of redemption—Basanta v. Adarmani, 40 C.W.N. 57.

470. Clause (f) :—Insurance :—Section 72 gives the mortgagee power to insure the property, and if he so insures, this clause directs him to apply any money which he actually receives under the policy in case of loss or damage of the property, either in re-instating the property, or, according to the wish of the mortgagor, in reduction or discharge of the money.

“Under section 72, the mortgagee can insure the mortgaged premises for an amount not exceeding two-thirds of the money which would be required to restore the property in case of total destruction. But clause (f) of section 76 requires the mortgagee to apply any money which he may receive on a policy of insurance in re-instating the property, and if he fails to do so, he may be debited with such loss as may be sustained by the mortgagor. But how the mortgagee can be expected to discharge this duty when he receives two-thirds only of the value of the property, is a puzzle for which I do not pretend to be able to give you any solution. The fact that a similar provision is found in the English Coveyancing Act, from which this section is borrowed almost word for word, may account for its finding a place in the Indian Act, but cannot help us in solving the difficulty"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage (5th Edn.), pp. 575-576.

This clause does not apply where the insurance was made neither by the mortgagor nor by the mortgagee but by the Receiver appointed by the Court in the mortgage-suit. If in such a case the property is destroyed by fire before it was brought to sale in execution of the mortgage-decree, and the Receiver obtained a large sum of money under the policy, held that the money received by the Receiver was not subject to the terms of the mortgage-deed, inasmuch as the insurance was kept on foot by the Court through the Receiver as a matter of protection for the benefit of all persons who were parties to the mortgage-suit, and not by the mortgagor or mortgagee in accordance with their contract in the mortgage-deed. The Court had ample discretion in directing in what manner the money so received should be laid out, and the mortgagor could not claim that it should be laid out in restoring the premises that had been destroyed or damaged by fire—Seth Dooly Chand v. Rameshwar Singh, 40 I.C. 623 (Cal.).

471. Clause (g) :—Accounts :—In the case of a mortgagee in possession, although it may have been executed before the Act came into operation, yet the principles of this section and sec. 77 with regard to the liability of the mortgagee to account are applicable, since they are mere codification of the law in existence before the Act—Md. Sadiq v. Harakh Narain, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 583 (584), 166 I.C. 545; Kamala Prasad v. Bamdeo, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 148 (149), 155 I.C. 22. A mortgagee in possession is not a trustee for the mortgagor and has to render accounts according to this section and to prove that his accounts are true and correct—Anandji v. Ahmedbhoy, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 645, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 287, 42 Bom. L.R. 580. The liability to account of a mortgagee in possession depends entirely upon whether under the contract he has to hand over from time to time anything of the rents and profits to the mortgagor, for of such money he is a trustee for the mortgagor until it is paid over. In cases where only a portion fixed or proportion of such rents and profits is to be retained by way of interest, the liability to account is clear. Similarly, where the whole of the rents and profits are to be retained in reduction of a fixed rate of interest and the mortgagor must pay the balance of the fixed rate from some other source, it is clearly necessary to account, because the mortgagee in possession and the mortgagor cannot otherwise know how much excess he may have been from time to time to pay—Md. Sadiq v. Harakh Narain, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 583 at p. 584. In the case of a stipulation that the mortgagee should pay the mortgagor a certain sum annually over due payments from the earliest period of the contract cannot, in taking accounts in a redemption suit, be treated as statute-barred. The Court has in such circumstances the right in equity to allow simple interest on such over-due amounts—Ibid at p. 585. So long as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists the mortgagee who is in possession is bound to account for the rents and profits. No question of limitation can arise so long as that relationship continues—Narasimha v. Sheshayya, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 825 (828), 48 M.L.J. 363, 90 I.C. 138. Where the mortgage-deed mentions that the mortgagee should pay every year to the mortgagor a certain sum, that sum for the whole mortgage period (even beyond 12 years) should be set off against the mortgage-debt—Banwari v. Sakhray, A.I.R. 1931 All. 585, (1931) A.L.J. 421, 135 I.C. 248. A mortgagee is bound to give an account of the profits realised by him from the mortgaged property so long as it was in his possession, though the mortgage be not a usufructuary one, and whether the possession was taken with or without the consent of the mortgagor—Nilkant v. Jeenooddeen, 7 W.R. 30. In a mortgage with possession where the mortgagee is bound to render account of rents and profits, the rent can be taken to be equivalent to the interest only in the absence of a definite finding as regards rent—Hardt v. Mt. Damodari, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 141, 145 I.C. 122. The mortgagee cannot contract himself out of the statutory liability to keep accounts. Clauses (g) and (h) of this section are not qualified by any such proviso as "in the absence of a contract to the contrary". Therefore, they apply in all cases excepting those in which sec. 77 makes them inapplicable. Hence every mortgagee in possession is bound to account under these two clauses unless he establishes a contract in terms of sec. 77—Kamala Prasad v. Bamdeo, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 148, 155 I.C. 22; Lal Bahadur v. Murlidhar, 27 O.C. 250, 74 I.C. 95, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 92 (94). See in this connection Mahadeo v. Md. Siddiq, A.I.R. 1949 All. 189, I.L.R. 1949 All. 302 and Baij Nath v. Parbin Singh, A.I.R. 1945 All. 48, I.L.R. 1945 All. 42. Where a mortgage-deed providing for interest is silent as to possession, and the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he is accountable for the rents and profits received—Madari v. Baldeo Prasad, 27 All. 351 (F.B.). But before the liability to account can be enforced, it must be proved that the mortgagee had received possession. The mortgagee is to be charged in respect of that only of which he has taken possession—Chunital v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 483 (486), 39 Bom. L.R. 795, 172 I.C. 584. Where the mortgagor himself is allowed to remain in possession as a tenant of the mortgagee, his liability to account does not arise—Shivaraj v. Mylapore H. P. Fund, Ltd., A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 62, 1942 M.W.N. 625. The account usually directed against the mortgagee in possession is of what he has, or without default might have, received from the time of his taking possession. His liability in the first instance extends in favour of those interested in the equity of redemption—Ibid. This liability, although absolute in the abstract may be reduced or qualified by the obstruction of the mortgagor to make the best use of the property—Ibid., at p. 487. The mortgagee is none the less bound to keep accounts because he holds possession also as lessee—Hunooman Pershad v. Babooee, 6 M.I.A. 393 (422). A mortgagee in possession is under a statutory liability to keep accounts under clauses (g) and (h) of this section and this is so in the case of every mortgage whether usufructuary or otherwise. Where he fails to keep the accounts as required by law, the Court can make every presumption against him—Angnu v. Bhiki, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 84, 1941 O.L.R. 13. If the mortgagee refuses or neglects to deliver in the accounts, the Court must take the best evidence available and decide upon it. The general presumption will no doubt be against the mortgagee, but this would not justify the Court in accepting without examination any evidence which may be offered by the mortgagor—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 598; Muhammed v. Uttamchand, 63 I.C. 598 (600); Allah Yar v. Thakur Das, 24 P.L.R. 1918, 44 I.C. 9; Gholam Nuzuf v. Emanum, 9 W.R. 275.

A suit merely for accounts cannot be maintained by the mortgagor unless he asks for redemption also—Hari v. Lakshman, 5 Bom. 614. If the same mortgagee holds two separate mortgages from the same person, the latter has a right to obtain separate accounts of the two mortgages, although the two accounts may have been included in one suit—Ram Chandra v. Janardan, 14 Bom. 19. As regards the mode of keeping and taking accounts see Samji v. Ratna, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 47 and Bhabhanbai v. Kanji Raoji, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 90.

The mortgagee is under a statutory liability to keep clear, full and accurate accounts. Accounts to be full must be detailed and supported by vouchers. If he does not render accounts or keep them, the Court will make every presumption against him—Kazim v. Debi Dayal, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 104, 9 Luck. 456, 148 I.C. 880; Ram Kishan v. Badri Bishal, A.I.R. 1937 All. 337, I.L.R. 1937 All. 685, 170 I.C. 624; Gajadhar v. Baidyanath, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 379, 29 Pat. 545; Deoki Devi v. Devi Das, A.I.R. 1951 Pepsu. 18. The accounts to be kept by the mortgagee are independent of those which may be kept by a third person, as for example, the patwari, and cannot be dispensed with on the ground that the latter was keeping them—Kuddi Lal v. Aisha, 2 Luck. 564, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 199 (201, 202), 102 I.C. 263; Lakshmi Narain v. Mohamdi, 7 Luck. 454, 137 I.C. 102, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 123 (133). The mortgagee is liable to the mortgagor for any sum realised by him out of the mortgaged property. The fact that the realisations were unauthorised or unlawful does not qualify his liability in this matter. If the mortgagee in possession does not keep accounts or does not produce the accounts in a suit for redemption the Court will make every presumption against him. The Court will calculate the amount due under the mortgage on the basis of gross rentals, on the hypothesis that all the tenants had paid their rents—Lakshmi Narain v. Mohamdi, supra; Said Ahmad v. Raja Barkhandi, 8 Luck. 40, 139 I.C. 64, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 255. But it cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule that whenever a mortgagee has failed in his obligation under this clause he must necessarily be made liable on the basis of the gross rental. It is conceivable that there may be cases in which the raising of a presumption that all the tenants have paid their rents may not be justified—Kazim v. Debi Dayal, supra, at p. 106; Chunilal v. Abdul, supra. When the mortgagee is made liable for the rental, he should be allowed the costs of collection—Kazim v. Debi Dayal, supra, at p. 106. The liability of the mortgagee for the omission to take drastic measures against the mortgagor who was the agent of the mortgagee for collection of rents must be limited by the circumstances of the case, and he cannot be required to account for more than what he has received in the absence of proof that but for his gross default or mismanagement or fraud he might have received the full rent—Chunilal v. Abdul, supra, at p. 487. Where a mortgagee has obtained possession under an invalid agreement for sale, his possession may be deemed to be that of a mortgagee when it is established that the agreement was inoperative in law; and he may be called upon to account for the rents and profits as if he were the mortgagee in possession—Bama Charan v. Nimai, 35 C.L.J. 58. If the mortgagee does not keep any accounts nor file them in Court, his claim for interest must be disallowed—Rai Shadi Lal v. Lal Bahadur, 1933 A.L.J. 339 (P.C.), 37 C.W.N. 420 (423), A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 85; Shankarlal Lallubhai v. Bai Jiykor, A.I.R. 1966 Guj. 40. The mortgagee's accounts must be prepared by himself or by his own agent, and must comprise the gross receipts realised from the tenantry, and not merely what actually reaches the mortgagee's hands. These accounts must be full and complete, and not mere abstracts of the receipts during the period of the mortgagee's possession. An account professing to show the demand and collections from the tenantry, for any one year should be supported by detailed account showing each item of collection and every individual mentioned in the total sheet. It is not a sufficient reason for the non-production of the accounts required by law for the defendants to say that, under their peculiar circumstances, they could not keep them—Rām Kissen v. Sha Kundan Lal, W.R. (1864) 177. Where the mortgagee in possession fails to keep accounts, the fair occupational rent, and not actual receipts is to be credited towards income. If that rent is less than the amount of interest then the mortgagee cannot claim to add the balance to the principal but must be satisfied with whatever he has received. If the amount is more than the amount of interest, the additional amount will go towards the satisfaction of the principal—Suratsing Chandanmal Marwadi v. Nomanbhai Abdulhussein Bohari, A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 43.

Where in an English mortgage it was agreed between the mortgagor and the mortgagees that certain nominees of the latter should be appointed managers and be liable to furnish accounts to the mortgagees and a separate deed of management was contemporaneously executed by the mortgagor in favour of the nominees to which the mortgagees were not parties: held that the managers were the agents of the mortgagor and not of the mortgagees who had perfect right before lending money to insist upon mortgagor appointing managers in whom the mortgagees had confidence—Motilal v. Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co., 25 C.W.N. 265 (P.C.).

Whether a mortgagee is liable to be redeemed or to render account depends upon the term of the decree. Where under a mortgage decree the mortgagee had the right to retain possession of the mortgaged property until a fixed amount is paid by the mortgagor, he could redeem only on payment of the amount decreed without any question of accounting—Shivraj v. Mylapore H. P. Fund, Ltd., A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 62, 1942 M.W.N. 625. If it is desired that accounts should be taken as against the mortgagee in possession, there must be a special direction in the decree. The Court must determine whether the mortgagee is a mortgagee in possession, and if so, from what date. It must not be left to the commissioner. The question is primarily one of fact, but it frequently involves matters of law, e.g., whether particular acts of a mortgagee—directions given to tenants and so forth—amount in law to taking possession. If no special direction is given by the Court, the commissioner is right in not taking accounts on the basis of the mortgagee being in possession. If the Court on the allegations of the parties and proof thereof has not directed accounts on that basis, it cannot afterwards alter its order by doing so—Anandji v. Ahmedbhoy, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 645, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 287, 42 Bom. L.R. 580. Before accepting or rejecting the accounts in suits between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, it is usually necessary to examine them critically. When an account is presented, the Judge on whom rests the responsibility of coming to a true decision, must examine it, and before arriving at a conclusion as to whether it is such an account as a prudent man ought to accept, he must consider the details and ascertain whether it has been kept on principles which indicate that it is probably correct—Kundan Mal v. Kashibai, 26 Bom. 363 (371). Before having recourse to an estimate or average not based on actual figures, the Judge must apply his mind carefully to the account which purports to be the account of actual receipts and disbursements and determine on its inherent appearance of accuracy and probability and any other evidence that may be available whether it is an account which most probably represents correctly what has actually occurred—Ibid (at p. 370). Where accounts are impeached on the ground of fraud, two or three instances of particular items, which can be taken as false and fraudulent, must be brought to the notice of the Court before it can be called upon to order the accounts to be re-opened from the first—Boo Jinathoo v. Shah Nagar, 11 Bom. 78 (following Williams v. Barbour, L.R. 9 Ch. D. 529).

The mortgagee in possession cannot contract himself out of the duty to account—Chen Sankar Lal v. United Bank of India Ltd., A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 569.

472. Clause (h) :—Under this clause the mortgagee is bound to apply the rents and profits, after deducting the expenses herein mentioned, in discharge of the interest, and in reduction of the principal money if possible. The rule has been thus stated: "The gross receipts, whether they arise from the rents or from accidental payments, are ascertained at the end of each year, and after deducting the necessary outlay on account of revenue, expenses of collection and preservation of the estate, the balance goes to reduce, either in whole or in part, the interest and if there is a surplus over, it goes to the reduction of the principal money, the account being closed at the end of each year"—Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 594; Muhammad v. Uttam Chand, 63 I.C. 598 (Lah.); Jaijit Rai v. Gobind, 6 All. 303. If the mortgage-debt is fully paid off out of the usufruct, and the mortgagee thereafter continues to remain in possession and to receive the profits, he is said to avail himself of another man's money for his own use and benefit, and ought to be charged with interest from the time at which the mortgage-debt was satisfied—Bhayalal v. Mahomed Hakim, 57 I.C. 294 (Nag.). The Allahabad High Court holds that no interest is payable on the surplus money found with the mortgagee after the satisfaction of the mortgage, till the date of the institution of the suit for redemption. But after the institution of the suit such interest is payable by the mortgagee. The institution of the suit is really a notice to the mortgagee calling upon him to hand over the surplus money. From that date the mortgagor will be entitled to interest—Ismail Hasan v. Mehdi Hasan, 46 All. 897 (902), 80 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1924 All. 881.

Under this clause the liability of the mortgagee in possession is absolute and he cannot contract himself out of it unless he can bring himself strictly within the exception mentioned in sec. 77—Sarfraz v. Mannilal, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 38, (1942) O.W.N. 585. Such a mortgagee is not a trustee in the strict sense of the term but holds a fiduciary character. Hence, a court of equity has full power to order interest to be paid on collections which have been wrongly withheld by the mortgagee—Jagannath v. Sripathibabu, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 297, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 478. As to the instances of the mortgagee's liability to account for the rents and profits realized by him, see Arunachalam v. Jagannatha, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 137, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 399; Kerala Varman v. Parameswaran, A.I.R. 1950 Tr.-Coch. 105; Koyakkutti v. Kunhipathu, A.I.R. 1950 Tr.-Coch. 33. Where in a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property the mortgagee who was in possession of the property during the continuance of the mortgage fails to establish tenancy under the mortgagor, the latter is entitled to have an accounting from the mortgagee for the profits derived by him and so that they may be adjusted against the mortgage money—Upendra v. Taranath, A.I.R. 1962 Assam 52.

The mortgagee must, if he retains some of the mortgagor's money, apply it to the reduction of capital. This equitable liability takes precedence of his right under the contract to refuse piecemeal payment of the capital sum lent. Where, however, he is entitled to retain the whole of the rents and profits and where his liability to make the stipulated payments to or on behalf of the mortgagor is independent of the amount of such rents and profits as he may in fact receive from the property, there can be no reason to call upon him to account. A mortgagee cannot be held liable to account for yearly rents or to apply the sums which he fails to pay in reduction of the capital—Md. Sadiq v. Harakh Narain, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 583 (585), 166 I.C. 545. If a usufructuary mortgagee retains a portion of the consideration agreeing to pay interest thereon, arrear of interest is to be treated as an item to be included in the settlement of accounts at the time of redemption—Mathevi Bhargavi v. Ayyappan Kochan, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 163.

The mortgagees will be debited not only with the profits actually received by them, but also with the profits which they could have realised but for negligence and carelessness. Even though there is a stipulation in the mortgage-deed that if the profits of the mortgaged property be found to be insufficient to cover the interest, the mortgagor shall pay the deficiency, such stipulation can apply only to the case where the profits of the property have decreased and not to the case where the mortgagees owing to their own default have failed to realise the profits—Ratan Dei v. Sher Singh, 1929 A.L.J. 217, A.I.R. 1929 All. 260 (268), 114 I.C. 876.

Where the mortgagee (of a zarpeshgi lease) fails to pay the balance of the rent, as agreed in the mortgage-deed, to the mortgagor, the mortgage-money is from time to time reduced and the Court in a redemption suit acts rightly in making the account on the principle laid down in this clause. But the sub-mortgagees are not liable to account on the basis of the original zarpeshgi deed, because there is no privity of contract between them and the original mortgagor and the decree for payment of money cannot properly be made against them, though the mortgagor's decree for recovery of possession will of course be valid against them—Bachu Lal v. Jang Bahadur, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 427 (428), 180 I.C. 795.

The mortgagee obtained a lease of the mortgaged house from the mortgagor and advanced a certain sum to him for repairing and reconstructing the house. The advance was to be set off against the rent payable at a certain rate by the mortgagee—held, clause (h) had no application since the mortgagee came into possession as tenant and not as mortgagee, nor was the possession in any way referable to the mortgage sued upon—Gulab Chand v. Ram Kumar, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 296, 22 P.L.T. 230, 193 I.C. 533.

A stranger auction-purchaser purchased the mortgaged property at a sale in execution of the decree of the prior simple mortgagee. The puisne mortgagee sued to realise his money by the sale of the mortgaged property. The stranger auction-purchaser was allowed to continue in possession till the proportionate share of the money due on the prior mortgage had been paid off, because the money paid for his purchase was utilised to pay off the prior mortgage. Held, that the puisne mortgagee in calculating the money due to him was not entitled to call for an account of the profits of the property in the hands of the stranger auction-purchaser, who, in his turn, was not entitled to claim any interest for the period during which he was in possession—Mohd. Mohsin v. Kausar Raza, A.I.R. 1956 All. 422.

Occupation rent:—An alternative mode of charging the mortgagee in actual occupation is to charge him with an occupation rent, and that is more suitable in the case of buildings, whether places of residence or trade premises. It is only when he is actually in possession, or at least by his servants or agent, that occupation rent is charged—Shepard v. Jones, 21 Ch. D. 475. In the case of buildings in the possession of the mortgagee, personally occupied by him for the purpose of residence or carrying on trade, he might be charged with a fair occupation rent; and in the case of lands personally occupied or cultivated by him, he might be charged either in that way or with the actual net profits realised by him in using the land—per Westropp, C.J. in Prabhakar v. Pandurang, 12 B.H.C.R. 88. But there can be no question of occupation rent if the mortgagee does not occupy the premises but lets them out to tenants—Kishun Lal v. Hira Lal, 10 P.L.T. 487, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 571 (573), 120 I.C. 768. Where a mortgagee in possession actually cultivates the mortgaged land or part of it, he should be charged the net profits of his cultivation and not occupation rent—Dadnu v. Somnath, 6 N.L.R. 109, 7 I.C. 547 (549).

The words "net profits" in sec. 9 (1) of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act are to be interpreted in the sense in which the words "fair occupation rent" have been used in the present clause—Dara v. Mathura, A.I.R. 1951 All. 643 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 354. The most favourable rate of rent at which the land could be settled with a tenant is the "fair occupation rent" at which profits are to be worked out. The circle rates, in the absence of any other evidence should be taken as a "fair occupation rent"—ibid overruling A.I.R. 1944 All. 283 and A.I.R. 1950 All. 192.

Expenses for management, collection, etc.—The italicised words providing for expenses incurred for management and collection of rents and profits have been newly added. These words formerly occurred in clause (a) of sec. 72, and the expenses could be made an additional charge on the property. Under the present section this is not allowed, but the mortgagee is simply permitted to deduct these expenses in the account of his receipts.

In the case of a possessory mortgage collection charges may properly be added where the mortgagee is held liable to accounting under this section. Where, however, the mortgagee in possession is not liable to account to the mortgagor, the mortgagee is not entitled to collection charges in the absence of a provision to that effect in the mortgage-deed—Kirat Singh v. Ram Saran, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 380, (1941) O.W.N. 687, 194 I.C. 405. A mortgagee in possession in the absence of evidence is entitled to 10 per cent. of the profits of the mortgaged property as costs of collection—Sir Md. Ejaz Rasul v. Saiyid Ali, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 498, 1941 O.W.N. 768, 194 I.C. 615; see also Secretary of State v. Saroj Kumar, 62 I.A. 53, 62 Cal. 499, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 49; Girish Chandra v. Shoshi Shikhareswar, 27 Cal. 951 (P.C.), 4 C.W.N. 631; Thakur Dwara v. Jangu Singh, A.I.R. 1950 All. 105. A mortgagee in possession filing suits to recover arrears of rent from the tenants is entitled to the costs of the rent suits—Sir Md. Ejaz Rasul v. Saiyid Ali, supra. The mortgagee can charge only the expenses incurred by him in the management of his estate. Consequently he cannot charge for personal services—Mahadev v. Rama Chandra, 6 Bom. L.R. 590. But he is not debarred from employing an agent to manage the estate and from charging for his salary—Heera Singh v. Sahoo Lachman Das, (1858) 1 N.W.P. S.D.A. 447. But if the manager is his own son, he cannot charge for his salary unless the son resides at a distance from his father, in which case his cost of maintenance will be debited against the mortgagor—Kadir Moidin v. Nepean, 26 Cal. 1 (P.C.). Usually, collection charges are allowed at 10 per cent. on the gross receipts—Girish Chunder v. Shoshi Shikhareswar, 27 Cal. 951 (P.C.). Again, if the mortgagee has to sue tenants or others for recovery of rent, for injunction against waste, for trespass or the like, he is entitled to charge for the cost of litigation—Sounders v. Rao Khooman Singh, (1853) N.W.P.S.D.A. 692; Basant Singh v. Mata Baksh, 17 O.C. 47, 23 I.C. 456. In Madras, however, it has been held that the mortgagor is not responsible for any expenses of litigation incurred by the mortgagee in recovering rents from tenants put into possession by the mortgagee himself, and the fact that the mortgagor is himself the tenant under the mortgagee can make no difference in principle—Pokree Saheb v. Pokree Beary, 21 Mad. 32.

The words "on the mortgage-money" have been omitted from this clause because they are ambiguous. Where the mortgage deed provides for the payment of simple interest only, the word 'mortgage-money' might indicate compound interest. The word 'interest' is sufficient to show that according to the terms of a particular mortgage-deed it will be calculated as simple or compound as the case may be.

473. Clause (i). Effect of tender or deposit—Account for 'gross' receipts :—As cl. (h) provides for deducting expenses incurred for the management of the property or collection of rents and profits the word 'gross' has become unnecessary and superfluous and hence it has been omitted.

Before this amendment, there was a divergence of opinion as to whether the mortgagee was entitled to deduct the collection charges and other expenses after the mortgagor tendered or deposited the mortgage-money. The Allahabad High Court was of opinion that the mortgagee was liable to account for the gross receipts from the date of the deposit, and was not entitled to any deduction on account of collection charges, even though there was an interval of several years between the date of the deposit and the date of institution of the redemption suit—Bent Prasad v. Narain, 5 I.C. 529 (531). The Madras High Court, on the other hand, held that a mortgagee remaining in possession after a lawful tender or deposit was no doubt liable to account for gross receipts from the mortgaged property, but he would be entitled to all due allowances such as for payment of Government revenue, collection charges and necessary repairs of the property, subsequent to the tender or deposit, though he might not be entitled to the benefits of the special stipulations in the mortgage-deed. The words "notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section" have been used in clause (i) out of abundant caution, and are not intended to mean that the mortgagee remaining in possession after a valid tender or deposit was not to be repaid the expenses which he had justly incurred in performing the duties under clause (a), (c) and (d). The mortgagee was not a person of worse position than a trespasser—Subba Rao v. Sarvarayudu, 47 Mad. 7 (26, 27) A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 533, 44 M.L.J. 534, 72 I.C. 292.

To avoid this conflict of opinion, the italicised words have been added at the end of this clause, adopting the Allahabad view.

The question whether the mortgagor is entitled to claim any interest on the profits received by the mortgagee after the date of deposit has been answered by the Allahabad High Court in the affirmative (Bent Prasad v. Narain, 5 I.C. 529), and by the Madras High Court in the negative (Subba Rao v. Sarvarayudu, 47 Mad. 7 at p. 29). The Bombay High Court has held that where a mortgagee in possession holds over after payment of everything due to him, interest on surplus profits is to be calculated not from the date of the suit but from the date when the mortgage amount was paid—Kishanji v. Motilal, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 337, 31 Bom. 476.

The word "expenses" in this clause should not be restricted to what has to be spent for the management and collection of rents and profits. The mortgagee is not entitled to the credit for public taxes which he paid after the amount due under the decree was tendered by the mortgagor—Rajagopala v. Pandithan, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 464, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 392. Where the mortgagor brings a suit for redemption and accounts on the ground that the debt has been satisfied out of the profits, he would be entitled to a preliminary decree even if he has not deposited the amount of the mortgage—Ganshul Fatma v. Badri Singh, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 155. The word 'receipts' in sec. 76(i) does not mean mesne profits—Narain Prasad Singh v. Radha Kant Prasad Singh, A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 5.

474. Mortgagee liable for loss :—The last para makes the mortgagee liable for loss occasioned by failure on his part to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by this section. If a portion of the mortgaged property is lost owing to some default on his part, and he is therefore unable to put the mortgagor in possession of that portion at the time of redemption, the mortgagee will be debited with the value of the land in taking the mortgage-accounts—Gopala Menon v. Narayana, 5 L.W. 339, 40 I.C. 70.

Where the mortgagee in possession obtained a decree against the lessee of the mortgaged property but failed to execute it, he must make good to the mortgagor the loss caused by such failure although the lease had been effected by the mortgagor—Chandra v. Dwarke, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 42 (44), 161 I.C. 984. The stipulation in a mortgage-deed that if the profits be found to be insufficient, the mortgagor shall pay the deficiency in interest from year to year, does not apply to a case where the profits have not in fact decreased, but the mortgagees have owing to their own default failed to recover them—Mt. Ratan Dei v. Sher Singh, A.I.R. 1929 All. 260 (263), 114 I.C. 876.

A suit for redemption against the mortgagee in possession was dismissed as premature because the period of 12 years for mortgagee's possession had not expired. The lower appellate court decreed the suit as the period of 12 years expired during the pendency of the appeal and allowed the plaintiff to realise mesne profits from the date of the suit. On further appeal to the High Court it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover mesne profits from the date on which lower appellate court passed the decree—Ayyan Krishna v. Kunjikutty Amma, A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 203.

The last para enables the mortgagor to set off any loss suffered by him owing to the mortgagee's default in the same suit; a separate suit for such account is not necessary—Shiva Devi v. Jaru, 15 Mad. 290 (291). The question must be dealt with in the suit itself and must not be left to be determined in execution—Gopala Menon v. Narayana, supra.

The last para provides with only a cumulative remedy and is not intended to operate as a bar to any other remedy which the mortgagor may have under the law—Siva Chidambara v. Kamatchi, 33 Mad. 71 (73). Thus, where the mortgaged property has been sold away owing to the mortgagee's default in payment of arrears or revenue, the mortgagor may either at the time of passing of the decree for redemption ask that the mortgagee be debited with the loss under the last para of sec. 76, or he may bring a separate suit for compensation for loss of the land—Siva Chidambara v. Kamatchi, supra. So also, where the mortgagee causes loss to the mortgaged property in his possession by cutting away certain trees, the mortgagor can recover damages from him by a separate suit, and need not necessarily debit the mortgagee with the loss when taking accounts at the time of redemption. The word 'may' in the last para of this section has not the force of 'must'—Mahabir v. Sheo Shankar, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 124 (125), 112 I.C. 434.

Under the last paragraph the mortgagee is liable to account not only for the income but also for the corpus—Chen Sankar Lal v. United Bank of India Ltd., A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 569. A mortgagee is not entitled to deduct the cost of cultivation of the mortgaged land under sec. 76 (i)—Narain Prasad Singh v. Radha Kant Prasad Singh, A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 5.

77. Nothing in section 76, clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h), Receipts in lieu of interest. applies to cases where there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money, or in lieu of such interest and defined portions of the principal

475. Scope of section :—This section refers only to clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h) but omits clause (c) of sec. 76 which makes it obligatory upon the mortgagee to pay the Government revenue, etc.—Misri Lal v. Gajdhar, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 433, (1943) O.W.N. 347. Where the entire receipts from the mortgaged property are not appropriated by him in lieu of interest or of interest and defined portion of the principal, the mortgagee is not entitled to the benefit of this section—Rameshwar v. Rama Asrey, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 499, (1942) O.W.N. 556.

The principle underlying secs. 76 and 77 is that the usufruct of the mortgaged property represents the mortgagor's money in the hands of the mortgagee for which he is bound to account at the time of redemption except to the extent to which he is expressly authorized to appropriate such usufruct towards interest due to him or towards interest and principal, if any surplus is left after meeting the interest—Kelu Karup v. Manail Paru, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 693, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 686, 1940 M.W.N. 55. A lessee mortgaged his interest by a mortgage-deed which provided that the mortgagee should remain in possession of the property and enjoy the profits in lieu of interest but he was to pay the rent due to the lessor. At the end of 3 years the mortgagor was to regain possession of the property merely on the repayment of the principal amount. The mortgagee did not pay the rent: held, the effect of the document was to take the mortgage entirely out of the purview of sec. 76, clause (h), and as the lessor did not insist on the payment of rent, his inaction enured to the benefit of the mortgagee, not of the mortgagor. Hence in a suit for redemption the mortgagor was not entitled to credit for the unpaid rents—Cheriyath v. Kannumot, (1941) 1 M.L.J. 484, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 549, 1941 M.W.N. 239. But where under the possessory mortgage-deed a sum of money was calculated as the amount of profits which would accrue annually to the mortgagee, and it was provided that if the amount fell short, this would have to be made good by the mortgagor at the time of redemption: held, that the mortgagor's undertaking to make up the deficiency in profits was wide enough to cover the case of remissions, and although the deed was not "accountive" the mortgagee was entitled to recover the deficiencies in profits under the terms of the mortgage—Kirat Singh v. Ram Saran, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 380, 1941 O.W.N. 687, 1941 O.L.R. 463, 194 I.C. 405.

Clauses (g) and (h) of sec. 76 are absolute in their terms and are not qualified by any contract to the contrary. The liability of a mortgagee in possession to render accounts and give credit to the mortgagor for all receipts after deduction of expenses is absolute, and the mortgagee cannot contract himself out of it unless he can bring himself strictly within the exception provided by the present section—Mt. Faridunessa v. Sir Md. Ejaz Rasool, infra. In this case it was held that the mortgage-deed did not come within the exception provided by this section as the interest on the principal plus interest up to the date when the mortgagee took possession was more than the income of the property, and the provision in the deed depriving the mortgagor of his right to account, it was held, could not confer any advantage upon the mortgagee in derogation of sec. 76.

This section only comes in where the mortgagor is from the outset safe from being confronted at the time of redemption with a demand for anything more than the principal sum advanced. It does not cover the case in which only a part of the interest is to be paid out of the usufruct—Kamala Prasad v. Bamdeo, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 148 (149), 155 I.C. 22; Mt. Faridunnissa v. Sir Md. Ejaz Rasool, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 203, (1941) O.W.N. 1378, 198 I.C. 234. See in this connection Thakan v. Rampartap, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 201 and Sundaram v. Mannadiar, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 197; I.L.R. 1947 Mad. 411. Where the terms of the usufructuary mortgage were that the mortgagees were to receive the profits in lieu of interest, to pay to the mortgagors nothing but malikana and that they were not accountable to the mortgagors otherwise, held that the mortgagees were not bound to account to the mortgagors and that the mortgagors were entitled to redemption on payment of the principal money after deducting the malikana for the years for which it was not paid by the mortgagees—Behari Lal v. Sibalal, 46 All. 633, A.I.R. 1924 All. 591, 82 I.C. 25. Where a katkobala provided that the lands were to be kept in kat for 9 years, that during the time the mortgagees will be entitled, on paying the rent to the landlord, to appropriate the profits in lieu of the annual rent payable, and that on the expiry of 9 years the mortgagor would redeem the katkobala after paying the entire amount due for principal and interest, it was held that the plaintiff could redeem only upon payment of the principal and interest, and he was not entitled to an account of the rents and profits received by the mortgagees from the land—Osman Ali v. Faijian, 53 C.L.J. 380, 134 I.C. 95. Where the sub-mortgagee in possession was, after payment of Government revenue yearly, out of the profits, to appropriate the balance in payment of interest, the sub-mortgagor was not entitled to ask for an account—Mahmood Ali v. Ali Mirza, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 220 (222), 148 I.C. 903. In a mortgage with possession it was stipulated that the mortgagee should absorb the income towards interest and in case the income fell short of the amount of interest accrued due, the mortgagor should make good the balance; and in case of failure to pay the interest agreed the mortgage-amount was to carry compound interest at a higher rate. The income fell short, but the mortgagee failed to inform the mortgagor of the shortage: held that the mortgagee was not entitled to charge compound interest—Chandra v. Dwarka, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 42 (44), 161 I.C.

984. Where under the terms of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee after meeting certain specified expenses was to appropriate the balance towards interest, and no rate of interest was fixed, held in a suit for redemption that there was no liability on the mortgagee to account nor on the mortgagor to pay interest—Sitla Sahai v. Dhum Sing, 28 O.C. 110, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 114, 82 I.C. 406. So also, where it was stipulated that after deducting the Government revenue, the village expenses and the pay of servants (which was a fixed sum settled and agreed upon), the mortgagee should appropriate the surplus profits towards interest, the mortgagors having no claim for profits and the mortgagee having no claim for interest, the Privy Council held that the stipulation fell within this section and the mortgagee was not bound to account for the rents and profits—Bachhu Lal v. Syed Mohāmmad, 10 O.W.N. 299 (P.C.), 37 C.W.N. 457 (464), 144 I.C. 1025. See also Durga Shankar v. Ganga Sahai, A.I.R. 1932 All. 500, (1932) A.L.J. 493; Ramdhan Puri v. Bankay Bihari Saran, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 941. A usufructuary mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee would be entitled to appropriate in lieu of interest the profits remaining after payment of the Government revenue and malikana to the malikanadars, and that all profits from increased income should go to the mortgagee, and the mortgagor would have no concern with them. The mortgagee made profits by not paying malikana to the malikanadars. Held that by virtue of this section the mortgagee was not liable for any account; but the mortgagor could claim that he should be indemnified by the mortgagee against the contingency that a valid claim for arrears of malikana might be made against him by the malikanadars—Raghubar v. Mohit Narayan, 7 Pat. 44, 114 I.C. 473, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 37 (39). Where a simple mortgagee redeems a prior usufructuary mortgage under which the mortgagee is entitled to appropriate the profits towards interest and obtains possession of the property, he acquires all the rights of the usufructuary mortgagee, and hence is liable to render accounts to the mortgagor—Tajammal v. Amiruddin, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 189 (191), (1941) O.W.N. 1239, 197 I.C. 471. The fact that in a suit on his mortgage he has allowed set off to the mortgagor for the profits received against interest due on the bond is no bar to his standing on his rights later on; and hence the mortgagor has no right to ask him to render accounts of the profits received by him—Ibid. Where it was stipulated in a usufructuary mortgage that the profits of the property should be taken in lieu of a portion of the interest, held that this section did not apply and the mortgagee was liable to account to the mortgagor and give credit for the surplus amount, if any—Mahomed Ishaq v. Rup Narain, 54 All. 205 (F.B.), 1931 A.L.J. 977, A.I.R. 1931 All. 562, overruling Shafi-un-nessa v. Fazalrab, 7 A.L.J. 787, 7 I.C. 293 (294).

In the last-mentioned case (7 A.L.J. 787) it was remarked that in the absence of an express stipulation therefor, a usufructuary mortgagee is exempted by sec. 77 from tendering accounts to the mortgagor. This view is not correct. It is just the contrary to what is stated in sec. 77. This section lays down that mortgagee in possession is exempted from liability to render accounts under sec. 76 (h) if there is an express contract that the profits shall be taken in lieu of interest, etc. In other words, every mortgagee in possession, whether usufructuary or otherwise, is bound to account to the mortgagor, under sec. 76 (h) as to the profits of the mortgaged property, unless he establishes a contract in terms of sec. 77 which takes the case out of sec. 76 (h)—Kishun Lal v. Hira Lal, 10 P.L.T. 487, A.I.R. 1929 Pat 571 (573), 120 I.C. 768; Mahomed Ishaq v. Rup Narain, supra; Faujmal v. Motilal (1968) 1 Andh. L.T. 341.

Where the mortgage deed provided that the mortgagee was to remain in possession in lieu of principal and interest, he was exempt from keeping accounts under this section of the profits realized by him during the period in suit under sec. 4 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act 25 of 1934—Ram Pattan v. Murli Dhar, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 83, 21 Luck. 184.

It should be noted that inspite of an express declaration by the mortgagor that the receipts of the property shall be taken in lieu of interest or partly in lieu of interest and partly in lieu of defined portions of the principal, the Courts are unwilling to exonerate the mortgagee from the liability to account under sec. 76 (g). See Mahtab v. Collector, 5 All. 419; Tippayya v. Venkata, 6 Mad. 74; Surendra v. Khitindra, 29 C.L.J. 434, 53 I.C. 59. If the parties merely make an estimate of the amount of rents and profits that would be available for reduction of the debt, the mortgagee is not exempted from liability to account—Surendra v. Khitindra, supra. A clause in a deed of usufructuary mortgage excluding the mortgagee's liability to render account cannot override the provisions of the Bengal Money Lenders Act imposing absolute liability on the mortgagee as money lender to render account—Md. Yusuf v. Sarifan Bibi, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 457. When usufruct is stipulated to be enjoyed by the mortgagee in lieu of interest, the mortgagee is liable to render accounts under sec. 9 of the Orissa Money Lenders Act—Padmabati Devi v. Bhagabat Charan Padhi, I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 695.

Priority.

78. Where, through the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of a prior mortgagee, another person has been induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property, the prior mortgagee shall be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee.

476. Principle :—The rule as to priority of mortgages is stated in the equitable maxim qui prior est tempore potior est jure (he who is prior in time is stronger in law) enunciated in sec. 48. Prima facie, and apart from notice, the priority of mortgages in India depends upon the respective dates of their creation, the earlier in date having the precedence—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (23), 121 I.C. 625. This section is an exception to the above principle; it lays down that the Court would postpone the prior legal estate to the subsequent equitable estate where the owner of the legal estate had assisted in or connived at the fraud which had led to the creation of a subsequent equitable estate without notice of the prior legal estate—Northern Counties Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp, 26 Ch. D. 482 (494); Balmakan Das v. Moti Narayan, 18 Bom. 444 (447).

The question of postponement of the prior mortgagee to the subsequent mortgagee raises the question as to whether the subsequent mortgagee was induced to advance money due to the gross neglect of the prior mortgagee. The onus lies on the subsequent mortgagee who asserts exception to the general rule—Dharani v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1936-Cal. 283 (284), 40 C.W.N. 648, 63 Cal. 880, 165 I.C. 332. In a suit by a subsequent mortgagee for declaration that the prior mortgage was sham and without consideration, the question may be gone into; but the onus is on him to show that the prior mortgage was bogus and created with intent to defraud him—Venkatappa v. Brahmayya, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 1000. There is no distinction between legal and equitable mortgages in this country as in English law—Imperial Bank v. U Rai Gyaw, 50 I.A. 283, 51 Cal. 86, 1 Rang. 637; Webb v. Macpherson, 30 I.A. 238, 31 Cal. 57; Gokul Das v. Eastern Mortgagee & Agency Co., 33 Cal. 410, 10 C.W.N. 276, 4 C.L.J. 102; Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14, 43 C.W.N. 281.

This section has no application and cannot be used to defeat the rights of a person who has obtained indefeasible title to the property, as by continuous possession or prescription—Nallamuthi v. Baitha Naickan, 23 Mad. 37.

This section applies to cases of prior and subsequent mortgagees and not to the case of a prior mortgagee and subsequent purchaser—Sita Ram v. Raj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 283, 150 I.C. 145.

It is necessary to prove that the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of the prior mortgagee was the proximate cause for the advance of money by the subsequent mortgagee. If the fraud, etc., of the prior mortgagee is not the proximate and primary cause but only one of the various contributory factors that led the subsequent mortgagee to advance money, this section can have no application—Ratan Lal v. Mukandi, 1933 L.L.J. 16, A.I.R. 1933 All. 299 (300), 146 I.C. 488. The words "fraud", "misrepresentation" and "gross negligence" in this section are three different kinds of conduct and are disjunctive. There can, therefore, be a gross neglect without there being any element of fraud or misrepresentation—Rangappa v. Imamuddin, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 29 (31), 30 N.L.R. 196.

477. Fraud :—Negligence is not fraud, but it may be evidence of fraud if it is so gross as to be incompatible with the idea of honesty—Rangappa v. Imamuddin, supra. Where the mortgagee had fraudulently concealed the fact from a subsequent incumbrancer that he himself made a prior advance upon the same property, he could not set up his rights as a prior mortgagee in opposition to the subsequent incumbrancer—Bhurrut Lal v. Gopal Saran, 11 W.R. 286. So, where the prior mortgagee was shown to have consented to a second mortgage which contained a recital that it was free of all prior incumbrances, held that the prior mortgagee could not claim priority over that charge in favour of his own mortgage.—Raman Chetty v. Steel Brothers, 15 C.W.N. 813 (P.C.) 11 I.C. 503, 21 M.L.J. 936; Sakhiuddin v. Sonallah, 22 C.W.N. 641 (643), 45 I.C. 986. But if a prior mortgagee knowing that a second mortgage is going to be executed merely keeps quiet, he is not guilty of constructive fraud and does not lose his priority; nor does his attestation to the second mortgage amount to constructive fraud, if he is not aware of its contents—Salamat Ali v. Budh Singh, 1 All. 303. But if he attests the second mortgage, knowing of its contents, and keeps silent, the prior mortgagee will lose his priority—Salamat v. Budh Singh, supra.

Fraud may be inferred where the duplicity of the prior mortgagee cannot be accounted for on any other supposition than that he intended to defraud, even though there is nothing on record to show what that fraud is—Nanda Lal v. Abdul Aziz, 43 Cal. 1052 (1081, 1082), following Walker v. Linom, [1907] 2 Ch. 104.

A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and when one kind of fraud is charged another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it—Abdul Hossein v. Turner, 11 Bom. 620 (643) (P.C.), following Montesquien v. Sandys, 18 Ves. 302 (314). "The mere averment of fraud in general terms is not sufficient for any practical purpose in the defence of a suit. Fraud may be alleged in the largest and most sweeping terms imaginable. What you have to do is, if it be a matter of account, to point out a specific error and establish it by evidence. Nobody can be expected to meet a case, and still less to dispose of a case summarily upon mere allegations of fraud without a definite character being given to those charges by stating the grounds upon which they rest"—per Lord Hatherly in Wallingford v. Mutual Society, 5 App. Cas. 685 (701). If a plaintiff desires to press a claim to relief against a defendant on the ground of fraud, it must be pleaded and particulars of the fraud alleged must be specifically set out—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (28), 121 I.C. 625. A person who charges another with fraud must himself prove that fraud, and the plaintiff is not relieved from this obligation because the defendant has himself told an untrue story—Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman, 21 Cal. 612 (620).

478. Misrepresentation :—For the definition of misrepresentation reference may be made to sec. 18 of the Contract Act.

Misrepresentation does not necessarily mean fraudulent misrepresentation, just as gross negligence does not mean negligence amounting to fraud—Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co., 15 Mad. 268 (275).

479. Gross negligence :—There is a distinction between the English and the Indian law, as regards the meaning of gross negligence. According to English law, gross negligence means negligence amounting to fraud and the tendency of English decisions is to refuse to postpone the prior incumbrancer merely on the ground of gross negligence unaccompanied by any element of fraud. The Court will not postpone the prior legal estate to the subsequent equitable estate on the ground of any mere carelessness or want of prudence on the part of the legal owner—Northern Counties Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp, (1884) 26 Ch. D. 482, 33 L.J. Ch. 629, 51 L.T. 806. The rule of equity is that a prior encumbrancer will not be postponed to a subsequent encumbrancer unless he has been guilty of gross negligence amounting to fraud—per Wood, V.C. in Dowle v. Saunders, 34 L.J. Eq. 87. Mere negligence is not sufficient to deprive a mortgagee of his priority; his negligence must be such as to amount to evidence of fraudulent intention, such as to lead the Court to conclude that he is an accomplice in the fraud—per Lord Eldon in Evans v. Bicknell, (1801) 6 Ves. 174 (182). There must be either direct fraud or negligence amounting to evidence of fraud to induce the Court to interfere for the purpose of postponing a party—per Lord Eldon in Martinez v. Cooper, (1826) 2 Russ. 198.

But in India the law is otherwise. It has been pointed out in a Madras case that gross neglect of itself and apart from fraud is a reason for postponement of the prior mortgagee—Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co., 15 Mad. 268 (275). So also, it has been held in a Calcutta case that this section makes fraud, misrepresentation and gross negligence quite disjunctive; one cannot be defined in term of the other or others. They are three different kinds of conduct and are in no way co-extensive. It is not necessary that there should be fraud or something indicating fraud to bring a case within the category of gross negligence—Nanda Lal v. Abdul Aziz, 43 Cal. 1052 (1080), 34 I.C. 115; Cowasji v. Tyabji, 23 S.L.R. 97, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 179 (183), 112 I.C. 722. In Damodara v. Somasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (431) and Monindra Chandra v. Troylucko, 2 C.W.N. 750 (753), the English cases were followed and gross negligence was interpreted as neglect amounting to fraudulent intention. But the ruling in Monindra v. Troylucko, 2 C.W.N. 750 has been disapproved of in the recent case of Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (29), 121 I.C. 625. It has been held by the Lahore High Court also that neglect is something different from fraud; it may include honest inadvertence. Neglect is to be determined in every case on its own facts and no precedent can serve as a safe guide in this matter—Mt. Ghulam Fatima v. Mt. Gopal Devi, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 269, 190 I.C. 599; on appeal Gopal Devi v. Ghulam Fatima, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 113, 45 P.L.R. 143.

In a more recent English case it has been observed that a party may be guilty of negligence, but it is not essential that he should be guilty of fraud—Oliver v. Hinton, [1899] 2 Ch. 264.

No general definition of gross neglect has been or can be laid down. Each case must depend upon the facts proved in it and reasonable inferences from such facts—Damodara v. Somasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (431); Nanda Lal v. Abdul Aziz, 43 Cal. 1052 (1083). "Gross negligence is negligence with a vituperative epithet. What constitutes gross negligence is always excessively difficult to define or by way of anticipation to illustrate"—per Campbell, L.J. in Colyer v. Finch, (1856) 5 H.I.C. 905 (924), 26 L.J. Ch. 65. Gross neglect means a failure on the part of the prior mortgagee to take such reasonable precautions against the risk of a subsequent encumbrancer being deceived as in the circumstances renders it unjust that the earlier mortgage should retain its priority. Each case must turn upon its own facts. For instance, an act or omission that would amount to gross neglect on the part of a banker or a man of business might not be so regarded in the case of an ill-educated man or a woman—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (29), 121 I.C. 625. See also Dharani v. Promatha, infra. Thus, an omission to examine the revenue-papers or to look into the entries in the khevat may or may not constitute gross neglect according to the facts and circumstances of the case—Ratan Lal v. Mukandi, 1933 A.L.J. 16, 146 I.C. 488, A.I.R. 1933 All. 299 (301). So the failure to give proper description of one of the properties and to comply with secs. 21 and 22 of the Registration Act leading to the failure of the properties being properly indexed would constitute negligence on the part of the mortgagee—Galliara v. U. Thet, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 117 (119, 120), 7 Rang. 118, 117 I.C. 580. A mortgagor after mortgaging his house to M, subsequently mortgaged the same house to successive mortgagees expressly mentioning that the house was free from incumbrance and title-deeds were given to the subsequent mortgagees along with possession. M had allowed the mortgagor to retain the title-deeds in his possession as well as the house: held, that the neglect was a gross one and on the principles of this section the subsequent mortgagee was legally entitled to ignore M's mortgage—Mt. Ghulam Fatima v. Mt. Gopal Devi, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 269, 190 I.C. 599. But where the mortgagee allowed the mortgagor to remain in possession of the property and the latter was paying rent, the mortgagee could not be said to be guilty of negligence within the meaning of this section—Benarsi Das v. Moti Ram, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 308, 42 P.L.R. 265.

The mere fact that a prior mortgagee who was entitled to possession did not take possession or that he omitted to record the prior mortgage-deed in the revenue papers, did not show such gross negligence on his part as to deprive him of his priority—Mahesh v. Daulat, 30 P.L.R. 128, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 314, 118 I.C. 655. So also, the mere fact that the prior mortgagee did not have his mortgage registered till after the execution of the second mortgage, did not show any gross neglect on his part, if it was registered within the four months' time allowed by the Registration Act. Thus, if the prior mortgage was executed on the 20th March, and was presented for registration on 22nd June, and in the meantime a second mortgage was created on the 7th June and registered on the following day, the prior mortgage could not be postponed to the subsequent mortgage, if there is nothing to show that the prior mortgagee induced the second mortgagee to advance money—Surendra v. Haridas, 60 Cal. 225, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 398 (400), 144 I.C. 196. An act or omission on the part of the prior mortgagee which has enabled the mortgagor to deal with the property as if it was not encumbered would be gross neglect within the meaning of this section. Though failure to secure the title-deeds or delay in registration each standing by itself may not be evidence of negligence, yet both circumstances taken together coupled with some conduct on the mortgagee's part which would have the effect of inducing a subsequent mortgagee to advance money on the faith that the property was not encumbered, may be evidence of gross negligence—Sumarapuri v. Thangavelu, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 87, 46 M.L.W. 778. Negligence consists in omitting to do something which a reasonable man would do or the doing of something which a reasonable man would not do, in either case causing unintentionally some mischief to a third party. Gross negligence is a relative term and means the absence of care that was requisite under the circumstances. In determining the degree which would satisfy the test of grossness, the test to be adopted is that it must at least be carelessness of so aggravated a nature as a reasonable man would have observed and to indicate an attitude of mental indifference to obvious risks—Dharani v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 283 (288), 40 C.W.N. 648, 63 Cal. 880, 165 I.C. 332; Rangappa v. Imamuddin, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 29 (31), 30 N.L.R. 196.

Where the subsequent mortgagee is himself guilty of gross negligence, he cannot burden the prior mortgagee with the consequences of his own negligence. The law does not accept the argument of negligence against negligence, like that of estoppel against estoppel—Ratan Lal v. Mukundi, supra. See also Surendra v. Mohendra, 59 Cal. 781, 36 C.W.N. 420 (427), 140 I.C. 662, where the second mortgagee was infinitely more negligent in not calling for an important document of the mortgagor's title than the prior mortgagee who was merely negligent in not calling for an original document of title and in being satisfied with a certified copy of it on the mortgagor's representation that the original had been lost.

This section speaks of gross negligence, and so, a slight negligence on the part of the prior mortgagee in parting with the mortgage-deed cannot be considered sufficient to deprive him of his priority—Mutha v. Sami, 8 Mad. 200 (202). If a prior mortgagee accepted a certified copy of a document (redemption certificate) relating to the property on the mortgagor's representation that the original had been lost, and did not call for an affidavit, this omission was not negligence, far less any gross negligence such as this section contemplates—Surendra v. Mohendra, supra.

480. Non-possession of title-deeds by the first mortgagee:—The question whether the first mortgagee, who omits to obtain possession of the title-deeds at the time of execution of the mortgage, or who after obtaining them parts with their possession, is guilty of gross negligence must be decided with reference to the nature and circumstances of each case. The mere possession of the title-deeds by the second mortgagee and non-possession of them by the prior mortgagee will not make the latter lose his priority over the former—Thorpe v. Holdsworth, 38 L.J. Ch. 194; Hunt v. Elmes, 2 DeG. F. & G. 578. The Court will not impute fraud or gross and wilful negligence to the prior mortgagee if he has bona fide inquired for the title-deeds and a reasonable excuse has been given for the non-delivery—Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare 449. If the prior mortgagee can satisfy the Court that the absence of title-deeds was reasonably explained to him by the mortgagor when he obtained his mortgage, or that he was subsequently induced to part with them upon such grounds and under such circumstances as to exonerate him from any serious imputation of negligence, he ought not to lose his priority because the mortgagor may have afterwards dishonestly handed over the title-deeds to a second mortgagee—Somasundara v. Sakharai, 4 M.H.C.R. 369. It cannot be said that a mortgagee owes a duty to all persons who in the future may become puisne mortgagees of the same property to take care that the mortgagor is not enabled to commit a fraud upon subsequent encumbrancers by being allowed to be in possession of the documents of title—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (28), 121 I.C. 625. "Title-deeds are not in the eye of the law analogous to fierce dogs or destructive elements where from the nature of the thing the Courts have implied a general duty of safe custody on the part of the person having their possession or control"—per Fry, L.J. in Northern Counties Insurance Co. v. Whipp, (1884) 26 Ch. D. 482. Thus, where after a mortgage-deed was executed and the title-deeds were handed over to the mortgagee, the mortgagor obtained the title-deeds back from the mortgagee on the representation that they were required for effecting a mutation of names in the Land Revenue Registers, and subsequently utilised them for effecting a mortgage of the same property to another, held that under the circumstances the conduct of the prior mortgagee did not amount to gross negligence and that he was not to be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee—Chettiar Firm v. Chettiar Firm, 4 Rang. 238, 98 I.C. 19, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 195. Where the mortgagee handed over the mortgage-deed to his vendee as a security for unpaid purchase-money, and then the vendee made over the deed to the mortgagor who then sold the property, held that the conduct of the mortgagee did not at all amount to negligence—Mutha v. Sami, 8 Mad. 200 (202). Where the prior mortgagee obtained the important document of title, and omitted to obtain possession of a document in respect of a portion of the property, his conduct did not amount to gross negligence—Chettiar Firm v. Chettiar Firm, 7 Rang. 28, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 65 (66), 116 I.C. 475.

Before a prior mortgagee can be postponed under this section, the Court must be satisfied that the subsequent mortgagee was induced directly and not remotely to advance money on the security of the property by reason of the gross neglect of the prior mortgagee.—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., supra. To cite a familiar illustration, “in one sense every man who sells a pistol or a dagger enables an intending murderer to commit a crime; but is he, in selling a pistol or a dagger to some person who comes to buy it in his shop, acting in breach of any duty? Does he owe any duty to all the world to prevent people taking advantage of his selling pistols or daggers in his business, because he does in one sense enable a person to commit a crime?”—per Lord Halsbury in Farquharson v. King, [1902] A.C. 325, 86 L.T. 810, 71 L.J.K.B. 667. The same remarks apply to a prior mortgagee who unsuspectingly hands over the title-deeds to the mortgagor.

The burden lies on the prior mortgagee to explain the omission. If it appears that he asked for the title-deeds and received a reasonable excuse for their non-production, or that he received some of the deeds under the reasonable belief that he was receiving all, or that he parted with their possession on some reasonable representation made by the mortgagor, he ought not to lose his priority as against a subsequent incumbrancer—Manners v. Mew, (1885) 29 Ch. D. 725; Oliver v. Hinton, [1899] 2 Ch. 264.

But the Court will impute fraud or gross or wilful negligence to the mortgagee if he omits all inquiry as to the deeds—Hewitt v. Loosemore, supra. If it appears from the conduct of the prior mortgagee that there was no bona fide inquiry for the title-deeds or reasonable excuse for their non-production, the Court will certainly impute gross and wilful negligence to the prior mortgagee and will therefore postpone him to the second mortgagee. Thus, a prior mortgagee who allows the title-deeds, for nearly 4 years after his mortgage, to be in the possession of the mortgagor and gives no reasonable explanation of their being so in his possession, is guilty of gross neglect under this section—Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co., 15 Mad. 268 (274), affirming Madras Building Co. v. Rowlandson, 13 Mad. 383. Where the prior mortgagee surrendered the title-deeds to the mortgagor in order that the latter would raise loan elsewhere and repay the mortgagee, and then the mortgagor raised loan by a second mortgage but the money was not paid to the first mortgagee, held that the prior mortgagee parting with the title-deeds to the mortgagor for the purpose of raising money by another mortgage was guilty of gross negligence, unless he took the ordinary precautions that any person advancing money on the security of the deeds should know of his mortgage, such as sending some person with the deeds, insisting that they should be inspected in his presence, or otherwise. He would therefore lose his priority—Madras Hindu Union Bank v. Venkatarangiah, 12 Mad. 424 (428). G mortgaged certain title-deeds of immoveable property with the defendant Bank to secure an over-draft. Subsequent to this deposit, representing that the title-deeds were required to be shown to an intending purchaser, G. obtained possession of the same and mortgaged them to the plaintiff Bank giving them to understand that the property was free from any encumbrance. On the fact of prior encumbrance being discovered, the plaintiff Bank applied for a decree on the mortgage and for prior charge. Held that the defendant Bank (prior mortgagee) was guilty of gross negligence in parting with the possession of the title-deeds, and lost its priority. The prudent and normal practice of the defendant Bank (who held an equitable mortgage which was not registered), when the mortgagor applied that the title-deeds might be shown to an intending purchaser, was not to allow the mortgagor to have possession of the title-deeds, but to hand over the title-deeds to the Bank's solicitors in order that the solicitors should arrange with the solicitors of the purchaser for the examination of the documents. This would have been a prudent and safe course for a Bank to follow in Calcutta, where mortgages are created by deposit of title-deeds, and such mortgages are not usually registered. In departing from this usual and prudent course the defendant Bank was guilty of gross negligence, and consequently its mortgage must be postponed to that of the plaintiff Bank—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (25, 26), 121 I.C. 625. Where the prior mortgagee, at the request of the mortgagors returned to them the title-deeds to enable them to raise money to pay off his mortgage, and the mortgagors agreed to raise the money in five days, but after the five days the mortgagee did not take any active steps to get back the title-deeds, held that this conduct amounted to gross negligence, and disentitled him to claim priority over a subsequent mortgagee—Damodar v. Somasundara, 12 Mad. 429 (432, 433); Cowasji & Co. v. Tyabji, 23 S.L.R. 97, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 179 (184), 112 I.C. 722. The vendor sold a property to the vendee, but the latter being unable to pay the greater portion of the purchase-money gave a mortgage of the property to the vendor but did not deliver the title-deeds. Moreover in the sale-deed it was stated that the whole purchase-money had been paid in cash. The vendee afterwards gave a second mortgage of the property by deposit of title-deeds. Held that the prior mortgagee (vendor) was guilty of gross negligence in not taking delivery of the title-deeds. His neglect to recover the title-deeds when he had full notice that the vendee was impecunious and a bad paymaster, was gross and culpable negligence and was rendered more so by a deliberate suppression of the existence of the mortgage in the sale-deed and suggestion that the purchase-money was paid in cash—Nanda Lal v. Abdul Aziz, 43 Cal. 1052 (1083), 34 I.C. 115. These cases are illustrations of the well-known maxim of law: "He who trusts most shall suffer most."

Where the mortgagor deposits all title-deeds showing his title, but does not deposit other material deeds, the mortgagee cannot be held guilty of any gross neglect so as to postpone him to a subsequent mortgagee—Ralli

Brothers v. Punjab National Bank, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 920 (927), 11 Lah. 564, 129 I.C. 21. Where the prior mortgagee failed to secure the title-deeds and delayed registration in order to enable the mortgagor to secure the necessary funds for payment of the amount due to him, that is, to raise money by borrowing or selling any portion of his properties and the subsequent mortgagee took his mortgage after being satisfied that there was no prior encumbrance, the prior mortgagee was postponed as he was guilty of gross negligence—Samarapuri v. Thangavelu, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 87 (89), 46 M.L.W. 778. See also Oonamalai v. Narasimha, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 161 (163, 164), 47 M.L.W. 40. Where the mortgagee parted with the title-deeds when he had sufficient reasons to think that the mortgagor required them for the purpose of effecting a sale of the properties, it was held that the mortgagee was guilty of negligence under this section, but there was no estoppel under sec. 115 of the Evidence Act against him—Nataraja v. Lakshman, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 195 (199), 170 I.C. 845.

In the case of a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds much greater care is necessary in the matter of their custody on the part of the mortgagee for his own safety and security and also to avoid the risk of the mortgagor being able to represent that the property is unencumbered, because there is no document about the transaction which could be traced by an innocent subsequent encumbrancer on search—Dharani v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 283 (289), 40 C.W.N. 648, 63 Cal. 880, 165 I.C. 332.

In some other cases it has been held that since mortgages by deposit of title-deeds cannot be effected in mofussil places, it is a common practice in the mofussil to leave the title-deeds in the possession of the mortgagor, and since the existence of a system of registration has caused mortgagees in general to attach little importance to the possession of title-deeds, the failure of the prior mortgagee to obtain possession of them should not necessarily be imputed to him as gross negligence—Rangasami v. Annamalai, 31 Mad. 7 (10) (following Agra Bank v. Barry, L.R. 7 H.L. 135); Monindra Chandra v. Troylucko, 2 C.W.N. 750 (752, 754). See also Balmakundas v. Moti Narayan, 18 Bom. 444 (447).

Effect of registration of prior mortgage:—In some of the cases cited above, it was contended by the first mortgagee (who was held to be guilty of gross negligence for not having possession of title-deeds) that since his mortgage was registered, the subsequent mortgagee ought to have searched the registry which would have discovered the prior mortgage, and his omission in doing so amounted to negligence on his (subsequent mortgagee's) part, and disentitled him to get priority over the first mortgagee; but the Court held that registration did not amount to notice of the first mortgage, and the non-search of the registry was not an act of negligence on the part of the subsequent mortgagee—Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co., 15 Mad. 268 (288); Madras Building Co. v. Rowlandson, 13 Mad. 383 (388); Nanda Lal v. Abdul Aziz, 43 Cal. 1052 (1084); Chettiar Firm, v. Chettiar Firm, 4 Rang. 238, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 195, 98 I.C. 19.

The definition of notice has now been amended, and under the new Explanation 1 added to section 3, registration amounts to notice. And so the Calcutta High Court has expressed an opinion (though by way of obiter) that where the prior mortgagee has surrendered the title-deeds to the mortgagor, but the prior mortgage has been registered, and a later prospective encumbrancer by searching the register would thus be in a position, if he made reasonable enquiry, to discover its existence, the Court would be slow to hold that the prior mortgagee had been guilty of gross neglect or that the action of the prior mortgagee in failing to retain possession of the title-deeds had in any direct way caused or induced the later encumbrancer to advance money on the security of the property—Lloyds Bank v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., 56 Cal. 868, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 22 (29) 121 I.C. 625. These remarks would, however, apply to cases of gross negligence, but not where the prior mortgagee has been guilty of fraud or misrepresentation; in such cases, he cannot evade the penalty of this section by saying that his mortgage which is registered must at all events have priority over the mortgage created in favour of a subsequent mortgagee who must be deemed to have had notice of the first mortgage by reason of its registration. Fraud or misrepresentation would certainly operate as estoppel.

A mortgage-bond that is duly registered confers, unless displaced, a valid security in priority to all of later date, and therefore the onus lies on the person who claims under a bond of later date to displace the priority—Cathiresam v. Natchiappa, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 191 (192), 143 I.C. 761.

79. If a mortgage made to secure future advances, the performance of an engagement or the balance of a running account, expresses the maximum to be secured thereby, a subsequent mortgage of the same property shall, if made with notice of the prior mortgage, be postponed to the prior mortgage in respect of all advances or debits not exceeding the maximum, though made or allowed with notice of the subsequent mortgage.

Mortgage to secure uncertain amount when maximum is expressed.

Illustration.

A mortgages Sultanpur to his bankers, B & Co., to secure the balance of his account with them to the extent of Rs. 10,000, A then mortgages Sultanpur to C, to secure Rs. 10,000, C having notice of the mortgage to B & Co., and C gives notice of B & Co., of the second mortgage. At the date of the second mortgage, the balance due to B & Co., does not exceed Rs. 5,000. B & Co., subsequently advance to A sums making the balance of the account against him exceed the sum of Rs. 10,000. B & Co., are entitled, to the extent of Rs. 10,000, to priority over C.

481. Scope of the section :—This section forms an exception to the rule stated in sec. 80 (now 93), under which a mortgagee making a further advance does not in respect of that advance acquire any priority as against an intermediate mortgagee. Under this section, the intermediate mortgagee having notice of the prior mortgage is postponed so far as regards further advances which are subsequently made on the security of that mortgage, provided it expresses the maximum to be secured thereby and that maximum is not exceeded—Shephard and Brown, 7th Ed., p. 337 :

Dalip Narayan v. Chait Narayan, 16 C.L.J. 394, 17 I.C. 927; Baij Nath Goenka v. Daleep Narayan, 1 P.L.T. 582, 58 I.C. 489.

"If made with notice of the prior mortgage" :—The priority which under this section may be acquired in respect of subsequent advances depends upon the fact that the second mortgagee over whom priority is gained had notice of the prior mortgage. If he had not notice of such mortgage, then the case will be decided according to the general principle of priority enunciated in sêc. 48 (Que prior est tempore potior est jure). For an instance of a second mortgage taken with notice of the prior mortgage, see Brijmohan v. Dukhan, 9 Pat. 816, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 33 (37), 130 I.C. 168.

"Though made with notice of the subsequent mortgage" :—Under this section, the prior mortgagee making the subsequent advances does not lose his priority in respect of such advances by reason of the fact that he did so with notice of the intermediate mortgage. In other words, the question whether the prior mortgagee had, at the time of making the further advances, notice of the second mortgage, is immaterial.

482. Maximum :—Two questions have to be considered under this section: first, whether the subsequent mortgagee took with notice of the prior mortgage (and consequently with notice as to the future advances); secondly, whether the prior mortgage expressed the maximum secured thereby. To attract the provisions of this section it is essential that a mortgage to secure future advances must express the maximum intended to be secured thereby, and if no such maximum is fixed, this section cannot apply, and the prior mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, does not acquire any priority over the intermediate mortgagee in respect of his security for such subsequent advance (see the latter part of sec. 93). And in such a case, it is immaterial whether the intermediate mortgagee had notice (actual or constructive) of the prior mortgage—Imperial Bank of India v. U. Rai Gyaw Thu & Co., Ltd., 51 Cal. 86 (98) (P.C.), 1 Rang. 637, 28 C.W.N. 470, 76 I.C. 910, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 211. It is not necessary that the mortgage-bond should explicitly express the maximum amount secured, if the amount may be calculated from the recitals—Dalip Narayan v. Chait Narayan, 16 C.L.J. 394, 17 I.C. 927. Thus, where a deed stated that a lease had been granted for nine years upon an annual rental of Rs. 12,125 and that the lessees had hypothecated their properties to the lessors to secure the due payment of rent, held that the maximum amount secured could be determined by a simple arithmetical calculation, and that it was Rs. 1,09,125 (i.e., Rs. 12,125 × 9), though it was not expressly so stated—Dalip Narayan v. Chait Narayan, 16 C.L.J. 401, 17 I.C. 931; Brijmohan v. Dukhan, 9 Pat. 816, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 33 (36), 130 I.C. 168. Where there is an agreement that a loan up to a certain maximum would be taken and that the deposit of title-deeds would be security for the loan up to that amount, and under such agreement title-deeds are deposited and a smaller amount is taken, and later on a further sum is taken within the stated maximum and a separate hand-note is executed therefor, there is a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds in respect of the second advance as well—Mohini Mohan v. Deb Narain, 40 C.W.N. 1277. Where the debtor has a running account with the creditor on the usual cash credit system and for the repayment of all advances in this account the shop of the debtor is made collateral security subject to a maximum principal sum, the charge on the shop is not limited to the first advance, but it is to include all advances in the account—Kesari Mal v. Tansukh Rai, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 765, 153 I.C. 1064. Where a mortgage is executed by way of continuing security for the payment of all debts due and thereafter may be due by the mortgagor, and a subsequent mortgagee takes the mortgage of the same property with knowledge of the prior mortgage and the prior mortgagee does not thereafter make any advances, he is entitled to priority not only in respect of the principal sum but also interest accruing on it—Allahabad Bank v. Benares Bank, A.I.R. 1938 All. 473, (1938) A.L.J. 658.

483. Future advance :—A further advance made to the mortgagor after he has parted with the equity of redemption cannot be tacked. A mortgagor cannot, after the sale of the equity of redemption in the property mortgaged by him, charge such property with a further advance so as to render the purchaser of the equity of redemption liable to pay such debt before he can redeem—Bhawandas v. Shandas, 23 All. 429. But if the conduct of the purchaser was such as to amount to a standing by and allowing the mortgagee to make further advances to the mortgagor under the supposition that the latter was still the owner of the equity of redemption, such conduct would give an equity in favour of the mortgagee. Thus, for instance, where the property was standing in the mortgagor's name in the Collector's books, and the assignee allowed it to so remain after the assignment, it would be sufficient to render him liable for the further advances—Govindrao v. Raoji, 12 Bom. 33 (at p. 36). Where a mortgage has been effected and a further advance is made after that date on the old security then the further advance is not a new mortgage, provided that no changes are made in the terms of the original transaction—Sher Singh v. Daya Ram, 13 Lah. 660 (F.B.).

484. Charge :—This section applies to mortgages as well as to charges. A partition-deed was effected between the plaintiffs, the 2nd defendant and three other persons, brothers, which provided that "the common family debts should be discharged by the respective sharers to whom they fell, as per schedule of the document, and that if any sharer failed to discharge his portion of the debt, such sharer's properties should be liable for such debts and for the losses that might happen to the family." The second defendant not having discharged a debt due by him under the partition-deed, a decree was obtained by the creditor against all the brothers. In the meantime the second defendant had mortgaged his share to the first defendant. The plaintiffs now brought a suit for a declaration that under the terms of the partition-deed a mortgage-right had been created in their favour to the extent of the decree-amount and that right had priority over the mortgage executed by the 2nd defendant in favour of the 1st defendant after the partition. Held that the above provision in the partition-deed was not one which merely emphasized the personal liability of the sharer to pay his share of the family debts but created a mortgage or a charge upon the property, that the case was governed by this section, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration claimed in the suit—Sesha Iyer v. Srinivasa Ayyar, 41 M.L.J. 282, 70 I.C. 362, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 459.

80. * * * * *

This section has been omitted here but re-enacted as sec. 93.

'As the principle of 'tacking' is akin to subrogation, we propose to number sec. 80 as sec. 93, so as to place it after the section which relates to subrogation.'—Report of the Special Committee.

Marshalling and Contribution.

81. If the owner of two ^{Marshalling} properties mortgages securities, them both to one person and then mortgages one of the properties to another person who has not notice of the former mortgage, the second mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the debt of the first mortgagee satisfied out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee so far as such property will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the first mortgagee or of any other person having acquired for valuable consideration an interest in either property.

81. If the owner of two ^{Marshalling} or more properties mortgages securities, mortgages them to one person and then mortgages one or more of the properties to another person,  the subsequent mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the prior mortgage-debt satisfied out of the property or properties not mortgaged to him, so far as the same will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee or of any other person who has for * * consideration acquired an interest in any of the properties.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 42 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The words "or more" have been added (see Note 487), and consequently the words "first" and "second" mortgagee have been substituted by "prior" and "subsequent" mortgagee. The word "valuable" has been omitted (Note 490). The most important change is the omission of the words "who has not notice of the former mortgage" (see Note 488).

486. Principle :—The principle of the doctrine of marshalling has been thus stated in an English case: "If there are two creditors who have taken securities for their respective debts, and the security of the one is confined to both and security of the other is confined to one of those funds, the Court will arrange or marshal the assets so as to throw the person who has two funds liable to his demand on that which is not liable to the debt of the second creditor"—Baldwin v. Belcher, 3 Dr. & War. 173; Aldrick v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382. If two properties X and Y were mortgaged to A, and afterwards X was mortgaged to B, held that B was entitled to have the securities marshalled, so as to throw A's mortgage in the first instance on Y—Gibson v. Seagrim, 20 Beav. 614. "If A has a charge on Whiteacre and Blackacre, and if B has a charge on Blackacre only, A must take payment of his charge out of Whiteacre only and must leave Blackacre, so that B, the other creditor, may follow it, and obtain payment of his debt out of it; in other words, if two estates, Whiteacre and Blackacre, are mortgaged to one person, and subsequently one of them, Blackacre, is mortgaged to another person, then unless Blackacre is sufficient to pay both charges, the first mortgagee will be compelled to take satisfaction out of Whiteacre, in order to leave to the second mortgagee Blackacre, upon which alone he can go."—per Cotton, L.J. in Webb v. Smith, 30 Ch. D. 192 (200). In such a case the first mortgagee has no right to exhaust a security which is the sole fund for payment of the second mortgagee—Lawrence v. Galsworthy, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 24. Where the subsequent mortgagees who had foreclosed a property which was included in an earlier mortgage of several other properties to the prior mortgagees, applied for an order for the exclusion of the property from the sale proceedings held in execution of the decree of the prior mortgagees, held that the Court had power, in appropriate circumstances, to make such order under secs. 56 and 81—Tara Prosanna v. Nilmoni, 41 Cal. 418 (422). The object of this section is to protect the subsequent mortgagee from the risk of the properties mortgaged to him being sold to satisfy the dues of a prior mortgagee who has the additional security of some other properties also—Rajkeshwar v. Md. Khalilul Rahman, 3 Pat. 522 (530), A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 459, 78 I.C. 796.

This section does not apply to the N. W. F. Province, but its principles are applicable as principles of justice, equity and good conscience. Equity demands that the mortgagee should not be permitted to unequally distribute the mortgage-money on two different properties and to release one lightly and burden the other more than it normally should be. A pro rata share should be recovered from the property which has been proceeded against, if the mortgagee has released another property which was also liable for the security—Abdul Quyum v. Mt. Turi, A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 49.

487. Scope of section :—The old section spoke of "two properties" only. This has now been substituted by "two or more" properties. The reason is thus stated :—

"Section 81 deals with the marshalling of securities. It appears from the proceedings underlying Act IV of 1882 that the section is based on the following passage in Fisher on Mortgage (Art. 1356, p. 694, 6th Edition) :—

- 'If the owner of two estates mortgaged them both to one person, and then one of them to another, without notice, the second mortgagee may insist, under the doctrine of marshalling, but without interfering with the rights of the former, that the debt of the first shall be satisfied out of the estate not mortgaged to the second, so far as that shall extend.'

Like section 56 this section provides for marshalling when there are two properties only. It is also restricted to a case when the second mortgagee intends to marshall the securities. It does not provide for the case of more than two properties nor for the case where the property has been mortgaged more than twice and a mortgagee subsequent to the second mortgagee desires to marshall the prior securities. We propose to widen the scope of the section by providing that it should apply to cases where there are more than two properties and to all subsequent mortgagees generally."—Report of the Special Committee.

Marshalling implies the existence of two sets of properties one of which is subject to both the mortgages and the other is subject to only the earlier mortgage. Where at the time the doctrine is sought to be invoked, there are no two items of properties liable to be sold but only one item, the other having been released by the mortgagee, the doctrine cannot be applied—Muthammal, in re, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 503, 47 M.L.W. 261. But it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that a mortgagee after relinquishing his claim on a portion of the mortgaged property cannot throw the whole burden of the mortgage-debt on the remainder of the property—Muktakeshi v. Ramani Mohan, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 195, 98 I.C. 504 [following Surjram v. Bahramideo, 1 C.L.J. 337 and not following Perumal v. Raman, 40 Mad. 968 (F.B.)]. See also Chettyar Firm v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 220 (223), 171 I.C. 168.

This section applies to mortgages of immoveable property and not to the hypothecation of moveables—Subbiah v. Ram Sabad, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 266, 14 Rang. 198, 163 I.C. 444.

The benefit of this section can be claimed not only by the subsequent mortgagee but also by a purchaser of the property in execution of the mortgage-decree obtained by the subsequent mortgagee (whether that purchaser be a third person or the subsequent mortgagee himself)—Rajkeshwar v. Md. Khalilul Rahman, 3 Pat. 522 (531), A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 459, 78 I.C. 796; Inderdawan v. Govind Lall, 23 Cal. 790; Lakhmidas v. Jamnadas, 22 Bom. 304 (F.B.). But see Naubat v. Mahadeo, A.I.R. 1929 All. 309 (311), 51 All. 606, 116 I.C. 82; Madhusudan v. Jogesh Chandra, 42 C.W.N. 502 and Sengava v. Perumal, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 965 (966), 46 M.L.W. 555.

The benefit of this section cannot be claimed by a lessee. So where some out of several mortgaged properties are subsequently leased out, and the lessee has notice of the indebtedness of the mortgagor, the lessee is not entitled to say that the mortgage-debt should be satisfied by the sale first of the properties other than those subject to the lease—H. V. Low & Co. v. Hazarimull, 30 C.W.N. 183 (185), A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 525, 94 I.C. 786.

"Neither in England nor in this country has the doctrine been extended to a case where only a portion of the property already mortgaged is subsequently sold or mortgaged. If the prior mortgagee is forced to have recourse to a portion of the mortgaged property for the recovery of his money, it may be that both he and the mortgagor will be prejudiced, and the sale of property in portions will not realise an adequate price. We do not, therefore, consider that it will be safe to extend the doctrine of marshalling to such a case."—Report of the Special Committee.

Where properties X and Y were mortgaged to A and subsequently property Y was mortgaged to B who obtained a decree for sale on his sale and purchased Y in execution and A then brought a suit on his mortgage impleading B and got a decree for sale in execution of which B prayed under this section that the property Y should be sold first, it was held that no question of marshalling arose—Jashoda v. Sumanta, A.I.R. 1950 Dac. 9, 54 C.W.N. (2 D.R.) 287. Where a decision has been given by the Court in a suit on the issue of marshalling, the matter cannot be agitated again in the course of execution. The Court can, in its discretion during execution order the properties to be sold in a particular order, but that is not the same thing as allowing a party to claim it as a matter of law—Kathesa Bai v. Venkiteswara, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 705, (1943) 1 M.L.J. 301. In a complicated case the puisne mortgagees should be directed to work out their own rights by way of suits for contribution—ibid. See in this connection Satyanarayanamurti v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 384, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 426.

The debtor must be the same:—No marshalling ought to be enforced unless the parties between whom it is enforced are creditors of the same person, and have demands against the property of the same person—Ex parte Kendall, (1811) 17 Ves. 520, 1 W. & T. L. C. 46; Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 21, p. 304; Gopala v. Swaminathayyan, 12 Mad. 255; Ramaswamy v. Madura Mills, (1916) 1 M.W.N. 265, 34 I.C. 338. A as manager and for family purposes gave a mortgage to B. The family subsequently got divided and the mortgaged property fell to the shares of A and C. Then A again gave a mortgage of part of his share to D, who, having sued on it, bought it in Court auction in execution of his decree. B now sued on his mortgage against A, C and D. D claimed marshalling. It was held, as B and D were not creditors of the same person, no case for marshalling arose. One was a creditor of the co-parcenary, and the other a separate creditor of one of the members of the family—Gopala v. Swaminathayyan, 12 Mad. 255; See also Neelamegan v. Govindan, 14 Mad. 71.

See Note 320 under sec. 56 ante. Where four properties are mortgaged and three of them are in Pakistan, marshalling cannot be done as it would prejudice the rights of the mortgagee—Jain Singh Rai v. Harmandas, A.I.R. 1964 All. 381.

488. Notice—Old Law:—The old section contained the words "who has not notice of the former mortgage" so that the second mortgagee could claim the benefit of marshalling under this section only when he had no notice of the earlier incumbrance—Sesha Ayyar v. Krishna, 24 Mad. 96 (106); Kishan Chand v. Ramsukh Das, 86 P.R. 1916, 33 I.C. 815; Lakshmana v. Sankara Moorthy, 25 M.L.J. 245, 18 I.C. 199 (202); Punjab & Sind Bank v. Amir Chand, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 731, 11 Lah. 694, 125 I.C. 631; Sengava v. Perumal, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 965 (966, 967), 46 M.L.W. 555; Ramaswamy v. Madura Mills, (1916) 1 M.W.N. 265, 34 I.C. 338; Naubat v. Mahadeo, 51 All. 606, 27 A.L.J. 419, A.I.R. 1929 All. 309 (311), 116 I.C. 297. In order that the rule of marshalling could apply, it has to be shown that the second mortgagee obtained no notice either before or at the time of completion of his mortgage. And so there was nothing in this section to destroy the right of marshalling when the second mortgagee got the notice subsequent to the execution of his mortgage—Inderdawn v. Gobind Lall, 23 Cal. 790. The real question was whether the second mortgagee was aware of the prior mortgage at the time when he took his own mortgage; the fact that he came to know of the existence of the prior mortgage at the time he purchased the property in execution of his mortgage-decree did not deprive him of the right of marshalling which he had acquired already—Rajkeshwar v. Md. Khalilul Rahman, 3 Pat 522 (532, 533), 78 I.C. 796, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 459; Inderdawn v. Govind Lall, 23 Cal. 790. Where no question of notice was raised in the Court of first instance or in the grounds of appeal but it was suggested for the first time during the arguments that the second mortgagee had notice of the first mortgagee, the High Court disallowed the question—Tara Prasanna v. Nilmoni, 41 Cal. 418 (422), 25 I.C. 118.

It should be noted that in places in which this Act did not formerly apply the doctrine of marshalling was applied even though the subsequent mortgagee had notice of the prior incumbrance—Dina v. Nathu, 26 Bom. 538 (542); Chunilal v. Fulchand, 18 Bom. 160 (171); Lakshmidas v. Jamnadas, 22 Bom. 304 (314). Those cases were decided with reference to the English law under which the question of notice is immaterial and marshalling can be claimed in spite of it. See Flint v. Howard, (1893) 2 Ch. 54 (73).

Under the present section notice is immaterial :—In consonance with the rule of English law, the words referring to notice have been omitted from the present section.

489. Rights of prior mortgagee unaffected :—The rule of marshalling should not be so applied as to interfere with the rights of the first mortgagee, who ought not to be restrained from satisfying his debt out of any portion of the property mortgaged to him that is readily available—Wallis v. Woodyear, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 179. As a rule, marshalling cannot be enforced against a prior mortgagee where there is any doubt as to the sufficiency of the fund upon which the junior creditor has no claim, or where the prior creditor is not willing to run the risk of obtaining satisfaction out of that fund, or where the fund is of a dubious character or is one which may involve him in litigation to realise—Jones on Mortgages, § 1628; cited in Krishna v. Muthukumaraswamiya, 29 Mad. 217 (223). Where the puisne mortgagee has taken the mortgage expressly on condition of discharging certain amount due on the prior mortgage and he fails to fulfil that term, sec. 81 cannot be invoked by him—Devatha Pullaya v. Jaldu Manikyala Rao, A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 425.

Ordinarily, the right of selling property in execution of a mortgage-decree in a particular order rests with the decree-holder and in the absence of any contract between the parties the decree-holder may sell the property in any order he chooses. But the Court has power in the circumstances of any particular case and with regard to the equities arising in favour of the various parties, to direct the order in which the properties should be sold—Raj Keshwar v. Md. Khalil-ul-Rahaman, 3 Pat. 522, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 459, 72 I.C. 796; Venkayya v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 178 (180), 125 I.C. 86.

On the question whether the subsequent mortgagee's claim for marshalling is a right which can be exercised only against the mortgagor or against the prior mortgagee also, there is a conflict of judicial opinion. The Madras High Court and the Oudh Chief Court have held that a prior mortgagee has the undoubted right to satisfy himself out of any portion of the security—Thanmal v. Nathu, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 500, 51 Mad. 648, 110 I.C. 54. The Oudh Chief Court has applied this principle to a charge in the case of Parshadi v. Brij Mohan, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 52 (54), 11 Luck. 575, 159 I.C. 117.

The Calcutta and Rangoon High Courts have on the other hand taken a contrary view. It has been held that the words "but not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee" in this section do not entitle the prior mortgagee to have the properties mortgaged to him to be sold in any order he may prefer ; for the whole object of sec. 81 is to enable the subsequent mortgagee to call upon the prior mortgagee to exercise his rights, so far as they can be satisfied as against the properties which are not the subject-matter of the subsequent mortgagee's charge—Annapurna v. Ram Ranjan, 40 C.W.N. 1173 ; see also Ram Sabad v. Subiah, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 139 (142), 156 I.C. 318 ; where it has further been held that the right cannot of course be exercised against the prior mortgagee so as to prejudice his right, but it cannot be said that his rights are prejudiced when he has deliberately released a part of his security which might have been readily available to him. The Allahabad High Court has also held that where any portion of the mortgaged property has not been absorbed to satisfy the prior lien, it is not open to a mortgagee from either caprice, collusion or negligence to release portions of his mortgage-security and to throw the entire burden upon the remaining property—Murli v. Sheo Dat, A.I.R. 1931 All. 625 (627), (1931) A.L.J. 349. On this point also the Madras High Court has recently held that the prior mortgagee has the undoubted right of releasing any portion of his security and the subsequent mortgagee cannot claim the right of marshalling—Muthammal, in re, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 503 (504), 47 M.L.W. 261. The view taken by the Madras High Court does not seem to be the correct view. For an able discussion of this question and the relevant case law on the point see A.I.R. 1938 Journal, p. 98.

490. Prejudice of right of third parties or of transferees for value :—

As this section refers to the right of the second mortgagee to have the debt of the first mortgagee satisfied out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee, it is clear that the time for the exercise of the right of marshalling is the time when the prior mortgagee seeks to realise his mortgage-amount. If at that time there is already a person who has acquired for valuable consideration an interest in the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee, then the right of marshalling does not exist—Unnamalai v. Gopalaswami, 54 Mad. 59, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 199, 129 I.C. 655. The rule of marshalling will never be applied in favour of a subsequent incumbrancer when that will either really prejudice the rights of the prior incumbrancer or the rights of third parties—Chunilal v. Fulchand, 18 Bom. 160. "It was never the intention of marshalling to defeat the rights of successive incumbrancers or of any person having acquired an interest in any one of the properties for valuable consideration. The right of a subsequent mortgagee of one of the estates to marshal, that is, to throw the prior charge of both estates upon that which is not mortgaged to him, is an equity which is not enforced against third parties, that is, against any one except the mortgagor and his legal representatives claiming as volunteers under him. It is not enforced against a mortgagee or purchaser of the other estate"—per Hay, J. in Flint v. Howard, (1893) 2 Ch. 54 (at p. 73). And the right of the prior mortgagee or the purchaser not to be marshalled does not depend upon whether he had notice of the second mortgage—Unnamalai v. Gopala-swami, supra; Ghose's Law of Mortgage, Vol. 2, p. 812. The rule of marshalling was never intended to defeat the rights of other subsequent mortgagees. Thus, two estates (X and Y) are mortgaged to A and one (X) is afterwards mortgaged to B, the remaining estate (Y) being then mortgaged to C. Here B has no equity to throw the whole of A's mortgage on C's estate (Y) and so destroy C's security. And for the same reason C cannot marshal. In such a case, A must satisfy himself out of two estates rateably, according to the respective values of the two estates, and leave the surplus proceeds of each estate to be applied in payment of the respective incumbrances thereon—per Lord Romilly in Gibson v. Seagrin, 20 Beav. 614 (619). If a mortgage by A and B of their properties in favour of C is followed by a mortgage by A alone of A's property in favour of D, then B cannot say that A's property is to be sold first in execution of C's mortgage decree, because sec. 81 does not apply—Jahan D. C. v. Mathew, A.I.R. 1962 Ker. 106.

The word "valuable" which occurred before the word "consideration" has been omitted, because "the Indian Law does not recognize any distinction between good and valuable consideration (see sec. 25 of the Indian Contract Act and Pollock and Mulla's Contract Act, p. 34)."—Report of the Special Committee.

82. Where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage.

82. Where property subject to a mortgage belongs to two or more persons having distinct and separate rights of ownership therein, the different shares in or parts of such property owned by such persons are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, and, for the purpose of determining the rate at which each such share or part shall contribute, the value thereof shall be deemed to be its value at the date of the mortgage after deduction of the amount of any other mortgage or charge to which it may have been subject on that date.

Where, of two properties belonging to the same owner, one is mortgaged to secure one debt and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, and the former debt is paid out of the former property, each property is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the latter debt after deducting the amount of the former debt from the value of the property out of which it has been paid.

Nothing in this section applies to a property liable under section 81 to the claim of the subsequent mortgagee.

Amendment :—By sec. 43 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929) the first para of this section has been redrafted, and in the third para the word 'subsequent' has been substituted for the word 'second'. The reasons are stated below in proper places.

Application :—The principle underlying this section is applicable in the Punjab—Gian Singh v. Atma Ram, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 374, 141 I.C. 596.

491. Section analysed :—The first paragraph recognizes a lien possessed by the person who being interested in one of the mortgaged properties (or in a portion of the mortgaged property) pays off the debt and so acquires a right of contribution. The second paragraph then deals with a case in which, the first mortgage having been paid off out of the only property comprised in it, it remains to be determined how the second mortgage-debt is to be borne as between the remainder of that property and another property which is also made a security for the second debt. In such a case, contribution works, not in favour of the second mortgage, but in favour of other persons interested in one or other of the two properties comprised in the mortgage—Scsha Ayyar v. Krishna Aiyanger, 24 Mad. 96 (106, 107).

Principle :—This section is an embodiment of the principle that a property which is equally liable with other property to pay a debt shall not escape, because the creditor has been paid out of that other property alone—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (416); Muhammad Yahiya v. Rashiduddin, 31 All. 65 (67); Narayanan v. Nallammal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 685 (F.B.), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 525; Meyyappa v. Murugappa, A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 117. Fisher on Mortgage, 6th Ed., § 1346. "If several estates (whether of one or several owners) be mortgaged for or subject equally to one debt.....the several estates shall contribute rateably to that debt; being valued for that purpose, after deducting from each estate any other incumbrances by which it is affected"—Fisher on Mortgage, 6th Edn., p. 688. The reason given for this principle is that "the law requires equality; one shall not bear the burthen in case of the rest"—per Eyre, C.B. in Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, (1787) 2 W. & T.L.C. (7th Edn.), p. 535, cited in 26 All. 407 (436). It also lays down that parties who were equally bound with another to satisfy a debt and who are relieved by that other from the burden of the debt should contribute rateably towards the satisfaction of the debt—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (416). No extraneous principle to modify the liability to contribution imposed by this section can be introduced—Isri Prasad v. Jaga Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 628 (629), 16 Pat. 557, 172 I.C. 187; Purbi v. Hardeo, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 169, 159 I.C. 1049.

A mortgagor has a right of contribution against the property of other co-mortgagors not only when his property has been sold, but also when he saves his own property and the property of the co-mortgagors by redeeming the mortgage—Brij Bhukhan v. Bhagwan Dutt, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 449 (F.B.). But contribution cannot be claimed from a co-mortgagor whose property equally with the property of the claimant, has been sold at the instance of the mortgagee, because it has already contributed its proportion of the debt—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (411); Hari Raj v. Ahmad-ud-din, 19 All. 545.

Where the property of one of the mortgagors has been sold, but the sale has not satisfied the entire mortgage-decree, he cannot claim contribution in respect of the excess realised from his property over and above its rateable proportion of the debt. A claim for contribution cannot arise until the whole of the mortgage-debt has been satisfied—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (426, 427) (F.B.). But where the whole of the mortgage-money has been realised by the sale of the properties of some of the mortgagors, one of them can bring a suit for contribution against those co-mortgagors whose property has not been sold, although the mortgage-debt has not been wholly satisfied by the sale of the plaintiff's property alone—Muhammad Yahia v. Rashiduddin, 31 All. 65 (66); Muhammad Main v. Bharat, 7 O.W.N. 401, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 260 (263), 125 I.C. 402.

The claim to contribution arises, whether the payment has been made by the claimant by a voluntary sale of his property or the payment has been enforced by sale of his property—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (F.B.); Muhammad Main v. Bharat, supra.

692. Rateable apportionment :—The equitable rule of rateable apportionment is somewhat different from marshalling and contribution. This equitable rule is in accordance with justice and fair dealing and though not the subject of any special statutory provision, is not excluded by any statutory provision, and is accordingly applicable in India. This right is one which is possessed by a mortgagee against the mortgagor. Thus, the properties A and B of equal value are mortgaged to X to secure an advance equal to the value of either, and a second mortgage on A is taken by Y and a second mortgage on B is taken by Z. In these circumstances, if X pays himself by taking the whole of A, leaving B unencumbered, it will work to the disadvantage of Y or Z. It is not, therefore, fair that such exercise of election by X should advantage the mortgagor and work to the disadvantage of the subsequent mortgagees. In such a case, X must take his debt out of the two properties A and B in the proportion of the values of the properties—Official Assignee v. Byramshaw, 61 M.L.J. 512, 135 I.C. 316, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 196 (197). Inter se mortgagors are liable to contribution in proportion to the value of their property and not according to the extent of benefit they have received from the mortgage-money unless there is a contract to the contrary—Jai Narain v. Rashik, A.I.R. 1931 All. 546, 131 I.C. 545. But an oral agreement varying the terms of a document by which the mortgagors agree that the severally owned items of the hypothecation shall be rateably liable will not be admissible—Muthukumaraswami v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 218, 137 I.C. 285; see also Kamta v. Chaturbhuj, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 98 (100), 73 Pat. 310, 61 I.A. 185, 38 C.W.N. 575, 148

I.C. 486. Where a mortgagee sues his mortgagor and directs the suit at the outset against all the items of the mortgaged property, but subsequently withdraws his claim in respect of one of those items stating that that item did not belong to his mortgagor; the remaining items are liable for the full amount of the mortgage-debt and are not merely rateably liable—Balkishan v. Mt. Bundia, A.I.R. 1932 All. 246 (247), 136 I.C. 567. But the owners of parts of the equity of redemption cannot be deprived of their right to contribution under this section by the action of the mortgagee in releasing another portion of the mortgaged property—Maddipatla v. Ramavarapu, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 293 (294), 162 I.C. 304. In a suit by the holder of a moiety of the mortgaged property for contribution against the vendee from the holder of the other moiety, the fact that the plaintiff is stranger to the contract of sale between the vendor and the vendee inter se is immaterial—James v. Achaiibar, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 119, 21 P.L.T. 416, 185 I.C. 297 relying on Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh, 57 I.A. 189, 52 All. 358, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 183. A suit for contribution fails in limine if a necessary party is not before the Court and in his absence the liabilities of the parties cannot be satisfactorily ascertained—James v. Achaiibar, supra.

493. Scope of section :—This section provides for contribution inter se by the mortgagors—Jnanendra v. Sashi Mukhi, 44 C.W.N. 240, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 60, 186 I.C. 833. The contribution referred to herein is a right which exists between the owners of the mortgaged properties and does not affect the mortgagee's power to enforce his mortgage against all or any of the properties mortgaged to him—Arunagiri v. Radhakrishna, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 44 (46), (1941) 2 M.L.J. 520. Although this section does not in terms apply to a mortgagee who happens to acquire a share of the equity of redemption, the general rule laid down therein applies, and therefore for the purpose of determining the extent to which the mortgagee's right to recover the money under his mortgage has been extinguished by his purchasing the equity of redemption in some of the properties mortgaged to him, the value of the mortgaged properties, as they existed at the date of the mortgage, should be considered and not the value as it existed on the date on which some of the mortgaged properties were purchased by the mortgagee, the date of the institution of the suit being entirely immaterial—Ibid at pp. 46 and 47.

The question of contribution does not concern the mortgagee. Hence the mortgagor cannot claim contribution in a suit for foreclosure. He must file a separate suit—Delansingh v. Darbarilal, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 346, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 376. Where one of two co-owners of a certain property sold his share to a third party with direction to pay a portion of the consideration to a mortgagee in possession, and the other co-owner brought a suit for possession against the purchaser who claimed contribution in respect of the plaintiff's liability under the mortgage, it was held that the payment made by the purchaser to the mortgagee was merely as the agent of his vendor, and consequently he could not claim contribution under this section—Raj Bahadur v. Sitta Prasad, A.I.R. 1951 All. 596.

Where the mortgagee decree-holder applies in execution to sell one of the two properties, but the judgment-debtors claim that both the pro-parties are liable to contribute rateably under this section, the question of rateable contribution is one of adjustment of equities between the parties—Pandurang v. Shrihari, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 155, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 595.

Both sec. 43 Contract Act and the present section deal with the question of contribution. Where the question arises out of a mortgage, this section must exclude sec. 43 on the principle that the general law is excluded by the special law—Kedar Mal v. Hari Lal, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 47. Having regard to the difference in language in secs. 82 and 92, it is not necessary that the whole of the common mortgage should be paid off before a claim for contribution can be advanced by a person who has been made to pay more towards the common mortgage—Manjappa v. Pacha, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 276, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 276. A co-mortgagor who paid the whole mortgage debt may under this section sue for contribution and he may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee under sec. 92. He also acquire a charge under secs. 82 and 100—Rameswar v. Ramnath, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 174, 28 Pat. 955. See also Copinath v. Raghubans, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 522, 30 P.L.T. 277; Ayyappan Raman v. Kunju-Vakki, A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 386. The obligation under sec. 82 is not personal—Rameswar v. Ramnath, supra.

Application:—This section can apply while the mortgage is still subsisting, but it applies even more when the mortgage has been paid off out of some only of the properties mortgaged, and the owner or the person interested in the properties from which the mortgage has been paid off then has a right to claim contribution from the owner of other properties which were liable under the mortgage but which were not called upon to pay it off—Baswanneva v. Dodgowda, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 95, 44 Bom. L.R. 15 relying on Rama Sankar v. Ghulam Husain, 43 All. 589, 19 A.L.J. 584, A.I.R. 1921 All. 323. Where the decree makes the mortgagor and the mortgage security liable for costs as well, contribution can be allowed in respect of those costs—Ayyappan Raman v. Kunju Vakki, A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 386.

As the present Act is not in force in the Punjab, secs. 82, 92 and 100 do not in terms apply there. The principles underlying those sections are however applicable as rules of justice, equity and good conscience—Ganeshi Lal v. Joti Parshad, A.I.R. 1949 E.P. 254.

Mortgagee's right to proceed against all the properties:—This section defines the relations of the mortgagors inter se, and there is nothing in the language of the section which supports the conclusion that the mortgagee must distribute his debt in a certain manner, or that he is unable to enforce it against each and every part of the property made security for the mortgage—Timaji Krishna v. Rama, 20 Bom. L.R. 175, 45 I.C. 862; Raghunath v. Harlal 18 Cal. 320; Abdul Rahim v. Abdul, 22 S.L.R. 243, 106 I.C. 872, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 101 (103). The mortgagee's right to be paid the whole of his debt from whatever portion of the mortgaged properties he wishes to comprise in his suit, cannot be questioned—Krishna Muthu v. Kumaraswamiya, 29 Mad. 217 (225). A mortgagee may release a portion of the security and claim the whole amount from the rest unless he exhibits an intention to break the integrity of the mortgage—M. Ramanna v. C. Butchamma, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 598. Ordinarily, if two properties are jointly mortgaged for the same debt, each of these properties is liable for the whole, and it is open to the mortgagee either to proceed against the whole mortgaged property or against a part of such property—Ghasi Khan v. Thakur Kishori, 1929 A.L.J. 846, A.I.R. 1929 All. 380 (381), 119-I.C. 437. The remedy of any particular judgment-debtor is to recover any excess himself from the others—Punjab National Bank v. Ram Karan, I.L.R. 1941 Lah. 1 (F.B.), 42 P.L.R. 669, A.I.R. 1940 Lah 370 (F.B.). There is nothing in this Act to support the view that as between a mortgagee and the holders of the equity of redemption, the former is bound to distribute his debt rateably upon the mortgaged properties—Hara Kumari v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., 7 C.L.J. 274; Abdul Rahim v. Abdul, supra. Therefore, where upon a suit being brought on a mortgage by the mortgagee, the several purchasers of the mortgaged properties sought to be permitted to pay off the mortgage-debt in shares proportionate to the property purchased by each of them, it was held that the section did not authorise the splitting up of the lien of the mortgagee in this manner but that its object was merely to fix the liability of the mortgagors or their purchasers inter se, and that therefore the mortgagee was entitled to proceed against all the mortgaged properties leaving it to any of the defendants who might have to pay more than his rateable share to recover it from his co-debtors in accordance with this section—Raghu Nath v. Harlal, 18 Cal. 320 (321, 322); Sant Lal v. Nanku Lal, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 174, 75 I.C. 96. A mortgage executed by several persons of their shares in different properties cannot be treated as so many entirely separate mortgages under this section, either before or after the amendment of 1929. Where some of these persons assign their equity of redemption and this is not known to the mortgagee till too late to sue the assignees, the mortgagee is entitled to recover the whole debt out of one or all the properties which he is able to reach—Rajani v. Sourendra, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 421 (424), 38 C.W.N. 124, 151 I.C. 454. No subsequent transferee can insist on the properties other than his own being sold to satisfy the mortgage unless the doctrine of marshalling can be made applicable—Mirza Quaser Beg v. Sheo Shankar, A.I.R. 1932 All. 85 (86), 53 All. 391, 129 I.C. 708. With due regard to the mortgagee's right to have his claim satisfied by sale of every part of the mortgaged property, and apart from it, he is not entitled to dictate to the Court the order in which the mortgaged properties should be sold. A decree under O. 34, r. 5, C. P. C. directs the sale of all the mortgaged properties and so long as rights of the mortgagee are not prejudiced, the Court executing the decree has full power to regulate the order in which and the condition subject to which the mortgaged properties should be sold in order to do justice between two subsequent transferees. It may for that purpose apply the rule of contribution as between such transferees by postponing the sale of one of the properties on payment by the subsequent transferee interested in it of the proportionate amount charged on it, till the remaining properties are sold and the remaining amount is satisfied by the sale-proceeds thereof in which case the property may be proceeded against for recovery of the balance—Ibid, at p. 87. The Court should frustrate any attempt on the mortgagee's part to throw most of the burden on one only of the mortgaged properties.—Ibid, at p. 88. But so long as the integrity of the mortgage is not broken, the mortgagee is entitled to insist on payment of whole of the amount due before any property is released from liability and the Court has no power to compel him to submit to piece-meal redemption.—Ibid, per Sulaiman, J. at p. 90. The intention of this section is not that the lien of the mortgagee should be divided, but simply to determine the liability of the purchasers of the property inter se—Wan Taik v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 26, 155 I.C. 954.

If, however, by the laches of the mortgagee, his claim against some of the mortgagors has become time-barred, he cannot claim to throw the entire burden upon the rest of the properties. In such a case any owner of a portion of the mortgaged properties is legitimately entitled to ask that not more than a rateable part of the mortgaged debt should be thrown upon the property in his hands—Iman Ali v. Baij Nath, 33 Cal. 613 (621); Budhamal v. Rama, 44 Bom. 223 (226). But see Ayyappan Raman v. Kunju Vakki, A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 386 where it has been held that the discharge of one mortgagor by limitation or otherwise does not affect his liability for contribution. Similarly, a mortgagee cannot release a portion of the property from the mortgage-debt, so as to increase the burden upon the other portions, without the privity and consent of the persons affected. The owners of the properties not released are entitled to insist that not more than a proportionate share of the mortgaged-debt shall be levied upon the properties in their hands—Imam Ali v. Baij Nath, 33 Cal. 613 (622), following Surjiram v. Barhmdeo, 1 C.L.J. 337 and 2 C.L.J. 202, and dissenting from Sheo Prasad v. Behary, 25 All. 79. The release of part of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee does not take away, as regards that part, the liability to contribute which this section imposes upon the different parts—Shah Ram Chand v. Parbhu Dayal, A.I.R. 1942 P.C. 50 (53).

If the mortgage dues of a puisne mortgagee could not be satisfied out of the mortgaged properties, recourse may be had to the property liable to contribute. The joining of a claim for contribution in a suit for sale does not amount to misjoinder of causes of action—Chunilal v. Srinivasa, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 276, 1944 M.W.N. 49. The fact that the earlier mortgage was not redeemed by the puisne mortgagee does not debar him from suing for contribution when the former was satisfied by execution sale—ibid. A charge-holder is not concerned with contribution—Hussain v. Raghubar, A.I.R. 1947 Oudh 122, 22 Luck. 37.

“Contract to the contrary” :—The mortgaged properties are liable to contribute rateably to a mortgage-debt only in the absence of a contract to the contrary. Where it is intended by the different owners of several properties that each and every item should be liable to contribute in a manner different from the one described in sec. 82, it would be open to them to agree among themselves to that effect. This section enunciates a rule to be applied only where the mortgagors among themselves did not come to any terms. But the Legislature leave it to the parties to the transaction to lay down any different rules for themselves if they wanted any such different rule—Aziz Ahmad v. Chhote Lal, 50 All. 569, 109 I.C. 38, 26 A.L.J. 298, A.I.R. 1928 All. 241 (247). The rule under this section may be modified by the terms of a contract refusing contribution.

Thus, although all the properties may be originally equally liable for the mortgage-debt, this liability may be altered by mortgage-decree or by an arrangement made between the parties by which the burden of the debt may be thrown primarily on some of the properties, and the other properties may be made liable only if the debt is not realised by the sale of the first-named properties—Satyakripal v. Gopikishore, 6 C.W.N. 583; see also Induru v. Kakarala, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 484, 1941 Mad. 66, 1940 M.W.N. 1002. Where a mortgaged property is sold in two portions to two purchasers, one of whom purchases without notice of the mortgage and with a covenant against incumbrances, and the other person purchases with an express undertaking to pay off the entire mortgage, the latter purchaser, if he discharge the entire incumbrance, is not entitled to obtain contribution from the other purchaser—Kamala v. Chaturbhuj, 8 Pat. 585, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 664 (676), 120 I.C. 17. A mortgaged properties X and Y to B. Subsequently, A sold property X to C and out of the consideration left sufficient money with the vendee to redeem B's mortgage. Afterwards the property Y was sold in execution of a decree against A and was purchased by D. C failed to redeem B's mortgage, and B brought a suit on his mortgage and got a decree; C paid the decretal amount and sued D for contribution. Held that C was entitled to contribution as against D. D was not entitled to enforce the agreement between C and A to redeem B's mortgage, being a stranger to the agreement. The auction sale to D gave rise to no covenant attaching to the property which could pass upon a sale of that property—Charan Singh v. Ganeshi Lal, 24 A.L.J. 401, 94 I.C. 1048, A.I.R. 1926 All. 352, affirmed by the Privy Council in Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh, 52 All. 358 (P.C.). 1930 A.L.J. 753, 24 C.W.N. 661 (666), 124 I.C. 911, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 183. See also Mohamed Inamulla v. Aisha Bibi, 24 A.L.J. 714, 96 I.C. 765; Sonaji v. Krishna Rao, 27 N.L.R. 258, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 172. In the case of Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh, supra, the purchaser purchased the property subject to the mortgage and paid the price on that footing and the benefit of the contract between A and C did not pass to him, the purchaser being no party to the contract (see pp. 184 and 185 of A.I.R. 1931 P.C. p. 183). But had the purchaser purchased the property from the mortgagor free from incumbrance the position would have been different, that is, he would not be liable to contribute as the benefit of the mortgagor's contract would have passed to the purchaser, and it would have been a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of this section—see Isri Prasad v. Jagat Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 628 (630), 16 Pat. 557, 172 I.C. 187 and Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh, supra, at p. 185. But see R. Ananthuya Holla v. Thimaju, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 293 where it has been held that the contract runs with the land.

The words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" as they stood before the amendment in 1929 relate to a contract to which the mortgagee is a party. Such a contract between co-mortgagors only would not excude the operation of this section. The amendment has not altered the law—Damodarasami v. Govindarajulu, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 429 (F.B.). (1943) 1 M.L.J. 291. These words mean the contract between a mortgagor and a mortgagee. Thus where in a mortgage jointly executed by A and B there is a provision that the entire debt shall be recoverable from A's property first, and if it is not sufficient, then from B's property, it amounts to a "contract to the contrary". In such a case if the entire debt is satisfied from A's property, there can be no contribution from B—Official Receiver v. Murali Mohan, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 19, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 473. Where there was no personal covenant as between the mortgagors or any "contract to the contrary", the plaintiff could not claim separate personal reliefs against the defendants—Kedar Lal v. Hari Lal, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 47. See the next case where it has been held that the expression "contract to the contrary" is not necessarily a contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The expression is general and may refer to any contract. In a majority of cases the mortgagee has no interest at all in the question of contribution. Where in a mortgage-deed executed by three persons there is an agreement between the mortgagors that the money borrowed should go to the two mortgagors and the third mortgagor was merely in the position of a surety, and the debt is paid off by one of the two mortgagors, he is not entitled to contribution from the third mortgagor—Khudawand v. Narendra, A.I.R. 1936 All. 258 (263), 58 All. 548, 163 I.C. 117; Thoppai v. Venkatarama, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 106, 59 Mad. 121, 162 I.C. 977. The expression "contract to the contrary" includes a contract between the mortgagor and purchaser of the equity of redemption of another portion of the mortgaged property, if the benefit of the contract has been assigned to him—Muthusami v. Arasayee, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 901 (903), 44 M.L.W. 447; Bava Sahib v. Krishna Boyan, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 898. The words "contract to the contrary" apply also to contracts between the mortgagor and mortgagee—contracts for example, under which some of the mortgaged properties were to be liable in the first instance and others were only to be liable in the event of the security of those properties proving insufficient—Subramania v. Natesa, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 113, 160 I.C. 686. Out of several properties covered by the same mortgage one was sold to a person who agreed that he would pay off the entire mortgage and out of the consideration retained sufficient money to pay off the dues. The mortgagee subsequently purchased from the mortgagor another of the mortgaged properties but in the conveyance it was not stated that he was purchasing the property subject to incumbrance, on the contrary it was stated that the first purchaser had undertaken to pay off the entire mortgage-debt and the mortgagee was entitled to have the money from him, and it also appeared that the mortgagee had paid the full value of the property. The first purchaser made delay in payment and the consequence was that a larger amount was due on the mortgage than was retained by him: held that the first purchaser was not personally liable for the debt, but the property which he had purchased from the original mortgagor was liable for the entire mortgage-debt and neither the mortgagee nor the owners of the other properties which had been mortgaged were liable to contribute—Nirupama v. Surabala, 42 C.W.N. 1004, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 618; Rambhadrachar v. Srinivasa, 24 Mad. 85; Sonaji v. Krishnarao, supra. The contract may be entered into either at the time of the mortgage or afterwards—Rama v. Manak, 7 Bom. L.R. 191.

A mere decision of an executing court settling in a sale proclamation the order in which the mortgaged properties are to be sold is not a contract to the contrary, hence such decision cannot alter the statutory liability under this section—Subbiah Chettiar v. Seeranga Chet- tiar, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 557. P, the purchaser of a part of a property with two encumbrances, viz., a decree debt in favour of K and a mortgage debt in favour of M, agreed to discharge both the debts. P did not discharge the mortgage of M and to discharge the decree debt of K executed another mortgage in favour of K. In execution of K's mortgage decree the portion sold to P was purchased by K. M's assignee in execution of the decree on M's mortgage threatened to put to sale the unsold portion in hands of the vendor, who paid off the decretal amount and thereafter sued K and the heirs of P to recover the amount so paid: Held that the vendor was entitled to recover the entire amount from K because P, whose interest was acquired by K agreed to pay off the mortgage of M—Ummini Amma v. Koshy Iype, A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 77.

494. First para :—This para has been amended in order to apply the rule of contribution where a mortgaged property is subsequently subdivided.

The words "shares in" are intended to make it clear that this para applies to cases where property is owned by several owners but has not been physically partitioned—Report of the Select Committee (1929).

In other words, the rule of contribution applies not only where several properties are mortgaged and the owner of one of them is compelled to satisfy the whole mortgage-debt, but it also applies where only one property held by several co-owners is mortgaged and the portion of one co-owner is made to satisfy the mortgage.

In this para two improvements have been made by the amendment of 1929: First the section has been made to apply not only where several properties are mortgaged, but where the mortgaged property is subsequently divided; and secondly it fixes the date of the mortgage as the date at which the required valuation should be made—Damodarasami v. Govindarajalu, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 429 (F.B.), (1943) 1 M.L.J. 29. Where several properties belonging to different mortgagors are mortgaged a person acquiring the interest of one or more of the mortgagors will be bound by an agreement between the mortgagors inter se—ibid. Where the mortgaged property is owned by several persons having separate rights, the release of a part does not exempt that part from the liability to contribute—Shah Ram Chand v. Parbhu Dayal, 47 C.W.N. (P.C.), A.I.R. 1942 P.C. 50.

Where in a proceeding under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act the entire mortgage debt has been realised from one of the judgment-debtors, a suit by him for contribution against his co-debtors maintainable, although he has not impleaded them to get the debt apportioned in the said proceedings—Sheodan v. Ramesh, A.I.R. 1950 All. 53, 1949 A.L.J. 469. If the effect of the mortgagee releasing a portion of the mortgaged property is to place extra burden on one of the mortgagors, he can sue for contribution—Nripendra v. Naumoni, A.I.R. 1953 Ass. 82, I.L.R. (1952) 4 Ass. 118. A co-mortgagor redeeming a simple mortgage and suing the other mortgagors for contribution can stand on the redeemed mortgage, and if he cannot, he may rely on a charge—Sheosaran v. Amla C. C. Society, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 192, 23 Pat. 953. Where one co-mortgagor redeems the mortgaged property by paying less than the amount actually due, the other co-mortgagors can claim possession of their share by paying the proportionate share of the amount actually paid—Ganeshi Lal v. Joti Parshad, A.I.R. 1949 E.P. 254. See in this connection Rameshwar v. Devendra, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 179, 22 Pat. 637.

Where the original mortgagor died and the property came into the hands of his representatives, and one of them satisfied the entire mortgage-decree obtained by the mortgagee, it was held under the old section that his suit for contribution against the other representatives did not fall under this section, as there was but one property mortgaged—Nawab Jahanara v. Mirza Shujauddin, 9 C.W.N. 865 (867). This is no longer good law in view of the above amendment.

This section refers expressly to a case where the mortgaged property is subsequently divided into shares held separately and not merely to a case where several properties are mortgaged—Narayanan v. Nallammal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 685 (F.B.), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 525.

The rule of contribution enunciated in this section is akin to the rule contained in sec. 95, with this difference that the former section supposes a case where the mortgage-debt is realised by the mortgagee by a forced sale of the property of one of several co-owners, whereas in the latter section (95) the case is one of redemption of the mortgaged property by one of several co-owners in the usual way. But the right to claim contribution is the same in both cases. See Dhakeshwar v. Harihar, 21 C.L.J. 104, 27 I.C. 780 (783).

Where the owner of a portion of the property comprised in a mortgage, in order to save his share from sale, has satisfied a decree obtained by the mortgagee on the mortgage, he is entitled to claim contribution from the owner of another portion of the mortgaged property—Chagandas v. Gansing, 20 Bom. 615; Purbi v. Hardeo, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 169 (170), 159 I.C. 1049; Md. Mian v. Bharat Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 260 (264), 5 Luck. 727, 125 I.C. 402. The purchaser of a share in a mortgaged estate, who has paid off the whole mortgage-debt in order to save the estate from foreclosure or sale, can claim from each of the other co-mortgagors a contribution proportionate to his interest in the property—Hira Chand v. Abdul, 1 All. 455 (456); Danappa v. Yamnappa, 26 Bom. 379. Where persons are suing as owners of one property subject, with property of other persons, to a common mortgage, they are, having paid off the mortgage entitled to call on the owners of the other property to bear their proportion of the burden. It is, however, essential for the plaintiffs to allege and prove a mortgage affecting both their lands and also lands of the defendants—Kamta v. Chaturbhuj, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 98 (100), 13 Pat. 310, 61 I.A. 185, 38 C.W.N. 575, 148 I.C. 486.

A, an eight-anna co-sharer in a tenure, mortgaged his interest to the landlord who obtained a mortgage-decree against that half share. He also obtained rent-decrees against A and his co-sharer B for rent of the entire tenure and when he executed the mortgage-decree, he put up the half share of A to sale and notified at the time of the sale that the properties were being sold subject to a charge for rent under the rent decrees. The decree-holder himself purchased that 8 as. share and thereafter he applied to execute the rent-decree against the half share of B for the full amount of the decrees: held, the result of the whole amount of the rent charge having been notified in the sale proclamation was not that the whole liability passed to the property auction-purchased so as to relieve the other property from liability. The rent-decree should be deemed to have been satisfied to the extent of one-half. But if the whole charge was enforced against either of the properties, the holder of that property would have the right of contribution to the extent of half against the holder of the other property—Prabhu Ram v. Kameshwar, 19 Pat. 524, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 420, 21 P.L.T. 227.

A person executed a simple mortgage of some properties including village C. Subsequently the mortgagor again mortgaged the same properties together with village D in favour of the same mortgagee. The mortgagee obtained a mortgage-decree on the foot of the subsequent mortgage and in execution purchased all the mortgaged properties himself with the exception of village C which was purchased by another person. It was specifically mentioned in the sale proclamation that the properties were subject to the earlier mortgage. Then the mortgagee brought a suit against the purchaser of C village for contribution: Held, that the effect of purchase by the mortgagee was to break up the integrity of the mortgage and a portion of the debt which bore the same ratio to the whole amount of debt as the value of the property purchased by the mortgagee bore to the value of the whole property comprised in the mortgage was discharged. It did not follow that the entire liability under the mortgage was wiped off because the mortgagee himself purchased some items of the mortgaged property. The purchaser of C village was therefore liable for contribution—Md. Abdul v. Baldeo, A.I.R. 1939 All. 86. (87).

A purchaser of one of the mortgaged properties getting a subsequent mortgage-sale in respect of all the properties set aside can sue for contribution for the amount which he has paid to satisfy the mortgage-debt which is the amount in the sale proclamation, so that the interest included therein is also payable, but not the 5 per cent. paid to the disappointed purchaser as it cannot come under this section—Krishnaswami v. Janakalaxmi, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 189, 148 I.C. 217.

Where several parcels of property are mortgaged to secure one debt, every parcel is liable to the mortgagee for the whole amount of the debt; but as between themselves each parcel is liable to contribute to the debt in the proportion which its value bears to the value of the whole property comprised in the mortgage. So also, every person who purchases one of those properties incurs a liability to that extent—Bisheshur v. Ram Sarup, 22 All. 284 (289) (F.B.). If the mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption (either by private sale or at Court sale) in a portion of the mortgaged property, he cannot proceed against the remaining properties in respect of the full amount of the debt, but the portion purchased by him must contribute towards the debt, i.e., must be chargeable with a proportionate part of the debt. The purchase will discharge a portion of the debt which bears the same ratio to the whole amount of the debt as the value of the property purchased bears to the value of the entire property comprised in the mortgage—Bisheshur v. Ramsarup, 22 All. 284 (F.B.); Ponnambala v. Annamalai, 43 Mad. 372 (379) (F.B.); Lakshmidas

v. Jamnadas, 22 Bom. 304; Krishna Chandra v. Pabna Model Co., 59 Cal. 76, 137 I.C. 260, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 319; Mir Eusuff Ali v. Panchanan, 15 C.W.N. 800 (803), 6 I.C. 842; Sabir v. Rirasat, 1929 A.L.J. 1162, A.I.R. 1929 All. 696 (697); Gian Singh v. Atma Ram, 34 P.L.R. 532, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 374; Murli v. Sheo Dat, A.I.R. 1931 All. 625 (627), 1931 A.L.J. 349. For the application of the doctrine of contribution it is immaterial whether the payment in respect of which contribution is claimed has been made voluntarily to avert a legal process or has been enforced by sale of the claimant's property—Md. Mian v. Bharat Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 260 (264), 5 Luck. 727, 125 I.C. 402.

Where of the two mortgagors both are made liable in respect of a particular sum, and one of them only for the balance, and the other discharges the joint liability in its entirety, he acquires the right to contribution by reason of such discharge notwithstanding that the liability of the other in respect of the balance remains undischarged. In working out this right of contribution and arriving at the actual amount payable, regard must be had to the principle laid down in Faqir v. Aziz, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 74, 54 All. 199, 136 I.C. 751 (see Note 457, 3rd para)—Sreeramulu v. Rama Krishnayya, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 500, 70 M.L.J. 532, 162 I.C. 828.

A subsequent mortgagee of a portion of the property purchasing under his decree cannot plead that the property in the hands of the mortgagor alone is responsible for the payment of the full amount of a prior mortgage; but the subsequent mortgagee-purchaser and the mortgagor must contribute rateably—Naubat v. Mahadeo, 51 All. 606, 1929 A.L.J. 419, 116 I.C. 297, A.I.R. 1929 All. 309 (311), following 22 All. 284 above. The question in such a case is whether the purchase of the property was subject to the entire encumbrance or only to a proportionate charge. The circumstance that the purchase was made at much below its market value has by itself no effect on the right to contribution, but is of evidential value in deciding the question—Gulzari v. Ali Ahsan, A.I.R. 1933 All. 929 (931), 147 I.C. 521.

Where several properties are mortgaged, and the sum actually advanced is less than that mentioned in the deed, the equitable method of dealing with the case would be to distribute the reductions of principal over each item of property covered by the mortgage—Shib Chandra v. Lachmi, 33 C.W.N. 1091 (1095) (P.C.), A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 243, 119 I.C. 612.

Where part of the mortgaged properties was purchased, subject to the mortgage, at an auction-sale in execution of a simple money-decree against the mortgagor, and then the mortgagee brought a suit on the mortgage and realised the mortgage-debt from the property remaining in the hands of the mortgagor, held that the mortgagor had a right of contribution, under this section, as against the auction-purchaser in respect of the amount which the property in his hand had contributed in excess of its rateable share of the liability—Rama Sankar v. Ghulam Hussain, 43 All. 589, 63 I.C. 209. Three mortgages were created on the property in 1880, 1889 and 1891. The mortgagor then died and his sons partitioned the mortgaged property into several mahals. The first mortgagee brought a suit for sale on his mortgage of 1880, obtained a decree, brought to sale the share of H, (one of the brothers) and the mortgage was discharged. Thereafter H brought a suit for contribution and obtained a decree. The other brothers then discharged the later mortgages of 1889 and 1891, and brought the present suit against H, claiming that they also had a charge under sec. 82. Held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a charge; because firstly, it was useless to them to claim any charge against the mahal of H, which had already been sold in discharge of the first mortgage, and secondly, as H's charge took priority from the date of the mortgage of 1880, the plaintiffs, who stood in the shoes of the mortgagees under the mortgages of 1889 and 1891, were puisne to H—Kashi Ram v. Het Singh, 37 All. 101 (103,104). Certain properties including a house were mortgaged. Subsequently, the defendant purchased half of the house from the mortgagor who then conveyed the equity of redemption in respect of all the mortgaged properties to the mortgagee. In a suit by the latter to enforce his mortgage by sale of the mortgaged properties, held that having regard to the terms of this section, it was improper to order the property to be sold without fixing the proportion of the mortgage-debt chargeable on the house purchased by the defendant—Maharaja Ramnarain v. Ram Kumar, 1 P.L.J. 228 (230), 36 I.C. 208.

A second mortgagee does not stand in the shoes of the mortgagor. Therefore, where a portion of the property is sold and the sale-proceeds are sufficient to pay off the mortgage over the entire property, the subsequent mortgagee of the portion sold is entitled to sue the holder of the unsold portion for contribution whether he pays cash to discharge the first mortgage or not—Narayanan v. Nallammal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 685 (F.B.), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 525 overruling Sesha Ayyar v. Krishna Iyengar, 24 Mad. 96; Ayyappan Ramian v. Kunju Vakki, A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 386.

Where an assignment of a part of the mortgaged properties is made free from incumbrances, the assignee is not liable to contribute, as against the assignor, to the payment of the mortgage-debt. To entitle one to contribution from another, the equities must be equal. If, for instance, there was any obligation on the person who paid the encumbrance to discharge it as a debt of his own, he cannot claim anything from that other; and similarly if a mortgagor sells a part of an encumbered estate with a covenant against incumbrance, he cannot claim contribution from the purchaser, because he is himself liable for the whole debt—Visva Natha v. Vengama, 19 L.W. 567, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 749 (753), 78 I.C. 52. See Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., pp. 399, 400.

Interest:—Even if the payment of interest to a person claiming contribution does not come under any specific provision of law, still if general equitable considerations justify the award of interest it is quite open to the Court to award it. The claim being founded in equity, it is within the Court's discretion to decide the rate. Where there has been unnecessary delay to ask for the amount, the claimant is entitled to interest only from the date of his demand—Kambala v. Goteti, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 910, 71 M.L.J. 651. See in this connection Sheosaran v. Amba C. C. Society, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 192, 23 Pat. 953.

495. Ascertainment of value :—This section contemplates that the properties are liable to contribute rateably according to their values at the date of the mortgage and not at a future date—Narayanan v. Nallam-mal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 685 (F.B.), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 525; Mardan Singh v. Sheo Dayal, 27 All. 549; Gobind Chandra v. Kailash, 25 C.L.J. 354, 40 I.C. 230; Jugdeo v. Habibulla, 12 C.W.N. 107; Shankar v. Latafat, 14 A.L.J. 713, 35 I.C. 600; Bhagwan v. Muhammad Muzhar, 36 All. 272, 23 I.C. 339; Md. Abdul Rahman v. Baldeo Sahai, A.I.R. 1939 All. 86, 180 I.C. 696. If any other date than the date of the mortgage was to be taken as the time at which the properties were to be valued for the purpose of this section, it would follow that a party who being the owner of a portion of the mortgaged property had expended money and labour in improving his property would thereby render himself liable to pay a larger contribution by reason of the fact that he had increased the value of his property. This obviously would be inequitable—Mardan Singh v. Sheo Dayal, 27 All. 549. But the Rangoon High Court did not adopt this hard and fast rule and remarked that it might similarly be argued that to take the date as the date of the mortgage would operate hardly on an owner whose property through no fault of his own had very seriously depreciated since the mortgage. Each case must be considered on its special circumstances—Nyaunglebin Co-operative Bank v. Maung Ba, 6 Rang. 417, 144 I.C. 290, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 266. The Bombay High Court laid down that the value would be as at the date of purchase—Fakiraya v. Gudigaya, 26 Bom. 88 (98). The prices of the mortgaged properties are to be fixed with respect to the date when the properties were mortgaged—Rajo Kuer v. Brij Bihari Prasad, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 236.

The Legislature has adopted the Allahabad view and amended the section accordingly. "There is some difference of opinion as to whether for the purposes of contribution the value of the different properties or the portions of one property should be calculated as at the date of the original mortgage or at the date of the subsequent transfer. In some cases it has been held that valuation is to be made as at the date of the mortgage irrespective of the price that may have been paid by the purchaser (see 12 C.W.N. 107, 745; 27 All. 549). In a Bombay case, however, the valuation at the date of the sale was adopted (I.L.R. 26 Bom. 88). We propose to provide that the value taken shall be the value as at the date of the original mortgage. This rule has the support of the Judicial Committee who, in assessing contribution to a decree for mean profits, assessed liability at the date of the decree (31 Cal. 597, L.R. 31 I.A. 94)"—Report of the Special Committee.

To arrive at the value for contribution purposes of each of several properties on which a particular mortgage is secured, the amount of all prior incumbrances upon such properties must be ascertained and deducted. Where properties A, B and C are all made security for one mortgage, and the property A is subject to a prior incumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z, the rateable share to be attributed to A under the prior incumbrance must necessarily be assessed in order to ascertain its value for the purposes of the mortgage. It is incorrect to say that it is only necessary in such case to see what was the total amount of the prior incumbrance to which A was liable irrespective of the question whether that liability was to be shared by X, Y and Z—Faqir Chand v. Aziz Ahmad, 54 All. 199 (P.C.), 36 C.W.N. 437, 136 I.C. 751, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 74. See also Kempe Gowda v. Lakegowda, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 99. When a co-mortgagor is suing the other co-mortgagor for contribution upon the allegation that the portion of the mortgaged property in which he is interested has been made to discharge more than its proper share of liability under the mortgage, the Court in assessing contribution has first to ascertain the various items of property in question as they stood at the date of the mortgage; next, the rateable liability of each item for the amount payable under the decree; next, how much each item has contributed to the payment of the decretal amount, disregarding any purchase-money which any of the purchaser has paid or retained, and it should then proceed to apportion the liability between the different items of property—Bhagwan Singh v. Md. Mazhar Ali, 36 All. 272.

Where at the date of the mortgage, there was no house on the site but a building had only been begun, and the mortgage-deed described the property as "a house with five rooms, kitchen etc." held, under the special circumstances of the case that the value of the house, though not existing at the date of the mortgage, must be considered in determining the proportionate amounts to be charged on the various mortgaged properties—Nyaunglebin Co-operative Bank, supra.

For the purpose of satisfactorily ascertaining the value of the different items of property, all persons in whom the mortgaged property is vested should be made parties in a suit for contribution—Shankar Lal v. Latafat Ali, 14 A.L.J. 713, 35 I.C. 600; and the plaintiff ought to ask for a definement of the respective liabilities of the several defendants. He is not entitled to a decree for a consolidated amount against the defendants jointly—Murli v. Sheo Dat, A.I.R. 1931 All. 625 (628), (1931) A.L.J. 349. Section 82 has solely to do with distribution of the burden on the properties in a case where no other question as to who had the benefit of the money in the beginning or similar complication arises. The question how much money one man owes another must be first determined with reference to the transactions between them, and one has next to see on which item it can be made a charge with reference to this section—Thoppai v. Venkatarama, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 106 (109), 59 Mad. 121, 163 I.C. 977.

The word 'incumbrance' in the old section has been replaced by the words "mortgage or charge". 'Incumbrance' was nowhere defined in this Act, and in Aziz Ahmad v. Chhote Lal, 50 All. 569, 109 I.C. 38, A.I.R. 1928 All. 241 (246), it was interpreted as having a larger meaning than a mere mortgage; it might mean any claim, lien or liability, so as to include, say, a permanent lease carved out of a mortgaged property. The words "amount of any other incumbrance" did not necessarily mean the proportionate mortgage-money according to the rule of contribution.

496. Para 2 :—It is not the law that this section applies only where the mortgages are made by the same person. It says that at the time when one of the properties is sold and this section is sought to be invoked, the two properties should be owned by the same person—Chunilal v. Srinivasa, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 276, 1944 M.W.N. 49. The obligation under this section is not personal but is attached to the properties. The owner thereof has the option either to pay his rateable share to let it be realised from the properties—Gopinath v. Raghubans, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 522, 30 P.L.T. 277; Cheeru Elayachi v. Seemon Chacko, A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 139. Any reduction of the liability of the mortgage by the appropriation of the rateable value fixed under this section would not enure to the benefit of the mortgagor—Sathiraju v. Venkata Rao, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 873. Where there is no fraud the purchase by the mortgagee of some of the mortgaged properties discharges that part of the mortgage debt which bears the same ratio to the whole mortgage-debt as the value of the items purchased bears to the value of the entire mortgaged properties—Raghavachariar v. Kandaswami, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 277, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 105. See in this connection Pandurang v. Shrihari, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 155, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 595.

Where of two properties belonging to same owner, one is mortgaged to secure one debt, and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, for the purpose of apportioning the liability of the respective properties in regard to the subsequent mortgage, the value of the two properties must be taken into account and credit given for the amount due upon the earlier mortgage out of the value of the property comprised in the subsequent mortgage. Where the amount due under the earlier mortgage exceeds the value of the property comprised in that mortgage, the necessary result is that the whole of the amount of the second mortgage is recoverable from the other property comprised in the latter mortgage—Ghulam Hazrat v. Gobardhan, 33 All. 387, 9 I.C. 933. Where a person as owner of one of several properties subject to a charge pays the amount due thereunder, he can recover from the rest of the charged properties the proportionate share of the amount which they are liable to contribute under this section—Maddipatla v. Ramvarapu, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 293, 162 I.C. 304.

Last Para :—The last para declares that the right of contribution shall be subject to the rule of marshalling. That is, where marshalling and contribution might conflict with each other, marshalling is to prevail. Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 346.

The word 'second' has been replaced by the word 'subsequent'. This is consequential to a similar amendment made in sec. 81 (Report of the Special Committee).

497. Contribution whether creates a charge :—Para 1 of this section enunciates the general rule as regards the apportionment of liability between the several properties whether belonging to one or several owners when they are mortgaged to secure one debt. The provision that the properties are liable to contribute rateably clearly implies that their liability constitutes a charge upon such properties. Further the provisions of sec. 82 read with sec. 100 clearly give rise to a charge against such portions of the mortgaged property as have not discharged their proportionate share of the liability—Nisar v. Manzur, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 245 (248), 153 I.C. 267. Where on a partition among brothers a mortgage-debt due by the family is apportioned and there is a covenant by which a defaulting member's share will be liable for any excess amount paid by another member, a charge is created over the property of the former for such amount paid by the latter and he can enforce the charge against a purchaser of the former's property who has actual or constructive notice of the covenant—Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 715, 65 M.L.J. 390. The liability to contribute to the common burden attaches to the properties subject to that burden, and not personally to the owners of these properties. Consequently, these properties are made security for the payment of the amount of re-imbursement, and a charge is created on them as defined in sec. 100—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (443, 444); Bhagwan Das v. Karam Husain, 33 All. 708 (716) (F.B.); Danappa v. Yamappa, 26 Bom. 379; Sesha v. Krishna, 24 Mad. 96 (107); Har Prasad v. Raghunandan, 31 All. 166 (168); Sabir v. Rirasat, 1929 A.L.J. 1162, A.I.R. 1929 All. 695 (698); Muhammad Mian v. Bharat, 7 O.W.N. 401, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 260 (263), 125 I.C. 402. A contrary view has been taken in Nawab Jahanara v. Mirza Shujaiddin, 9 C.W.N. 865 (867). Both before the amendment in 1929 and now the liability to contribute is a liability which is imposed upon the land and therefore is not a personal liability—Narayanan v. Nallammal, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 685 (F.B.), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 525. Since the liability to contribute is not a personal liability, but is made a charge on the other properties which have not discharged their own share of the debt, a purchaser of a portion of such properties is liable to contribute rateably—Mumammad Mian v. Bharat, supra.

But where the sale of the property of one of the co-mortgagors has not satisfied the entire mortgage-debt, he has no right to claim contribution, and consequently has no charge on the properties of the other co-mortgagors in respect of the excess realised by sale of his property over and above its rateable share of the debt—Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (432, 433) (F.B.). But if the properties of some of the mortgagors are sold and the mortgage is fully paid off by the sales, one of the mortgagors can maintain a suit for contribution, and can claim a charge on the other properties, although the mortgage has not been satisfied by sale of his property alone—Bhagwan Das v. Karam Husain, 33 All. 708 (716, 717) (F.B.), following Muhammad Yahiya v. Rashiduddin, 31 All. 65.

If the property against which the charge is sought to be enforced has been sold, the lien is transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds—Bhagwan Das v. Karam Husain, 33 All. 708 (725) (F.B.).

Limitation:—For a suit for contribution under this section the period of limitation is 12 years from the date of payment and not from the date when the original mortgage money became payable—Rameswar v. Ramnath, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 174, 28 Pat. 955. A co-mortgagor by paying the mortgage-money acquires independently of sec. 95 a charge under secs. 82 and 100 in regard to the amount paid by him in respect of the mortgage over their shares. Consequently, the period of limitation for a suit by one of several heirs of a mortgagor by one of the several subsequent transferees of the mortgaged property who has paid the entire mortgage-debt for contribution against the other heirs or transferees in which the sale of the defendants' share in the mortgaged property is sought, is 12 years under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act, from the date of payment and not from the date when the original mortgage-money became payable—Brij Bhukhan v. Bhagwan Datt, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 449 (F.B.).

Deposit in Court.

83. At any time after the principal money payable in respect of any mortgage has become due and before a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property is barred, the mortgagor, or any other person entitled to institute such suit, may deposit, in any Court in which he might have instituted such suit, to the account of the mortgagee, the amount remaining due on the mortgage.

The Court shall thereupon cause written notice of the deposit to be served on the mortgagee, and the mortgagee may, on presenting a petition (verified in manner prescribed by law for the verification of plaints) stating the amount then due on the mortgage, and his willingness to accept the money so deposited in full discharge of such amount and on depositing in the same Court the mortgage-deed and all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, apply for and receive the money, and the mortgage-deed and all such other documents, so deposited shall be delivered to the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid.

Where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property the Court shall, before paying to him the amount so deposited, direct him to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor and at the cost of the mortgagor either to re-transfer the mortgaged property to the mortgagor or to such third person as the mortgagor may direct or to execute and (whether the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of the mortgagor's interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished.

Amendment :—The following amendments have been made by sec. 44 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929) :—(1) The words "payable in respect of any mortgage has become due" have been substituted for the words "has become payable"; (2) certain words relating to documents have been added at the end of the second para; (3) the third para has been newly added. These amendments have been made to bring this section into a line with sec. 60.

497A. Object of section :—This section has been enacted in the interests of the mortgagor, so that the mortgage might be discharged by him without any litigation—Anandi Ram v. Dur Najaf, 13 All. 195. It confers an exceptional privilege on mortgagors, which other debtors do not enjoy, of paying the amount of their debt into Court and so relieving themselves of any further liability—Debendra v. Sona, 26 All. 291.

The section deals with the right to deposit the mortgage-money in Court and not with the right to redeem by payment direct to the mortgagee or the right to bring an action for redemption—Jagdeo v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 127, 13 Pat. 111, 153 I.C. 602.

A mortgagor has got three remedies: He may, after the mortgage-money has become due and before his right to redeem is barred, either (1) pay or tender privately to the mortgagee, at the proper time and place, the amount due on the mortgage under section 60 and recover the mortgaged property; (2) deposit that amount in Court under section 83, and claim redemption in that way; or (3) sue for redemption under sec. 91—Het Singh v. Bihari, 43 All 95 (100); Sardar Karan Singh v. Raja Muhammad Siddik, 4 O.C. 387B.

This section is confined only to money due under a mortgage. It has no application to money due under a simple money-bond—Eshahug Molla v. Abdul Bari, 31 Cal. 183 (185).

Scope :—The procedure prescribed in this section is applicable in the case of a charge also—Krishnaraya v. Sankayya, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 615, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 196. An inquiry as to the sum due by the mortgagor to the mortgagee is beyond the scope of this section. The mortgagor makes the deposit and the mortgagee has to say whether he accepts the money in full discharge of the mortgage or not—Ramakrishnaiah v. Sri Krushi Vidyalaya Sangam, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 46.

498. Deposit :—The deposit under this section must be made unconditionally. Where the mortgagor says that the money should not be paid unless the mortgagee produces certain deeds, it is not a valid deposit—Nanu v. Manchee, 14 Mad. 49. Where the mortgagor deposited the amount in Court but did not admit that the plaintiff was the person entitled to the money, and prayed that the amount should be paid to the plaintiff if it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was the person entitled to recover the mortgage-debt, held that the tender into Court amounted to a conditional tender and not therefore valid in law—Anandrao v. Durgabai, 22 Bom. 761. But a deposit made under this section is good when made in good faith for being taken over by the mortgagees, although the mortgagors in their application purported to reserve their rights to dispute whether the mortgagees were entitled to the entire amount deposited—Salik Ram v. Ashiq Hussain, 4 O.C. 355. That is, a tender made under protest reserving the right of the debtor to dispute the amount due (and not the title of the creditor to receive the amount) is a good tender, if it does not impose any condition on the creditor—Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, (1892) 1 Ch. 1. A deposit accompanied by a petition that the money might be retained in Court until the disposal of certain objection made by the mortgagor, is not a valid tender—Goluckmonee v. Nubungo, W.R. Special Number (F.B.) 14. But a deposit accompanied with a demand for a registered receipt (to which the mortgagee agrees) and the restoration of certain title-deeds, is not a conditional deposit, and is therefore valid—Kora Naya v. Ramappa, 17 Mad. 267. But a condition requiring a return of certain documents to which the mortgagor is not entitled, attached to a deposit under this section, vitiates the tender—In re Achath Sankaran, 29 I.C. 586. This section does not contemplate a conditional deposit; but if the deposit is considered valid, it cannot be treated as if the condition attached did not exist. Hence a mortgagee is entitled to accept the money deposited subject to the condition imposed by the mortgagor—Dhanukdhari v. Jethan Singh, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 18, 184 I.C. 225.

As stated above, a deposit made under protest is not invalid if it merely reserves the right of the debtor to dispute the amount due—Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, [1892] 1 Ch. 1. But where the mortgagor in making the deposit denies the mortgagee altogether and threatens to sue to recover back the money so deposited, the deposit cannot be held to be valid—Abdoor Rahman v. Kistotal, 6 W.R. 225. Where the deposit is accompanied with a denial of the mortgagee's right to receive it, and with a threat that legal proceedings will be taken against him if he takes the money out of Court, the tender is invalid and does not prevent a foreclosure—Makhan Kuar v. Jasoda, 6 All. 399; Prannath v. Rookia Begum, 7 M.I.A. 323 (343). But where in depositing the money the mortgagor informs the Court that he has other claims against the mortgagee, unconnected with the mortgage, in respect of which he can take legal proceedings, the validity of the deposit is not affected—Salik Ram v. Ashiq Hussain, 4 O.C. 355.

This section shows that just as the right to make the deposit is optional with the mortgagor, so it is optional with the mortgagee to accept it in satisfaction of his dues. It is only when the mortgagee has done so the deposit becomes effective for the purpose of extinguishing the liability of the one party and the right of the other. The mortgagee is not bound to accept the deposit, and if, and so far as, that is not done, the mortgage necessarily subsists—Haray Krishna v. Sashi Bhusan, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 18 (per Biswas, J.). The words "as hereinafter provided" in sec. 67, ante, make it perfectly clear that a deposit under sec. 83, in so far as it is contemplated in sec. 67 must mean a deposit which has been accepted and acted on by the mortgagee in terms of sec. 83 and not a mere deposit irrespective of how it is disposed of—Ibid.

The stipulation in the mortgage-bond was that the mortgage could be discharged only by payment beyond the fruit season and the deposit was made in Court while the fruit season was still on: held, the deposit was valid inasmuch as it was quite open to the mortgagee to wait till the fruit season was over before he withdrew the deposit in absence of proof that the mortgagor made a condition of the deposit that the mortgagee was to take out the money forthwith in satisfaction of his dues—Ibid.

Where a deposit is made by two mortgagors jointly and severally liable to pay the mortgage-debt, no presumption arises that both of them paid equally or that one of them paid the whole amount, and it is for the claimant to prove what share of money he is entitled to receive—Lal Behary v. Bimala, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 782, 159 I.C. 420.

Where a transaction is an out and out sale with a condition of repurchase within a stipulated time, a deposit in Court under this section on the footing that the transaction is a mortgage by way of conditional sale whereupon notices are issued on the vendee, fulfils the requirements of a valid tender through Court—Bijoy Gopal v. Nabin Bala, 43 C.W.N. 423.

Tender :—Mere readiness to pay the debt is not sufficient. The mortgagor must deposit the money in Court—Gopiram v. Shankar, A.I.R. 1950 M. B. 72. The mortgagee is not entitled to refuse tender of the mortgage amount made by the purchaser of the equity of redemption on the ground that the purchaser has not paid the full price to the mortgagor—Venkatd Perumal v. Ratnasabha, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 821. The mortgagee was deemed to have waived the actual production of the money when he insisted that he would not accept it and denied the mortgagor's right to redeem before expiry of 3 years. Hence there was a legal tender in this case—Bhagwat v. Ganga Din, A.I.R. 1947 All. 68, I.L.R. 1947 All. 25. See also Narain v. Rikhob, A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 72.

499. Deposit, when can be made :—Depositing the money due on a bond in Court, before the due date, is no valid tender of the debt—Eshahuq Molla v. Abdul Bari, 31 Cal. 183.

According to the terms of this section, the deposit is to be made "at any time after the principal money has become due", and as these words occur also in sec. 60, it follows that the right of deposit arises only when the right of redemption accrues. Where, therefore, a consent-decree provided that if the mortgagor committed default in the payment of a fixed amount within a particular date, the mortgagee should be entitled to take possession; default was made in payment on that date, but the mortgagee did not obtain possession on that date but on a subsequent date, before which however, the mortgagor deposited the amount in Court; held that since according to the consent-decree the right to redeem could only accrue after the mortgagor had delivered possession to the mortgagee, the mortgagor could not defeat the right of possession which had accrued to the mortgagee, by making a deposit of the mortgage-amount before delivery of possession. The deposit was therefore premature and invalid, and the provisions of secs. 83 and 84 could not apply to the case—Ram Sonji v. Krishnaji, 26 Bom. 312. This case has been followed by the Madras High Court in Bayya Seo v. Narasinga, 35 Mad. 209, though here the facts are somewhat different: It was provided in the mortgage-bond that the mortgagee was to remain in possession for a certain number of years and that if on a specified date (21st March 1905) at the end of the period the mortgagor failed to discharge the debt, the mortgagee was to remain in possession for a further term of five years. The mortgagor not only failed to pay the money on the due date (21st March 1905) but also took possession of the property from the mortgagee in May 1905, without discharging the debt. Subsequently he made a deposit of the money in Court under this section. The Madras High Court held that the mortgagor was not entitled to make the deposit. Since he failed to pay on the stipulated date (21st March 1905), he was bound to allow the mortgagee to remain in possession for a further period of 5 years, and he would be entitled to deposit the money after he restored possession to the mortgagee and allowed him to retain possession for that period. The deposit was therefore held to be premature and invalid. But the correctness of this ruling may now be doubted in view of the recent Privy Council decision in Muhammad Sher Khan v. Seth Swami Dayal, 44 All. 185. See this case cited in Note 362—(9), ante, under sec. 60. Applying the principle of that decision to the Madras case it would follow that the mortgagor had a statutory right of redemption after the expiry of the stipulated date (21st March 1905) and was entitled to deposit the money on any day after that date, without waiting for a further period of five years according to the stipulation contained in the deed. The deposit was therefore not premature, in the light of the Privy Council ruling.

500. Who can deposit :—Under this section, a deposit may be made by the mortgagor or by any person "entitled to institute a suit for redemption". An owner of a share of the mortgaged property is entitled to deposit the mortgage-debt, because he is a person entitled under sec. 91 of the Act to sue for redemption and consequently comes within the words "or any other person entitled to institute such suit". Such a person, in making a deposit under this section, is not bound by the restrictions imposed by the last para of sec. 60. Therefore, an owner of a portion of the mortgaged properties is entitled to make a deposit of the whole of the mortgage-debt and redeem the whole mortgage (and not his own share alone, as in sec. 60), inspite of the fact that the mortgagee has acquired by purchase a part of the mortgaged properties ; there is no limitation in the language of sec. 83 as in sec. 60—Subba Rao v. Sarvarayudu, 47 Mad. 7 (11, 20), 44 M.L.J. 534, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 533, 72 I.C. 292.

Where the mortgagee has purchased the equity of redemption in some of the mortgaged properties, and one of the mortgagors deposits or tenders the whole mortgage amount, the mortgagee has no right to retain possession after the tender or deposit, and should be made accountable on that basis ; having regard to practical convenience and the scheme of the Transfer of Property Act, the proper course in a case like this would be to determine that amount of the mortgage-debt for which the items purchased by the mortgagee would be proportionately chargeable, and finally settle the question arising between the parties by allowing the mortgagee to retain possession of them on payment of that proportionate amount—Ibid, (at p. 16).

A person in whose favour there is only an agreement to sell immoveable property is a person who has no interest in the property, and is consequently not a person who is entitled to file a suit for redemption under sec. 91 ; he cannot therefore deposit any money under sec. 83—Mayappa v. Kolandaivelu, 1926 M.W.N. 459, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 597, 92 I.C. 715. But if a purchaser of the mortgaged property has deposited the mortgage-money under the agreement in his sale-deed from a widow which is found to be invalid for want of registration, he is entitled to the equitable relief of claiming that amount from the reversioner before he is allowed to take possession—Jagdeo v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 127 (130), 13 Pat. 111, 153 I.C. 602.

501. "In any Court" :—A deposit can be made into Court even though according to the mortgage-deed the money is made payable at a certain place—Sardar Karam v. Raja Muhammad, 4 O.C. 387.

The deposit should be made in the Court in which he might have instituted his suit for redemption, or in which the mortgagee might have instituted his suit for enforcement of his security under sec. 67. Therefore, after one Court has taken cognizance of a suit by the mortgagee for the enforcement of his mortgage, the mortgagor cannot deposit the mortgage-amount in another Court—Bayya Sgo v. Narasinga, 25 Mad. 209, 10 I.C. 393.

502. To whose credit :—Ordinarily, it is the duty of the mortgagor to find out the real mortgagee and to deposit the money to his credit. But where the latter allowed his benamdar to be recorded in the Record-of-Rights and the mortgagor made the deposit to the credit of not only the real mortgagees but also the benamdars, the deposit was valid and he was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the deposit—Narayan v. Kishun, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 622, 153 I.C. 1035. Payment under this section must be made to the credit of the mortgagee alone, so that the mortgagee may, on receipt of the notice of deposit, apply to the Court by petition and forthwith obtain payment without the concurrence or sanction of any other person. A deposit of money made payable not to the mortgagee by himself but jointly to him and a third person (even though such person be the mortgagee's pleader) cannot be regarded as unconditional so as to be valid. A mortgagor who makes a payment which involves the necessity of an inquiry by the Court as to the rights of parties other than the mortgagee, cannot be said to have made a valid payment under this section—Debendra Mohan v. Sona, 26 All. 291 (294). A deposit of mortgage-money made by the mortgagor to the credit of several persons of whom some alone were entitled to it, while others were not, would not amount to a proper deposit so as to entitle the mortgagor to the benefit of secs. 83 and 84 of this Act, inasmuch as even the persons really entitled could not draw it by themselves—Madhavi v. Kunhi, 23 Mad. 510 ; Ganeshi Lal v. Rohini, 50 All. 655, 108 I.C. 570, A.I.R. 1928 All. 311 (313). A deposit to be good must be one which would enable the persons entitled to withdraw the money forthwith. Where it is found that one of the persons in whose names the deposit was made is not interested in the mortgage-money, then the deposit cannot be regarded as a valid deposit—Dulhin Anupa Kuar v. Kameshwar Nath, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 415, 20 P.L.T. 167, 183 I.C. 454. If in such a case the mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage and the persons interested refuse to deliver possession on the ground that the deposit is not good; and the person making the deposit files a suit for possession, then since the interested persons cannot withdraw the amount without the consent of the uninterested person, the former are entitled to retain possession until the matter has been judicially determined, and cannot therefore be saddled with mesne profits up to the date of decree in such suit—Ibid. Even the fact that the mortgagor bona fide believed that the other persons were also entitled to the money, would not protect him.

Under this section the question of good faith cannot arise when it is duty of the mortgagor to deposit the money to the credit of the real mortgagees—Ganeshi Lal v. Rohini, supra. But if there is a dispute among the co-mortgagees as to who is entitled to receive the money and give a valid discharge, and the dispute is of such a nature that it cannot be determined by a layman, the mortgagor can deposit the money and ask the Court to decide and pay the amount to the person who may be entitled. But where there is no such dispute, the mortgagor cannot make any such prayer—Ottur v. Velia, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1087, 97 I.C. 735. The expression "mortgagee", in this section includes the legal representatives and assigns of the mortgagee. A sub-mortgage is in substance an assignment of the mortgage; a deposit by the mortgagor of the mortgage-money as payable both to the legal representatives of the deceased mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee is valid—Subba Rao v. Ponnammal, 46 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 453 (454, 455), 80 I.C. 363. See sec. 59A.

Where the original mortgagee died and there was a dispute as to the persons entitled to the money, the mortgagor could deposit it to the credit of all the persons claiming the money—Ram Sumran v. Sahibzada, 1885 A.W.N. 328. But if the payment is made only to one of the heirs of the mortgagee, it cannot amount to a valid discharge—Sitaram v. Sridhar, 27 Bom. 292. Where there were two mortgagees, and the amount was deposited to the credit of the two mortgagees, but one of them was dead (or alleged to be dead, not being heard of for more than 7 years), the Court should consider whether the surviving mortgagee was alone competent to withdraw the money—Balbhaddar v. Bitto, 51 All. 1016, A.I.R. 1929 All. 754 (755), 118 I.C. 188. Where there was nothing in the mortgage-deed to indicate that the mortgagees advanced the money otherwise than in their individual capacities and where after the death of one of the mortgagees the mortgagor made a deposit of the full amount due to the account of the surviving mortgagee and to that of the estate of the deceased mortgagee expressly or by necessary implication, impleading his sons and heirs, and it was subsequently found that one of the sons had no right to any part of the mortgage-money, interest ceased to run from the date of the deposit (or possibly from the time when the notice under this section had been served on those entitled to recover the money. On the other hand, if the deposit was made to the account of certain persons named and not to the estate of the deceased mortgagee in such a way that only the persons named would recover the amount deposited, interest would not cease to run if some of the persons named were not entitled to the money—Ram Gopal v. Lachman, A.I.R. 1938 All. 423 (426) (F.B.), 176 I.C. 509, (1938) A.L.J. 617.

Where the mortgagee or any one of the mortgagees is a minor incapable of receiving by himself the notice of the deposit by the mortgagor under this section, it is the duty of the latter to get a guardian ad litem appointed under sec. 103, and in the absence of such a guardian there can be no valid deposit under this section—Pandurang v. Mahadaji, 27 Bom. 23; Sheo Saran v. Ram Lagan, 44 All. 64, A.I.R. 1922 All. 355, 64 I.C. 413, 19 A.L.J. 852; Shivnath v. Manohar, 22 I.C. 245, 16 O.C. 261; Appu Pai v. Somu, 49 M.L.J. 327, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1017, 90 I.C. 754; Gokul v. Chandra Sekhar, 48 All. 611, A.I.R. 1926 All. 665, 24 A.L.J. 769, 96 I.C. 1; Kannu v. Indrapal, 44 All. 102 on appeal 45 All. 273. A deposit in such cases becomes effective only from the date when the minor is properly represented by a guardian—Suppan v. Rangan, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 405 (408), 1938) M.W.N. 356.

503. Amount of deposit :—The mortgagor must deposit the amount remaining due on the mortgage. If he deposits more than the amount due, the deposit is not invalid, on the principle, "omne majus continet in se minus" (the greater includes the less)—Wade's Case, (1601) 5 Coke's Rep. 114; Baikunta v. Benode, 29 C.L.J. 256, 51 I.C. 13; Subramania v. Narayanaśwami, 34 M.L.J. 439, 45 I.C. 638. But if the amount deposited is less than the amount due, the mortgagee is at liberty to ignore it, and it will not have the effect of stopping interest under sec. 84, even though the deficiency is due to a bona fide mistake—Gouri Sankar v. Abu Jafar, 34 I.C. 690 (692), 3 O.L.J. 204. A deposit is held to be insufficient, even if there is a very small deficiency (e.g., by Rs. 2 only and even though the deficiency is due to a miscalculation on the part of the pleader's clerk and not on the part of the mortgagor himself. In such a case, interest will not cease to run—Debi Prasad v. Kedar, 19 A.L.J. 582, 63 I.C. 563 (564). In one case, a deposit falling short by only nine pies owing to a bona fide mistake of calculation was held to be insufficient—Subbai v. Palani, 30 M.L.J. 607, 34 I.C. 825 (826). But in some cases it has been said that if the mortgagor tenders an insufficient amount in the bona fide belief that it is the whole amount due, the tender is not wholly ineffectual but is valid pro tanto—Haji Abdul v. Haji Noor, 16 Bom. 141 (147); and the mortgagee is entitled to claim interest only on the portion of the amount due which is not covered by the deposit—Haji Abdul v. Haji Noor, supra. See also Narsingh v. Achaibar, 36 All. 36 (39). If, however, the mortgagor making the deposit knew that it was less than what was due and admitted it, then of course the deposit of a less amount than what was due was wholly ineffectual—Haji Abdul v. Haji Noor, 16 Bom. 141 (149); Dixon v. Clarke, 5 C.B. 365; Henwood v. Oliber, (1841) 1 Q.B. 409. An unconditional tender (deposit) of a sum which turns out in the end to be less than what is really due may be valid pro tanto if there is a dispute as to the amount due, but a tender of only part of what is admittedly due is of no avail. Though a tender of a smaller amount than that of which an indivisible and entire claim consists may be invalid as a tender, there is nothing to prevent the creditor from accepting the amount tendered in part-payment, and his doing so will not preclude him from afterwards claiming the residue of the amount, provided that the debtor did not make it a condition of his tender that it be accepted in discharge of the whole—Digambar v. Harendra, 14 C.W.N. 617 (625), 11 C.L.J. 226, 5 I.C. 165, following Bowen v. Owen, (1845) 11 Q.B. 130, 75 R.R. 306.

The deposit must include interest on the principal money up to the date of deposit, and the fact that the mortgagee had obtained a decree for the interest is no ground for not depositing it—Hewanchal v. Jawahir, 16 Cal. 307 (P.C.). The mortgagor is bound to pay interest even for the day on which he makes the deposit. If he fails to pay it, the deposit will be treated as insufficient—Subbai v. Palani, 30 M.L.J. 607, 34 I.C. 825. (Contra—Raghub v. Bhobui, 8 C.W.N. 216, where it has been held that interest cannot be charged for the day on which the money is deposited). Where the mortgagor put in a petition under this section on 3rd August, but actually deposited the money on the 10th August, the interest must be paid up to the latter date. If the interest is paid up to the 3rd August, the deposit is insufficient and invalid, and cannot stop the running of interest under sec. 84—Mahammadunni v. Parambil, 2 L.W. 408, 29 I.C. 145. If the deposit is a valid deposit on the date on which it was made, namely, that if interest had been calculated up till the date of the deposit, then all that the mortgagee can say, when notice is served on him, is that some more interest should be allowed to him till the date of the notice and that the amount should also be paid to him. If the mortgagor refused to pay the amount, the mortgagee might be entitled to refuse to accept the amount; but he cannot refuse to accept the deposit on the ground that the initial deposit was short—Kushal Singh v. Ram Kishun, A.I.R. 1937 All. 706 (708), (1937) A.L.J. 757, 171 I.C. 813. The interest to be deposited is the original rate of interest stipulated in the bond, not the enhanced or penal rate of interest stipulated to be paid in case of default in paying the money in due time. This section does not require the deposit of an amount calculated in accordance with the penal provision of a bond—Ayyakutti v. Periyaswami, 39 Mad. 579, 30 I.C. 497. Tara Chand v. Narayan, 18 N.L.R. 47, A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 199 (200), 65 I.C. 174; Ram Rao v. Gopala, 28 N.L.R. 149, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 169. Where the provision of enhanced interest was found to be penal, the mortgagee was entitled to claim only a reasonable compensation in lieu of interest. It was open to the Court to accept the amount calculated at the original compound interest less 6 pies (by which the amount of deposit fell short) as being reasonable compensation—Narayanaswami v. Ramaswami, (1939) M.L.J. 324, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 503, 1939 M.W.N. 455 relying on Subramania v. Narayanaswami, 34 M.L.J. 439, 45 I.C. 638 (de minimus non curat lex).

If any interest remains due, the deposit of the principal money alone is not a valid deposit. But if the mortgage is usufructuary and the amount of interest due has to be calculated by taking accounts of the profits under sec. 76, then until the mortgagee in possession gives accounts, the deposit of the principal money only is a valid deposit, and the interest will cease to run thereafter. But the mortgagee will be entitled to be paid the balance of interest preceding the deposit after accounting for the profits received by him—Bhavani Charan v. Kadambini, 33 C.W.N. 279 (281), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 304, 119 I.C. 292.

The deposit must also include such other sums which the mortgagee is entitled to add to the mortgage-money (sec. 72). This section speaks of the "amount remaining due on the mortgage" and not merely "mortgage-money" as referred to in sec. 60. The expression "amount remaining due on the mortgage" is a very wide one and covers any just allowance or costs which can be tacked on under the ordinary law of mortgage—Nadershaw v. Shirinbai, 25 Bom. L.R. 839, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 264 (266), 87 I.C. 129. Thus, where the mortgagees in possession have paid the Government revenue for the mortgagor, they are entitled to treat it as part of the mortgage-money (under sec. 72), and to insist on its being deposited along with the actual mortgage-amount deposited under this section—Anandi Ram v. Dur Najaf Ali, 13 All. 195. But money paid by the mortgagee to avert a sale for arrears of rent under sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not become a part of the mortgage-money and the mortgagor is not bound to deposit it also under this section—Manmatha v. Sarat, 21 C.L.J. 429, 29 I.C. 929. So also, the mortgagee is not entitled to claim that the compensation or interest which is due to him by the mortgagor on account of the latter's failure to give possession should be deposited along with the mortgage-money under this section—Allah Baksh v. Sada Baksh, 8 All. 182; nor is the mortgagor bound to deposit the mesne profits to which the mortgagee may have been entitled owing to his being kept out of possession by the wrongful act of the mortgagor.

—Rameshar v. Kanahia, 3 All. 653 (F.B.). So again, the mortgagor need not deposit the value of improvements made by the mortgagee—Chami v. Anu, (1916) 1 M.W.N. 160, 32 I.C. 861. A property was mortgaged successively to X, Y and Z for fixed periods. Y did not redeem when he was entitled to do so. Thereupon, Z redeemed the mortgage. Subsequently, Y sued for redemption and got a decree, but obtained possession only through Court. On the expiry of Y's term, Z deposited the mortgage-amount in Court but as Y did not accept the amount, Z sued for redemption. Y contended that the deposit was insufficient as the mesne profits between the date of his redemption-decree and recovery of possession was not also deposited, and in any event sought to enforce it against Z: held (i) that Y could not tack on the mesne profits due to him from the first mortgagee to the mortgage-money merely because Z happened to have redeemed the first mortgage; (ii) that granting that the amount could be claimed, it could not be enforced against Z as it was not a covenant running with the land, but only an equity available against the owner personally—Suppan v. Rangan, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 405 (412), (1938) M.W.N. 356.

Where during the pendency of an appeal by the mortgagee from a preliminary decree for sale, a purchaser of the equity of redemption makes a deposit under this section, the sufficiency of such deposit must be justified by the state of things at its date, irrespective of the result of the appeal—Shib Chandra v. Lachmi, 51 All. 686 (P.C.), 33 C.W.N. 1091 (1095), A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 243, 119 I.C. 612.

A deposit cannot be made by instalments. In the absence of a supulation made between the contracting parties as to the repayment of the sum by instalments, the lender is entitled to decline to receive payment of the sum due to him in instalments, and he can claim that the whole sum due be paid at one and the same time—Behari Lal v. Ram Ghulam, 24 All. 461. Even if the mortgagor deposits the money in instalments, the mortgagee is not bound to accept it until the whole amount is thus deposited. Were he to accept any instalment, he would be bound to deliver up the mortgage-deed and thus lose his claim to the balance. See Balaram v. Nanuram, 1 C.P.L.R. 154.

504. Notice :—Until the mortgagee gets the notice under this section or the knowledge of the deposit, he has the right to sue to enforce his security. Hence where the mortgagor paid money into Court one day previous to the institution of the suit by the mortgagee, but the notice was not served on the latter before he filed his plaint, and he was unaware of the deposit at the time of filing it, held that he was not precluded from proceeding with the suit and obtaining a decree—Sitaramayya v. Venkataramanna, 11 Mad. 371.

Service of notice :—Where a mortgagor makes a deposit under this section, it is the duty of the Court to see that the notice of the deposit is duly served upon the mortgagee; it is not the business of the mortgagor to see that this is done—Nibaran v. Parbati, 35 C.L.J. 202, 60 I.C. 454. Where the serving peon hands the notice to the mortgagee who reads it but refuses to grant a receipt, the notice is deemed to have been duly served, even if the peon did not suspend a copy as required by O. 5, r.

17 C. P. Code—Dandbahadur v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 346. So long as a guardian ad litem is not appointed for a minor, there cannot be any valid service of notice upon the minor—Jagdeo Mahton v. Ram Bahadur Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 457.

Where there is a covenant in a usufructuary mortgage that the mortgagor would redeem the mortgage on the last day of Jeth (22nd June), then, if the mortgagor deposits the mortgage-money in Court, the notice must reach the mortgagee on or before the 22nd June. If, therefore, the deposit was made on the 17th June and the notice of deposit could not be issued by the Court before the 27th June, held that the deposit was ineffectual, and the mortgagee was entitled to possession till the last day of Jeth of the next year—Dwarka Pershad v. Sheoambar, 15 I.C. 592 (All.). So also, in case of an exactly similar mortgage containing a similar covenant the mortgagor deposited the amount in Court on the last day of Jeth and notice could not therefore have been given to the mortgagee within the month of Jeth; held that the deposit was ineffectual, and the decree in the redemption suit brought by the mortgagor would be passed with effect from the last day of Jeth of the next year—Saiyid Ahmad v. Dharmun, 43 All. 424 (426), 60 I.C. 760, 19 A.L.J. 259.

Deposit made under this section will operate as a valid tender of the mortgage money only when the notice of the deposit is given to the mortgagee—Janaki v. Mathiri, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 236.

505. Deposit made after suit :—A deposit under this section is invalid if made after the institution of a suit by the mortgagee for the recovery of the money due under the mortgage—Brij Gopal v. Masuda Begam, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 93 (94), 10 Luck. 350, 153 I.C. 378; Rajakrishna Menon v. Sundaran Pillai, 1963 Ker. L.T. 1031. The fact that the deposit was made before the mortgagor received notice of the institution of the suit, does not make any difference—Thiagaraja v. Ramaswami, 35 M.L.J. 605, 48 I.C. 693. Even assuming that deposit could be made after the institution of the suit, it must include the costs incurred by the mortgagee in filing the suit—Ibid, followed in Bala Chengiah v. Subbayya, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 200 (202), 1939 M.W.N. 76, 183 I.C. 871, where the deposit had been made by the mortgagor after the mortgagee had filed a suit on the mortgage with a 4 annas Court-fee stamp and before the deficit Court-fee had been paid. But a deposit made after the mortgagee brings a suit to recover possession according to the terms of the mortgage-deed is not invalid, and the mortgagor can be allowed to redeem—Ram Dayal v. Arjun Singh, 50 I.C. 332 (Oudh).

If the mortgagee brings a money suit to recover the amount due on the mortgage and then the mortgagor pays into Court a certain sum in satisfaction of the claim, O. 24, r. 3 of the C. P. Code comes into operation, and interest on the amount deposited ceases as soon as the plaintiff receives notice of the deposit—Thevaraya v. Venkatachalam, 40 Mad. 804, 37 I.C. 444.

506. Effect of deposit :—The making of a deposit under this section does not ipso facto extinguish the mortgage where the mortgagee has refused to accept the deposit. If the deposit is refused, the mortgage is not extinguished, and the parties remain in the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee to each other. It is for the mortgagor dissatisfied with the action of the mortgagee in refusing the deposit, to bring a suit for the enforcement of his legal rights; and unless and until he does so successfully, the mortgage still subsists—Ahmadulla v. Abdul Rahim, 45 All. 592, 73 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1924 All. 26; S. S. Abohala Sastriar v. S. P. Kalimuthu Pillai, A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 308.

As soon as a deposit is made, interest ceases on the mortgage from that date. See sec. 84. Where a deposit was made in favour of the mortgagee but it could not be withdrawn by the person entitled to it on account of a dispute between rival claimants to the mortgagee's estate, the interest ceased to run from the date of the deposit—Munna Lal v. Chatan Prakash, I.L.R. 1940 All. 79, A.I.R. 1940 All. 65, 1939 A.L.J. 1099. But where the deposit by the mortgagor was withdrawn by the mortgagee's pleader without his authority and paid to some other person so that the deposit was not available to the mortgagee when he applied for it, the deposit was held not to be legal within the meaning of this section—Haran Krishna v. Sashi Bhusan, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 18. Where a deposit is once duly made, the fact that the executors of the mortgagee have not yet taken probate and are therefore not yet qualified to withdraw the amount does not affect the mortgagor, for the interest will cease to run from the date of deposit, whether there is any one competent to accept the money or not—Pundurang v. Dadabhoy, 26 Bom. 643. But the case is different if the mortgagee is a minor. In such a case, it is the duty of the mortgagor making the deposit to see that a proper person is appointed as guardian (sec. 103); until he does so, he is not exempt from the payment of interest—Pandurang v. Mahadaji, 27 Bom. 23 (29); Shivnath v. Manohar, 16 O.C. 261, 22 I.C. 245; Sheo Saran v. Ram Lagan, 44 All. 64 (65), 64 I.C. 413, A.I.R. 1922 All. 355; Kannu Mal v. Inderpal, 44 All. 102, affirmed in 45 All. 273; Gokul v. Chandra Sekhar, 48 All. 611 A.I.R. 1926 All. 665; 96 I.C. 1.

Another effect of a deposit is that the mortgagee in possession is liable to the mortgagor to account for all the receipts of the mortgaged property, and cannot deduct any expenses incurred in connection with the property. See sec. 76 (i) and Note 473 thereunder. The deposit, unless it is accepted by the mortgagee, has not the effect of extinguishing the mortgage. Therefore, a mortgagee who rejects the deposit and retains possession continues as mortgagee, but with a statutory liability to account for the profit; received by him from the date of deposit. He is not then a mere trespasser but a mortgagee still holding the property as a kind of trustee for the mortgagor and as such accountable to the latter for the profit—Rukmibai v. Venkatesh, 31 Bom. 527; Ma Nyo v. Mg. Hla, 2 Rang. 382, 84 I.C. 395, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 13; Harbans Narayan Singh v. Ramdhari, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 51. After a valid deposit by the mortgagor, the mortgagee becomes liable not only for the total amount of rents and profits actually collected by him but also for the amount left uncollected by him on account of his failure to make the best endeavours to collect them under sec. 76 (b)—Subha Rao v. Sarvarayudu, 47 Mad. 7 (26), A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 533, 72 I.C. 292; Narayan v. Kishun, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 622, 153 I.C. 1035. Institution of a suit for the redemption of a usufructuary mortgage cannot be regarded as tender of the mortgage money; hence on deposit in Court after the preliminary decree mesne profits can be awarded only from the date of deposit and not from the date of the institution of the suit—Rajballan Lal v. Ram Autar Rout, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 203.

If the mortgagee refuses to accept the deposit money and to give over possession of the property, the mortgagor is entitled to sue for the same—Rugad Singh v. Sat Narain, 27 All. 178. On mortgagee's refusal to accept the mortgage amount the court does not become functus officio and can consider the mortgagee's subsequent request to receive the mortgage amount—Nachiappan v. Muthiah Ambalam, A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 77.

507. Mortgagee's right to receive the money :—As soon as the mortgagor deposits the money into Court, it is no longer his, and the mortgagee is entitled to draw the money from the Court. The mortgagor cannot object to it—Motavengattil v. Kezathath, 25 I.C. 369. The mortgagee's right to receive the money depends upon the compliance of certain formalities prescribed in this section, viz., the presenting of a verified petition, stating the amount due on his mortgage and his willingness to accept the sum deposited in full discharge of his debt, and the depositing of the mortgage-deed and other documents connected with the property in Court. (See para 2 of this section). If the mortgagee does not comply with these formalities and refuses to accept the amount, claiming a larger sum than that deposited, the money stands to the credit of the mortgagor, by whom it can be withdrawn at any time, and the Court has no jurisdiction to allow it to be attached by the creditors of the mortgagee—Dal Singh v. Pitam Singh, 25 All. 179. Where a subsequent mortgagee deposited the mortgage-amount to the credit of the prior mortgagee who did not take any notice of such payment; in a suit by the former to enforce his mortgage it was contended that the subsequent mortgagee was entitled to interest on this amount: held that the money so deposited remained the property of the plaintiff and the defendant (prior mortgage), was not liable to pay interest on that amount—Ahammad v. Surya Kumar, 42 C.W.N. 1177. If the mortgagee refuses to accept the deposit in full satisfaction, then the mortgagor can withdraw the money in view of sec. 84. The mere fact of making a deposit or tender does not merge the money in the mortgaged property and the money does not cease to be the property of the mortgagor—Gupteswar v. Radha Mohan, infra; Ahammad v. Surya Kumar, 42 C.W.N. 1177. If, on the other hand, the mortgagee complies with the above formalities, the money deposited by the mortgagor becomes the property of the mortgagee so as to be liable to be attached by the latter's creditors—Mothiar v. Ahmatty, 29 Mad. 232.

508. Acceptance of deposit by the mortgagee—Effect :—After the mortgagee accepts the tender under this section, he is not entitled to claim any further relief as against the mortgagor or the person making the deposit. He is bound to accept the deposit in full satisfaction of all his claims. If he is not prepared to do it, then he ought to decline to accept the amount deposited—Minakshi v. Janki, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 592, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 124, 55 M.L.W. 413. If the mortgagee withdraws the amount deposited, the withdrawal must be deemed to have been made in full discharge of the mortgage-debt and the mortgage becomes extinguished—Gupteshwar v. Radha Mohan, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 253, 170 I.C. 99. Therefore, he cannot withdraw the money and at the same time claim a larger sum than that deposited. Thus, where a deposit having been made under this section, the mortgagee refused to accept the money, claiming a larger sum, and after a redemption decree was passed against him, he filed an appeal similarly claiming a larger amount, but during the pendency of the appeal, applied for and withdrew the deposit-amount, held that the mortgagee must be deemed to have received the money in full discharge of the mortgage-claim, and he had no right to prosecute the appeal in which he claimed a larger amount—Dal Singh v. Pitam Singh, 25 All. 179. So also, where upon a deposit made by the mortgagor, the mortgagee informed the Court that the amount deposited was insufficient, and requested the Court to require the mortgagor to deposit the balance of the amount due, but after several months the money was somehow or other drawn out by the mortgagee's agent, held that the money so drawn out must be held to have been drawn out in full discharge of the mortgagor's liability; that the section provided that the money lodged "in full discharge" of a liability could only be drawn out by a creditor in full discharge of that liability, and that it could not be assumed that the agent drew out the money in part satisfaction of the mortgagor's liability—Ram Chandra v. Keshobati, 36 Cal. 840 (P.C.). But where some money was deposited under this section for payment to a mortgagee, and on objection being raised by the mortgagees as to the insufficiency of the amount, the mortgagor agreed to pay the balance which was found due from him, and at the request of the pleader for the mortgagor the Court paid the money deposited to the mortgagees and endorsed payment on the back of the deed and returned it to the mortgagees; held that the mortgagees did not take the money in full discharge of the mortgage as provided by this section. Since the mortgagor himself admitted that the amount was not in full discharge of the debt, and thus waived one of the conditions implied by this section, he could permit the mortgagee to withdraw the money without prejudice to the latter's claim for a larger amount—Hardayal v. Prithi Singh, 32 All. 142. Acceptance by a prior mortgagee of a deposit made by the subsequent mortgagee in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt precludes the prior mortgagee from contending that the payment was made on behalf of the mortgagor and that para 1 of sec. 92 did not apply—Vishnu Balkrishna v. Shankareppa, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 227, 44 Bom. L.R. 415.

It has been stated before that the deposit under this section should include the sums spent by the mortgagee in possession under sec. 72 and which he can add to the mortgage-money under this section, e.g., Government revenue paid by the mortgagee to save the estate from sale. If, however, the mortgagor deposits only the principal and interest, without depositing the amount of revenue, and the mortgagee accepts the deposit-money, gives up possession and returns the mortgage-deed, the mortgage is thereby extinguished, and the mortgagee has no longer any lien on the mortgaged property for the amount of revenue and cannot sue to recover the amount by sale of the property. He can only bring a simple money suit for the amount subject to the law of limitation—Anandi Ram v. Dar Najaf Ali, 13 All. 195.

If the mortgagee refuses to accept the money deposited, the mortgagor is entitled to withdraw the money from the Court. And if the Court gives him permission to withdraw the money owing to the mortgagee's refusal to accept it in satisfaction of his dues, it is no longer competent for the mortgagee to change his mind and to take out the money, even though it has not yet been actually withdrawn by the mortgagor. After the Court gives permission to the mortgagor to withdraw, the money is the mortgagor's money, and the tender is no longer open, so the Court cannot direct the money to be paid to the mortgagee—Ratna Koeri v. Nanhaki, 4 P.L.T. 720, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 41 (42), 73 I.C. 1053.

This section does not authorise the Court to take any security bond from any party on making payment to him of the money deposited—Ratna Koeri v. Nanhaki, supra. The mortgagee after accepting the money deposited cannot later claim damages on the ground that he was not given possession of the mortgaged property—Dulari Singh v. Bijendra Singh, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 324.

84. When the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has tendered or deposited in Court under section 83 the amount remaining due on the mortgage, interest on the principal money shall cease from the date of the tender or in the case of a deposit, where no previous tender of such amount has been made, as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court, and the notice required by section 83 has been served on the mortgagee :

Provided that, where the mortgagor has deposited such amount without having made a previous tender thereof and has subsequently withdrawn the same or any part thereof, interest on the principal money shall be payable from the date of such withdrawal.

Nothing in this section or in section 83 shall be deemed to deprive the mortgagee of his right to interest when there exists a contract that he shall be entitled to reasonable notice before payment or tender of the mortgage-money and such notice has not been given before the making of the tender or deposit, as the case may be.

Amendment :—The italicised words have been added by sec. 45 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

Whether retrospective :—Although this section is not specifically referred to in sec. 63 of the T. P. Amendment Act XX of 1929, it has been held by Bennet and Verma, JJ. of the Allahabad High Court in Munna Lal v. Chhatan Prakash, A.I.R. 1940 All. 65, (1939) A.L.J. 1099 that the amendment made in the present section is not retrospective. It does not appear that the Full Bench decision in Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, I.L.R. 1937 All. 880 was brought to the notice of their Lordships. Moreover the same learned Judges have held in Mangal Sen v. Kewal Ram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 75, 187 I.C. 274 that the amended sec. 92 is retrospective on the ground that it is not specifically referred to in sec. 63 of Act XX of 1929.

509. Tender :—See Note 367 under sec. 60, and Note 498 under the heading "Tender".

This section confers an exceptional privilege on mortgagors which cannot be availed of by ordinary debtors. In case of ordinary money-claims not based on mortgage, a tender before suit must be followed by payment into Court in order to stop the running of interest. But in case of mortgages, the rule is different, and a tender alone has the effect of stopping interest from the date of tender—Arunachallam v. Govindasami, 55 Mad. 458, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 109 (111), 135 I.C. 907. This section shows that absence of notice of the intention to redeem is no bar to a tender—Som Nath v. Desai, A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 404, I.L.R. 1950 Punj. 271.

A tender to be valid under this section must be made to the party entitled or to a properly authorised agent on his behalf. A tender made to a person who disclaims authority to receive it, is made at the maker's risk—Bai Ruttonbai v. Fraser Ice Factory, 32 Bom. 521.

The tender must be made at the mortgagor's place, if no particular place of payment is specified in the mortgage-bound; and it is the duty of the mortgagor to seek the mortgagee out—Mahadaji v. Pairia, 2 N.L.R. 62. If the mortgagor asks the mortgagee to come to his (mortgagor's) place and take the money, it cannot be a valid tender—Mgung Po v. Daw Shere, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 271 (272).

The mortgagor gave the defendant-mortgagees notice to redeem on a certain date. To that notice the defendants replied that the deed was really one of sale and not of mortgage, but at the same time they set forth the sum which they claimed. The mortgagor never asked for further details of the defendants' claim and made no counter offer. He sued nearly two years later and did not offer any specified sum in the plaint nor paid anything in Court. Held that the mortgagor had made no legal tender under sec. 84, and was bound to pay interest till the date of redemption—Budhu Ram v. Niamat, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 632, 75 I.C. 375, 4 Lah. 406. (This portion of the judgment is not given in 4 Lah. 406).

In order to have the effect of cessation of interest, it is necessary that the money should have been actually produced unless the person entitled to payment waived the condition. A mere offer by letter or notice expressing willingness to pay the mortgage-money is not sufficient—Chetan Das v. Govind, 36 All. 139, 12 A.L.J. 111, 22 I.C. 659; Muhammad Mushtaq v. Bankey Lal, 42 All. 420; Kamaya v. Devappa, 22 Bom. 440. In some other cases, however, it is held that actual production of the money is not necessary to constitute a tender, if the money is ready for payment; see Pestonjee v. Hormasji 5 Bom. L.R. 387 cited in Note 368 under sec. 60. But at any rate, it must be shown that the mortgagor was in a position to pay the money immediately. Therefore a mere readiness and willingness to pay, not communicated to the creditor and without the accompanying circumstances of the debtor being willing to pay immediately if the offer is accepted, does not amount to a valid tender—Sheoratan v. Behari Lal, 45 I.C. 106 (Oudh). A telegram from the mortgagor to the mortgagee asking him to refrain from filing suit and promising to pay by a fixed date (which was three months later), or a subsequent telegram expressing willingness to pay and informing that the amount is ready, does not of itself constitute a valid tender. But the latter telegram immediately followed by the mortgagor's actually going to the mortgagee's place and offering the money, amounts to a valid tender—Joti Lal v. Fateh Bahadur, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 397 (398). Where the mortgagor wrote to the usufructuary mortgagee asking the latter to give him an account of what was due on the mortgage, and expressed his willingness to pay what was due, whereupon the mortgagee mentioned the balance of amount due, and it was found that the mortgagor had not the money with him to make the payment, held that the interest on the mortgage would not cease to run under this section—Venkataramanim v. Venkata Subhadrayamma, 34 M.L.J. 488, 45 I.C. 437. In order that a tender may be valid, it is necessary that the money should be always kept ready for payment to the mortgagee—Jag Sahu v. Ram Sawhi, 1 Pat. 350 (354), A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 167, 3 P.L.T. 332, 65 I.C. 666.

But actual production of the money is not necessary where the mortgagee refuses to accept it. In such a case, the readiness of the mortgagor to pay would be equivalent to sufficient tender. "Actual production of money may be dispensed with by the express declaration or equivalent act of the creditor if the tender be otherwise sufficient; so that if the debtor says that he has the sum ready in his pocket (stating the amount) and brought it for the purpose of satisfying the demand, or being in the house, offers to go and fetch it from another part of the house, but the creditor desires him not to trouble himself to produce or fetch the money as he will not take it, or if the creditor and communicating personally with the debtor refuses to authorise his agent to take the money, or to take it himself, the tender will be good."—Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 719. Where the mortgagor had in his Bank the full amount which was due to the mortgagee, and went with his cheque-book ready to give the mortgagee a cheque, or to cash the cheque at once if the mortgagee wanted cash, but the mortgagee prevented him from doing so by refusing to have any dealings with him, held that there was a valid tender, and interest would cease to run—Venkatarama v. Gopalakrishna, 52 Mad. 322, 56 M.L.J. 255, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 230 (231), 116 I.C. 844. In a Privy Council case it has been held that if a mortgagee unequivocally refuses a proposed payment of the amount due, the mortgagor is not bound to make a formal tender of it, and the mortgagee cannot recover interest accruing subsequently, even if he proves that the mortgagor had not the money or the control of it—Chalikani Venkataramanim v. Zamindar of Tuni, 46 Mad. 108 (116) (P.C.), 28 C.W.N. 25, 71 I.C. 1035, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 26. "The practice of the Courts is not to require a party to make a formal tender where from the facts stated in the bill or from the evidence it appears that the tender would have been a mere form and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept the money"—per Wigram, V. C. in Hunter v. Daniel, (1845) 4 Hare 420. See also Bhagawantrilayya v. Venkadhoja, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 484 (F.B.), 1941 M.W.N. 460, 53 M.L.W. 647. Specific objection to a tender amounts to an implied waiver of any other objection there may be, consequently the refusal of a tender, not because the amount tendered is short, but because the mortgagee considered that he was entitled to wait until the date fixed for payment in the mortgage-deed, which meant more interest for him, amounts to a waiver of any objection to the amount being short—Ibid. Where the principal and interest in a mortgage-bond was payable "by" a fixed date, the word "by" meant on or before the fixed date—Ibid. Where a valid tender of the entire amount was made, and a request was made that the mortgagee should accept what was just on accounts being taken, but the mortgagee not merely disputed the accounts but refused to make any account and rushed to Court, held that his conduct was such as not to entitle him to any interest accruing after the date of tender—Joti Lal v. Fateh Bahadur, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 397 (399).

The Madras High Court has said that a tender in order to be effectual to stop running of interest must be followed by deposit in Court when the creditor sues for the money, because it is the best way in which he can prove his ability and willingness to pay—Arunachallam v. Govindaswami, 55 Mad. 548, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 109 (111), 135 I.C. 907. This view was also taken by the Bombay High Court in Haji Abdul v. Haji Noor, 16 Bom. 141, and by the Calcutta High Court in Rakhal v. Baikuntha, 32 C.W.N. 1082 A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 874. But there is nothing in sec. 84 to support this proposition and the Calcutta High Court refused to accede to this view in Gajendra v. Sita Nath, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 310, 90 I.C. 637. The Rangoon High Court is also of opinion that if the mortgagor asks the mortgagee to accept the mortgage-money, and the mortgagee refuses to accept it, there is a valid tender, and no interest is chargeable thereafter, and a subsequent mortgagee seeking to redeem a prior mortgage can take advantage of the tender made by the mortgagor to the prior mortgagee, and so would not be liable to pay any interest for the period subsequent to the date of such tender—Chettyar Firm v. Chettyar Firm, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 255 (257), 127 I.C. 594.

A tender should ordinarily be made in current coin. A tender by cheque is not a legal tender—Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal, 34 Cal. 305. A cheque even of a man of credit is not a valid tender, and need not be accepted, but if it is once accepted, then the payee is bound by it unless it is dishonoured—Johnstone v. Boys, (1899) 2 Ch. 73. But whether the tender of a cheque is a valid tender or not, if the mortgagee refuses to have any dealings with the mortgagor, (i.e., refuses to take payment in any form either in cash or in cheque), he is not entitled afterwards to say that the tender by cheque was not a valid tender. In other words, where his objection was not to the form of the payment but to payment in any form, he cannot afterwards be heard to object to the form of the payment—Venkatarama v. Gopalakrishna, 52 Mad. 322, 56 M.L.J. 255, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 230 (232), 116 I.C. 844; Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal, 34 Cal. 305; Polglass v. Oliver, 2 Cr. & Jer. 15; Jones v. Arthur, 8 Dow. 422, 59 R.R. 833; Hira Lal v. Khizar, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 168, 161 I.C. 251. Where the mortgagor sent a single cheque for two items, only one of which was due at the time, it was held that the cheque being one and indivisible could be accepted as a whole or not at all and that the tender of one of the items by that cheque was not a good one and the mortgagee was within his rights in rejecting it—Ibid., at p. 175.

A tender cannot be made by a set-off. Thus, where the mortgagor proposed that the money due by the mortgagee to the mortgagor on another account between them should be deducted in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt, held that such a proposal would not stop the running of interest—Church v. Bishop, 2 Ves. 371.

The tender should be of the whole amount due on the mortgage—Nadershaw v. Srinibai, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 264, 25 Bom. L.R. 839. The mortgagor may tender more and such a tender is not invalid—Baikuntha v. Benode, 29 C.L.J. 256, 51 I.C. 13. As regards a tender of a less amount, compare the cases cited in Note 503 under sec. 83.

A tender is not vitiated because a receipt is asked for it—Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal, 34 Cal. 305.

A mortgagee who refuses a valid tender does so at his risk, and the risk which he incurs is twofold, namely: in the first place, he has to account for all the receipts from the mortgaged property from the date of the tender (section 76, clause i), and in the second place, interest ceases to run on the principal money from the date of tender—Satyabadi v. Harabati, 34 Cal. 223 (228). A mortgagee-in-possession who has refused to give any accounts under sec. 76, cannot refuse the tender made by the mortgagor on the ground that it is less than the amount due—Ramlal v. Narayanarao, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 138, 99 I.C. 630.

510. Cessation of interest :—According to the Calcutta High Court a proper tender will stop the running of interest, if the mortgagor keeps the money unemployed, i.e., keeps the money always ready to pay over to the mortgagee, and does not afterwards make any profit of it—Satyabadi v. Harabati, 34 Cal. 223 (229); Ram Nath v. Gopal Chandra, 8 C.W.N. 153. See also Jag Sahu v. Ram Sakhi, 1 Pat. 350 (354), A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 167, 65 I.C. 666. This is also the law in England. See Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor, 14 App. Cas. 273; Geyles v. Hall, 2 P. Wms. 377. The Madras High Court has, however, drawn a distinction between a tender and a deposit, and holds that in case of a tender it is not necessary that the money should be always kept ready for payment; therefore where after making a tender which was refused by the mortgagee the mortgagor employed the money to other uses, and was afterwards unable to pay, held that the interest ceased to run from the date of tender—Velayudu v. Hyder Hossein, 33 Mad. 100.

The interest on the principal money ceases when the mortgagor has duly made a deposit of all that is due on the mortgage. If at first he had deposited an inadequate amount, and subsequently made a further deposit paying off all that was due, interest would cease only from the latter date—Deo Dat v. Ram Autar, 8 All. 502. The tender or deposit of a less amount, even if made under a bona fide mistake does not stop the running of interest—Gaurishankar v. Abu Jafar, 3 O.L.J. 204, 34 I.C. 690; Subbai v. Palani, 30 M.L.J. 607, 34 I.C. 825. But see Ramgopal v. Lachman, A.I.R. 1938 All. 423 (426) (F.B.), (1938) A.L.J. 617, 176 I.C. 509. In two earlier cases of Bombay and Allahabad High Courts, however, a deficient deposit made under the bona fide belief that it was the whole amount due, was held to be valid pro tanto and the interest also ceased pro tanto—Haji Abdul v. Haji Noor, 16 Bom. 141; Narasingha v. Acchaibar, 36 All. 36. See also Bhabani v. Kadambini, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 304 (306), 33 C.W.N. 279, 119 I.C. 292. Where it has been held that the deposit by a purchaser who could not have known whether any interest was due was a valid deposit and interest ceased to run from the date of the deposit. But where a mortgagor brought into Court the whole sum found due by the Court of first instance, and upon an appeal by the mortgagee, the Appellate Court determined a larger sum to be due: held that the sum deposited operated as payment pro tanto and interest would cease to that extent—Digambar v. Harendra, 14 C.W.N. 617, 11 C.L.J. 226, 5 I.C. 165.

From the mere fact of withdrawal by the mortgagor of deposit per se it cannot be said that interest would not cease to run. The deposit operates as a tender and it should be seen whether the mortgagor notwithstanding his withdrawal remained ready and willing to pay throughout. The burden is cast upon the creditor to show that he was either not willing or not able to pay, because he had utilized the moneys for other purposes—Narayanaswami v. Ramaswami, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 324, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 503, 1939 M.W.N. 455 relying on Ramabhadra v. Arunachalam, 49 Mad. 609 (F.B.), 50 M.L.J. 468, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 601. The case was governed by sec. 83 before the amendment in 1929 and 1930.

There is a diversity of opinion as to whether interest ceases from the day of deposit, or whether the mortgagee is entitled to interest for that day also. According to the Calcutta High Court, interest cannot be charged for the day on which the money was deposited—Raghub v. Bhobui, 8 C.W.N. 216. But the Madras High Court is of opinion that the mortgagor at the time of making the deposit under sec. 83 must include in the amount deposited the interest for the day of deposit also—Subbai v. Palani, 30 M.L.J. 607, 34 I.C. 825.

510A. Effect of withdrawal of deposit :—In order that a deposit may have the effect of cessation of interest, it is necessary that the money must be always kept in Court; and if the mortgagor subsequently withdraws the money, on the mortgagee's refusal to accept the amount deposited, interest will again commence to run—Krishnaswami v. Ramaswami, 35 Mad. 44 (45), 8 I.C. 763; Thevarayya v. Venkatachalam, 40 Mad. 804 (806), 37 I.C. 444; Debi Sahai v. Narayan, 3 O.W.N. 942, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 103, 99 I.C. 147. Where the assignee of a mortgagor who had mortgaged his property with possession deposited the mortgage-amount, but on the mortgagee's refusal to accept the money withdrew the same from the Court and it was found that he was unable to produce it even at the time of the suit for redemption, it was held that he was entitled to mesne profits only during the period the amount was in deposit, but not of the subsequent period—Suppan v. Rangan, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 405 (413), (1938) M.W.N. 356. If the mortgagor withdrawing the deposit redeposits it in pursuance of a preliminary decree passed on a subsequent suit for redemption he is entitled to mesne profits from the date of the original deposit and the interest shall cease from that date—Nachiappan v. Muthiah Ambalam, A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 77.

This is clearly laid down in the new proviso. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court had dissented from the above view and had observed: "The only question properly arising was whether the mortgagor, notwithstanding his withdrawal, remained ready and willing to pay throughout. The better opinion seems to be that the fact of the tender (deposit) raises the presumption that the debtor continued ready and willing to pay, and that the burden is cast upon the creditor to show that the debtor was either not willing to pay or not able to pay because he had utilized the money for other purposes"—Ramabhadra v. Arunachalam, 49 Mad. 609 (F.B.), 95 I.C. 108, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 601. See also the opinion of Phillips, J., in Thevarayya v. Venkatachalam, 40 Mad. 804 (808). The Allahabad High Court held that where the full amount due on a mortgage was paid into Court, and notice was properly issued, and the mortgagee appeared but definitely refused to accept the amount whereupon the mortgagor withdrew it out of Court, the interest ceased to run from the date of deposit as the mortgagor had done all that could be done under this section—Hukam Singh v. Babu Lal, 44 All. 198 (200), 64 I.C. 971, A.I.R. 1922 All. 181. But these rulings are no longer correct.

511. "Mortgagor has done all that has to be done" :—The Legislature has drawn a distinction between the case of a tender and the case of a deposit as to the date from which interest shall cease to run. In the case of a tender, interest shall cease from the date of the tender; but in the case of a deposit, the interest only ceases when the mortgagor has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court; that is to say, he must do something more than make a deposit—Pandurang v. Mahadaji, 27 Bom. 23 (27). But neither this section nor sec. 83 states expressly what are all the things that the mortgagor has to do—Krishnasami v. Ramasami, 35 Mad. 44 (45).

A mortgagor is not liable to pay interest for future after he has deposited the money and taken all the steps necessary to pay the money to the person entitled to it, and if through the fault of the person or persons entitled to it, it is not clear exactly to whom the money is to be paid, the mortgagor cannot be deprived of the right conferred on him by this section on account of the omissions and errors of such persons—Harihar v. Sheo Singh, 19 O.C. 145, 36 I.C. 814; Shyam Sundar v. Seth Balmukand, A.I.R. 1964 All. 370. Where the mortgagor deposited the sum due in Court and did all he could to enable the mortgagee to draw the amount, but the same was not done because of a dispute among the mortgagee's heirs, interest ceased to run from the date of deposit—Nagathal v. Arumugan, 44 M.L.J. 362, 79 I.C. 40, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 354; Baluswami v. Krishnaswami, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 559, 46 M.L.J. 497, 84 I.C. 698. Where the mortgagor deposited the money in Court as payable to the mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee, the mortgagor did all that was required to be done to enable the mortgagee to receive the money, and the mortgagor would not suffer if by reason of disputes between the mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee as to the right to the money, the money was not paid to anybody but remained in Court—Subba Rao v. Ponnammal, 46 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 453 (455), 80 I.C. 363. Where the mortgagor paid the money into Court and issued notices to the four sons of the mortgagee, but before all of them could be served, he requested the Court to dismiss the petition, held that the mortgagor had not done all that had to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the amount, and interest did not therefore cease to run—Venkateswaradu v. Bala Tripurasundari, 1915 M.W.N. 763, 30 I.C. 769. Where the mortgagee was dead, and the mortgagor, being unable to ascertain as to who were the persons entitled to succeed, deposited the mortgage-money in Court, but withdrew it before the rightful heirs were ascertained, he could not be said to have done all that he could do to enable the heirs to receive the money. In such a case the mortgagor could not claim cessation of interest—Thevarayya v. Venkatachalam, 40 Mad. 804 (807), 37 I.C. 444. Where the mortgagee is a minor, it is the duty of the mortgagor making a deposit to apply for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the purpose of receiving notice of the deposit and taking the money out of Court, and to see that a guardian ad litem is appointed (see sec. 103). Until he does so, it cannot be said that he has done all that has to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the money out of Court—Pandurang v. Mahadaji, 27 Bom. 23 (29). Where a mortgagor deposited money in Court and joined a minor mortgagee as a party with a major mortgagee, but he failed to see that the minor was properly represented by the appointment of a guardian, in order that the Court might be able to order the money to be paid, held that the mortgagor had not performed what the law requires to be performed when a deposit is made under sec. 83, and that the deposit was not a valid deposit—Appa Pai v. Somu, 49 M.L.J. 327, 90 I.C. 754, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1017. Where two of the mortgagees being minors, the mortgagor, after depositing the amount in Court, applied for appointment of guardians ad litem for those minors under sec. 103, and proposed the names of two guardians, and after much difficulty notices were served on them and they were ultimately appointed guardians, held (per Lindsay, J.) that the interest ceased to run only from the date when the Court finally appointed the guardians—Kannu Mal v. Inderpal, 44 All. 102, (107, 108), 64 I.C. 907, A.I.R. 1922 All. 147, affirmed on appeal in Kannu Mal v. Inderpal, 45 All. 273, A.I.R. 1923 All. 183, 71 I.C. 278.

Service of notice :—The amendment made at the end of the 1st para requires that notice of the deposit should be served on the mortgagee. It was formerly held that when the mortgagor deposited in Court the amount due upon the mortgage and paid batta for the notice with the proper address of the mortgagee, he had done all that had to be done by him, and interest ceased to run thereafter—Subbai v. Palani, 30 M.L.J. 607, 34 I.C. 825, and the fact that the notice was not actually served on the mortgagee till after a long time, was no fault of the mortgagor; because the duty of getting the service of notice effected on the mortgagee was not part of the duty of the mortgagor. As soon as he applied for the issue of notice to the mortgagee, and gave the correct address, he had done all that could be done to enable the mortgagee to take the money out of Court, and interest ceased to run therefrom—Pandit Jiva Ram v. Thakurain Khem Koer, 70 I.C. 811, A.I.R. 1923 All. 24. But this view is no longer correct. Under the present section notice must be actually served upon the mortgagee, before interest will cease to run.

85 to 90.—[Repealed by Act V of 1908].

Redemption.

91. Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property :—	91. Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property, namely :—
--	--

- (a) Any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) having any interest in, or charge upon the property ;
- (b) any person having any interest in, or charge upon, the right to redeem the property ;
- (c) any surety for the payment of the mortgage-debt or any part thereof ;
- (d) the guardian of the property of a minor mortgagor on behalf of such minor ;
- (e) the committee or other legal curator of a lunatic or idiot mortgagor on behalf of such lunatic or idiot ;
- (f) the judgment-creditor of the mortgagor, when he has obtained execution by attachment of the mortgagor's interest in the property ;
- (g) a creditor of the mortgagor who has in a suit for the administration of his estate, obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property.

Amendment :—This section has been redrafted by sec. 46 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). The old clauses (a) and (b) have been combined into one clause (a); old clauses (c) and (g) are now clauses (b) and (c) respectively; and the old clauses (d), (e) and (f) have been omitted.

511A. Suit for redemption :—In a suit by the puisne mortgagee for redemption of a prior mortgagee the plaintiff must prove due execution of his own puisne mortgage-deed although the mortgagor admitted due execution—Mt. Mohammadi v. Kashi, A.I.R. 1926 All. 725 (726), 96 I.C. 775; Gouri Shankar v. Lata, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 16, 171 I.C. 437. Where a plaintiff seeks to redeem a mortgage alleged to have been executed before 30 years and it is proved that the defendants are the mortgagees, though no specific mortgage has been proved by the plaintiffs they are entitled to succeed on proving the defendants to be the mortgagees—Kailash v. Mt. Jaga Koer, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 295 (296), 10 Pat. 417, 133 I.C. 678.

In a suit for possession of mortgaged property challenging the mortgage-decree on the ground of collusion, if no prayer is made for the relief of redemption and necessary issues are not tried, redemption cannot be allowed—Lalit v. Hardat, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 146, 41 P.L.R. 629.

In a suit for redemption the mortgagor can, to his claim for redemption, join a claim for rent paid by him to the mortgagee's use—Subedar Mian v. Sheo Shankar, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 579, 189 I.C. 109.

Unless the plaintiff in a redemption suit gives prima facie evidence that the suit is brought within limitation, he fails to show that he has a subsisting right to the property in suit or in other words he fails to prove his title—Prem Singh v. Md. Khurshid, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 574 (576), 103 I.C. 215. A second mortgagee having allowed the period of limitation to expire is not entitled to enforce his mortgage by redeeming and a purchase by him in a suit brought by him against the mortgagor without making the first mortgagee a party does not give him a fresh starting period for limitation—Appaya v. Venkataramayya, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 150 (151), 80 I.C. 864; Nidhiram v. Sarbessur, 14 C.W.N. 439; Lakshmanam v. Sella Muthu, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 76, 84 I.C. 301.

Subject to the safeguarding of the equal right to redeem of any other person who has a right of redemption, one of several mortgagors is entitled to redeem the entire mortgage, unless something has happened to extinguish the mortgage in whole or in part, or unless the conduct of the mortgagor has estopped him from asserting what would normally have been his rights—Promotha v. Ram Kishun, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 25, 97 I.C. 386. Where the integrity of the mortgage has been broken by the mortgagee purchasing an item of the mortgaged property, a suit may be brought for partial redemption—Ouseph v. Parmeswaran, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 212 (2). But where the interest of the mortgagees has been divided by a gift or an assignment between more than one co-sharer, a mortgagor cannot at his pleasure bring a separate redemption suit for redemption of a single mortgage-debt—Parsottam v. Isub Mahammad, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 513, 29 Bom. L.R. 1052, 104 I.C. 648.

A mortgagor who has failed to comply with terms of the decree in a redemption suit filed by him is not entitled during the continuance of that suit or before the final decree in that suit has become incapable of execution, to maintain a second suit for redemption of the same mortgage—Abdul v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1927 All. 305, 100 I.C. 324. See, however, Palpa Kara v. Pulipre Tarwad, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 214 (216) (F.B.), I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 545, 168 I.C. 110. But where in a suit against the mortgagee the claim of the plaintiff is founded upon an absolute title treating the mortgagee as a trespasser and no question of the plaintiff's right of redemption is raised, a subsequent suit by the plaintiff, on the dismissal of the prior one, for redemption is not barred—Kali Nath v. Manindra, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 544, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 550, 191 I.C. 398. Where in a suit for redemption the mortgagee continues to be in possession of a part of the mortgaged property even after deposit of the amount fixed for redemption by the trial Court and the appeal by the mortgagee is dismissed, the mortgagor is not entitled to a direction from the appellate Court for taking further accounts—Ibid.

A mortgagor who is entitled to bring a suit for redemption can sue not merely for accounts—Gordhan Lal v. Radha Kant, A.I.R. 1943 All. 109.

Parties:—If a mortgagee leaves out a puisne mortgagee or a person interested in the equity of redemption and obtains a decree, the security is not merged in the decree and extinguished. If a sale takes place in execution of the decree of such a defectively constituted suit, the purchaser at the Court-sale acquires the rights of the mortgagee and of the defendants-mortgagors, provided that the equity of redemption were not entirely unrepresented in the suit—Sailendra v. Amarendra, I.L.R. (1941) 1 Cal. 514, 45 C.W.N. 530, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 484 (486); Kurumpa Kochika v. Narayana Pillai, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 56. The rights of the puisne mortgagee not impleaded in the prior mortgagee's suit remains unaffected by such suit and subsequent auction sale. His right under this section to redeem the prior mortgage is not taken away by such decree and sale. This suit is governed by Art. 148 and not Art. 132 Limitation Act—A. M. A. Firm v. Marudachalam, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 412, (1948) 1 M.L.J. 284. See also Nagu v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 405; Ulahannan v. Raman, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 554. Where a puisne mortgagee was not a party to the prior mortgagee's suit the amount payable by the puisne mortgagee for redeeming the prior mortgage must be calculated not on the footing of the prior mortgagee's decree or of the price paid by the auction purchaser, but on the security, subject to statutory restrictions that amount must be outstanding principal together with interest calculated at the bond-rate up to the date fixed for redemption—Ibid. As to the direction given in a decree in puisne mortgagee's suit on his mortgage for redemption of the prior mortgage and as to the accountability of the auction-purchaser in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree on his simple mortgage to the puisne mortgagee for profits obtained by the auction-purchaser from the mortgaged properties, see this case. See also Harekrishna v. Gojendra, I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 643, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 15, 188 I.C. 612. The mortgagor's right of redemption does not revive on the puisne mortgagee paying off the prior mortgagee who brought the mortgaged property to sale without impleading the puisne mortgagee—Kurumpa Kochika v. Narayana Pillai, A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 56.

In a redemption suit, the mortgagor is entitled to make not only the mortgagee but all persons who have deprived title from the mortgagee as parties to the action and the Court is not debarred from granting relief against them including the sub-mortgagee—Venkataramani v. Rangaswami, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 703 (704), 101 I.C. 728. Where a sub-mortgage, which was simple, was effected within 60 years of the original mortgage, but the sub-mortgagee got a decree and bought the property in auction after 60 years had elapsed when he was impleaded as defendant in a suit for redemption of the original mortgage, it was held that the suit was barred as against the sub-mortgagee—Sanwal Das v. Sayid Ali, A.I.R. 1925 All. 174, 22 A.L.J. 1018, 85 I.C. 330. Where a lessee from the mortgagor is not impleaded in a suit for sale on a mortgage, his right to redeem remains unaffected, and a subsequent suit by the mortgagee for declaration that the lease is not binding on him is not maintainable—Surya Kumar v. Girish, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 101.

Though an attaching creditor as such is not a necessary party to a mortgage-suit and an order striking his name out in so far as he purports to assert a paramount claim and raises questions of priority is also correct, yet by virtue of the statutory right of redemption conferred by sec. 91 (f) (before the amendment), he will be a proper party to the suit and it is not open to the Court to strike out the name of a party as unnecessary party if he is otherwise a proper party. Even apart from sec. 91 an attaching creditor may in certain cases be permitted to intervene and be made a proper party for the purpose of safeguarding his rights—Annamalai v. Srinivasaraghava, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 293, (1938) M.W.N. 73. But if the attaching creditor proceeds to sell the property in execution of his decree, the Court-sale releases the property altogether from attachment and with it the right of redemption. Thereafter he can only agitate such rights as the judgment-debtor has. The fact that the attaching creditor himself becomes the purchaser is immaterial—Ibid at pp. 294, 295.

Costs:—Ordinarily the mortgagor is liable to pay the costs of the mortgagee in a redemption suit—Elatath v. Etacheri, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 307, (1942) 1 M.L.J. 166, 55 M.L.W. 18.

Court-fee:—Where the mortgagee in an appeal against a decree in a redemption suit contests not only the finding of the lower Court as to the amount payable by the mortgagor before he can redeem the mortgage, but also that the transaction is a sale and not a mortgage as held by the lower Court the Court-fee on the appeal is payable on the principal sum secured on the mortgage and not on the amount claimed—Abdul v. Rahamat, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 155.

512. Clause (a)—Persons having interest in or charge on the right to redeem :—This section is not confined to persons who have an interest in the property, but extends also to persons having any interest in the right to redeem the property. So, a sub-mortgagee may redeem. Thus, where a sub-mortgagor left a portion of the consideration money in the hands of the sub-mortgagee for redeeming a prior mortgage in respect of the property, the sub-mortgagee was entitled to redeem the prior mortgage—Ramsubhag v. Nursingh, 27 All. 472. A subsequent mortgagee is entitled to redeem a prior mortgage—Gobinda Menon v. Chathu Menon, 22 I.C. 907; Radhabai v. Shamray, 8 Bom. 168; Abdul Hamid v. Ram Kumar, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 260 (F.B.), (1942) O.W.N. 165. See sec. 92.

Where the property charged by a maintenance decree is mortgaged, the mortgagee can redeem and pay off the charge-decree, so long as the sale under the charge-decree is not confirmed—Venkatachala v. Rajagopal, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 51 (1945) 2 M.L.J. 388. A mortgagee cannot get rid of his liability as a mortgagee to the purchaser of the equity of redemption by allowing the mortgagor to redeem. In such a case, the decree for redemption can be passed against both the mortgagor and the mortgagee—Chaluvegowda v. Chennegowda, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 12. Where under the law a landlord is given a first charge on the holding of his tenant for rent, the prior encumbrancers have a subsequent right of suit—Shamzav v. Kamalnayan, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 316, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 912. The purchaser of certain mortgaged property paying off the mortgage had sufficient interest within the meaning of this section though he was found to have acquired no title on account of a prior sale deed, though registered after his purchase—Ramakrishna v. Venkatasami, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 175, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 154. See also Perumal v. Suppiah, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 500, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 341.

A landlord has no such interest as would entitle him to redeem a mortgage of his holding made by a tenant—Ganpat v. Bhangi, 15 C.P.L.R. 175. But the Bombay High Court has held that where a permanent tenant effects a mortgage, the landlord has an interest in the mortgaged property within this section and is therefore entitled to redeem when the mortgagor tenant dies without any heirs—Venkatesh v. Bhujaballi, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 97 (99), 57 Bom. 194, 142 I.C. 481. So in U. P., if a fixed-rate tenant dies without heirs, the tenancy comes to an end and the land goes back to the Zemindar. Therefore a Zemindar has a right to redeem a mortgage of the holding made by a tenant at fixed rate who has died without heirs—Tulshi Ram v. Gurdial, 33 All. 111 (F.B.) (overruling Ramdiyal v. Maharaja of Vizianagram, 30 All. 488). See also 1932 A.L.J. 474 cited in Note 513 below.

The words “interest in or charge upon” must obviously mean a subsisting interest or charge. Where a puisne mortgagee has been unsuccessful in his suit for possession and has failed to enforce his mortgage by foreclosure within the period of limitation, he has no subsisting interest in or charge upon the property; and although his right as a mortgagee cannot be said to have extinguished under the terms of sec. 28 of the Limitation Act, yet he cannot be regarded as a person entitled to sue for redemption of a prior mortgage within the meaning of the present section—Ram Adhar v. Shankar Baksh, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 139 (141), 10 Luck. 531 I.C. 808. See also Pitram v. Lalit, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 68. This rule of having subsisting interest has however an exception, where the mortgagor is sued upon a personal covenant to pay the mortgage money. In such a case a new right to redeem arises to himself subject to the rights of the persons interested in the equity of redemption—Raj Kumar v. Mritunjay, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 202.

The word ‘interest’ is not necessarily confined to rights of ownership but is sufficiently large to include any minor interest such as that of a tenant. A varumpattom tenant in Malabar claiming under a lease executed by the ottidar is entitled to redeem the prior kanom—Paya Matathil v. Kovamel Amina, 19 Mad. 151. A lessee of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor for a term of years is a person interested within the meaning of this section—Tulshi Ram v. Mt. Muna Kuar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 146 (148), 12 Luck. 161, 162 I.C. 225.

Where the mortgagor’s equity of redemption happens to have vested by purchase in a person who is also a prior mortgagee, and that person as owner of the equity of redemption wants to redeem a puisne mortgage, while at the same time the puisne mortgagee wants to redeem the prior mortgage, the claim of the prior mortgagee, not as a prior mortgagee but as owner of the equity of redemption, will be preferred—Ram Baran v. Bhagwati, 47 All. 751, 89 I.C. 295, A.I.R. 1925 All. 804 (807). Where properties are sold in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree, the purchaser is entitled to redeem the purchaser in the puisne mortgagee's decree even though the puisne mortgagee had obtained his decree before the institution of the prior mortgagee's suit—Chinnasami v. Darmalinga, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 566, 56 Mad. 115, 139 I.C. 309; Rowther Abdur Rahman v. Mathevan Pillai Narayana Pillai, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 45. Where three properties were once mortgaged to one and then again to another and the second mortgagee was a party to the first suit by the first mortgagee and failed to exercise his right of redemption, he can have no rights against such properties which pass away to the purchaser in execution of the first decree free of both the mortgages. Where therefore instead of an actual Court-sale the property is sold to the first mortgagee, the same result is attained. The effect of the first suit is not that a suit by the second mortgagee against the mortgagor is not maintainable at all, but that he has no rights to pursue against the common mortgaged items—Ramasami v. Narayanasami, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 483 (486), 86 I.C. 548. It is however settled law that when a prior mortgagee brings the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree on his mortgage and a second mortgagee is not joined as a party to the prior mortgagee's suit, the rights of the second mortgagee are unaffected—Maung Shwe v. Karambu, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 127, 6 Rang. 122, 110 I.C. 701. But where the subsequent mortgagee is impleaded in the suit of the intermediate mortgagee and is given an opportunity to redeem the latter, but he refrains from doing so, he cannot subsequently obtain a decree on his subsequent mortgage for sale subject to the intermediate mortgage—Mt. Anpurnā v. Ram, A.I.R. 1927 All. 417 (418), 49 All. 430, 100 I.C. 670. Where the puisne mortgagee has already obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage without making a prior mortgagee a party, he is entitled to redeem the prior mortgage in a subsequent suit—Sayamali v. Anisuddin, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 609 (F.B.), 33 C.W.N. 1067, 50 C.L.J. 152, 119 I.C. 135.

An auction-purchaser in execution of a simple money-decree of property already mortgaged is entitled to redeem—Fatima v. Bansidhar, A.I.R. 1932 All. 356, (1932) A.L.J. 289, 136 I.C. 840. The purchaser in execution of a mortgage-decree acquires not only the interest of the mortgagee, but also the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, and he is entitled to redeem other mortgages in the same property created by the mortgagor—Mt. Azizunnissa v. Komal Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 579 (581), 9 Pat. 930. The purchaser cannot redeem upon payment of the amount decreed in the mortgage-suit, he must pay the amount to be found due under the original mortgage-bond giving deduction for the profits made by the mortgagee auction-purchaser from the date of taking possession of the property—Ibid at p. 584. A vendee is entitled to redeem as the purchaser of a widow's interest in the properties mortgaged in the absence of proof that the widow had no interest to convey—Rangayya v. Basana, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 594, 94 I.C. 639. An assignee of subsequent mortgagee is entitled to redeem the prior mortgage by paying the amount due under it to the purchaser of the property under the decree based on the prior mortgage—Mt. Sheoratan v. Kamta Prasad,

A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 270 (271), 11 Pat. 415, 139 I.C. 78. A prior simple mortgagee having obtained a decree for sale against the mortgagor has an interest in the mortgaged property and in the right to redeem under this section in spite of the dismissal of his suit against a subsequent mortgagee—Sheo Prasad v. Prakash Rani, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 10, (1937) O.W.N. 1118, 171 I.C. 434.

513. Persons having interest in or charge on property :—It is a general principle that no person is entitled to redeem unless he can show a title to the estate of the mortgagor. The person claiming redemption must prove that he has an interest in it—Dam Dihal v. Maharaja of Vizianagram, 30 All. 488. A person claiming to be the heir of the original mortgagor is not entitled to redeem unless he is the heir according to the law of inheritance applicable to the property. Thus, the brothers and nephews are not heirs to an occupancy holding under sec. 9 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, 1881, if they did not share in the cultivation jointly with the deceased, and they cannot redeem the mortgage of the holding created by the deceased—Ram Singh v. Baldeo, 1932 A.L.J. 605, A.I.R. 1932 All. 643 (647). This clause refers to a person having an interest in or charge upon the property which is affected by the mortgage, and a raiyyati interest is not such an interest. Consequently the purchaser of a raiyyati interest in the mortgaged property is not entitled to redeem it—Girish Chandra v. Juramani, 5 C.W.N. 83. Clauses (a) and (b) of sec. 91 do not cover the interest in property held by a tenant or yearly lessee to whom it is given for cultivation; such a tenant or lessee has no right to redeem the property—Kalu Singh v. Hansraj, 78 I.C. 47, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 270 (271). But the permanent lessee of the mortgagor has the right to redeem—Raghunandan v. Ambika, 29 All. 679; Shankar v. Hukumchand, 14 N.L.R. 117, 47 I.C. 99; Sakharam v. Pandurang, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 315, 55 Bom. L.R. 286. But permanent lessees on the land prior to the mortgage are not affected by it—ibid. An auction purchaser of an agricultural holding in a sale in execution of a rent decree found to be void has been held to be entitled to redeem the mortgage on such holding—Sarat v. Jamuna, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 289, 24 Pat. 263. The Nagpur Court is of opinion that even a lessee for a term of years is a person having an interest in the property and is entitled to redeem—Pannalal v. Rajaram, 23 N.L.R. 128, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 496, 96 I.C. 973; Ghulam Nabi v. Kanhai, 16 N.L.R. 180, 50 I.C. 511; Sheoram v. Jamnabai, 19 N.L.R. 18, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 273. The lessor of the mortgagor can redeem if enforcement is sought against leasehold rights—Piarelal Khuman v. Bhagwati Prasad, A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 35. A mortgagor is entitled to redeem a sub-mortgage—Easwari Pillai v. Krishna Pillai, A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 73. But where the lease is granted by the mortgagor in the ordinary course of management and is thus binding on the mortgagee, the lessee's interest not being jeopardised by the mortgage, he is not entitled to redeem it—Pawankumar v. Jagdeo, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 210, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 740. Where however the lease executed by the mortgagor is void and wholly inoperative, the lessee has no right to redeem—Kamakshya v. Ramzan, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 106, 23 Pat. 648. Where a lease is binding on the mortgagor, whether it is so on the mortgagee or not, he is still a necessary party to the mortgagee's suit, and if he is not made a party, his right to redeem is not affected by the mortgage decree and sale in execution—ibid.

On the death of a tenant or sub-tenant without heirs, his right reverts to the landlord and does not escheat to the Crown. It is open to the landlord in such a case to redeem a mortgage made by the tenant or sub-tenant—Tulsi Ram v. Gur Dayal, 33 All. 111; followed in Arjun Singh v. Maheshanand, 1932 A.L.J. 474, A.I.R. 1932 All. 437 (438), 138 I.C. 366. An ex-proprietary tenant has a right to redemption under this clause. Thus, the owner of certain sir plots executed a usufructuary mortgage, and afterwards his proprietary rights were sold and purchased by the defendants, who subsequently acquired the mortgagee-rights also. The mortgagor then brought the present suit for redemption. Held that upon the sale of proprietary rights, the mortgagor became entitled to occupy the sir lands as ex-proprietary tenant, and as such he had an "interest in the property", which enabled him to redeem the mortgage—Mahomed Husain v. Hanuman, 16 A.L.J. 796, 47 I.C. 861.

A trespasser, before his title is perfected, can not redeem. If the mortgagee allows him to redeem, the true owner is not affected—Kisan Janu v. Prayagbai, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 4. See also Anantha v. Arunachalam, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 105. Where by the prior sale deed executed by the mortgagor title did not pass to the vendee, the subsequent transferee of the mortgaged property is entitled to redeem—Pradyaman v. Mahadeo, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 85. Where a property subject to a usufructuary mortgage is purchased by a person at court sale and thereafter the mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption from the mortgagor the purchaser at court sale is entitled to bring a suit for redemption within 12 years of the mortgagee's purchase even though the mortgagee has remained in possession for more than 12 years—Raghunath Prasad v. Gyani Rai, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 177. Where A purchases a property subject to usufructuary mortgage in execution of a money decree and R purchases the self-same property before the execution sale from the mortgagor judgment-debtor and discharges the mortgage, R is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee and can obstruct delivery of possession to A—Champalal v. Y. Nabi Khan, A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 289.

Where there are several mortgagors each and every one of the mortgagors is interested in the payment of the mortgage-money and the redemption of the mortgaged estate, and each and every one of them has a right by payment of the money to redeem the entire estate, seeking contribution from others—Norender v. Dwarka Lal, 3 Cal. 397 (P.C.); Pearce v. Morris, L.R. 5 Ch. 227. Under this section, the smallest interest in the equity of redemption will entitle a person to redeem, and he is entitled (and bound) to redeem the whole property. So, an owner of a portion of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the entire property—Shankar v. Bhikaji, 53 Bom. 353, 116 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 139 (141); Fakir Chand v. Babu Lal, 39 All. 719 (721); Rugad Singh v. Sat Narain, 27 All. 178 (182); Baikuntha v. Mahesh, 22 C.W.N. 128 (129), 41 I.C. 77; Pratap Chandra v. Peary Mohan, 22 C.W.N. 800 (802), 48 I.C. 669; Huthasanani v. Parameshwaran, 22 Mad. 209 (211). A person who has purchased a portion of the equity of redemption is entitled to sue for redemption of the whole mortgage—Nainappa v. Chidambaram, 21 Mad. 18 (26); Huthasanam v. Parameshwaran, 28 Mad. 209 (212); Yadalli v. Tukaram, 48 Cal. 22 (28) (P.C.). Shankar v. Bhikaji, supra. But where the mortgage has been split up by the act of the mortgagee, neither a co-mortgagor nor a transferee from him can redeem more than his share of the mortgaged property. See this subject discussed in Notes 375 and 376 under sec. 60. The purchaser of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property at an execution-sale is entitled to redeem the mortgage—Periandi v. Angappa, 7 Mad. 423; Radha Kishun v. Hem Chandra, 11 C.W.N. 495. So also, a purchaser pendente lite from the mortgagor is entitled to redeem—Har Sankar v. Sheo Gobind, 26 Cal. 966; Sheo Narain v. Chunilal, 1900 A.W.N. 51. Where a prior mortgagee purchases the mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained by him in a suit to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party, he is entitled to redeem the puisne mortgage—Dhanwanti v. Hargobind, 3 Pat. 435 (441) following Devendra Nath v. Ram Taran, 30 Cal. 599 (F.B.). Where a puisne mortgagee fails to implead in a suit on his mortgage a prior mortgagee who has purchased a part of the property in satisfaction of his own mortgage, the latter is entitled to redeem the puisne mortgage so far as it affects the part of the property purchased by him—Birinchi v. Saroda, 3 Pat. 114 (118), 5 P.L.T. 95, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 452.

Where a co-sharer puisne mortgagee of the entire property institutes a suit to redeem a prior mortgage, but finding that the mortgagee had purchased half share in the property mortgaged, redeems the other half on payment of the proportionate mortgage-debt, the other co-sharer mortgagors cannot redeem more than their proper share of the mortgaged property—Amba Prasad v. Moonga Ram, A.I.R. 1930 All. 523 (524), 128 I.C. 235. Where the purchaser under a puisne mortgagee's decree brought a suit for possession against the purchaser under the first mortgagee's decree, it was held that the rights of the parties should be determined in the same suit and the plaintiff should be allowed to redeem the defendant—Bhodai v. Barada, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 116 (117), 55 Cal. 602, 107 I.C. 355.

A member of a Hindu family who has merely a personal right to maintenance, has no charge on the property within the meaning of this clause; consequently he is not entitled to redeem a mortgage made by an owner of the estate—Balwant Singh v. Roshan Singh, 18 All. 253. A daughter-in-law of a Hindu entitled to maintenance has not such an interest in the family property within the meaning of this section as would entitle her to redeem—Gajadhar v. Thula, 12 O.C. 37 (39), 1 I.C. 690. But if a charge for maintenance has been obtained on the property by a contract or decree, it will then enable the charge-holder to exercise the right of redemption—Roshan Singh v. Balwant, 22 All. 191 (P.C.). Where joint family property has been mortgaged, the son has as much as his father a right to redeem the whole property as their rights are necessarily undetermined until partition—Ananda v. Uttam, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 44, 144 I.C. 521.

Under Malabar law, except in very special circumstances where the Karnavan is proved to be guilty of gross misconduct and collusion, it is not competent to the junior members of a tarwad to sue for redemption of a Kanom granted by their Karnavan—Sooji v. Mariyoma, 43 Mad. 393. But see Neelkanta v. Sivarama, 1958 Ker. L.J. 72.

A person in whose favour there is only an agreement to sell immoveable property has no interest in the property, and is consequently not entitled to file a suit for redemption of that property—Mayappa v. Kolan-daivelu, 1926 M.W.N. 459, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 597 (598), 92 I.C. 715.

A person having an inchoate right may not redeem until the completion of his title but if a person whose title is to some extent imperfect seeks to redeem, and is able to prove a perfect title at the hearing of his case, he should have a right to redemption—Krishnaji v. Ganesh, 6 Bom. 139; Tukaram v. Satvaji, 5 Bom. 206 (207).

A mortgagor who subsequently parts with the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property in favour of a third party by a sale-deed which reserves part of the consideration with the vendee is nevertheless entitled to redeem the mortgage—Ratnam Pillai v. Kamalambal, 48 M.L.J. 213, 86 I.C. 793, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 778. A mortgagor who has conveyed the land subject to the mortgage and has expressly reserved a lien for the purchase-money may redeem by virtue of such interest—Jones on Mortgages, Vol. 2, § 1056. If a debt is scaled down under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act at the instance of a mortgagor who is an agriculturist and the properties are purchased by persons who are not agriculturists, the properties can be proceeded against only for the scaled down amount—Kasamma, A. v. Bramuramba, P. (1967) 2 Andh. L. T. 273.

The interest referred to in this clause is a present interest, i.e., an interest in existence at the time the suit is instituted, and not a mere contingent interest such as a reversioner possesses—Ramchandra v. Kallu, 30 All. 497. And so, a person who has absolutely no present interest at all, e.g., a reversioner, is not entitled to redeem during the life-time of the widow—Ramchandra v. Kallu, 30 All. 497; Narayana v. Pechiammal, 36 Mad. 426 (435); Chhote Singh v. Surat Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 294 (298), 5 Luck. 691 123 I.C. 211; Mitru v. Gurubari, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 150, 16 Cut. L.T. 64; Bhag Singh v. Mt. Santi, A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu. 74; Thayammal v. Adhimoolam, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 304; Mohanlal v. Jit Singh, 1968 Cur. L.J. 268. (Contra—Gumani v. Chakkar, 8 O.C. 349, and Basavan v. Natha, 1 O.W.N. 319, 82 I.C. 747, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 30, at p. 33, where a reversioner was held to be entitled to redeem during the widow's life-time). But although a reversioner cannot voluntarily claim to redeem a mortgage made by the last male holder, still if a suit is instituted by the mortgagee for sale, a reversioner has sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to discharge the mortgage to prevent loss of the property to which he would be entitled to succeed on the death of the widow. In such a case, the reversioner would be entitled to be reimbursed by the widow under sec. 69, Contract Act, in respect of the money paid—Narayana v. Pechiammal, 36 Mad. 426 (436).

A sub-mortgagee has both an interest in and charge on the mortgaged property. He is therefore entitled to redeem—Venkatanarayana-sami v. Kani, 1913 M.W.N. 903, 21 I.C. 560; Muthi v. Venkatachellam, 20 Mad. 35; Ram Subhag v. Nursingh, 27 All. 472.

514. Clause (b)—Surety :—The right of the surety to redeem is a part of his general right as surety as defined in sections 140 and 141 of the Indian Contract Act. When a surety has paid off the debts of the principal debtor, he stands in the place of the original creditor and can proceed against the mortgagor upon the mortgage-deed, and can use against the latter every remedy which the original creditor himself could have used—Heeralal v. Syed Oozir, 21 W.R. 347 (348); Graythorn v. Swinburn, 14 Ves. 160; In re Wrexham, (1889) 1 Ch. 440; Nicholas v. Ridley, (1904) 1 Ch. 192.

Attaching Judgment-creditor :—Under the old clause (f) a judgment-creditor (money-decree-holder) of the mortgagor, when he obtained execution by attachment of the mortgagor's interest in the property, was entitled to redeem—Lakhpur v. Fakiruddin, 39 All. 536, 41 I.C. 190; Ghulam Husain v. Dinanath, 23 All. 467; Venkata v. Venkataramayya, 37 Mad. 418; Meghraj v. Kesho Gopal, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 311, 73 I.C. 8. But see Baiju Lal v. Thakur Prasad, infra, and Madan Lal v. Ghasiram, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 234, 30 Pat. 613 where it has been held that such an attaching decree-holder is not a necessary party to the mortgage-suit even under the old section; because though such a decree-holder may have a right to redeem the mortgage under the old section, it cannot be said that he has an interest in the right of redemption within the meaning of Rule 1 of Order 34, Civil Procedure Code. So too, the person who purchased the mortgaged property at the sale held in execution of that creditor's decree was entitled to redeem—Lakhpur v. Fakiruddin, 39 All. 536. A contrary view was however taken in Peacock v. Madan Gopal, 29 Cal. 428 and Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Tirumalai, 32 Mad. 429. But if, subsequent to the attachment by the decree-holder, the mortgagee filed a suit upon his mortgage (whether with or without impleading the attaching decree-holder, it is immaterial) and brought the mortgaged property to sale, held that the right to redeem conferred on the decree-holder by the old clause (f) ceased to be available to him after the property had been sold away in execution of the mortgage-decree—Subramanian v. Sinnammal, 53 Mad. 881, 59 M.L.J. 634, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 801 (807), 127 I.C. 624; Veyindra v. Mayanadan, 43 Mad. 696. See also Kiernander v. Beni Madhab, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 763, 58 Cal. 598, 134 I.C. 561; Kova Mal v. Raghubir, A.I.R. 1929 All. 861, 122 I.C. 766 and Alliance Bank v. Powel, A.I.R. 1938 All. 651; Baiju Lal v. Thakur Prasad, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 7, 19 P.L.T. 781.

The provision of cl. (f) was in the nature of an exception specially applied to the case of mortgages. This exception should not be extended to a charge in perpetuity—Matlub v. Mt. Kalawati, A.I.R. 1933 All. 934 (938).

Under the present section the right of the judgment-creditor to redeem has been taken away under all circumstances. For reason see the Report of the Special Committee, cited ante. See also Subramanian v. Sinnammal, supra. An attaching creditor does not, by reason of the attachment, obtain any lien or charge on the attached property, and therefore he cannot hand on any such charge to the auction-purchaser; nor can he retain in himself the right to redeem by purchasing the property himself at such auction—Kiernander v. Benimadhab, 58 Cal. 598, 134 I.C. 561, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 763 (770), dissenting from 39 All. 536.

The rights already acquired before the Amending Act, XX of 1929 came into force were specifically saved by sec. 63 of the Act; hence the right accrued to an attaching creditor under cl. (f) of the old section is not destroyed by the Amending Act—Amardar v. Jailalsao, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 209 (210), 165 I.C. 939. In such a case the attaching decree-holder does not acquire any interest in or charge on the mortgaged property which he attaches and as such he is not a necessary party to a mortgagee's suit on the mortgage, although it is open to the attaching creditor to come into the mortgage-suit and claim redemption before the Court—sale puts an end to his attachment—Ibid, at p. 213. The attaching creditor is not entitled to redeem the mortgage after the purchases the property in execution of his own decree simply on the strength of his attachment where his purchase is subsequent to a final decree for foreclosure obtained by the mortgagee—Ibid. Where during the pendency of a suit on mortgage by a creditor the property was attached and sold by another creditor, the latter was entitled as a transferee of the mortgagor's rights under this section (before amendment) to come to Court and claim his right of redemption. If he had not done so, the mortgagee in his mortgage-suit was entitled to work out his decree unaffected by the attachment and sale—Gharbhoya v. Deodatta, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 400 (401), 172 I.C. 389.

Subrogation.

74. Any second or other subsequent mortgagee may, at any time after the amount due on the next prior mortgage has become payable, tender such amount to the next prior mortgagee, and such mortgagee is bound to accept such tender and to give a receipt for such amount; and (subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents) the subsequent mortgagee shall, on obtaining such receipt, acquire, in respect of the property, all the rights and powers of the mortgagee as such, to whom he has made such tender.

92. Any of the persons referred to in section 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee.

The right conferred by this section is called the right of subrogation, and a person acquiring the same is said to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems.

A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed, if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be so subrogated.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to confer a right of subrogation on any person unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full.

Amendment :—This section has been amended in or to give the right of subrogation to all persons who have an interest in the mortgaged property or in the right of redemption, except the mortgagor.

Thus, the present section is more comprehensive than the old section which applied only to the case of a subsequent mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage.

514A. Amended section, whether retrospective :—As to whether the amended section is retrospective there is a great divergence of judicial opinion. Generally speaking, the Madras, Rangoon, Patna and Nagpur High Courts have held that it is not retrospective, while the Allahabad, Calcutta, Bombay High Courts and the Oudh Chief Court have taken the view that the section is retrospective in effect except in proceedings pending on 1st April, 1930, on which the amending Act came into force. In the following cases it has been held that the section is not retrospective—Pichaippa v. Govindaraju, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 110; 130 I.C. 506; Jagdeo v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 127 (129), 13 Pat. 111, 153 I.C. 602; Chettyar Firm v. Kaliamma, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 423, 161 I.C. 221; Bank of Chettinad v. Maung Aye, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 306 (309, 310) (F.B.) (in this case the previous cases on the point have been reviewed); Srinivasulu v. Damodaraswami, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 779 (780), (1938) M.W.N. 708. On the other hand, in the following cases the section has been held to be retrospective in its operation where no action was pending on the 1st April, 1930—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 (597) (F.B.), I.L.R. 1937 All. 880, (1937) A.L.J. 840, 171 I.C. 158; Isap v. Umraji, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 115, 39 Bom. L.R. 1309, 174 I.C. 188; Kundan Lal v. Faquir Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 127 (128, 129) (F.B.), 174 I.C. 714; Ram Dayal v. Chakrapani, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 60 (61), 160 I.C. 933—per Sir Courtney Terrel, C.J. and Dhavle, J.; Padma Lochan v. Ajmaddin, (1938) 42 C.W.N. 1106; Munna Lal v. Chunni Lal, A.I.R. 1945 All. 239 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1945 All. 733; Harbham v. Parbat, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 43; Sham-suddin v. Haidar Ali, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 194, 49 C.W.N. 104. It is submitted with respect that the view taken in these decisions is the correct view.

Since the above observations were made by the present editor in the last edition, Thomas, C.J. and Radha Krishna J. of the Oudh Chief Court have held that the amended sec. 92 is retrospective in its operation—Krishna Gopal v. Abdul Latif, 15 Luck. 175, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 97 (101), 1939 O.W. N. 1045; Brij Bhukhan v. Bhagwan Datt, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 449 (F.B.); so also the Bombay High Court has held in Vishnu Balkrishna v. Shankareppa, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 227, 44 Bom. L.R. 415. A Full Bench of the Patna High Court has also taken the same view, Manohar Lal, J. dissenting, in Tika Sao v. Hari Lal, 19 Pat. 752, 21 P.L.T. 453, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 385 overruling Jagdeo v. Mahabir, supra. The Allahabad High Court has again held that those sections of the Act which are not dealt with in the sections enumerated in sec. 63 of the Amending Act 20 of 1929 have retrospective effect at least where no action was pending on 1st April, 1930, and sec. 92 is not one of the sections enumerated in sec. 63 and hence has retrospective effect—Chuni Lal v. Lakshmi Chand, I.L.R. 1940 All. 212, 1940 A.L.J. 234 A.I.R. 1940 All. 237. Bennett and Verma JJ. of the same High Court have also held that this section is retrospective—Mangal Sen v. Kewal Ram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 75, 187 I.C. 274. Curiously enough, the same learned Judges have held in Munna Lal v. Chatan Prakash, I.L.R. 1940 All. 79, A.I.R. 1940 All. 65, 1939 A.L.J. 1099 that the amended sec. 84 is not retrospective, although that section is not enumerated in sec. 63 mentioned above. For a general discussion of the question see Note 1A ante.

The Madras High Court has held in Ayyan Ammal v. Vellayammal, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 354 that this section does not provide for retrospective effect being given to the statutory right of subrogation conferred by this section on a redeeming mortgagor.

There is no doubt, however, that nothing in this section “renders invalid or in any way affects anything already done before 1st April, 1930, in any proceeding pending in a Court on that date”—see sec. 63 of Act XX of 1929 quoted in Note 1A, ante. See also Chunilal v. Bibubai, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 386 (388), 40 Bom L.R. 517.

Scope :—Even before the amendment of 1929 the mortgagor's right to redeem continued till the confirmation of the sale. The amendment of 1929 gives express legislative sanction to that view. It has not the effect of making any alteration in the right of redemption which was repeatedly recognized in a long line of cases—Jagannath v. Chuni Lal, I.L.R. 1940 All. 580, A.I.R. 1940 All. 416, 1940 A.L.J. 511.

The privilege conferred by this section is not confined to the first person only who redeems the prior mortgagee, and can be inherited by his successors-in-interest. Every subsequent mortgagee who pays off the previous mortgagee succeeds to the entire rights possessed by his predecessors-in-interest, and if those rights include a right of priority, he will be clothed with that right too—Mt. Ghulam Fatima v. Mt. Gopal Devi, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 269, 190 I.C. 599; Gopal Devi v. Ghulam Fatima, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 113, 45 P.L.R. 143. This section does not however refer to a mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed by the mortgagor with money which has been obtained from the mortgagee himself—Surya Narain v. Ram Tarak, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 64, 184 I.C. 825.

Where a person himself redeems a mortgage, i.e., pays the mortgage-money out of his own pocket and not merely discharges a contractual liability to make the payment, he is entitled to the right of subrogation under para 1 if he is one of the persons, other than the mortgagor enumerated in sec. 91. But where the person does not himself redeem the mortgage, i.e., does not himself pay the money out of his own pocket in excess of his contractual liability, but advances money to a mortgagor, and the money is utilized for payment of a prior mortgage, whether the money is actually paid through the hands of the mortgagor or is left for such payment in the hands of the person advancing the money and it is then paid to the prior mortgagee through the hands of that person, the latter acquires the right of subrogation under para 3 only if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that he shall be so subrogated—Vishnu Balkrishna v. Shankareppa, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 227 (229), 44 Bom. L.R. 415.

The right of subrogation conferred by this section is in no way narrow, but really wider than that conferred by the old sec. 74—Alam Ali v. Beni Charan, A.I.R. 1936 All. 33 (43) (F.B.), (1935) A.L.J. 1294, 160 I.C. 541. Section 92 applies only when some one other than the mortgagor has in fact redeemed the property—In re Upendra Nath Kar, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 336 (337).

The words “on redeeming property subject to the mortgage” in this section refers both to the payment of a mortgage out of Court and the payment of a mortgage-decree—Alam Ali v. Beni Charan, supra, at p. 42. Before the amendment of 1929 a subsequent mortgagee who paid off the money due under decree obtained on foot of a prior mortgage was entitled to claim that money by sale of the hypothecated property—Jagarnath v. Chuni Lal, supra.

The provisions of the Act regarding subrogation as was laid down in sec. 74 was not exhaustive—Punjab National Bank v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 390 (392), 163 I.C. 114. But see Thakurdwara v. Man Mohan, I.L.R. 1939 All. 24, A.I.R. 1939 All. 141 (151, 153), 1939 A.L.J. 1199 where it has been held that apart from this section there is no equitable right of subrogation.

The expression “the same rights.....may have” in the first para applies even to a case where the mortgagee has already obtained a decree. Therefore a puisne mortgagee can claim the right of subrogation by payment of a decree on a prior mortgage—Babu Lal v. Bindhyachal, A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 305, 22 Pat. 187.

Application:—The section contains a principle of justice, equity and good conscience and hence is applicable to the Punjab and the N. W. F. Province, though the Act itself is not applicable—Ganeshi Lal v. Joti Pershad, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 1; Abdul Wahab v. Muquarrab, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 27, 1939 Pesh. L.J. 35, 183 I.C. 221. If a principle is to be imported from a statute and acted upon in a Province where the statute does not apply it is not fair to pick and choose and to apply the principle denuded of all technicalities, for that would always lead to arbitrary results. The principle of subrogation as embodied in this section must be applied in the Punjab on the lines indicated therein—Sham Lal v. Chhaju Ram, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 53, 42 P.L.R. 812.

515. Subrogation:—Curiously enough, the word “subrogation” was not to be found within the four corners of the Transfer of Property Act, and has been for the first time introduced by the Amendment Act of 1929. The equitable doctrine of subrogation, however, existed in India prior to 1st April, 1930—Bank of Chettinad v. Maung Aye, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 306 (311) (F.B.); Pramatha v. Janaki, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 194 (199), 41 C.W.N. 472, 171 I.C. 747; Malireddi v. Gopala, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 36, 47 Mad. 190, 79 I.C. 592.

Secs. 74 and 75 of the Act were based upon the principle of subrogation. Where the prior mortgagee got a decree upon his mortgage and the puisne mortgagee deposited in Court the decretal amount, he was entitled to claim the right of subrogation under sec. 74—Shamsuddin v. Haidar Ali, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 194, 49 C.W.N. 104.

The essence of subrogation is that the party who pays off a mortgage, he becomes clothed with all the rights of the mortgagee. It is sometimes called an equitable assignment. The principle underlying subrogation is that the mortgage or charge is not extinguished but is kept alive and its benefit is transferred to the subrogee. It is not a new charge created by operation of law—ibid; Raghavendracharya v. Vaman, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 191, 45 Bom. L.R. 293; Nachappa v. Samiappa, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 18, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 35. Besides the right of subrogation under this section, the subrogee has a right of re-imbursement under sec 69 or sec. 70, Contract Act and it would be governed not by Art. 120 but by Art. 61 Limitation Act—Perumal v. Suppiah, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 500, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 341. A subrogee has the right to split up the mortgage and distribute the liability to different items of property in the possession of different subsequent transferees—Babu Lal v. Bendhyachal, A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 305, 22 Pat. 187.

A covenant to exclude subrogation must be with the original mortgagor or his heir. If he pays the mortgagee, the latter cannot use it as a shield against a subsequent mortgagee—Nachappa v. Samiappa, supra. A covenant to exclude subrogation must be a covenant to discharge the debt of the very mortgagee against whom subrogation is claimed. If there are two mortgages, and a subsequent transferee undertakes to pay off both, but does not pay off one of them, his covenant excludes subrogation—ibid. Where during the pendency of a suit upon a later mortgage, the mortgaged property is sold to a third person who covenants to pay off all the earlier mortgages, the fact that the purchase becomes unavailable by virtue of sec. 52 as against the plaintiff, is no ground for excluding the right of subrogation—ibid.

This section enacts the rule of subrogation which means substitution by operation of law of the rights and interests of the mortgagee in the land. According to this rule, a person interested in the discharge of an incumbrance is entitled to discharge it, and he becomes thereupon subrogated, i.e., entitled to all the remedies open to the person whom he has paid off. The foundation of the right of subrogation is the well-known equitable principle of re-imbursement embodied in sec. 69, Contract Act. But the Contract Act confers a personal right only, whereas a right of subrogation involves an equitable charge on the property. When subrogation exists the previous encumbrance paid off is not at all extinguished but is kept alive and its benefit transferred to the person who has paid off—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 (591) (F.B.), I.L.R. (1937) All. 880, (1937) A.L.J. 840, 171 I.C. 153. See also Kamlapati Devi v. Jogeshwar Dayal, 18 Pat. 342, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 375 (377), 1939 P.W.N. 8.

Under this section a person can be substituted for the prior mortgagee and will have the same rights of foreclosure or sale against the subsequent mortgagee as the prior mortgagee would have had. The limitation for this is that applicable to the original incumbrance and does not depend on the date of payment of the person subrogating—Totaram v. Harish Chandra, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 402 (406). See also Sibanand v. Jdgmoohan, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 499, 1 Pat. 780, 68 I.C. 707; Kotappa v. Raghavayya, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 631, 50 Mad. 626, 102 I.C. 316; Md. Ibrahim v. Ambika, 39 Cal. 527 (P.C.), 39 I.A. 68, 16 C.W.N. 505, 14 I.C. 496.

Before any person is entitled to the benefit of subrogation, he must pay up the mortgage-debt. The doctrine of subrogation can never be permitted where the application of it would work injustice to the rights of those having equal or superior equities—Mulchand v. Radhakisan, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 150 (153), 100 I.C. 272.

Subrogation is of two kinds—(a) legal and (b) conventional. Legal subrogation takes place when the mortgage-debt is paid off by some person who has some interest to protect, as for instance, where the puisne mortgagee satisfies a prior incumbrance; whereas conventional subrogation takes place where the person who pays off the debt has no interest to protect but he advances the money under an agreement express or implied that he would be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor. See Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh, 36 Cal. 193 (217-219) where the subject is fully explained; Sohan Lal v. Jot Singh, 16 O.C. 148, 20 I.C. 458; Kamlapati Devi v. Jogeshwar Dayal, supra at p. 379; Appala v. Bhimalingam, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 186, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 520; Shambatta v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 917, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 596; Jagdeo v. Rambilash, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 13, 28 Pat. 531. The law relating to legal subrogation is contained in para 1 of this section and the law relating to conventional subrogation in para 3—Ramgopal v. Nanakram, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 32 (33), 161 I.C. 551. The principle on which legal subrogation is founded is that the person making the payment has some interest of his own to protect and that the payment is made for the protection of that interest; he must either occupy the position as a surety of the debt or must have made the payment under an agreement with the debtor or creditor that he should receive and hold an assignment of the debt as security, or he must stand in such a relation to the mortgaged premises that his interest cannot otherwise be adequately protected. Any one who is under no legal obligation or liability to pay the debt is a stranger, and if he pays the debt, he is a mere volunteer—Bhola Nath v. Maharani, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 280 (285), 162 I.C. 362; Appala v. Bhimalingam, supra. As to the nature of subrogation see Balchand v. Ratanchand, I.L.R. 1942 Nag. 393, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 111, 1942 N.L.J. 267, 201 I.C. 472.

The right of subrogation gives full right to enforce the previous mortgage-bonds which have been redeemed and kept 'alive'. Therefore the persons claiming such right have full rights to enforce the earlier bonds even against property not covered by the bond in their favour—Tika Sao v. Hari Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 276, 19 Pat. 752 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 385 (F.B.), 21 P.L.T. 453.

Where a mortgage is spilt up, it has to be looked upon as if it were in distinct parts with different considerations assigned to different portions of the property. Consequently, if there is redemption of either part in full, then the provisions of this section are complied with so far as that part is concerned. Hence the person who acquires the right of subrogation to such a part of the mortgage is entitled under Or. 22, r. 10 C. P. Code to be substituted as decree-holder to the extent of his right—Janardan v. Madanlal, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 215, 1939 N.L.J. 369, 183 I.C. 651.

An officious or voluntary payment carries with it no right of reimbursement or of subrogation—Raj Bahadur v. Nur Singh, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh. 226, 1941 O.W.N. 113, 1941 O.L.R. 215.

Property :—The term “property” as used in this Chapter means an actual physical object and does not include mere rights relating to physical objects—Matadin v. Kazim, 13 All. 432 (F.B.).

No right of mortgagor :—The words “other than a mortgagor” show that it is only when the subsequent mortgagee or the other persons mentioned in this section redeem a prior mortgage that the question of subrogation arises; the doctrine has no application where the mortgagor himself redeems it. The mortgagor discharging a prior debt is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights and remedies of his creditor. The right is denied to the mortgagor because in discharging a prior incumbrance created by himself he merely performs his own obligation to his creditor—Narain v. Narain, 52 All. 1037, A.I.R. 1931 All. 40 (42), 1930 A.L.J. 1577; Md. Mohsen v. Md. Abid, 22 O.C. 72, 52 I.C. 159; Nisar v. Manzur, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 47, 159 I.C. 54; In re Upendra N. Kar, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 336; Mukaram v. Md. Hossain, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 42 (43), 62 Cal. 677, 161 I.C. 48. Where the person discharging a prior mortgage is one personally liable to pay it, as where the payment is made by the mortgagor himself, no question of subrogation arises. In all other cases the matter is one of intention, the rule being that where there is no express evidence such intention should be ascribed to the person paying as would show that he acted according to his interest—Srinivasulu v. Damodaraswami, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 779 (783), (1938) M.W.N. 708. The right of subrogation can be claimed only by a person who, though he is not primarily liable to discharge a debt, discharges it for his own protection, or at the request of the party ultimately bound; it cannot be claimed by the mortgagor or by any person who has assumed the payment of the mortgaged-debt without having any interest to protect—Sibananda v. Jagmohan, 1 Pat. 780 (783), A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 499, 3 P.L.T. 533, 68 I.C. 707; Subraya v. Timmana, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 508, 40 Bom. L.R. 1001. A mortgagor when he redeems the mortgage does not acquire the rights of the mortgagee, because in such a case the mortgagee-rights are extinguished and what the mortgagee retransfers to the mortgagor after redemption is the property itself and not the mortgagee-rights—Sheoaj v. Gajodhar, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 465 (F.B.), (1942) O.W.N. 607.

The term "mortgagor" in this section as amended in 1929 is not limited to the very person who effected the mortgage, but includes those persons deriving title from him by transfer of his equity—Taibai v. Wasudeorao, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 372 (374) (F.B.), 20 N.L.J. 253, 172 I.C. 142; Simla Banking and Industrial Co. Ltd. v. Luddar Mal Khushi Ram, A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 490.

The entire law regarding the rights of subrogation is now contained in secs. 91, 92, 95 and 101 as amended by Act XX of 1929. A reference to sec. 59A which, whether it is to be regarded as defining the word "mortgagor" in sec. 92 or not, has to be borne in mind in construing this group of sections—Taibai v. Wasudeorao, supra. "We are no longer concerned" observed Sulaiman, C.J. "with equitable principles, but with statutory rights and to that extent decisions on the law as it stood before the amendment in 1929 may be misleading"—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, supra, at p. 594.

As to the right of subrogation of a purchaser of the equity of redemption from a mortgagor who leaves a portion of the consideration with the purchaser for redemption of encumbrance, see Note 518A.

Difference between section 92 and section 101 :—Section 101 deals with merger. Suppose A is the mortgagor-vendor, B the first mortgagee, C the second mortgagee and D the alienee. If D acquires B's interest and then A's interest, he will be prior to C in right of B's interest and postponed to C in right of A's interest. If there be a merger of B's with A's interest, D would be postponed. Section 101 prevents merger and gives D priority. Section 92, on the other hand, is creating a right of subrogation, so that in certain circumstances D stands in B's shoes, not because he has acquired B's interest, but because out of his money B's mortgage-debt has been redeemed—Taibai v. Wasudeorao, supra, at p. 374. When a landlord purchases the holding in execution of his rent-decree, he does not redeem his own first charge but extinguishes it by sale. So he does not come under sec. 92; but sec. 101 comes into play and the landlord is entitled to set up his own charge—Shamrao v. Kanalnayan, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 316, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 912.

Where in a suit by the landlord to enforce his first charge on the holding, the mortgagee thereof pays off the charge, he becomes under secs. 92 and 100 subrogated to the rights of the original charge-holder and is entitled to two remedies. One is to sue under sec. 69 of the contract Act for recovery of the amount paid by him; and the other is to institute a suit to enforce his statutory charge under this section. In the latter case, he would get 12 years from the date when the rent became due, under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act—Shrivallabh v. Laxman, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 43, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 469.

Subrogation and contribution :—When a person interested only in a portion of the mortgaged property redeems the mortgage he gets two distinct rights : one for contribution and the other for subrogation. His suit as subrogee may be barred, but that cannot affect his suit for contribution filed in time—Ayyappan Raman v. Kunju Vakki, A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 386.

Prior mortgagee:—Where a mortgagee takes another mortgage in lieu of his prior mortgage, although the case is not strictly covered by this section, he can claim the benefit of the doctrine of subrogation and use his earlier mortgage as a shield against any claim for priority by an intermediate mortgagee. He should be presumed to have intended what was to his benefit and to have kept alive his earlier mortgage for the purpose—Pitambar v. Durga Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 90 (91), 173 I.C. 271; Kanhaiya Lal v. Gulab Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 9, 138 I.C. 206, 7 Luck. 655.

But the case is otherwise if there is no such intention, and the mere fact of paying off a subsequent mortgage by the prior mortgagee at the request of the mortgagor does not create an equitable charge in favour of the prior mortgagee—Isap v. Umedraji, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 115 (118), 39 Bom. L.R. 1309, 174 I.C. 188. See also Matadin v. Kazim, 13 All. 432 (F.B.).

The right of subrogation is acquired when the property is redeemed and not on the date of the acquisition of the right to redeem—Umed v. Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1035 (1037), (1934) A.L.J. 887, 150 I.C. 937; Drug Narain v. Ram Kishen, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 22 (24), (1937) O.W.N. 1159, 172 I.C. 301.

A prior mortgagee may be redeemed, even after the decree passed on his suit till the execution sale is confirmed or the final decree for foreclosure is made. The mortgage is not extinguished by the decree—Shamsuddin v. Haidar Ali, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 194, 49 C.W.N. 104. The puisne mortgagee satisfying the prior mortgage cannot continue the execution proceedings as representative of the decree-holder—ibid. In such a case; if the puisne mortgagee has not been made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit or the decree is not in proper form as would enable the puisne mortgagee to have his rights worked out in execution proceedings, a suit is the proper remedy for him—ibid, relying on Gopi Narayan v. Banshidhar, (1905) 27 All. 325 (P.C.), 32 I.A. 123.

Where a prior mortgagee obtaining a renewal sues the mortgagor and the puisne mortgagee, on the subsequent mortgage, the prior mortgage must apart from the renewal, be in time for the purpose of priority—Radhakishan v. Hazarilal, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 163 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 383.

Persons who are entitled to the right :—

516. Subsequent mortgagee:—A subsequent mortgagee who redeems a prior mortgage has a right to be subrogated to the position of the prior mortgagee—Sarat v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 482 (485), 37 C.W.N. 113, 145 I.C. 295; Gangaram v. Harihar, A.I.R. 1936 All. 336, 162 I.C. 902; Dhancanti v. Hargobind, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 484 (486), 3 Pat. 435, 78 I.C. 614. He is thus entitled to subrogation against an intermediate mortgagee—Kamalapati Devi v. Jogeshwar Dayal, 18 Pat. 342, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 375 (377), 1939 P.W.N. 8; see also Ibrahim Hossain v. Ambika Pershad, 39 Cal. 527 (P.C.), 39 I.A. 68, 16 C.W.N. 505 (P.C.); Ishwar Dayal v. Gyan Singh, A.I.R. 1948 All. 331 (F.B.), 1948 A.L.J. 350; Madhavan v. Chakki, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 536. A subsequent mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage stands in his shoes and is bound by a grant or disposition made by him even to a mortgagor—Amar Chand v. Sardar Singh, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 90 (95). Where a subsequent mortgagee seeks to redeem a prior mortgage, it is necessary that the prior mortgage must be subsisting at the time. If both mortgages are usufructuary, the two cannot subsist at one and the same time, and no question of redemption of the prior mortgage arises. So also, this section does not come into operation where the language of the second mortgage clearly shows that the intention of the parties was to extinguish the prior mortgage by the execution of the second—Koopmia v. Chidambaram, 19 Mad. 105 (107); or where it is clear that the first mortgage has been extinguished and satisfied out of the money raised by the second—Wilayet Hussain v. Karam Hussain, 12 O.C. 185, 3 I.C. 590. A second mortgagee's right to redeem the prior mortgage is in its nature a right to consolidate the two securities into one as against the mortgagor and to hold them together until they are redeemed, and there can be no right to consolidate when the first security ceases to exist by payment or by a Court-sale which extinguished the first mortgage—Perumal v. Kaveri, 16 Mad. 121. Where a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage and brings a suit against the mortgagor (agriculturist) to recover the money paid by him for redemption of the prior mortgage, the suit is one on the basis of a loan as defined in sec. 2 (9) U. P. Debt Redemption Act and the agriculturist mortgagor would be entitled to claim the benefits of sec. 9 of that Act, as he would have been if the prior mortgagee had himself brought a suit on his mortgage—Ishwar Dayal v. Gyan Singh A.I.R. 1948 All. 331 (F.B.), 1948 A.L.J. 350.

A subsequent mortgagee can redeem a prior mortgage without redeeming an intermediate mortgage. Thus, in a case where a property is subject to three mortgages (e.g., in 1911, 1912 and 1913) the third mortgagee (under the mortgage of 1913) can redeem the first mortgage of 1911, without redeeming the second mortgage of 1912, and can acquire the rights of the first mortgagee and he can thus insist on his being treated as first mortgagee whose mortgage must be paid off before the second mortgagee brings the mortgaged property to sale—Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, 54 All. 897 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1932 All. 489 (491); Chhote Lal v. Bansidhar, 24 A.L.J. 570, 95 I.C. 998, A.I.R. 1926 All. 653; Duber v. Ram Sahai 10 O.L.J. 305, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 56 (59), 79 I.C. 654; Rajani v. Enatali, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 313. That is, a subsequent mortgagee redeeming a first mortgage is subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee and has priority over intermediate incumbrances subsequent to the first mortgage; and this rule equally applies if the subsequent mortgagee is the same person as the first mortgagee. On principle, it makes no difference whether the money raised by the subsequent mortgage is applied in satisfaction of an earlier mortgage of a third person or in satisfaction of an earlier mortgage of the subsequent mortgagee himself—Kanhaiya Lal v. Gulab Singh, 7 Luck. 655, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 9 (12). Where a subsequent mortgagee has advanced money whereby the decree of the prior mortgagee is paid off and the intermediate mortgagee was a party to the decree, the remedy of the subsequent mortgagee to enforce his right of subrogation would be by way of suit and not by execution after substitution in the place of the original decree-holder. The cause of action for such suit arises not from the date when the right to sue on the original mortgage accrued, but from the date when the mortgage-decree was paid off—Kamlapati Devi v. Jogeshwar Dayal, supra, at p. 378 relying on Alam Ali v. Beni Charan, 58 All. 602, A.I.R. 1936 All. 33, 1935 A.L.J. 1294; see also Tika Sao v. Hari Lal, 19 Pat. 752 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 385, 21 P.L.T. 453. But where the mortgagor executes a third mortgage without disclosing the second mortgage and pays off the original mortgagee from out of the consideration received from the third mortgagee, the third mortgagee does not become subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee. No question of keeping alive the original mortgage can arise as the third mortgagee had no knowledge of the intermediate mortgage—Sham Lal v. Chhajju Ram, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 53, 42 P.L.R. 812. See in this connection Rama Charan v. Raghubir, A.I.R. 1940 All. 540, 1940 A.L.J. 806, 192 I.C. 58. Where a mortgagee from one of the three sons took possession of a house mortgaged to him under the sale in execution of his mortgage-decree after paying off a prior mortgage created by the father, it was held that the subsequent mortgagee had been subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee—Ram Doyal v. Chakrapani, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 60 (61), 160 I.C. 933.

A subsequent mortgagee when he sues for redemption of a prior mortgage acts on his own behalf as a mortgagee and not as an agent of the mortgagor. The payment made by him cannot be considered to be a payment on behalf of the mortgagor, and consequently he is entitled to subrogation—Raghunandan v. Ajodhya, 1931 A.L.J. 214, A.I.R. 1930 All. 869 (871), 129 I.C. 378; Krishnamurthy v. Satappa, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 398 (399), 56 Mad. 517, 143 I.C. 780, even where the payment is made by the subsequent mortgagee out of the consideration left with him for the purpose—Vishnu Balkrishna v. Shankareppa, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 227, 44 Bom. L.R. 415; and in such a case a registered instrument is not necessary—Abdul Hamid v. Ram Kumar, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 260 (F.B.), (1942) O.W.N. 165. But a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage at the request of the mortgagor or out of the money left in his hands for that purpose, acts as the agent of the mortgagor and is not entitled to subrogation. See the cases under heading "Mortgagor's Agent" in Note 518A, infra.

When a subsequent mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage, no question arises as to whether the payment is for the benefit of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee. All that one has to see in applying this section is whether the person claiming its benefit was a mortgagee at the time of his payment. Even where the mortgagee has agreed to purchase the mortgaged property, the payments made by the mortgagee to pay off prior mortgages can be availed of under this section—Nagayyar v. Govindayyar, 17 L.W. 14, 70 I.C. 286, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 349.

The property against which the subsequent mortgagee may enforce his right of subrogation is the property existing at the time of redemption, and not the property originally mortgaged to the prior mortgagee. Where part of the property comprised in the prior mortgage ceased to be subject to that mortgage (having been released by the prior mortgagee) at the time when the subsequent mortgagee redeemed that mortgage, the subsequent mortgagee could claim to recover his money not by sale of the entire property which existed at the date of the first mortgage, but only such property which existed at the time of his redemption. In other words, he cannot acquire any higher right than that of the prior mortgagee whom he redeems—Md. Mahmud v. Kalyan Das, 18 All. 189.

If the subsequent mortgagee redeems more property than given to him by the terms of his own mortgage-deed, he is entitled to retain possession of it in subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee redeemed by him till a proportionate amount is paid to him by those interested in the property other than that to which he is entitled under his own mortgage-deed—Raghunandan v. Ajodhya. 1931 A.L.J. 214, A.I.R. 1930 All. 869 (871), 129 I.C. 378.

Where a puisne mortgagee pays off a prior mortgage-deed, he acquires all the rights and powers of the prior mortgagee including the right to get the interest. The puisne mortgagee, like the prior mortgagee, is not debarred by the rule of damdupat from getting interest in excess of damdupat after the date fixed for payment, e.g., compound interest at the rate prescribed by the mortgage-deed—Narayan v. Nathmal, 17 N.L.R. 200, A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 155 (156), 65 I.C. 275.

A second or subsequent mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage becomes possessed of the same powers as the prior mortgagee. But it is not necessary for him to take an assignment of the rights which he acquires from the prior mortgagee, the assignment being implied by law—Bissessur v. Lala Sarnam Singh, 6 C.L.J. 134. Therefore, if a second mortgagee pays off the prior mortgage without obtaining an assignment of the mortgage or without getting a receipt for the amount paid, but in lieu thereof obtains the actual mortgage-deed, he is entitled to the benefit of this section, and has the right to sue for the amount due under the first mortgage—Narayan v. Posha, 45 Bom. 1112 (1120), 62 I. C. 477 (479), following Mahomed Ibrahim v. Ambika Pershad, 39 Cal. 527 (P.C.). A subsequent mortgagee is the representative in interest of the mortgagor only to this extent that he is entitled to redeem the previous mortgage. If the previous mortgage is not invalid or void, he cannot challenge the terms thereof on the ground that the interest is excessive or penal, as he entered into the subsequent mortgage with his eyes open. The mortgagor in such cases is entitled to certain reliefs on equitable considerations, but no such considerations prevail in favour of the subsequent mortgagee—Phulchand v. Shuganchand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 799 (800).

Where the puisne mortgagee is not made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit for sale, the former can either proceed against the mortgaged property in the hands of the purchaser in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree or against the surplus sale proceeds—Krishnaswami v. Thirumalai, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 101 (102, 104), 90 I.C. 410. Where a puisne mortgagee is not made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit, the former can redeem the prior mortgage on the basis of the mortgage and independently of the mortgage-deed—Jageswar v. Sridhar, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 589 (592).

A subsequent mortgagee whose right to enforce his mortgage has become barred by limitation may nevertheless be entitled to redeem a prior mortgage—Nathmal v. Nilkanth, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 25 (26), 34 Bom. L.R. 1519, 141 I.C. 811.

A puisne mortgagee paying off a prior mortgagee does not get any new charge in respect of that payment. The language of sec. 74 makes it clear that the second mortgagee is, by redemption of the prior mortgage, to acquire no other right than that possessed by the first mortgagee. In effect, there is deemed to be a transfer of the first mortgage to the second mortgagee. The law secures to the latter which he might have acquired by a conveyance. But there is no question in this case of creating a new charge on the property—Perianna v. Marudainayagan, 22 Mad. 332 (335).

A puisne mortgagee paying off a mortgage-debt is entitled to proceed against all the mortgagors jointly i.e., against the whole property, and not against each of the mortgagors for the proportionate share of the debt due by each of them. In this respect his position is different from that of a redeeming co-mortgagor who is entitled only to proceed against the co-mortgagors for the proportionate share of the debt due by each—Tabarak Ali v. Dalip Narain, 8 P.L.T. 255, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 117 (121), 98 I.C. 968.

The rights which the puisne mortgagee acquires upon redemption of the prior mortgage are the rights of the prior mortgagee as mortgagee, and any rights of the prior mortgagee as landlord do not pass to the puisne mortgagee; therefore all subsidiary rights created on the mortgaged property by the mortgagee, such as lease-rights, will come to an end ipso facto when the mortgage is redeemed; and a tenant continuing on the land must be treated as a trespasser thereafter, unless from the conduct of parties or otherwise a fresh tenancy arises—Alagirisami v. Akkulu Naidu, 41 M.L.J. 462, 69 I.C. 651, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1282.

The remedy provided in this section is not the only remedy open to a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage; he can also bring a suit under sec 69, Contract Act—Durga Charan v. Ambica Charan, 54 Cal. 424, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 393 (394), 45 C.L.J. 191.

The subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage is in most cases presumed to have intended to keep alive the prior mortgage. See Note 537 under sec. 101.

Payment of prior mortgage-decree :—The puisne mortgagee can redeem the prior mortgage even after a preliminary decree has been passed in a suit by the prior mortgagee against the mortgagor; and by so doing the puisne mortgagee can under this section acquire all the rights of the prior mortgagee—Gopi Narayan v. Bansidhar 27 All. 325 (332) (P.C.). See also Premasukhdas v. Peerkhan, 23 N.L.R. 86, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 21 (24) 95 I.C. 979, and Kotappa v. Raghavayya, 50 Mad. 626, 52 M.L.J. 532, 102 I.C. 316, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 631 (636); Harlal v. Lala Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 138 (141), 133 I.C. 395; Yamunabai v. Maroti, A.I.R. 1933. Nag. 163, 146 I.C. 514; Chotey Lal v. Dharajit, A.I.R. 1926 All. 744, 96 I.C. 1054. But this would not have the effect of reviving or giving vitality to a decree which by the terms of it has become discharged (by the payment made by the puisne mortgagee). In other words, the second mortgagee who discharge the prior mortgage and the decree obtained on that mortgage is not an assignee of the mortgage or of the decree, and it not entitled to work out his rights by executing the decree (under the provisions of sec. 47, C. P. Code) but has to bring a fresh suit for the purpose of obtaining a new decree—Gopi Narain v. Bansidhar, 27 All. 325 (332, 333) (P.C.), (reversing Bansidhar v. Gaya Prasad, 24 All. 179); Shib Lal v. Munni Lal, 44 All. 67 (70); Kottappa v. Raghavayya, supra; Aravamudhu v. Abiramavalli, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 353 (355), 66 M.L.J. 566, 150 I.C. 930. A distinction should be made between a prior mortgage as such and a prior mortgage-decree; if a prior mortgage is no longer alive as a mortgage but has suffered a change into a decree for sale, and cannot therefore be enforced as a mortgage by the prior mortgagee, it cannot be deemed alive as a mortgage and enforceable as such by the puisne mortgagee who has paid it off in the shape of a decree-debt. In such a case the puisne mortgagee is subrogated not to its original form as a mortgage-charge but to the decree-charge held by the prior mortgagee, i.e., the right to hold the property to sale to satisfy the decree-debt. The payment of the decree by the puisne mortgagee cannot reverse the process of conversion it has passed and revive it again as a mortgage. But the puisne mortgagee can enforce his remedy only by bringing a fresh suit, and not by executing the decree from the point at which the prior mortgagee left off. That decree has been already satisfied, and no one can execute a satisfied decree—Parvati Ammal v. Venkatarama, 47 M.L.J. 316, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 80 (82, 84), 81 I.C. 771. Where a puisne mortgagee has, in execution of a decree on his mortgage, purchased the mortgaged properties and subsequently, pending an application by the mortgagor to set aside the sale, pays off a prior mortgagee-decree-holder, he is entitled, if the sale is set aside, to enforce prior mortgage against the properties secured by it—Sibanand v. Jagmohan, 1 Pat. 780 (784), 3 P.L.T. 533, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 499, 68 I.C. 707. Where a puisne mortgagee purchases the mortgaged property in execution of the decree on a prior mortgage, the latter is extinguished. At any rate, the puisne mortgagee is subrogated to the position of the prior mortgagee whose security he might if he chose, enforce, but there is no corresponding right to redeem in the mortgagor. Rights of the puisne mortgagee-purchaser in such a case is not limited or regulated by this section—Kalipada v. Basanta, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 126 (133), 59 Cal. 117, 35 C.W.N. 877, 138 I.C. 177. A puisne mortgagee who discharges a prior mortgage under a term of the puisne mortgage has no valid claim of subrogation in respect of the prior mortgage unless there is a registered agreement to that effect—Bangaru Ammal v. M. V. Kuppuswami Chettiar, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 211.

Limitation :—The rights of the subrogated mortgagee are the rights of the original mortgagee before he brought the suit and time begins to run from the original date of the mortgage. The subrogated mortgagee-plaintiff can therefore put forward, to save limitation only, such pleas as were available to the original mortgagee and such acknowledgment as might have occurred since he acquired his right to subrogation—Halsnad v. Mahabala, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 826. See also Shamsuddin v. Haidar Ali, infra and the cases cited there. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Alam Ali v. Beni Charan, A.I.R. 1936 All. 33 (43) (F.B.), (1933) A.L.J. 1294, 160 I.C. 541 has held (Ganga Nath, J. dissenting) that the payment of a mortgage-decree confers upon the person who pays it off a statutory right which is not identical with the right of an assignee of the mortgage itself, but is an acquisition of a fresh charge enforceable within the period of limitation applicable to such a suit. Therefore, a subsequent mortgagee who pays off the decretal amount of a prior mortgage and redeems it acquires the rights of the mortgagee-decree-holder to recover his money by enforcement of the fresh charge within 12 years of redemption under Art. 132, Limitation Act. See also Munna Lal v. Chunni Lal, A.I.R. 1945 All. 239 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1945 All. 733 (overruling Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 194, 49 C.W.N. 104; Parvati v. Venkatarama, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 80, 47 M.L.J. 316; Babulal v. Bindhachal, A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 305, 22 Pat. 187. But see contra Balchand v. Ratanchand, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 111, I.L.R. 1942 Nag. 393.

A mortgagor by paying a part of the principal or interest due on a mortgage can give a fresh start to limitation, even without the consent and behind the back of a subsequent mortgagee—Munna Lal v. Chunni Lal, supra.

516A. Surety :—A surety of the mortgagor is one of the persons mentioned in section 91 as having a right to redeem the mortgaged property, and consequently he acquires the right of subrogation.

Where a person is not a surety for the mortgage debt, but the security is given by the principal debtor by way of additional security, this section does not apply—Bhushayya v. Suryanarayana, A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 195, I.L.R. 1944 Mad. 340.

517. Co-mortgagor :—"The right of a co-mortgagor or one of several joint debtors to be subrogated to the security of the creditor, so as to enable him to recover from his co-debtors by means of such securities their proportionate shares of indebtedness which has been discharged by him, rests upon the same equity as that of a surety or any other person entitled to redeem the mortgage; for each joint debtor is regarded as the principal debtor for that part of the debt which he ought to pay and as the surety for his co-debtors as to the part which ought to be discharged by them (see Ghose on Mortgage, Vol. I, p. 371, 5th Edn.)."—Report of the Special Committee.

Clause (1) of this section confers the right of subrogation on all persons other than the mortgagor to whom the right to redeem is given by sec. 91, including a co-mortgagor. Clause (3) does not detract from the right but enacts that it can be extended to a creditor who without taking an interest in the property has advanced money with which the mortgagor has been enabled to redeem the mortgage—Lal Mohan v. Govind Sahu, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 620, 188 I.C. 417. The position of a co-mortgagor who redeems the entire mortgage is that of a mortgagee and not a mere chargeholder in respect of the share of the other co-sharers—Khuda Bakhsh v. Ata Mohammad, A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 135, 44 P.L.R. 133; see also Brij Bhukhar v. Bhagwan Datt, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 449 (F.B.). The redeeming co-mortgagor stands in the position of a mortgagee to the non-redeeming mortgagor qua his share and has as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property the same rights as the mortgagee had against the mortgagor—Kishen Gopal v. Abdul Latif, 15 Luck. 175, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 97 (101), 1939 O.W.N. 1045.

Rights of redeeming co-mortgagor :—The rights of a redeeming co-mortgagor were separately provided for in the old section 95. They have now been included in the present section, which is a comprehensive section on subrogation. In section 95 it was said that the redeeming co-mortgagor had a charge on the shares of the other co-mortgagors under sec. 100, but he could not claim all the rights of the original mortgagee. Such a charge carried with it the right to bring the property to sale, but the redeeming co-mortgagor had not the right to stand upon the original security nor had a priority in respect of his charge, on the principle of subrogation—Umar Ali v. Atmatali, 58 Cal. 1167 (F.B.), 35 C.W.N. 409 (421, 422). Under the present section, the redeeming co-mortgagor had not the right to stand upon the original security nor had a priority off, and the right of subrogation has been expressly conferred on him. This view was also taken long ago in an Allahabad case—Harprasad v. Raghunandan, 31 All. 166 (169).

Where one of the co-mortgagors redeems the mortgage, equity, as embodied in the doctrine of subrogation, confers upon him a right to re-imburse himself for the amount paid in excess, he has paid over and above his own share. He stands in the mortgagor's shoes only to the extent of the aforesaid excess and not for the full amount due on the mortgage on the date of redemption—Ganishi Lal v. Joti Pershad, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 1. See also Pashupati v. Sachi, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 330, 47 C.W.N. 405. Where one co-mortgagor has redeemed the mortgage, the other co-mortgagors have to sue for redemption and not merely for possession, for it is not true that if there is no mortgage-debt to pay, there is no redemption—Raghavendracharya v. Vaman, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 191, 45 Bom.L.R. 253 ; Mehman Singh v. Mt. Prem Kaur, A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 145.

When a co-mortgagor redeems the whole mortgage, he acquires a charge which relates back to the date of the mortgage redeemed for the purpose of privity against the subsequent mortgagee, though not for limitation—Brij Bhukhan v. Bhagwan, A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 114, (1943) O.W.N. 404.

The fact that one co-mortgagor redeems the entire estate and is in possession of it, does not entitle him to hold it adversely to the other co-mortgagors, even though he had been in exclusive possession of the entire estate prior to redemption. Like a mortgagee, he is only entitled to a charge on the property—Chandbhai v. Hasanbhai, 46 Bom. 213 (215), A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 150, 64 I.C. 205. But if the mortgage is a usufructuary one, and the amount is satisfied out of the usufruct, one co-mortgagor cannot take possession of the entire property from the mortgagee, but is entitled to recover only his individual share. If, however, he gets possession of the entire property, he is then deemed to hold the shares of the others adversely to them, and not subject to a charge (for since he had to pay nothing, he cannot have any charge)—Gobardhan v. Sujan. 16 All. 254. If a purely usufructuary mortgage is redeemed by one co-mortgagor by paying the money out of his own pocket, instead of being redeemed out of the usufruct, the redeeming co-mortgagor has no doubt a charge on the property, but he cannot in enforcing the charge sell the shares of the co-mortgagors, since there is no personal covenant in the original mortgage. His only right is to retain possession until payment to him—Mamola v. Kedar, 22 I.C. 918 (Oudh). The original mortgagee under the usufructuary mortgage had no right of sale (sec. 67) and there is no reason why the redeeming co-mortgagor should be placed in a better position than the mortgagee, and be allowed to bring the property to sale.

Under the old section 95 which gave the redeeming co-mortgagor only a charge on the shares of the other co-mortgagors, it was held that he was not entitled to recover the money by a sale of those shares but could only hold the entire property in charge until he was in his turn redeemed by his co-sharers on payment of their shares of the debt. He was not in the position of a mortgagee, for as soon as he redeemed the whole mortgage, the mortgage came to an end—Ali Akbar v. Sultan-ul-mulk, 69 I.C. 653, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 129 (130). A similar view was taken in Aziz Ahmad v. Chhote Lal, 50 All. 569, 109 I.C. 38, A.I.R. 1928 All. 241 (245). His remedy was only by way of contribution and not a suit for enforcement of the mortgage—Ramachandra v. Narayanaswami, 51 Mad. 810, 55 M.L.J. 326, 112 I.C. 6, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 950 (951). These decisions are no longer correct, because the redeeming co-mortgagor is now given the same rights as the mortgagee. See Khuda Bakhsh v. Ata Mohammad, supra. A Calcutta Full Bench also expressed the opinion that the redeeming co-mortgagor had, on the strength of his charge, a right to bring the property to sale, whether the original mortgagee had such right or not (e.g., even though the original mortgagee was a mortgagee by conditional sale or a usufructuary mortgagee, who had no right to bring the property to sale)—Umar Ali v. Asmatali, 58 Cal. 1167 (F.B.), 35 C.W.N. 409 (423).

If a co-mortgagor pays the full amount of the mortgage he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. The existence of a decree on the prior encumbrance would make no difference, unless it had been drawn up in the specific form (i.e., in Form No. 6 App. D., Schd. I, C. P. Code) which would have enabled the judgment-debtor who paid off the decree to work out his rights in execution of the same decree against his co-judgment-debtors—Balchand v. Ratanchand, I.L.R. 1942 Nag. 393, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 111, 1942 N.L.J. 267, 201 I.C. 472. The payment of decree on the mortgage results in the decree being spent and becoming discharged and satisfied and the person who makes the payment does not obtain the status of a decree-holder but is subrogated to the original rights of the decree-holder as mortgagee. The co-mortgagor who redeems does not lose his priority in consequence of a decree on a subsequent mortgage having been made before the decree on the prior mortgage—Jagannath v. Abdulla, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 248, 150 I.C. 366. The combined effect of this section and sec. 95 is that while a mortgagor who pays his own debt cannot claim any subrogation against a puisne mortgagee, yet one of the several mortgagors who pays not only for himself but also for the other mortgagors is entitled to subrogation against the co-mortgagors—Nisar v. Manzur, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 47 (49), 159 I.C. 54.

Certain co-sharer mortgagors sold a portion of the property to M and out of the consideration a sum was left with M for payment of the decreed on the mortgage. M deposited this amount in Court and redeemed the mortgage. Subsequently transferees from co-sharers brought a suit for redemption of the shares of their transferors on payment of proportionate amounts; held that M was clearly in the position of a co-mortgagor. His case fell within para 1 of sec. 92 and therefore by his redemption of the mortgage he became subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee—Kundan Lal v. Faqir Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 127 (133, 134) (F.B.), 174 I.C. 714; Keshav Rao v. Kishan Lal Radhakisan, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 280. A redeeming co-mortgagor is subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee as regards his right to claim contribution from the co-mortgagors by foreclosure or sale of their shares. This equitable principle is equally applicable in the Punjab—Abdul Gaffur v. Mangat Rai, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 184 (185, 186), I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 103, 40 P.L.R. 546.

A co-mortgagor who redeems the entire mortgage and stands in the position of a mortgagee breaks the integrity of the mortgage thereby, because he may be deemed a mortgagee who has acquired the share of a mortgagor (i.e., his own share), within the meaning of sec. 60. Consequently, he cannot compel the other co-mortgagors to redeem the whole property in solidum, but he must split up his claim into a claim against each, and can only insist upon each of them to redeem only his own share of the mortgaged property. See Umar Ali v. Asmatiali, 58 Cal. 1167 (F.B.), 35 C.W.N. 409 (422). This is also evident from the words "proportion" and "his share" occurring in sec. 95. See also Ghulam Maula v. Banno, 4 O.C. 273. In this respect the position of a redeeming co-mortgagor stands different from that of a puisne mortgagee paying off a mortgage-debt. The latter is entitled to proceed against all the mortgagors jointly, and not against each of the mortgagors for the proportionate share of debt due by each of them—Tabarak Ali v. Dalip Narain, 8 P.L.T. 255, 98 I.C. 968, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 117 (121); on appeal, 9 P.L.T. 313, A.I.F. 1927 Pat. 379 (381), 103 I.C. 703.

517A. Other persons :—This section lays down that all persons who are referred to in sec. 91 can, upon redeeming the mortgaged property, claim the right of subrogation. And so, a person having an interest in the mortgaged property can, upon redemption, claim the right. Thus, where a member of a Malabar tarward paid off a mortgage of the tarward property created by a previous Karnavan, held that as he was not a mere volunteer nor even a stranger, but was a member of the tarward, and, as such having an interest in the property and a right to protect it, he was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee—Nangunni Kovillamma v. Nedungadi, 31 L.W. 165, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 860 (862). The mortgagee from a separated member of a tarwad is a person interested in a mortgage created before partition, and on redemption of the prior mortgage binding on the tarwad he becomes subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he has redeemed—Krishnan Nair v. Dakshayani Amma, (1955) 1 M.L.J. 223.

A purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption is a person entitled to redeem within the description of sec. 91, and such person on redeeming the property subject to the mortgage is entitled to a right of subrogation under sec. 92—Jhum Lal v. Sham Narayan, 13 P.L.T. 686, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 33 (34), 140 I.C. 845; also Udit Narain v. Ashrafi, 38 All.

502 (504); Ram v. Gulab, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 241, 144 I.C. 736; Gudiram v. Punamchand, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 171, 144 I.C. 326; Umed v. Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1035 (1036), (1934) A.L.J. 887, 150 I.C. 937. See Ganga v. Mt. Hardei, A.I.R. 1932 All. 32, (1931) A.L.J. 601, 133 I.C. 536. In such cases, the purchaser can only claim contribution of the proportionate amount of debt which the suit properly bears to the rest of the property—Draviam v. Ramaiya, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 390 (393), 159 I.C. 837, 68 M.L.J. 362. Where land burdened with prior and subsequent mortgages is purchased by a person for full price and free from any encumbrance and he is subsequently compelled to discharge the prior mortgage when it is disclosed to him, he is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee as against the subsequent mortgagee—Sunderlal v. Amrut Rao, I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 690, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 217 (219), 1939 N.L.J. 366 relying on Gokaldas v. Purammal, 11 I.A. 126, 10 Cal. 1035 (P.C.) and Malireddi v. Gopalakrishnayya, 51 I.A. 140, 47 Mad. 190 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 36. In such a case the transferee must show that the mortgagor in the prior mortgage was the mortgagor of the subsequent mortgage and that the properties mortgaged were the same and that the payment had been made by or on behalf of himself—Saradindu v. Jahar Lal, 46 C.W.N. 33, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 153 (164), 74 C.L.J. 61. According to the terms of a subsequent mortgage, the mortgagee was given a right to redeem a prior mortgage on payment of a certain sum out of the mortgage-money. Subsequently, the equity of redemption was transferred to another person who redeemed the prior mortgage. The subsequent mortgagee thereupon instituted a suit for possession by redemption: held, the suit did not lie and the rule of subrogation was not applicable to the case—Har Dial v. Gurditta Ram, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 201, 42 P.L.R. 139, 188 I.C. 608.

Plaintiff who had a simple money-decree against the mortgagor caused the mortgaged property to be put to sale and purchased the equity of redemption. Subsequently a second mortgagee got a decree on his mortgage and applied for final decree for sale. Plaintiff paid off the decretal amount and afterwards brought a suit on the second mortgage to recover the amount which he had paid to the mortgagees joining the second mortgagee, the mortgagor and the third mortgagee as defendants and based his claim under this section on the ground that by paying off the decree of the second mortgagee he was suborgated to the position of that mortgagee: Held, (1) the plaintiff was not entitled to bring the suit on the second mortgage as it had already been the subject of a decree; (2) the plaintiff having purchased the equity of redemption was in the position of a mortgagor within sec. 59A and was not entitled to the right of subrogation under sec. 92; (3) merely joining the original mortgagor as defendant did not satisfy the requirements of sec. 92 as none of the defendants did actually possess the equity of redemption—Piarey Lal v. Dinanath, I.L.R. 1939 All. 185, A.I.R. 1939 All. 190 (192, 193), 1939 A.L.J. 228. See in this connection Shankerrao v. Vinayak, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 307, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 806; Balkrishna v. Rangnath, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 171. But see Narayan v. Parameshwappa, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 98, 44 Bom. L.R. 20 where it has been held that in providing that "besides the mortgagor the following persons are entitled to redeem" and including among those persons such persons as derive title from the mortgagor, sec. 91 clearly distinguishes between the mortgagor and persons deriving title from the mortgagor; and in saying that any of the persons mentioned in sec. 91 other than the mortgagor are entitled to subrogation, sec. 92 obviously repeats the distinction and so provides an exception to the general rule laid down in sec. 59A: hence an auction-purchaser under a money-decree who pays off a prior mortgage is entitled to subrogation against a subsequent mortgagee.

A decree for sale does not extinguish the equity of redemption until the sale is confirmed (see the amended r. 8 of O. 34, C. P. C.). Therefore, if a person who is interested in the mortgaged property pays into Court the decretal amount before a sale is held, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee-decree-holder—Raghunath v. Krishnarao, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 196, 171 I.C. 612. So a purchaser from the judgment-debtor of property which has been actually sold in execution of a puisne mortgagee's decree can, before confirmation of the sale by reason of discharge of the prior mortgage on that property, claim to be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee as against the Court auction-purchaser—Venkatachalam v. Alagarwami, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 264, 43 M.L.W. 342, 162 I.C. 34.

An auction-purchaser also has an interest in the mortgaged property within the meaning of sec. 91 and can be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee when the former pays him off. Such auction-purchaser is entitled to claim the amount so paid even if he has notice of subsequent incumbrances—Parsotam v. Ali Haidar, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 493 (498), 171 I.C. 233. See also Mt. Dhanwanti v. Hargobind, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 484 (486), 3 Pat. 435, 78 I.C. 614; Ramamurthi v. Bangaru, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 268 (269), 148 I.C. 735; Venkatachari v. Karruppan, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 256; 150 I.C. 1126, 67 M.L.J. 91; Pichai v. Narasimha, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 471 (472), 58 M.L.J. 343, 125 I.C. 247; Natesa v. Ramalingam, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 769 (772), 46 M.L.W. 332, 173 I.C. 244; Pingali v. Kotigari, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 249, 70 I.C. 212. An auction-purchaser in execution of a prior mortgagee's decree obtained without impleading the puisne mortgagee acquires at least the right of the mortgagor who was impleaded. Hence, he has got the right to redeem the puisne mortgagee. He, in such a case occupies the double capacity of a prior mortgagee and the owner of the equity to redemption. While in this first capacity he is entitled to use the prior mortgage as a shield against the puisne mortgagee, in his second capacity he can redeem all subsequent mortgages—Abdul v. Shagun, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 321. Where A and B jointly mortgages a property to C and B's interest is purchased by D in execution of a money decree obtained by D against B and D thereafter redeems C, D will be subrogated to the rights of C with the result that A is entitled to redeem his share by paying his dues on the mortgages and expenses to D—Veeraswami Mandiri v. K. Manicka Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 27.

A person who has paid off the amount of a maintenance charge-decree becomes subrogated under this section to the rights of the decree-holder and has therefore a charge against the property—Savitribai v. Nanah Lal, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 84, 148 I.C. 815.

518. 3rd para—Payment by third person :—

This para lays down the rule of what is called conventional subrogation, which takes place when a third party, who has no interest to protect, advances money under the agreement that he would be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor. See Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika, 36 Cal. 193 (218). "Under the equitable doctrine of subrogation, one who pays a mortgage-debt under an agreement for an assignment or for a new mortgage for his own protection or for the benefit of another, acquires a right to the security held by the other"—Jones on Mortgage, sec. 874. Under the old law, the agreement could be presumed (41 All. 372; 33 Cal. 1133); under the present law, it must be express and in writing registered. "Express agreement only entitles third persons to subrogation, and not mere understanding is enough"—Jones on Mortgage, Vol. 2, § 874; Narayana v. Pechiammal, 36 Mad. 426 (433).

Subrogation means the substitution of one creditor for another. The doctrine of conventional or contractual subrogation is founded upon the principle of an agreement between a borrower and a lender that the latter shall be subrogated to the rights of the original creditor—Lala Man Mohan v. Janki Prasad, A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 23, 49 C.W.N. 195, 72 I.A. 39. Under this section, as it stood before the amendment of 1929, a mere stranger who had lent money to the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage and who was neither a surety nor interested in the property had to prove that there was an agreement between him and the debtor or creditor that he should receive and hold an assignment of the debt as security. After the amendment the right of subrogation can be claimed under para 3 only if the mortgagor has agreed by a registered instrument that he shall be so subrogated—ibid. Where there is no such registered agreement, equitable relief in the form of a charge cannot be given to the transferee—Muthuswami v. Ramaswami, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 751, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 444.

The word "mortgagor" in "A person who has advanced money to a mortgagor means the original mortgagor who was personally bound to pay and his legal heirs—Nachappa v. Samiappa, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 18, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 35. The words "A mortgagor" does not necessarily mean all the mortgagors—Shambatta v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 917, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 596. Where a clause in a partition deed provided that all debts must be paid off by one member, by a mortgage by that member to pay off the pre-partition mortgages, he can create a right of subrogation by covenant under this para—ibid. Where a person redeems a mortgage without any right and according to law he cannot have the right of subrogation, he cannot be regarded as a transferee from the mortgagee—Bhag Singh v. Mt. Santi, A.I.R. 1952 Pepsu, 74.

Paras 1 and 3 of this section are mutually exclusive; para 1 refers to a person redeeming property and para 3 to a person who advances money with which a mortgage is redeemed. Para 1 deals with subrogation arising by operation of law, while para 3 deals with subrogation by agreement—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 (595) (F.B.), I.L.R. (1937) All. 880, (1937) A.L.J. 840, 171 I.C. 153; Lakshmi v. Shankara, A.I.R. 1936 Mad 171 (174) (F.B.), 43 M.L.W. 23; Subbarayadu v. Lakshminarasamma, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 533, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 949, 1939 M.W.N. 819.

Para 3 does not cut down para 1. A lender might well have a statutory right of subrogation under para 1 as falling within the class delimited by sec. 91—Taibai v. Wasudeorao, A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 372 (376) (F.B.), 172 I.C.

142. There is nothing in this section to suggest that para 1 is subject to para 3 which is intended to apply to persons who have advanced money to redeem a mortgage without themselves having acquired any interest in the mortgaged property. So, a purchaser of the equity of redemption need not take any registered agreement since his right to subrogation would arise under para 1—Ramgopal v. Nanakram, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 32 (33), 161 I.C. 551.

The words "who has advanced to a mortgagor" in para 3 are very wide and are not restricted to a case where the person advancing money is a simple money-creditor and not a mortgagee who also is specified in sec. 91. For the purposes of this para it matters little whether the person advancing the mortgage-money has done so with or without security—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, supra at p. 595 ; Lakshmi v. Shankara, supra, at p. 172 ; Chuni Lal v. Lakshmi Chand, I.L.R. 1940 All. 212, 1940 A.L.J. 234, A.I.R. 1940 All. 237. The words in cl. (iii) "a person who has . . . redeemed" are wide enough to cover the case of a mortgagee or vendee who advances money in consideration of a mortgage or sale—Subbarayadu v. Lakshminarasamma, supra. In such a case the contract for the right of subrogation must be in writing and registered—Ibid. Where a mortgagor mortgages or sells a property for discharging a subsisting mortgage, whether the mortgagor discharges the same by receiving the money or the mortgagee or vendee discharges it by covenanting to do so retaining the consideration money for the mortgage or sale, it will in either case be a discharge by the mortgagor—Ibid, at p. 963 ; see also Vithaldas v. Tukaram, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 153, 43 Bom. L.R. 225. A puisne mortgagee who pays off a prior mortgage as part of the consideration for the puisne mortgage is using the mortgagor's money and not his own, so he acquires no right for himself by his payment—Narayan v. Parmeshwarappa, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 98, 44 Bom. L.R. 20.

Registered agreement :—By the amendment in sec. 92 the law to the effect that the intention to keep alive the prior discharged incumbrance could be presumed has been changed—Ram Het v. Pokhar, 7 Luck. 237 ; Md. Raza v. Bilquis Jehan Begum, 149 I.C. 84. Now the person who has advanced money to a mortgagor with which the mortgage has been redeemed has to prove the existence of a registered agreement of subrogation before he can claim that relief—Ibid ; Appala v. Bhimalingam, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 186, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 520 ; Musali v. Chellaperummal, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 145, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 305 ; Dasari Venkatasu v. Bandi Rami Reddi, A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 114. If a mortgagor mortgages the property for the second time without saying anything about the first mortgage but leaves money with the second mortgagee to redeem the first mortgage it cannot be inferred that there is an agreement in the deed of second mortgage that the second mortgagee would be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee—Sheodhyan Singh v. Mst. Sanichara Kuer, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1879.

The mere fact that money is borrowed and is used for the purpose of paying off a previous charge does not entitle the lender to the benefit of the discharged security. The right to the benefit depends upon the existence of an agreement between the borrower and lender in which it is provided that the subsequent lender must be substituted for the earlier creditor—Gulzari Lal v. Aziz Fatima, 41 All. 372, 50 I.C. 375 ; Ram Hait

v. Pokhar, 7 Luck. 237, 134 I.C. 1093, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 54; Bhola Nath v. Maharani, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 280 (284), 162 I.C. 362. Where a prior mortgage is redeemed partly by the mortgagor and partly by the vendees of the mortgaged property in terms of covenants in the sale-deed without any registered agreement, providing that the vendees should be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee who was paid off, the vendees as against the puisne mortgagee are not entitled to the rights of subrogation under this section—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, supra, at pp. 589, 598. A purchaser with whom is left part of the consideration of the sale for paying off a mortgage, but in whose favour there is no express agreement of subrogation in writing registered, is not entitled to claim subrogation as against a later mortgagee under this amended section—Taibai v. Wasudeorao, supra. Such is the case also with a mortgagee who advances money to the mortgagor for paying off a previous mortgage—Lakshmi v. Shankara, supra, at p. 172. Even before the amendment, it was held that where a person paying off a prior mortgage purchases a portion of the mortgaged property in consideration of the amount so paid by him, the lien acquired by such payment is extinguished and cannot be used by such purchaser as a shield against a subsequent mortgagee—Benga Srinivasa v. Ganaprakasa, 30 Mad. 67.

Punjab and N. W. F. Province :—As the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province, the technical rule requiring a registered agreement under this para will not apply there. So in these Provinces an oral agreement will be sufficient to confer a right of subrogation—Punjab National Bank v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 390 (392), 163 I.C. 114; Karam Chand v. Ram Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 665, 39 P.L.R. 899. Even an implied agreement will suffice—Gurdit v. Kalumal, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 5 (6), 167 I.C. 698; Sita Ram v. Kartar Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 416, 146 I.C. 239.

Stranger or volunteer :—The doctrine of subrogation is not applied to a mere stranger and volunteer who has paid the debt of another, without any assignment or agreement for subrogation, being under no legal obligation to make the payment, and not being compelled to do so for the preservation of any rights or properties of his own—Gurdeo v. Chandrika, 36 Cal. (219); Chama Swami v. Padalu, 31 Mad. 439 (442); Narayana v. Pechiammal, 36 Mad. 426 (434); Govinda v. Lokanatha, 40 M.L.J. 114, 62 I.C. 291 (295); Brijmohan v. Dukhan, 9 Pat. 816, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 33 (37), 130 I.C. 168; Thimmanayanin v. Damara Kumara, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 713 (727), (F.B.), 169 I.C. 872; Pengali v. Kotigari, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 249, 70 I.C. 212; Veettil v. Kuttiyi, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 308 (309), 161 I.C. 999. The principle is that the person claiming subrogation had to pay the debt under grave necessity to save himself a loss. No such necessity arises in the case of a mere stranger—Narain v. Narain, 52 All. 1037, A.I.R. 1931 All. 40 (42). The right of subrogation may extend to a stranger provided he is not a mere volunteer—Nagunni v. Nedungadi, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 860 (861), 31 M.L.W. 165; Jagdeo v. Rambilash, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 13, 28 Pat. 531. In a Calcutta case, it was broadly stated that a stranger (notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 74, Contract Act) was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to the extent of the money paid by him, if he paid off the mortgage-debt, even if he was not asked to do so by the mortgagor—Gobinda Chandra v. Parsa Nath, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 231, 89 I.C. 116, following the English case of Rutler v. Rice, (1910) 2 Ch. 277. See also Govinda v. Murugesu, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 720, 135 I.C. 529. But this view is not correct and has been disapproved of in Adari Sanyasi v. Nookalamma, 54 Mad. 708, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 592 (596) and Vellayudhan v. Nallathambi, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 541 (542). "Subrogation will arise only in those cases where the party claiming it advanced the money to pay a debt which in the event of default by the debtor he would be bound to pay or where he had some interest to protect, or where he advanced the money under an agreement, made either with the debtor or creditor, that he would be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor"—Narayana Kutti v. Pechiammal, 36 Mad. 426 (432), citing Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Georgia 31.

A purchaser of the mortgaged property who has paid off mortgages on the property, is entitled, after the sale is found to be invalid, to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee whom he has paid off. He is not a mere volunteer, because when he discharged the mortgages he did so by virtue of his claim as a purchaser and had an interest to protect—Naziruddin v. Ahmad Husain, 25 A.L.J. 20 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 109 (110), 31 C.W.N. 538, 97 I.C. 543; Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu, 31 Mad. 439 (442), 18 M.L.J. 306; Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu, 21 Mad. 143; Ammami Ammal v. Ramaswami, 37 M.L.J. 113, 51 I.C. 57 (60). But in a recent case, the Calcutta High Court has held that a person holding an invalid mortgage with the money advanced on which a prior mortgage is paid is not entitled to be subrogated to the position of such prior mortgagee—Padma Lochan v. Ajmaddin, (1938) 42 C.W.N. 1106. A distinction in some cases has, however, been made between a person in possession and one who is not in possession. Thus, a purchaser of land who, while in possession of the land pays off an encumbrance on it, is entitled, when his purchase is found invalid, to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee whom he has paid off—Mt. Nathibai v. Wailaji, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 330 (333), I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 111, 169 I.C. 675; Dwarka v. Ali Mahammad, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 397 (399), 127 I.C. 17. So, a purchaser whose sale-deed was found to be invalid redeeming a usufructuary mortgage and getting possession was held to be entitled to be paid the amount of the usufructuary mortgage before he could be ejected from the land by the prior purchaser but whose sale-deed was subsequently registered—Chotey Lal v. Sudershan, A.I.R. 1937 All. 119 (120), I.L.R. 1937 All. 208, 167 I.C. 648. But at the same time it was held in this case that the purchaser who had also discharged a simple mortgage on the property was not entitled to use such payment as a shield and resist the prior purchaser's claim for possession until he (the subsequent purchaser) has been paid the amount of the simple mortgage paid by him [relying on Bijai Saran v. Bageshwari Prasad, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 288, (1930) A.L.J. 531, 51 C.L.J. 70, 120 I.C. 650] for the simple reason that his mortgage did not entitle him to be in possession. The Madras High Court has recently held that if a person who has a title void ab initio and no other interest in the property discharges a prior mortgage, he is in the position of a mere volunteer and cannot claim to be subrogated. Mere possession also is not sufficient to support a claim of subrogation unless that possession is accompanied by some interest in the property which the person in possession is entitled to protect. This, however, may possibly be qualified if the discharge of the prior encumbrance was necessary to prevent an immediate dispossession. On the other hand, a person who holds property under a title which though voidable, is good for the time being, is entitled to claim subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee whom he has discharged—Venkatachalam v. Alagarswami, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 264 (265), 43 M.L.W. 342, 162 I.C. 34. The same High Court has, however, held that if a person under a mistaken belief that he is the mortgagor or has some other right redeems a mortgage, he would be entitled to the rights of the mortgagee by way of subrogation or a like equitable principle—Maramittath v. Kuttiyl, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 451 (453), 172 I.C. 47. Where a sale is invalid for being effected during attachment of the property (under sec. 64, C. P. C.) the vendee, if he has discharged an encumbrance thereon, is entitled to have a charge on the property—Appanna v. Yelamarti, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1082 (1083), 97 I.C. 932. Where a purchaser in good faith from a widow holding a life-estate discharges a mortgage-debt out of the consideration for the mortgage and on her death the reversioner sues for possession, credit should be given to the mortgage-amount paid by the purchaser—Baban v. Bishwanath, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 681. When at the time he discharged the mortgage he was not in the position of a purchaser but was merely contracting to purchase the mortgaged property, and consequently had no interest to protect, and then the contract fell through owing to this own default, he was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee—Pannammal v. Pichai, 52 M.L.J. 33, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 204 (206), 99 I.C. 687. So also, a purchaser cannot claim the right of subrogation, when there was no discharge of any prior mortgage to which his payment of the purchase-money could be ascribed, the prior mortgage having been already satisfied by execution sale of the property—Audinatha v. Bharathi, 30 L.W. 981, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 890 (892). A purchaser whose purchase is found to be invalid is a mere volunteer, and is not entitled to subrogation—Pichaiyappa v. Govindaraju, 33 L.W. 78, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 110 (111), 130 I.C. 506.

"Advanced" :—Where an advance to pay off a mortgage-decree was made on the express understanding that a mortgage would be executed for the amount in favour of the person advancing the money, but for some reason it was not executed; held the person advancing the money was entitled to invoke the doctrine of subrogation—Oonamalai v. Narasimha, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 161 (163), 47 M.L.W. 40; Bank of Chettinad v. Maung Aye, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 306 (F.B.). It should be noted that in both the cases the right accrued before the amendment came into force.

A lessee of a mortgaged property advanced money to the lessor to pay off the mortgagee. The loan was to be recovered out of the rent reserved. The lessor agreed that the lessee would be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. The transaction was held to be a lease and not a mortgage—Board of Revenue, Madras v. Simon and Mc Canechy Ltd., A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 508.

Presumption and onus:—In the case of a person who advances money for paying off a mortgage and takes a mortgage or sale, the principle would be that prima facie the prior mortgage is discharged, unless there is an agreement that it should be kept alive. The presumption and onus are not the same in the two classes of cases, namely, in the case where a person having an existing interest discharges a prior mortgage and a person acquiring an interest discharges a mortgage—Subbarayadu v. Lakshminarasamma, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 533, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 949 (954), 1939 M.W.N. 819. The result of the case-law in regard to the presumption and onus is stated in this case.

518A. Mortgagor's agent :—As the mortgagor himself paying off a prior debt is not entitled to subrogation (see Note 515), it is also clear that under normal conditions where the mortgagor employs an agent to clear a prior mortgage, the agent is not entitled to subrogation for the manifest reason that the agent cannot be clothed with a higher right than his principal—Narain v. Narain, 52 All. 1037, 1930 A.L.J. 1577, A.I.R. 1931 All. 40 (42). Thus, where the mortgagor sold the equity of redemption and left with the vendee a sum to be paid to a prior mortgagee, the vendee paying off the prior mortgage must be deemed to have done so as the agent of the mortgagor, and was not entitled to subrogation without a registered instrument as provided in para 3—Raj Bahadur v. Sitla Prasad, A.I.R. 1951 All. 596. Sita Ram v. Sarda Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 All. 682 (F.B.), 1950 A.L.J. 970 ; Radha Krishna v. Parshottam, A.I.R. 1953 All. 296 ; Nachappa v. Samiappa, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 18, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 35 ; Bajinath v. Murlidhar, 4 A.L.J. 349 ; Tulsi v. Radha Kishen, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 810 ; Mt. Jaidevi v. Sripal Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 129 ; Jagmohan v. Jagat Kishore, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 84, 148 I.C. 815, 36 C.W.N. 4 (7) ; Mulchanā v. Radha Kisan, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 150 (153), 100 I.C. 272. Contra Ramgopal v. Nanakram, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 32 (33), 161 I.C. 551. But where a mortgage is effected by the father and the mortgaged property is allotted to his son on partition and the son redeems the mortgage, the son can claim subrogation as the assignee of the original mortgagor—Doraiswami v. Vachani Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 601.

So also a subsequent mortgagee discharging the prior mortgage at the mortgagor's request, or out of the money left with him by the mortgagor for the purpose, does not do so as mortgagee but as agent of the mortgagor, and in such a case he cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee so paid off—Tufail v. Bilota, 27 All. 400 ; Shafiquallah v. Samiullah, 52 All. 139, A.I.R. 1929 All. 943 (946) ; Sheo Dhyani Singh v. Sunichara Kuer, A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 349.

It is in each case a question of fact whether a payment has been made by a person as a mere agent of the mortgagor or on his own account for the protection of his interest in the mortgaged property—Narain v. Narain, supra. Where the second mortgage was executed with the express purpose of discharging the prior mortgage, and money was left with the second mortgagee for that purpose, and the parties, contemplating the possibility of the money left with the mortgagee proving insufficient for the purpose, covenanted that if such a contingency arose, the mortgagors would be personally liable for it, the intention of the parties was that the prior mortgage should be extinguished. There is no question of subrogation, and the mortgagee by paying the excess amount is not entitled to claim the amount as a prior charge—Said Ahmad v. Raja Barkhandi, 8 Luck. 40, 1932 Oudh 255, 139 I.C. 64.

This doctrine of agency has, however, been repudiated by the Allahabad Full Bench in Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, 54 All. 897, A.I.R. 1932

All. 489 (491), which makes no distinction between a case where the subsequent mortgagee pays off the prior mortgage of his own accord or pays it off out of the money left in his hands by the mortgagor. But in a recent Full Bench case of the same High Court it has been held that where a subsequent mortgagee or vendee pays off a prior mortgage out of his own funds and is thus out of pocket in excess of the amount of the mortgage-money or the sale-consideration which had been fixed by the deed, he is certainly entitled to the right of subrogation. But the money with which the subsequent mortgagee or the vendee pays the first mortgage, may be the property of the mortgagor and so no subrogation should be allowed as the subsequent mortgagee or vendee in making the payment is acting only as an agent of the mortgagor—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 (594) (F.B.) I.L.R. (1937) All. 880, (1937) A.L.J. 840, 171 I.C. 153. See also Karam Chand v. Ram Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 665, 39 P.L.R. 899; Mukaram v. Md. Hossein, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 42 (43), 62 Cal. 677, 161 I.C. 48. Such a purchaser is not entitled to subrogation under para 1; but he may be so entitled under para 3 if the mortgagor by a registered instrument agreed that he should be subrogated—Bansidhar v. Karloo Mandar, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 532 (533), 19 P.L.T. 500, 176 I.C. 655.

Undertaking to pay two or more mortgages:—A later purchaser or mortgagee who undertakes to pay two prior encumbrances but pays only one, cannot use the payment as a shield against the claim of the other encumbrancer or claim priority over him—Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 715, 65 M.L.J. 390; Lakshmi v. Narayanasami, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 51 (54), 53 Mad. 188, 124 I.C. 497. But see Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, supra, where it has been held that where a purchaser undertook to pay off two or more mortgages to which the property was subject and he discharged only the prior mortgage, he must be given priority over the subsequent mortgage by being subrogated to the position of the earlier mortgagee. This view was also taken in the subsequent Madras case of Bappu v. Dhurvas, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 227 (229), 64 M.L.J. 606, 148 I.C. 311. The Madras High Court has, however, in a recent Full Bench case reiterated the proposition laid down in Abdul v. Abdul, supra, and overruled Bappu v. Dhurvas, supra. See Kakshmi v. Shankara, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 171 (172) (F.B.), 43 M.L.W. 23, dissenting from the Allahabad Full Bench case of Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, supra.

Where a subsequent purchaser of mortgaged properties pays certain decree-debts and mortgage-debts of the mortgagor, he cannot claim that only the prior mortgages were fully paid off so as to use them as a shield against subsequent mortgages. In the absence of evidence of such payments, it would be taken that all debts were paid pro tanto and he would be entitled to only such proportionate amount as would be deemed to have gone towards satisfaction of the prior mortgages and nothing more—Kantele v. Neti Venkata, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 31 (38), (1933) M.W.N. 597.

519. 4th para—Payment must be in full:—The words "mortgage has been redeemed" refer merely to the payment off of the mortgage-money and not to an extinction of the mortgagee's rights over the mortgaged property. A person mortgaged in succession three properties to one B, subsequently he executed a fourth mortgage in favour of B charging D properties. It was provided in this mortgage-deed that the mortgage would not be redeemable unless the debts on all the prior mortgages were paid. The fourth mortgage was not a comprehensive mortgage of properties of the prior three mortgages. Subsequently, the mortgagor executed a mortgage in favour of P charging all the properties in the four prior mortgages with certain other properties with the object of satisfying the debt on the four prior mortgages. It was provided in this mortgage-deed that P would be subrogated to the rights of B on payment off of debts on all or any of the prior mortgages. The mortgagor with this money actually paid to B all debts due on the first three mortgages before the right to sue on the fourth mortgage accrued to B. B brought a suit on the fourth mortgage: held that P was entitled to be subrogated to rights of B under the first three mortgages ranking in priority to the mortgage thereon of B under the terms of the present section 92, or if sec. 92 was not applicable (as the mortgage was executed in 1927), then under the pre-existing law—Janaki Nath v. Pramatha Nath, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 38, 67 I.A. 82, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 291, 44 C.W.N. 361.

A person who claims to be subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee must pay the entire amount of the incumbrance in question. Payment of a portion only of the incumbrance is not sufficient. Such a qualification of the right of subrogation applies whether the right be claimed under the statute or under the pre-existing law—Ibid. A partial payment of the debt on an earlier mortgage by a subsequent mortgagee does not give a claim for subrogation—Gurdeo v. Chandrika, 36 Cal. 193 (220, 221); Hanumanthiyan v. Meenatchi, 35 Mad. 183; Venkata Lakshminarayanan v. Venkayya, 43 M.L.J. 284, 95 I.C. 689, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 441 (442); Narain Pershad v. Narain Singh, 52 All. 1037, A.I.R. 1931 All. 40 (42); Lakhraj v. Jang Bahadur, 7 P.L.T. 22, 89 I.C. 822, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 23; Ma Lon v. Ma Nyo, 1 Rang. 714, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 204, 79 I.C. 766; Pingali v. Kotigari, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 247, 70 I.C. 212; Thimmanayanim v. Damara Kumara, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 713 (718) (F.B.), 27 M.L.W. 544, 109 I.C. 872; Nisar v. Manzur, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 245 (249), 154 I.C. 267; Birendra v. Bahuria, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 612, 13 Pat. 356; Madho Ram v. Kritya Nand, A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 96, 49 C.W.N. 75. Such partial payment would only have the effect of giving fresh life to the prior mortgage—Brijmohan v. Dukhan, 9 Pat. 816, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 33 (37), 130 I.C. 168, 11 P.L.T. 883. The person who makes the payment; cannot, by simply paying the interest as it accrues due or paying or discharging a portion of the interest which has already accrued, claim a right of subrogation. He must pay the entire amount of the incumbrance which is senior to his own—Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh, 36 Cal. 193 (220). A purchaser of the equity of redemption cannot, upon redeeming only a half share of the mortgage, claim a right to subrogation—Kanhaiya v. Ikram Fatima, 8 Luck. 103, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 268 (271). But see Charan Dass Malchand v. Smt. Tara Debi, A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 281 where it has been held that if a mortgage is split up any person redeeming an independent part in full acquires the right of subrogation. A subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to redeem the prior mortgage by simply paying the price for which the prior mortgagee may have purchased the mortgaged property at an auction-sale held in execution of the decree obtained by him on his mortgage; where he (the subsequent mortgagee) elects to redeem the prior mortgage under such circumstances, he, like the mortgagor, will not be entitled to do so save upon tender or payment of the full amount due on it—Dip Narain v. Har Singh, 19 All. 527 ; Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh, 36 Cal. 193 ; Wahidunnissa v. Gobordhan, 25 All. 388 (394) (F.B.) ; Dino Nath v. Lachmi Narayan, 25 All. 446 (453) ; Danoba v. Damodar, 16 Bom. 486 ; Phulmani v. Nagesha, 33 All. 370. But the subsequent mortgagee is entitled to subrogation if the prior mortgage has been entirely satisfied, although he has advanced only a part of the money—Rupabai v. Audimulam, 11 Mad. 345 ; Saminatha v. Krishna, 38 Mad. 548 ; Ram Sarup v. Ram Richhpal, 51 All. 920, A.I.R. 1929 All. 621, 119 I.C. 84 ; Shib Charan v. Muqaddam, A.I.R. 1936 All. 62 (63), 158 I.C. 643 ; Neelakanta v. Sankara, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 69.

If, however, a purchaser of the equity of redemption, with the consent of the prior incumbrancer, partially discharges the mortgage-debt, and the prior incumbrancer accepts the part-payment and allows the liability on the property to be discharged in part, the purchaser is entitled to stand in the shoes of the prior incumbrancer, and is entitled to claim priority over subsequent incumbrancers—Udit Narain v. Ashrafi, 38 All. 502 (504) ; Premasukhdas v. Peerkhan, 23 N.L.R. 86, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 21 (24), 95 I.C. 979. But see Mangal Sen v. Kewal Ram, A.I.R. 1940 All. 75, 187 I.C. 274 where it has been held that para 4 of this section does not make any exception in favour of a person who has been allowed by the mortgagee to redeem the mortgage in part ; hence a person so redeeming cannot claim the right of subrogation (in this case Udit Narain v. Ashrafi Lal, supra, has been held not to be good law).

To confer a right of subrogation it is necessary that a prior mortgagee must be paid in full, but it is not necessary that the person claiming to be subrogated should have paid the entire mortgage-debt himself—Padma Lochan v. Ajmaddin, 42 C.W.N. 1106. The fact that part of the redemption-money was paid by the vendee and part by the mortgagor has no bearing on the question—Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 588 (598) (F.B.), I.L.R. (1937) All. 880, (1937) A.L.J. 840, 171 I.C. 153. All that is necessary is that the mortgage dues must have been fully satisfied. For instance, if three persons A, B and C advance money with which a prior mortgage is redeemed in full, they are entitled to claim subrogation in proportion to the amounts they have respectively paid—Kamalapati Devi v. Jogeshwar Dayal, 18 Pat. 342, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 375, 1939 P.W.N. 8 ; Sinnaswami v. Rama, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 563, (1941) 1 M.L.J. 519, 1941 M.W.N. 313.

A puisne mortgagee intending to redeem a prior mortgage must pay for the advances made and expenses incurred by the prior mortgagee and which the prior mortgagee is entitled to add to his mortgage-money under sec. 72—Fulsa v. Khubchand, 1891 A.W.N. 193.

Availability of the right of subrogation is no bar to a suit for contribution—Aley v. Vappukakkaru, A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 256.

acquire any priority in respect of his original security ; and, except in the case provided for by section 79, no mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security for such subsequent advance.

"As the principle of 'tacking' is closely allied to subrogation, we propose to put section 80 as section 93."—Report of the Special Committee.

Excepting a verbal alteration in the marginal note, no other amendment has been made.

520. Principle :—This section was enacted with the object of prohibiting the English form of tacking which gave an unjust priority to the holder of a third mortgage over the holder of a second mortgage when the third mortgagee had paid off the first mortgage—Tajoo Bibi v. Bhagwan Prosad, 16 All. 295. And this section therefore expressly declares that by the mere payment of a prior mortgage, a subsequent mortgagee does not acquire for his subsequent mortgage any priority over any other mortgage—Girdhar v. Ram Autar, 8 C.W.N. 690. Thus, the owner of a house mortgaged it in 1861 to A and put him in possession and in 1873 mortgaged the same to B and in 1874 again to A to secure another sum. B, who sued the mortgagor for possession and obtained a decree and was resisted by A in execution, sued A to eject him and to obtain possession of the mortgaged property until he was paid off the amount due on his mortgage, whereupon A set up his own two mortgages, and claimed to be paid the amount due on both of them before he could be called upon to render up possession. Held, that A's right as against B was either to redeem B's intermediate mortgage, or else to hold the mortgaged property until his own first mortgage was redeemed to B, but that A could not claim to retain possession as against B until his third mortgage as well as his first was paid off, since B's mortgage was prior in date to, and therefore was to be preferred before, the third mortgage of A—Narayan v. Pandurang, 7 Bom. 526. A property was mortgaged to A, and then to B, and then again to A. A obtained two decrees on his mortgages (i.e., first and third mortgages) and the whole of the sale-proceeds realised in execution of his decrees was paid to him. B then obtained a decree on his mortgage and sued A in which he claimed that his decree should be satisfied out of the sale-proceeds before satisfying A's decree under the third mortgage. A contended that as the property had been sold in discharge of both his incumbrances, he was entitled under sec. 73, C.P. Code (1908) to the proceeds in respect of both of his decrees in priority to the second mortgagee. Held that A's contention could not prevail, for such a distribution of sale-proceeds, postponing the second mortgagee to the third, would be to defeat the intention of the legislature as expressed in sec. 73 of the C. P. Code and also in sec. 80 (93) of the Transfer of Property Act—Mithu Lal v. Kishan Lal, 12 All. 546. See also Canara Banking Corporation Ltd. v. South India Bank Ltd. (1957) 2 Mad. L.J. 502.

The words "except in the case provided for by section 79" mean except where the mortgage expresses a maximum to be secured thereby. If no maximum is fixed, the case falls under the latter part of this section and the prior mortgagee, making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, does not acquire any priority over the intermediate mortgage in respect of his security for such subsequent advance—Imperial Bank of India v. U. Rai Gyaw Thu & Co., Ltd., 51 Cal. 86 (98) (P.C.), 1 Rang. 637, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 211, 28 C.W.N. 470, 76 I.C. 910. The word "subsequent" from the context must mean subsequent to the intermediate mortgage, so in the sense of the section an advance when made after another mortgage is granted becomes a subsequent advance—Ibid.

This section is complementary to section 79—Durga Prasad v. Mario Golstaun, A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 194.

75. Every second or other subsequent mortgagee has, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure, and sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights against the prior mortgagee or mortgagees as his mortgagor has against such prior mortgagee or mortgagees, and the same rights against the subsequent mortgagees (if any) as he has against his mortgagor.

Rights of mesne mortgagee against prior and subsequent mortgagees.

94. Where a property is mortgaged for successive debts to successive mortgagees, a mesne mortgagee has the same rights against mortgagees posterior to himself as he has against the mortgagor.

Rights of mesne mortgagee.

Amendment :—This section has been redrafted by sec. 47 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

521. This section only relates to the rights of the second mortgagee as against the subsequent mortgagees, and does not define his rights as against the mortgagor, which have to be gathered from the other provisions of the Act—Kanti Ram v. Kutubuddin, 22 Cal. 33 (38, 42).

The principle of law is 'redeem up, foreclose down'; so, if there are several mortgagees, the later can always redeem the earlier, but the earlier cannot redeem the later except by consent—Chinna Pillai v. Venkatasamy, 40 Mad. 77; Premasukhdas v. Peerkhan, 23 N.L.R. 86, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 21 (23), 95 I.C. 979. Where each of two simple mortgagees files a separate suit impleading the mortgagor alone and in the auction sales following different persons became purchasers, the priority of the dates of purchase determines the priority of the title to possession —Mad. Jaman v. Akali Mudiani, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 577, 47 C.W.N. 682. A puisne mortgagee can realize his right to the jus possessendi without redeeming the prior mortgage—ibid. Where there are prior and puisne mortgages on the same property and suits are instituted by the prior and puisne mortgagees, each not impleading the other, the purchaser at the Court sale in execution of the decree obtained by the prior mortgagee cannot redeem the purchaser at the Court sale in execution of the decree obtained by the puisne mortgagee—Shanmugam Nadar v. Sivan Pilai, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 418.

95. Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession.

95. Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, * * * he shall, in enforcing his right of subrogation under section 92 against his co-mortgagors, be entitled to add to the mortgage-money recoverable from them such proportion of the expenses properly incurred in such redemption as is attributable to their share in the property.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 48 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

The words "obtains possession" have been omitted. See Note 524 below.

Retrospective effect of amendment :—Since the amended provisions of sec. 92 have retrospective effect, this section has also got retrospective operation—Brij Bhukhan v. Bhagwan Datt, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 449 (456) (F.B.). See Note 1A, ante.

This section is supplementary to sec. 92 in respect of co-mortgagors.

The old sec. 95 was applicable only when a co-mortgagor discharged the mortgage and not to cases coming under sec. 74—Shamsuddin v. Haidar Ali, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 194, 49 C.W.N. 104.

522. Principle :—The principle of this section is the principle upon which contribution is claimed by and is allowed to one co-sharer of a property against another, when the former discharges a joint debt. The effect of the old sec. 95 was not to place the person claiming to enforce the charge completely in the position of the mortgagee in such a manner that he could enforce the charge of the mortgage-deed against those mortgagors who had not borne their share in the redemption—Birendra v. Bahuria, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 612 (614), 13 Pat. 356. Under the old section 95 which was the only section containing a complete statement of the right of a redeeming co-mortgagor, such a mortgagor had merely a "charge on the shares of the other co-mortgagors for his proportion of the expenses" etc., but this was not a right of subrogation; and the old section 74, which was the only section dealing with subrogation, did not include the case of a redeeming co-mortgagor but was concerned only with the subsequent mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage.—Umar Ali v. Asmatiali, 58 Cal. 1167 (F.B.), 35 C.W.N. 409 (419), 130 I.C. 889. The old section 95 has been elaborately analysed and explained in this case.

Each and every one of the mortgagors who owns separate shares in the mortgaged property is entitled to redeem the whole estate by payment of the whole mortgage-debt, and seek contribution from the others—Narender v. Dwarka, 5 I.A. 18 (27), 3 Cal. 397 (P.C.).

The word 'mortgagor' includes persons deriving title from the mortgagor (sec. 59A); consequently, a purchaser of the equity of redemption of one of the mortgagors can redeem the whole mortgage—Dhakeswar v. Harihar, 21 C.L.J. 104, 27 I.C. 780 (783); Ramchandra v. Narayanaswami, 51 Mad. 810, 112 I.C. 6, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 950 (951); Mohan v. Kashinath, 3 N.L.R. 92. So also, one of the representatives of the original mortgagor can do so—Mamola v. Kedar Nath, 22 I.C. 918 (919) (Oudh).

When the equity of redemption vests in several persons by reason of gift of different portions to them, they must all be treated as co-mortgagors within the meaning of this section. There is nothing in sec. 59-A to support the view that if a mortgagor transfers his equity of redemption to several persons, then they cannot be co co-mortgagors—Nisar v. Manzur, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 47 (48-49), 159 I.C. 54. See also Md. Fariduddin v. Nand Ram, A.I.R. 1927 All. 626; Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 715, 65 M.L.J. 390.

The right to enforce a charge created under this section by the redemption of a mortgage by the holder of a part of the mortgaged property accrues only when the whole mortgage-debt has been paid off, and the period of limitation for a suit for enforcement of such a charge is 12 years from the date of payment of the whole debt—Birendra v. Bahuria, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 612, 13 Pat. 356.

523. Redeems :—Co-mortgagor paying money after mortgage-decree :—A charge is created under this section in favour of a co-mortgagor who redeems, and there can be redemption only as long as the mortgage subsists. Where an order absolute for sale had been passed under sec. 89 (repealed) of the T. P. Act the security as well as the mortgagor's right to redeem were both extinguished, and any payment made thereafter could not be taken as payment by way of 'redemption'; consequently no charge could be created under this section in favour of the person who made such payment—Rabnath v. Ganesh Prosad, 23 O.C. 334, 60 I.C. 213; Nawab Jahanara v. Mirza Shujauddin, 9 C.W.N. 865 (867). But a different view has been taken by the Bombay High Court. Thus, it has been held there that even if after a decree has been passed for sale, one of the co-mortgagors sells his share of the property and the purchaser pays off the entire mortgage-debt and saves the property from sale, he acquires a charge on the property in respect of so much of the money as the portions of the other co-mortgagors were reteably liable for—Danappa v. Yamnappa, 26 Bom. 379. This is also the view of the Allahabad High Court. See Ibn Husain v. Ramdai, 12

All. 110, where the mortgage was satisfied by a co-owner of the property after decree.

Where the holder of a mortgage-decree for sale assigns it to a person who acquires the interest of one of the judgment-debtors before the assignment and in execution proceedings started by him the other judgment-debtors object to the execution and challenge the assignment, the rights of the parties cannot be determined in execution proceedings, but must be left for determination in a proper suit for contribution—C. K. Bezbarua v. Golak Chandra, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 425 (427), 70 C.L.J. 143, 183 I.C. 792.

Under the present Rule 5 of Order 34, the mortgagor can redeem even after sale, and before the confirmation of the sale.

Payment need not be made in Court :—If the money is paid out of Court, and the decree-holder accepts it, and certifies the payment, the requirements of this section are fulfilled—Tukarama v. Arjuna, 54 I.C. 904 (Nag.).

Although it is possible for co-mortgagors to work out the equities as between themselves by a contribution suit where some of them are made to discharge a burden which primarily rests on others, still the Court should avoid doing anything which would unnecessarily involve such a course—Lalit Mohan v. Krishnadhan, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 166 (169), 42 C.W.N. 1170, 68 C.L.J. 139.

Redemption by payment of balance due :—A person is said to 'redeem' a mortgage, if he pays off the balance of money remaining due on the mortgage and releases the security. Therefore, a co-mortgagor is entitled to a charge under this section who pays off the balance of money due upon the mortgage and releases the property—Hira Kuer v. Palku, 3 P.L.J. 490, I.C. 479.

524. Possession not necessary :—The old section contained the words "obtains possession" which gave rise to some misunderstanding, for which the Legislature has thought fit to omit them from the present section—see Mohan Singh v. Seiva Ram, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 209 (217), 75 I.C. 579.

In other words, if the mortgagee was not in possession, the redeeming co-mortgagor need not obtain possession. See Bhagwan Das v. Hardei, 26 All. 227; Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukhan, 26 All. 407 (417). Hira Kuer v. Palku, 3 P.L.J. 490, 46 I.C. 479. Ghulam Maula v. Banno, 4 O.C. 273; Qamar Jahan v. Munney Mirza, 12 O.L.J. 313, 2 O.W.N. 413, 92 I.C. 559, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 613; Mohun v. Kashinath, 3 N.L.R. 92; Jag Mohan v. Naurang, 20 O.C. 72, 39 I.C. 186 (187). The section must be construed on the footing that in cases in which there is no question of obtaining possession, the charge is intended to follow immediately upon the redemption—Umar Ali v. Asmatiali, 58 Cal. 1167 (F.B.), 35 C.W.N. 409 (419).

Redeeming mortgagor's right of subrogation :—See Note 517 under sec. 92.

524A. Expenses properly incurred :—The poundage fee paid by the judgment-debtor for setting aside the sale of the mortgaged property is not an expense properly incurred in redeeming the mortgage—Damodarasami v. Govindarajulu, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 629 (F.B.), (1943) 1 M.L.J. 291. So also the compensation which a mortgagor has to pay to the auction-purchaser on the sale of the mortgaged property being set aside under O. 21, r. 89 C. P. Code is not an expense properly incurred—ibid.

525. Interest :—Under this section the redeeming co-mortgagor is given a charge only for the expenses properly incurred by him in redeeming the property, but it does not provide for interest on the redemption-money. It lies on the discretion of the Court to allow a reasonable interest—Gafur Iman v. Amir Isab, 49 Bom. 591, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 484 (485), 88 I.C. 658. See also Suwabai v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 256, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 668. In the Privy Council case of Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsul, 28 All. 482 (P.C.), their Lordships did not allow interest from the date of redemption, but only from the date of institution of the suit by the redeeming co-mortgagor to recover from the other co-mortgagors their share of the redemption-money, and the interest was allowed at the Court-rate (6 per cent.). No interest was allowed for the intervening period. This case has been followed by the Bombay High Court in Gafur Iman v. Amir Isab, supra.

The Calcutta High Court holds that the doctrine of subrogation is only a fiction of law, and the extent to which it would be carried in any particular case must be governed by equitable considerations, so as to attain the ends of substantial justice—Digambar v. Harendra, 14 C.W.N. 617 (623), 11 C.L.J. 226, 5 I.C. 165. In this case (p. 624), interest at the rate stipulated in the mortgage was allowed from the date of redemption up to the date when it was decreed that the redeeming mortgagor had a charge on the shares of the other co-mortgagors; and from that date up to the date of realisation, at the Court-rate. The Oudh Court holds that the rate of interest must be reasonable. The fact that the redeeming co-mortgagor had to borrow redemption-money at a high rate of interest is not a ground for charging the same rate from the other co-mortgagors—Jago v. Arjun, 49 I.C. 230 (Oudh). See also Raushan Ali v. Kali Mohan, 4 C.L.J. 79, where the Court allowed interest at 12 per cent. The limited right of subrogation created by this section must be treated as if in fact it entitles the co-mortgagor to enforce the terms of the mortgage-bond. The question of what interest should be payable to the co-mortgagor paying the mortgage-debt or what amount and from what date, is one at the discretion of the Court—Birendra v. Bahuraj, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 612 (614), 13 Pat. 356.

Mortgage by deposit of title-deeds.

96. The provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to Mortgage by deposit of title-deeds. a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds.

This section has been inserted by sec. 48 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

Anomalous Mortgages.

98. In the case of a mortgage, not being a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, a usufructuary mortgage, or an English mortgage, or a combination of the first and third, or the second and third, of such forms, the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed, and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage.

Mortgage not described in section 58, clauses (b), (c), (d) and (e).

98. In the case of an anomalous mortgage the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed, and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage.

Rights and liabilities of parties to anomalous mortgages.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 49 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

Scope :—The general recognized forms of mortgages are defined in sec. 58 ante, but parties in course of business are sometimes apt to import in particular mortgage transactions some terms which do not strictly come within any of these general forms. The terms may partly be of one form of mortgage and partly of another and this is the sort of combination which is contemplated by this section—Buttokristo v. Govindaram, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 540, 182 I.C. 132.

Where by the terms of a mortgage, the mortgagee is given the right to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property and in the alternative by realising the rent of that property from the tenants, the mortgage being a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage does not fall within the scope of sec. 98 as it was before the amendment of 1929—Ibid, at p. 542.

The rights and liabilities of parties to an anomalous mortgage are governed by sec. 98 which however does not altogether exclude the operation of other relevant provisions, provided they are not inconsistent with the contract in the deed. Thus where the mortgagee of an anomalous mortgage is obliged to pay a previous mortgage debt for obtaining possession of the mortgaged property, he has the legal right of subrogation under para 1 of sec. 92, where such a right is not excluded from the term of the contract between the parties—Jagdeo v. Rambilash, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 13, 28 Pat. 531. See also Hundaldas v. Balukhan, A.I.R. 1943 Sind 59, I.L.R. 1942 Kar. 452.

526. General principles applicable :—This section provides that the provisions in the Act relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties do not apply to an anomalous mortgage which is governed by the deed itself. But the principle of substitution of some other property for the mortgaged property being a general principle of law not provided for in the Act is not affected by this section—Ganga Prasad v. Dulari Saren, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 345 (347), 170 I.C. 134.

It has been held that the provisions of sec. 60 are imperative and the right of redemption cannot be lost even in the case of an anomalous mortgage—Chellakutti v. Veragappa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 366, 82 I.C. 809. But in a Full Bench case of the Madras High Court Wallis, C. J. and Sheshagiri Ayyar, J. were of opinion that sec. 60 does not apply in the case of an anomalous mortgage when there is a contract or local usage to the contrary—Kandula v. Padmanabhudu, 43 Mad. 589 (F.B.).

527. Rights and liabilities :—In the case of an anomalous mortgage, the rights and liabilities of the parties should be determined by the contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed. Thus, where according to the terms of an anomalous mortgage-deed, there was no provision for payment of interest after 4 years, held that interest was not claimable after that period—Sundar Dei v. Thakur Baldeo, 28 I.C. 161, 18 O.C. 10. The mortgagee may have a right to foreclose or to bring the property to sale according to the terms of the deed. If there is no provision in the deed for sale, the mortgagee has no right to bring the property to sale—Madho Rao v. Ghulam, 15 N.L.R. 134 (P.C.), 56 I.C. 717; Gajadhar v. Sibananda, 28 C.W.N. 532, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 592, 81 I.C. 768. But see Smt. Savitri Devi v. Smt. Beni Debi, A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 222 where it has been held the mortgagee is entitled to realise the mortgage money by sale even in the absence of any provision to that effect in the deed. It is only where sale is specifically prohibited that the money cannot be realised by sale. If the mortgage-deed provides both for foreclosure or for sale according to the option of the mortgagee, he can bring either a suit for foreclosure or a suit for sale; and in such a case, if he brings a suit for foreclosure, the mortgagor cannot compel him to accept a decree for sale, unless he (the mortgagor) proves by satisfactory evidence that the remedy sought for by the mortgagee is manifestly injurious to his interest—Nawab Syed v. Balak Ram, 18 I.C. 24 (Oudh). In a dakhal-rehan deed the mortgagors stated that they had taken a loan which they expressly promised to pay by a certain date. It was next stipulated that in the event of non-payment, the creditors would be put in possession of certain property as dakhal-rehandars until payment. There was a further stipulation that if the creditors, through any act done by the mortgagors or in any manner failed to get possession, they should be at liberty to realize the principal with interest from the person and properties of the mortgagors or from the rehan property in any manner they liked: held that the mortgage was of an anomalous kind and the rights and liabilities of the parties were to be determined by their contract as evidenced by the deed. As the deed created a personal liability, the assignee of the mortgagee was entitled to get a decree under Or. 34, r. 6, C. P. Code, against the mortgagor personally—Beni Madho v. Janki, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 261 (262), 169 I.C. 75.

A mortgage-deed contained the following terms: "As we have received Rs. 500, you will, in lieu of the said amount and interest, enjoy the said property for three years by virtue of Arakattu Otti on the condition that on the expiry of the said 3 years we should redeem the land without paying either principal or interest, and you will on the expiry of the said 3 years deliver possession without objection." The mortgagee obtained possession of only a portion of the land. Held that on the expiry of the three years, the mortgagee was bound to deliver possession of that portion to the mortgagor, according to the terms of the deed, and was not entitled to retain possession of that portion on the ground that possession of the whole had not been given to him. His remedy was to sue for damages for breach of contract in not giving possession of the whole of the land—Visvalinga v. Palaniappa, 21 Mad. 1 (3). A usufructuary mortgage was made for four years, and it was covenanted "that the mortgagee, will credit the profits towards the yearly interest. Should any deficiency arise, the mortgagor will pay the same from his own pocket, and the whole money, principal and interest, having been paid at the expiry of the term, the mortgaged property will be redeemed." Held that as a term was fixed in the bond, it was not a purely usufructuary mortgage, but an anomalous mortgage; and the intention of the parties was that if at the expiration of the four years the principal and interest were paid up by the mortgagor, the mortgage would be redeemed; but in the event of this not taking place either by reason of the profits having been insufficient to pay the mortgage-debt with interest or the mortgagor having failed to do so, the mortgage relations between the parties were to continue upon the same terms as theretofore—Hikmatulla v. Iman Ali, 12 All. 203 (205). If a deed purporting to create a usufructuary mortgage contains a personal covenant to pay the transaction is an anomalous mortgage entitling the mortgagee to bring a suit for sale—Ramchandra Naidu v. Hassina Bi, (1968) 1 M.L.J. 139. A deed of anomalous mortgage contained a clause that in case of default of payment the mortgage might bring a suit for sale, and in case the whole amount was not realised by the sale, he was to have a personal remedy against the mortgagor for the balance. The mortgagee brought a suit for a money-decree against the mortgagor. Held that the creditor could not rely on the personal covenant and get a simple money-decree as the covenant could be availed of only in a certain contingency (viz., the insufficiency of the sale-proceeds to discharge the whole debt) which had not arisen—Kalka v. Mathura Das, 21 O.C. 341, 50 I.C. 220 (221).

It was held in certain Madras cases that since the rights of the parties are governed by the term of the contract, any covenant agreed between the parties in a deed of anomalous mortgage must be enforced, even though it amounted to a clog on redemption—Kuttikat v. Kunhikavamma, 1918 M.W.N. 235, 43 I.C. 989; Hakeem Patte v. Sheikh Davood, 39 Mad. 1010; Kandula Venkiah v. Donga Pallaya, 43 Mad. 589 (598, 609) (F.B.), 57 I.C. 724. But this view has now been overruled by a Privy Council case. In this case, the mortgage-deed provided that the property was mortgaged for five years, that the mortgagor was to redeem at the end of the term, and that if he did not do so, the mortgagee was to have the option of taking possession for a period of twelve years. If the mortgagee took possession, the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem within 12 years. The mortgage-debt not having been paid at the end of five years, the mortgagee took possession; in the same year the mortgagor sued to redeem. The mortgagee contended that since he elected to take possession, the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem till after the expiry of twelve years. Held that even if it were an anomalous mortgage in which the rights and liabilities of the parties are determined by the agreement entered into between them, still such agreement cannot defeat the statutory right of redemption conferred by section 60. That section is unqualified in its terms and is not controlled by the provisions of sec. 98, and it lays down that a mortgagor has a right of redemption as soon as the principal money has become due. In the present case the mortgage is stated to be for five years, which means that the principal money becomes due after 5 years, and the mortgagor's right of redemption consequently accrued after the expiry of that period. This right cannot be defeated or postponed for 12 years by reason of the mortgagee taking possession. In other words, an agreement creating a clog on redemption cannot be enforced even in an anomalous mortgage—Muhammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal, 44 All. 185 (P.C.), 25 O.C. 8, 66 I.C. 853, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 17. If the suit for the sale of a property subject to a usufructuary mortgage containing also a stipulation for the sale of property is dismissed the mortgagee's right to possess is not thereby extinguished—Bharoselal v. Daryao, 1961 Jab. L.J. 1207.

Where the stipulation in the deed entails great hardship on the parties and amounts to a penalty, it will be relieved against by the Court. See Kottal Uppi v. Edavalath, 6 M.H.C.R. 258. Assuming that the Court has jurisdiction to grant relief against penalty, the Court has no jurisdiction to re-open a final decree for foreclosure for the purpose of extending the time for foreclosure on equitable grounds—Autar Singh v. Md. Ejaz Rasool, A.I.R. 1950 P.C. 88, 54 C.W.N. 313, 77 I.A. 53.

Local usage :—As instances of local usage, mention may be made of otti and kanom mortgages, which according to the custom prevailing in Malabar are not redeemable before 12 years from the date of their execution. In modern times, kanoms have acquired many of the incidents of mortgage and are recognised as anomalous mortgages—Moiduni v. Poothari, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 876 (879), 65 M.L.J. 826. See Note 348A under sec. 58.

Nothing in this section applies to the charge of a trustee on the trust-property for expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust.

shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge.

Nothing in this section applies to the charge of a trustee on the trust-property for expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust, and save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, no charge shall be enforced against any property in the hands of a person to whom such property has been transferred for consideration and without notice of the charge.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 50 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

527A. Effect of amendments :—The amendments in this section were made not for altering the law, but for making it clearer—Goswami v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 1, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 713; Rustomalli v. Aftabhuseinkhan, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 414, 45 Bom. L.R. 862; Kulandaivelu v. Sowbhagmal, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 350, (1945) 1 M.L.J. 261; Mt. Indrani v. Maharaj, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 217 (F.B.); Municipal Board v. Roop Chand, A.I.R. 1940 All. 456, I.L.R. 1940 All. 669. Even before the amendment a charge whether created by act of parties or by operation of law was not enforceable against a transferee for consideration without notice—Rustomalli v. Aftabhuseinkhan, supra. See also Bapurao v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 117, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 802.

Amendment is retrospective:—As this section is not referred to in sec 63 of Act XX of 1929, the amendment made herein is retrospective—Indra Narain v. Md. Ismail, I.L.R. 1939 All. 885, (1939) A.L.J. 849, A.I.R. 1939 All 687 (688) per Bennet and Verma, JJ.; Barhu v. Jasoda, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 426, 24 Pat. 260; Sheo Narain v. Lakhan, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 434, 24 Pat. 345 relying on Tika Sao v. Hari Lal, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 385 (F.B.), 19 Pat. 752. See Note 1A, ante.

Scope :—This section, as amended, applies to transfers by auction-sale in execution of decrees—Ibid. For a contrary view see Surayya v. Venkataramanamma, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 831, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 701, 1940 M.W.N. 341. This section read with O. 34 r. 14 C. P. Code does not apply where a decree for future maintenance says that the maintenance will be a first charge upon certain properties as an additional safeguard to the decree-holder—Sheonandan v. Asrafi Kuer, A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 216, 12 B.R. 333. The first charge referred to in sec. 65 Bengal Tenancy Act is not a charge within this section—Dirpal v. Karamchand, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 9.

A charge may be created on property which will come into existence on a future date, and it may be enforced then and will have priority over a charge on that property created after that date—Alkash Ali v. Nath Bank,

A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 56, I.L.R. (1951) 3 Ass. 1. A charge already created will continue to subsist so long as it is not extinguished—Baraha Devaswom v. Ummer Sait, A.I.R. 1951 Tr.-Coch. 17.

In view of the preamble, the Act cannot be regarded as exhaustive when it deals with allied topics like charges which are foreign to its purpose—Ghasiram v. Kundanbai, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 163 (166), 1940 N.L.J. 1.

The first part of this section deals with substantive rights and the second with the manner in which they are to be enforced. The latter portion does not govern the former: hence an agreement which clearly falls within the definition of charge cannot be invalidated altogether simply because it contains provisions which offend against the procedure law as laid down in the later portion of the section—Renukabai v. Bheosan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132, 1939 N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33.

"Act of parties". "Operation of law" :—An act of party is an expression of the will or intention of that party directed to the creation, transfer or extinction of a right. An act of law on the other hand means the creation, transfer or extinction of a right by operation of the law itself, independent of any consent on the part of the party affected. Consequently, decrees are not outside the expression "operation of law"—Bapurao v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 117, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 802.

528. Mortgage and charge distinguished :—(1) A mortgage is a transfer of interest in a specific immoveable property but a charge is not. This distinction has been fully set out in Note 327 under sec. 58. See also Bapurao v. Narayan, supra.

(2) A charge may be created by act of parties or by operation of law; but a mortgage can be created only by act of parties.

(3) A simple mortgage carries a personal liability, unless excluded by express contract. But the same rule does not apply to a charge; in fact the rule is opposite, because by the definition of a charge no personal liability is created. But where a charge is the result of a contract, there may be a personal remedy. Every case must depend upon its own facts—Raghukul v. Pitam, 52 All. 901, A.I.R. 1931 All. 99 (100), 130 I.C. 198; Balasubramania v. Sivaguru, 21 M.L.J. 562, 11 I.C. 629 (632); Rama- brahman v. Venkatanarasu, 23 M.L.J. 131, 16 I.C. 209 (210). See Note 534 post.

(4) A power to bring the mortgaged property to sale is given in a simple mortgage either expressly or by implication; but a charge does not contain any words to that effect—Balasubramania v. Sivaguru, (supra). If the date is specified, the property is specified, there is a covenant to pay and there are words which indicate that the property is to be sold in case the debt is not paid, then the bond should be treated as creating a mortgage and not mere charge—Narayanasamy v. Ramasamy, 12 L.W. 674, 60 I.C. 611 (613). But like a simple mortgage a charge-holder has the right to bring the property to sale.

(5) A charge created by operation of law (e.g., a charge created by a decree) does not require the formalities (e.g., registration) prescribed by sec. 59 for a mortgage—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 35 Cal. 837 (841), Maina v.

Bachchi, 28 All. 655 (660). (But a charge created by act of parties requires registration—Maina v. Bachchi, 28 All. 655, at p. 659).

(6) As regards the relief granted, there is now no distinction between a charge and a simple mortgage.

(7) In the case of a charge the property need not be specific. A charge differs from a mortgage not only in form but in substance. For instance a plea of purchase for value without notice may be good against a charge, but not against a mortgage—Bapurao v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 117, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 802.

A charge in India cannot usefully be compared with a charge, legal or equitable, in England, because in India such a charge is defined by statute—Dgu Bhaitoprasad v. Jugal Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 102, 1940 N.L.J. 651.

A charge is not exactly identical with a mortgage. One obvious distinction is that a mortgage is for a fixed term whereas charge may be in perpetuity. In the case of a mortgage it can be ultimately redeemed, whereas a charge in perpetuity cannot be redeemed at all—Matlub v. Mt. Kalawati, A.I.R. 1933 All. 934. Jnanendra v. Sashi Mukhi, 44 C.W.N. 240, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 60, 186 I.C. 833. In the case of a recurring charge even although the charged property might be sold in execution of a decree for arrears payable in respect of the sum charged, the liability in respect of future payments would ordinarily remain after the sale, and as a charge is attached to the property, the auction-purchaser would ordinarily get the purchased property subject to the charge—Janendra v. Sashi Mukhi, supra.

The substantial distinction between a mortgage and a charge lies in the fact that while in the case of a mortgage there is the transfer of the interest in the immoveable property, there is no such transfer of interest in the case of a charge which merely secures payment of the money against specific property—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 35 Cal. 837 (841); Siva Prasad v. Beni Madhab, 1 Pat. 387 (392), A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 529, 70 I.C. 24; Royzuddi v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985; Nathan v. Durga, 52 All. 985, A.I.R. 1931 All. 62 (64), 130 I.C. 489; Narain v. Murli Dhar, 6 O.W.N. 903, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 539 (541), 121 I.C. 81; Akshoy v. Corporation of Calcutta, 42 Cal. 625; Sharif Ahmad v. Hunter, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 35 (42) (F.B.), 166 I.C. 477; Sikandar Ara v. Hasan Ara, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 196, 165 I.C. 70; U. P. Government v. Manmohan, A.I.R. 1941 All. 345 (F.B.).

A charge is in the nature of a mortgage and the charge-holder is entitled to recover the amount due to him from whatever portion of the property he chooses. The question how far each of the owners of the property burdened with the charge is liable, is a question of contribution and does not concern the charge-holder—Parshadi Lal v. Brij Mohan, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 52 (54), 11 Luck. 575, 159 I.C. 117.

Whether a transaction creates a charge or not is to be gathered from the intention of the parties as expressed in the contract—Mohini v. Purnashashi, 55 C.L.J. 198; Venkata v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140 (145), 54 Mad. 163, 135 I.C. 17; Jeut Koeri v. Mathura Koeri, A.I.R. 1926 All. 171, 24 A.L.J. 125, 90 I.C. 787.

There is no difference in principle between a charge created by a decree and one created by contract; a charge in either case creates no interest in the property, and it is in this respect that it differs from a mortgage—Mt. Indrani v. Maharaj Narain, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 217, 166 I.C. 662 (F.B.).

A charge created for the payment of a legacy or an annuity or maintenance-money by a will or trust-deed is easily distinguishable from a mortgage—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 35 Cal. 837 (842).

The 'charge' referred to in sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not such a charge as that defined by sec. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, and does not require to be enforced in the same manner. Thus, a landlord who had got a decree for arrears of rent of an under-tenure was not restricted to executing the decree by sale of the under-tenure in the first instance, but could execute it in the ordinary manner against the judgment-debtor's person or other property, moveable or immoveable—Fotick v. Foley, 15 Cal. 492; Royzuddin v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985.

Charge and lien distinguished :—(1) The main distinction between the two terms is that a 'charge' may be created by act of parties or by operation of law, whereas a 'lien' can arise only by operation of law. "A lien answering to the tacita hypotheca of the Civil Law, is a right conferred by law, and not by contract, upon one man to retain possession of or have a charge upon property real or personal belonging to another, until certain demands are satisfied. But in some works the word 'lien' is used to include not only lien arising by operation of law, but also charges or hypothecations arising out of contract; as where one agrees to give another a 'lien' on property."—Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Ed., p. 2.

(2) A "charge" in strictness not only empowers its possessor in any case to hold the property charged, if in his possession, but also gives him the right to come into Court and sue actively for the satisfaction of his claim. A "lien" strictly is neither a jus in rem nor a jus ad rem, but is simply a right to possess and retain property until some charge attaching to it is paid or discharged. Story's Equity Jurisprudence, § 506, cited in Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram, 13 All. 28.

(3) A charge is confined to immoveable property but a lien may be had in respect of moveable also.

The possession of a mortgagee who has constructive notice of a charge on the property mortgaged resembles that of a trustee under sec. 91, Trustees Act II of 1882. Hence he is as much bound to fulfil the obligation which attaches to the property mortgaged as the mortgagor himself, there being an equitable lien under the law—Renukabei v. Bheosan Hapsaji A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132 (134), 1939 N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33.

529. Requisites of a charge by act of parties :—A document creating a charge on immoveable property must be a document that creates such charge immediately on the execution, without operating as a charge at some future time. When the Legislature speaks of a charge under this section, it speaks of something which operates as a charge upon the land immediately as it is executed and not as a mere possibility of a charge—Madho v. Sidh Binaik, 14 Cal. 687; Harjas Rai v. Naurang, 3 A.L.J. 200; Abdul Samad v. Municipal Committee, 67 I.C. 939 (Lah.). A charge cannot be created on a future contingency. An ekrarnama which does not say that the properties mentioned therein remain liable for the allowance from the date of execution of the document, but only says that if the allowance remains in arrear in future the properties may be sold for realisation of the same, cannot be said to create a charge—Mohini v. Purna Sashi, 36 C.W.N. 153, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 451, 138 I.C. 24; Rajaram v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 209 (210), 91 I.C. 507; but see Kesari v. Tansukh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 765 (767), 153 I.C. 1064 and Harnam v. Md. Akbar, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 76 (78), 170 I.C. 136, where it has been held that a charge can be created for the discharge of a contingent liability. See also Kabul Chand v. Badri Das, A.I.R. 1938 All. 22 (25), I.L.R. (1938) All. 63, 173 I.C. 130 and the heading “floating charge” under Note 530. Where a document, after reciting the receipt of a loan and the time for repayment, continued: “If I do not pay the money according to the stipulation, then I declare in writing that I shall lose my right to the said land. If I do not pay the money according to the promise then the aforesaid Misser shall take possession of the land,” held that the document did not create either a mortgage or a charge. All that it did create was the mere possibility of a charge—Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik, 14 Cal. 687. Similarly, where a sale-deed contained a covenant to the following effect: “If, in future, any person appears as a claimant of the property sold and makes a claim, in consequence of which there is an injury to the property sold, or we do not give possession, then the purchaser may recover the money from our person or the property sold or any other property,” it was held that the covenant did not create a charge in favour of the purchaser—Harjas Rai v. Naurang, 3 A.L.J. 220. But the Madras High Court holds that an instrument, by which a liability not existent in praesenti but which will arise, if at all, in future is secured, may create a present charge within the meaning of this section. Thus, where in a partition deed between the members of a joint family, it was provided that if owing to the default of two of the dividing co-parceners the debts which they had undertaken to pay should have to be paid by the others, then the persons who paid should recoup themselves out of the properties allotted to the defaulting parties, held that it created a present charge within the meaning of this section—Imbichi v. Achampat Avupaya, 33 M.L.J. 58, 39 I.C. 867. A valid charge can be created on the happening of a condition, where the condition itself is first stipulated, and the condition happens afterwards—Balasubramania v. Sivaguru, 21 M.L.J. 562, 11 I.C. 629 (632). See also Cooling v. Saravana, 12 Mad. 69.

In a document creating a charge the form of words used is immaterial. Where from the circumstances of a transaction, the document shows an intention to make the land as security for the payment of the money mentioned therein, the document creates a charge—Janardan v. Anant, 32 Bom. 386 (390); Madan Lal v. Ghasiram, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 254, 30 Pat. 613; Gangamoni v. Kumud, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 478. Whether a document creates a charge or not, must depend upon the construction to be placed on the document. To create a charge, it is not necessary to employ any technical terms, where the intention of the parties was to indicate in unambiguous language that definite fund should be employed for the discharge of a particular debt or claim, and there is no ambiguity either as to the amount of the debt or the amount of the fund out of which the debt has to be satisfied, the transaction amounts to a charge—Nathan v. Durga, 52 All. 985, A.I.R. 1931 All. 62; Maina v. Bachchi, 28 All. 655 (658); Narain v. Murli Dhar, 6 O.W.N. 903, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 539 (540), 121 I.C. 81; Seth Chhaganlal Madhavji v. Bai Memunabai Amadmiya, A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 86.

A charge is created if the language is definite though wide. In construing words describing property, a distinction should be drawn between wideness of language and vagueness or indefiniteness of language. Where in a partition-deed it was stipulated that one of the parties should discharge a certain debt, and, in default, it was provided that, if either of the parties should fail to observe any of the provisions of the deed, the party in default should pay to the other party, who should have sustained loss, twice the amount from their properties; held that the word "properties" referred to the properties mentioned in the schedules to the deed, and consequently there was no indefiniteness. The words were sufficiently apt to create a charge—Manickam v. Audinarayana, 34 Mad. 47, 5 I.C. 917. Where a bond runs thus: "To secure this money, I pledge voluntarily and willingly my wealth and property in favour of the said banker. Whatever property, etc., belonging to me be found by the said banker, should be available to him," held that the words were sufficiently specific and certain to include all the property of the obligor—Ramsidh v. Balgobind, 9 All. 158. But a promise by the debtor to pay out of his property indefinitely, or an indefinite order for the satisfaction of a decree out of the assets of a deceased person in whosoever hands they may be found, does not create any charge on any specific property—Bheri Dorayya v. Moddipatu, 3 Mad. 35. So also, a bond which provides for the realisation by the creditor of the principal and interest "out of my moveable and immoveable property, my own milk" is too vague to create a mortgage or a charge on any definite estate—Collector v. Beti Maharani, 14 All. 162. But where an ekrarnama provided that in the event of the executant not paying the maintenance the obligee was at liberty to proceed against the properties relinquished by her, and in case she was unable to realise the arrears from those properties she might have recourse to the other properties of the obligor, but no particular or specific property was mentioned as liable for the claim, the deed could not be construed as creating a charge—Mohini v. Purna Sashi, 36 C.W.N. 153, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 451, 138 I.C. 24.

In order to create a charge, it is necessary that the property should be made security (i.e., sufficient security) for the payment of money. Thus, during the pendency of an appeal, the appellant offered, as security for stay of execution of the decree against him, a property which was worth Rs. 4,000. The amount of the decree and costs came up to Rs. 6,000. Held that the respondent decree-holder did not have a charge on the property for his judgment-debt, as the property was not a sufficient security for the payment of the decretal amount—Samasundaram v. Nachiappa, 2 Rang. 429 (435), A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 55, 84 I.C. 302.

A charge must be created in favour of a particular person specifically named. A security-bond for refund of sale-proceeds in case of a reversal of decree in appellate Court does not amount to a charge, because the undertaking is given to the Court, but the Court is not a judicial person, and it can neither sue nor take the property nor assign it—Mehdi Ali v. Chunni Lal, 1929 A.L.J. 902, A.I.R. 1929 All. 834 (836), 119 I.C. 81; see also Raj Raghubir v. Jai Indra, 46 I.A. 228, 42 All. 158; Akshoy Zamindary v. Ram Nath, 40 C.W.N. 1281.

Writing and Registration:—A charge can be created without any written instrument at all, and even if it is in writing, it need not be registered—Parbhu Dayal v. Babban, 1 O.L.J. 43, 23 I.C. 867 (869). But the Allahabad High Court is of opinion that the provisions as to registration contained in the Registration Act and Transfer of Property Act apply to charges (when created by act of parties) just as much as to mortgages—Maina v. Bachchi, 28 All. 655 (659); Krishna Deva Vargara v. Official Liquidator, A.I.R. 1962 All. 101; Ilahi Bux v. Jamila Bai, A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 143. These observations are however obiter. The law in this respect is thus stated by Sir Rash Behary Ghose: "It is worthy of notice that a charge may be created orally, although if it is created by an instrument in writing, it must be registered, unless made by a will or the amount secured is less than one hundred rupees"—Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 157. See also Gour's Law of Transfer, 6th Edn., p. 1400, § 2444. It has also been held to be so in the case of Kuppuswamy v. Rasappa, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 865 (867), 44 M.L.W. 438. See also Amratlal v. Keshavlal, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 495 (496), 28 Bom.L.R. 939, 98 I.C. 696; Bapurao v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 117, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 802. Recently the Madras High Court has however held that the words "so far as may be" in this section have not the effect of taking sec. 59 out of its purview. Unless given by a statute a charge on immoveable property can only be created by a registered instrument executed by the person creating the charge and attested by at least two witnesses—Shiva Rao v. Sanmughasundaraswami, I.L.R. 1940 Mad. 306, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 140, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 922. Thus, where debentures of Rs. 50 each have been issued by a company, the loan being on the security of specified immoveable property, the debentures are invalid, if not registered—Viswanadhan v. M. S. Menon, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 199, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 202 (203), (1939) 1 M.L.J. 185.

In an earlier Madras case it was held that the special provisions of the T. P. Act relating to the attestation of mortgages do not apply to a charge, and even if it is attested, the provisions of the Evidence Act relating to the method of proof of mortgages, are not applicable thereto—Ramaśwami v. Kuppuswami, 14 L.W. 96, 66 I.C. 554, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 514. But see H. Venkata Sastri v. Rahilna Bi, A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 111 (F.B.) where it has been held that a charge created by act of parties attracts sec. 100, that such a charge must be attested by two witnesses and that the Registering officer and identifying witnesses cannot be regarded as attesting witnesses.

530. Charge by act of parties—Instances:—In a suit for recovery of money due on baki khata accounts, a compromise was come to and a petition was filed requiring the defendants to pay a certain sum of money together with interest by instalments to the plaintiff, and further declaring that the immoveable properties specified therein shall be deemed to be hypothecated for the realisation of the money. Held that the parties intended to create a charge—Govinda Chandra v. Dwarka Nath, 35 Cal. 837 (844), 12 C.W.N. 849. Where a document provided that the amount was to be paid in easy instalments and stipulated that the debtor would not alienate a specified money until the satisfaction of the debt, held that the property was made security for the payment of the debt, as the stipulation intended to preserve the property intact so as to be available for realisation of the amount. Consequently, a charge was created on the property—Narain v. Murli Dhar, 6 O.W.N. 903, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 539 (540), 121 I.C. 81. Jawahir v. Indomati, 36 All. 201 (per Richards, C.J.); Royzuddi v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985. Defendants borrowed money from the plaintiff for starting a factory. An agreement was entered into which provided that in certain events the properties of the factory would be liable for certain moneys and that in certain other contingencies the lender would be at liberty to recover a certain amount from the machinery of the factory or from the borrowers. A promissory note was also passed in favour of the plaintiff. Held that the agreement amounted to an equitable charge on the property (factory)—Amratlal v. Keshavlal, 28 Bom.L.R. 939, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 495, 98 I.C. 606. Where a mortgagee, after executing a mortgage for a village executed a further document in which he recited, "I shall first pay off this debt, including principal and interest. and thereafter I can redeem the mortgaged village, having paid up the mortgage-money. Without the payment of this debt, I cannot redeem the mortgaged village." Held that the intention of the executant was that the debt created by this document was a further charge on the village—Aditya v. Ram Ratan, 5 5Luck. 365 (P.C.), 57 I.A. 173, 34 C.W.N. 625 (627), 123 I.C. 191, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 176, 59 M.L.J. 342, 28 A.L.J. 646; Janardan v. Anant, 32 Bom. 386 (390). By a document one J admitted liability in respect of which he undertook to execute a charge-bond over a specific share and rights in a village together with the sir land. J further had undertaken to get sanction for the transfer of sir and not to assign certain property until the above were carried out: Held that the last undertaking was to segregate the property so that it would be answerable in the hands of J should he fail to give the charge-bond, and that made the property a security for the payment of money, and a charge was thus created by the deed—Dau Bhairoprasad v. Jugal Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 102, 1940 N.L.J. 651. A document stating "I have willingly fixed an annual allowance of Rs. 100 in cash in perpetuity out of the profits of the said village for my eldest brother" creates a valid charge—Kanhai Lal v. Muhammad Hussain, 5 All. 11. A will devising immoveable properties and directing the devisee to pay certain debts of the testator from these properties creates a charge on them in respect of those debts—Girish Chunder v. Anundamoyi, 15 Cal. 66 (P.C.). An agreement called a sanad and attested by witnesses, by which a Hindu agrees to pay to his sister, and after her death, to her daughter, a fixed sum every three years out of the proceeds of an estate inherited by him from his maternal grandmother, creates a valid charge on the produce of the estate, and the heir of the grantor takes it subject to this charge—Chalamanna v. Subbama, 7 Mad. 23. Similarly, where an allowance had been enjoyed for more than three quarters of a century and had been received during all that time out of certain lands, with the acquiescence of the successive owners thereof, it implied a valid grant of the allowance in perpetuity and that it was charged on those lands—Manavikrama v. Gopalan, 30 Mad. 203. Where P, a partner, under a consent decree in a suit for divorce, agrees to pay his unmarried daughter Rs. 250 per month and thereafter there is a further agreement between P, his daughter and the other partners that the said sum is to be paid out of the remuneration and profits payable to P from the firm a charge is created in favour of the daughter on the remuneration and profits payable to P—Commissioner of Income-tax v. C. N. Patuck, (1969) 1 I.T.J. 14.

Where by a jaminnama a share of A's pulni interest is made security for the payment of money to B in respect of the dar-patni rent, it creates a charge within the meaning of this section—Naresh v. Dharendra, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 323, 54 C.W.N. 601. Where a person agrees to receive a lump-sum in lieu of his share in the income of a village, a charge is created on the income of the village in respect of that sum—Rustomalli v. Aftabhusein, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 414, 45 Bom.L.R. 862. Where an agreement provided that at the time of redemption of a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagor should pay on adjustment a sum of Rs. 1000 with interest which the mortgagee had to spend for obtaining possession of the mortgaged property; the agreement created a further charge on the mortgaged property—Sheobachan v. Madho Saran, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 73. A document by which liability will arise, if at all, in future, may create a present charge within this section—Crowther v. Jamanabharanam, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 344. But where in a partition deed direction was given that certain items of property should be converted into cash and the same to be utilized for discharging certain debts, it was held that no charge on the property directed to be sold was intended—Velayudha v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 62.

Where in a usufructuary mortgage-bond it was provided: "In case the creditor is dispossessed in any way, he shall realize his dues from my one anna share in Mouza Dharwali"; it was held that this was not a mere possibility of a charge: it was a present charge on existing property—Murat v. Pheku, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 587 (588), 7 Pat. 584, 110 I.C. 526. Where on a partition among brothers, a mortgage-debt due by the family is apportioned and there is a covenant by which a defaulting member's share will be liable to pay any excess amount paid by another member, a charge is created over the property of the former for such amount paid by the latter—Abdul v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 715, 65 M.L.J. 390. A lease providing that the lessee shall be personally liable for payment of the rent and that certain specified properties shall be regarded as security for the payment and shall not be transferred by the lessee while the rent remains unpaid does not create a mortgage but merely a charge—Shiva Prasad v. Beni Madhab, 1 Pat. 387. When the intention of the parties is to create a liability in perpetuity not capable of being relieved absolutely at any time, the transaction cannot be a mortgage. An agreement to pay maintenance allowance to a person and to continue to pay to his descendants from generation to generation making it charge over property creates a charge and not a mortgage—Marlub v. Kalawati, A.I.R. 1933 All. 934 (937). An agreement which provides that in default of certain payment for maintenance by one party to the other, the latter will be at liberty to cultivate a field and maintain herself clearly creates a charge, the intention being that she is to look to the profits of the land for maintenance for a particular period. But such a charge cannot be enforced by sale of the land—Renukabai v. Bheosan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132 (134), (1939) N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33. To secure repayment of a loan a document called zamanatnama was executed on a proper stamp for a mortgage and the only condition was one restricting the executant from alienating certain property; held, that the instrument created a charge and not a mortgage—Vir Bhan v. Salig Ram, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 35 (37), 17 Lah. 659, 164 I.C. 381. The fact that particular allowances have been thrown on particular estate means that those allowances are to be paid out of the profits of the specified estate, and accordingly constitutes a charge on those estates—Sharif v. Hunter, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 420 (421), 167 I.C. 52.

Floating charge:—The governing idea of a floating security is to allow a going concern to carry on its business in the ordinary course, the effect of which would be to make the assets liable to constant fluctuation and some event must happen or some act must be done by the mortgagee to crystallize the charge. A charge on the sub-soil right in a coal mine and on the kuthi, pits, machinery, pumps, boilers, etc., is not a floating charge—H. V. Low & Co. v. Pulin, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 154, 59 Cal. 1372. In the case of a fixed charge for the recovery of a specific sum of money from a specific property a transfer of interest immediately takes place when the charge is created, while a floating charge for the recovery of money from the general assets of the person who creates the charge is contingent, that is, on the occurrence of some event a fixed sum of money due at the time becomes recoverable from the specific assets which are in existence at that time. When the contingency arises, the charge is crystallized and then becomes a fixed charge—U. P. Government v. Manmohan, A.I.R. 1941 All. 345 (348) (F.B.). "A floating charge on the assets of a company for the time being is a familiar instance of a charge being created on property not in existence at the time when the loan is advanced, but which is acquired subsequently"—per Niamatulla, J. in Kabul Chand v. Badri Das, A.I.R. 1938 All. 22 (25), I.L.R. 1938 All. 63, 173 I.C. 130. A floating charge in favour of B in respect of the stock in trade of a cloth merchant becomes crystallized as soon as attachment before judgment is effected at the instance of C from whom piece goods were purchased on credit to replenish the stock after the creation of the charge; therefore B has a preferential claim over the sale proceeds—G. Bhar & Co. v. United Bank of India Ltd., A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 308. For an elaborate discussion of the question of a "floating charge" see K. M. Ghosh's Company Law, 5th Edn., pp. 35, 314-315 and 576-578.

531. Charges by operation of law:—"The charges are founded upon the consideration of a duty or implied intention on the part of the owner to make it answerable for a specific claim," See Fisher on Mortgage, 5th Edn., sec. 504. A charge by operation of law results not by volition of the parties, but as the result of a legal obligation. Such charges are known as equitable liens in English law—Syud Nadir v. Baboo Pearoo, 19 W.R. 255. If the parties cannot by mutual consent agree to create a charge, it is open to the Court, as a Court of equity, to create such a charge in order to secure to the person the right to which he is entitled, in an effective manner—Kanhaiya Lal v. Jangi, 24 A.L.J. 649, A.I.R. 1926 All. 527 (529), 96 I.C. 39.

The expression "operation of law" in this section is not restricted to such cases as fall under sec. 55 or sec. 73. A charge created by a decree based upon an award made on an agreement out of Court or otherwise is a charge created by operation of law—Abdul v. Ishtiaq, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 354 (F.B.), (1943) O.W.N. 261. The inclusion of charges by operation of law in sec. 100 is not inconsistent with the scheme of the T. P. Act—Laxmi Devi v. Mukand Kunwar, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 834.

Instances—(a) Vendor's charge for unpaid purchase-money; see sec. 55 (4);

(b) Where several properties are liable for the payment of an annuity and the owner of one of such properties has discharged the whole liability, he acquires thereby a charge on the other properties—Yakub v. Kishen, 28 All. 743.

(c) Section 228 of the Calcutta Municipal Act makes the consolidated rate as it accrues from time to time a charge on the property—Akhoy v. Corporation of Calcutta, 42 Cal. 625, 27 I.C. 261. See also A. M. A. Firm v. Marudachalam, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 412, (1948) 1 M.L.J. 284; Nawalkishore v. Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1943 All. 115 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1943 All. 458; Har Charan v. Agra Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1952 All. 315. A municipality cannot enforce its charge on a property on account of arrears of tax in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value at a court sale without notice of the charge—Haji Abdul Gafur v. Ahmedabad Municipal Corporation, (1967) 8 Guj. L.R. 65.

(d) A party entitled to claim contribution under sec. 82 acquires a charge in respect thereof. See Note 497 under sec. 82.

(e) The plaintiff agreed to advance money to the defendant company up to a certain limit upon the security of the stock in trade and immoveable property of the company which were to be mortgaged to the plaintiff. He made certain advances and agreed to perform the rest of the promise, being always ready and willing to pay the balance. Held that the agreement created a charge in favour of the plaintiff, on the assets of the defendant company when it went into liquidation—Hukmichand v. Pioneer Mills, Ltd., 2 Luck. 299, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 55 (58), 99 I.C. 483.

(f) A co-sharer who pays the entire arrears of rent under the Madras Estates Land Act is entitled to a charge on the other co-sharer's portion of the holding—Vyrapperumal v. Alagappa, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 189, 55 Mad. 468, 135 I.C. 609; Mariam v. Narayanan Thrathar Nambooripada, A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 55.

(g) Where a mortgagee in order to protect his mortgage lien deposits the amount due as arrears of Government revenue, the amount forms a charge upon the mortgaged property under this section read with Or. 34, r. 15, C. P. C.—Raj Kumar v. Jai Karan, 57 I.C. 653, 5 Pat.L.J. 248. But r. 14 read with r. 15 of O. 34 has no application to a case in which a charge is created by the decree—Mt. Kawkikabai v. Bachraj, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 147, 150 I.C. 492.

(h) Where a person pays money for the purpose of restoring the property to its owner, he has a lien on the property known as a salvage lien—Kunja v. Bhagabat, A.I.R. 1953 Or. 103, 17 Cut.L.T. 157. Cash advance made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor to be repaid at the time of redemption operates as a charge and no question of limitation arises in recovering it—Ali Mohammad v. Ramniwas, A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 258.

Charge created by award of arbitrators:—An arbitrator was chosen by parties to make a partition. The arbitrator awarded a house and some shops to the plaintiff, and another house and other shops to the defendant, and as they were of unequal value, he directed that the lots should be equalised by the defendant paying Rs. 1,400 to the plaintiff as compensation for the deficiencies of the property allotted to him, within a month, and that if no such payment was made the latter would be entitled to claim interest at a certain rate; and that the payment of the said amount would be a charge on the shop allotted to the defendant. Held that a valid charge was created—Kanhaiya Lal v. Jangi, 24 A.L.J. 649, 96 I.C. 39, A.I.R. 1926 All. 527. An award partitioning joint family property provided: "We allot the property mentioned in List A to N which shall remain in his possession subject to a charge for maintenance of S and if she ever falls out with N and they ceased to live together, the charge for maintenance thereon will be at the rate of Rs. 75 a month, the amount fixed by us": Held, that the words clearly created a charge in favour of S on the property allotted to N; and that the charge was created from the date of the award—Dan Kuer v. Sarla Devi, A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 8, 51 C.W.N. 81, 73 I.A. 208. Where an award provides that the first party is to get a certain amount from the second party and that the amount due is charged upon the immovable property given to the second party the charge will be invalid if the award is not registered, but the first party can enforce the rest of the award imposing a personal liability on the second party to pay the amount—M. Venkataratnam v. M. Chelamayya, A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 257 (F.B.). A charge created by the Arbitrator in his award can be enforced in execution, because such a charge is not governed by sec. 100 T. P. Act—Dhirendra Nath Sen v. Santa Sila Devi, A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 336. A charge created by a consent decree can be enforced in execution—Jailaram Sakarchand v. Himatlal Hiralal & Co., A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 156. A charge created by an award is neither 'by act of parties' nor by 'operation of law'—Dhirendra Nath Sen v. Santa Sila Devi, A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 406.

Registration:—A charge created by operation of law (e.g., a charge created by a decree) does not require registration—Maina v. Bachhi, 28 All. 655 (660); Gobinda v. Dwarka, 35 Cal. 837 (841). But a compromise decree creating a charge over immoveable properties which were not the subject-matter of the suit is compulsorily registrable under sec. 17 of the Registration Act—Sambhuram v. Guizarilal, 40 C.W.N. 974. See the amended clause (vi) of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 17 of the Registration Act.

Charge created by decree:—A charge which is created by a decree is not created by act of parties nor can it be said to have been created by operation of law. Such a charge does not fall under this section nor the principle underlying it applies to it—Ghasiram v. Kundanlal, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 163 (165, 166), (1940) N.L.J. 1; Debendra v. Trinayani, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 278, 24 Pat. 245; Mahesh v. Mundar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 141 (F.B.) 1951 A.L.J. 39; Thangavelu Mudaliar v. Thirumalswami Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 68; Radhe Lal v. Ladali Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 92; Dhirendra

Nath Sen v. Santa Sila Devi, A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 336 ; Rajah Bommadevara v. Rao Janardhana, A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 622 (F.B.). But see Raichand v. Basappa, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 71, 42 Bom.L.R. 1113 where it has been held that the principles underlying Or. 34 of the C. P. Code may and ought to be applied by analogy to charges created by a decree, unless the terms of the decree make it clear that the remedy of recovering the decretal amount from the property charged was not given in lieu of the personal remedy, but in addition to it. Where a decree declares a charge on certain properties, the parties to the decree as well as their privies are bound and one effect of this is that the questions of notice does not ordinarily arise—Ghasiram v. Kundanlal, supra. In a charge created by a decree there is no privity of estate between the charge-holder and the judgment-debtor and consequently the latter can deal with the property and a bona fide transferee from him without notice will be protected—Goswami v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 1, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 713. There is no difference in principle between a charge created by a decreed and one created by the act of parties or by operation of law—ibid. Where a charge-decree is merely declaratory and thus incapable of execution, the bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of the charge, the reason being that the legal estate prevails over a mere equity except when the legal owner takes with notice—Ibid, at p. 171 ; Mammohan Das v. Bahauddin, A.I.R. 1957 All. 575.

Where a compromise creating a charge is incorporated in a decree, it creates a charge by operation of law. The mere fact that the compromise was not attested would not invalidate the charge—Batcha v. Perianayagammal, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 163 ; Sheo Narain v. Lakhan, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 434, 24 Pat. 345. A compromise decree is however nothing more than a contract between the parties and is therefore subject to all the provisions regarding contract and is a charge created by the act of parties—Goswami v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 1, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 713 ; Manmohan v. Bahauddin, A.I.R. 1957 All. 575. A compromise decree embodying an agreement that the property shall remain attached by the Civil Court until the decretal debt is satisfied and shall be liable to be sold for that debt does not create a charge—Madan Lal v. Ghasiram, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 254, 30 Pat. 613. But see contra Sheo Narain v. Lakhan, supra.

A decree-holder obtained a compromise decree on 19th February, 1932 by which a charge was created on certain immoveable property of the judgment-debtor. The same property was however mortgaged to a third party on 26th April, 1932. The compromise decree was registered on 10th June, 1933: held, the mortgagee had priority over the decree-holder as the registration was invalid, the Registrar having no jurisdiction to register the decree—Rampratap v. Darsan Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 96, 178 I.C. 505.

Where a charge is created by a maintenance decree, no registration or attestation of the compromise is necessary—Jagadeesa v. Bavanambal, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 243, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 143. In such a case the parties are not prevented from contracting out of it the rights created under the decree, though they cannot go before the Court and ask the decree to be correspondingly modified—ibid. Where a decree for future maintenance in favour of a Hindu widow has made the future maintenance a charge on the property in possession of members of her husband's family and in execution of that decree the property is sold subject to her right of future maintenance, she can, when there is again default in payment of maintenance, apply for sale of that property again without bringing a suit under sec. 67 ante, for the immoveable property has not been made security for the payment of her money by an act of parties or by operation of law. It is only by virtue of a decree that the charge has been created—Durga Prasad v. Tulsa Kuar, A.I.R. 1939 All. 579, (1939) A.L.J. 542, 184 I.C. 626; Sivagangai Ammal v. Jagadambal, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 126. A charge created by decree, e.g., where a decree makes maintenance a charge on specified properties, the decree-holder is entitled to realise the maintenance by executing the decree, without having recourse to any suit—Abdul Muhammad v. Seetha Lakshmi, 33 L.W. 109, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 120 (122). See also Ambalal v. Narayan, 43 Bom. 631; Minakshi v. Chinnappa, 24 Mad. 689; Indramani v. Surendra, 35 C.L.J. 61, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 35; Bhoje Mahadev v. Gangabai, 37 Bom. 621, 21 I.C. 54 (55); Hari Sankar v. Tapai, 4 Pat. 693, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 31; Sabitri v. Mrs. Savi, 12 Pat. 359, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 306; Jata Bhusan Chatterjee v. Krishna Bhabini, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 204; Seethalakshmi Ammal v. Srinivasa Naikar, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 23. The decree can be executed against a transferee—Attarbai v. Mishrilalsa, A.I.R. 1966 Madh. Pra. 318. But see Hemlata v. Bhowani Charan, 39 C.W.N. 725, where it has been held that a separate suit is maintainable. Where in a suit for money a decree based upon a compromise is passed creating a charge on certain properties for satisfaction of the decretal debt, the decree is capable of execution by sale of the charged properties without the necessity of having recourse to a suit to enforce the charge under sec. 67—Mt. Kawtikabai v. Bachraj, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 147 (149), 150 I.C. 492. If a Hindu wife obtains a decree for maintenance against her husband she cannot claim any charge on the properties transferred by the husband unless the properties retained by the husband are insufficient to meet the decretal dues—Ramaswami Gounder v. Baghavammal, A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 457.

Mere attachment of property, whether before or after judgment, does not create a charge. But where by a compromise not only the attachment was continued, but it was stated that until the payment of the entire decretal amount the judgment-debtor should not transfer the attached property by mortgage, sale or gift and that in default of payment of the instalments fixed the decree-holder would be entitled to realize the entire decretal amount from the land, a charge was created in favour of the decree-holder—Tirath Ram v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 509 (510), 40 P.L.R. 429. The insertion of a clause in a compromise deed whereby a judgment-debtor promised to make certain payment with a provision that the attachment was to continue, did not however create a charge on the property attached before judgment—Basanti Debi v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 610, 164 I.C. 940.

Where a charge-decree is executed as a money-decree and therefore in that execution the decree-holder did not object to an order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage, it would not have the effect of extinguishing the charge—Bahru v. Jasoda, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 426, 24 Pat. 260. Where it was stated in the judgment that the decretal amount would not be a charge on the plaint properties, the direction that the amount could be realised from the properties of the defendants' family could not amount to a charge on those properties—Sankararu v. Dakshayani, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 193.

Where a particular right is charged on specific immoveable property by a decree of Court, such right cannot be enforced against a subsequent transferee for valuable consideration without notice of the charge—Basumati Kuer v. Harbansi Kuer, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 95, 21 P.L.T. 783. The holder of a charge decree, when the charge is created in lieu of the personal liability of the judgment-debtor, must first exhaust the charge before proceeding against any other property of the judgment-debtor, but when the charge is created in addition to the personal liability of the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder is not held to any rule of priority in executing the decree—Mustafa Sheriff v. Raghavelu Naidu (1967) 1 Mys. L. J. 664. A contract between two parties is nevertheless a contract though it is embodied in a decree. Hence a charge created by a decree in pursuance of an agreement between the parties would be a charge created by act of parties and consequently one contemplated by this section—Ibid. Where a charge is created by a decree, it binds a person who claims through the judgment-debtor although such person acquires the property without notice of the charge—Ahsan v. Maina, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 129 (131), 172 I.C. 949. A charge created by a decree of a foreign Court over property outside its jurisdiction is invalid—Sarfaraz v. Md. Salim, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 348 (349), 150 I.C. 140.

532. Cases in which no charge is created :—A co-sharer who has paid the whole revenue and thus saved the estate from sale does not, by reason of such payment, acquire a charge on the shares of the other co-sharers—Kinu Ram v. Musaffar, 14 Cal. 809 (F.B.); Khub v. Pudmanund, 15 Cal. 542; Seth Chittor v. Shib Lal, 14 All. 273 (F.B.); Shivrao v. Pundlick, 26 Bom. 437. Bhubaneshwari v. Mimir Khan, 7 Pat. 613, 9 P.L.T. 573, 111 I.C. 84, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 641 (649); U Shwe v. Maung Thank, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 278. The Madras High Court, however, holds that such payment creates a charge—Raja of Vizianagram v. Raja Setrucherla, 26 Mad. 686 (F.B.); Alakayammal v. Subbarayya, 28 Mad. 493; Puthen Purayil v. Mangalsuri, 36 Mad. 493; Nagala v. Koganti, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 141, 90 I.C. 551; but such charge can only avail against the property as it stood on the date of payment and cannot avail retrospectively, i.e., the co-sharer is not entitled in respect of his charge to priority over prior encumbrancers and persons who have in good faith and without any suspicion that a charge may come into future existence advanced money on the property—Vyraperumal v. Alagappa, 55 Mad. 468, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 177, 135 I.C. 609. Where a person not in possession of the property but believing that he has title to it pays Government revenue, he cannot on discovering the fact that another person has title to the property, claim a charge on it for the amount so paid within the meaning of this section or Art. 132 of the Limitation Act—Saraswathi v. Rama Setty, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 39, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 419.

There is no law applicable in India by which a simple creditor is entitled to a charge over property acquired with the money advanced—Annapurna Co. Ltd., in re, A.I.R. 1926 All. 397, 93 I.C. 93.

If a mortgagor, after executing a mortgage, takes a subsequent loan from the mortgagee under a simple money-bond, and in that bond stipulates that he will not redeem the mortgage without paying off the subsequent loan, the simple money-bond does not create any charge on the property, and consequently the stipulation cannot be enforced. The mortgagor will be entitled to redeem the mortgage without paying off the amount due under the money-bond. See Note 379 under sec. 61.

In a partition suit the parties entered into a compromise-decree by which certain properties were given to certain branches to which also were allotted some debts, and then it was provided that until the said debts were fully discharged, the properties allotted to the several persons should be liable in the first instance. Held that the compromise merely contained a contract of indemnity between the parties themselves, conferring no benefit on the creditors, and that the latter not being parties to the contract could not sue to enforce the same, because the compromise neither created a trust for the creditors nor a charge in their favour—Suryanarayana Rao v. Basivireddy, 55 Mad. 436, 62 M.L.J. 533, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 457. Where in a partition suit the Judge refused the defendant's prayer to make the money allotted to him to be a charge on the property allotted to the plaintiff but directed the latter not to transfer the said property until the money due to the defendant had been paid: held that the order was more in the nature of an injunction and did not create a charge—Ram Narain v. Nawab Sajjad Ali, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 99, 21 Luck. 185. Where one co-heir takes upon himself to save the property of the deceased from Court sale in execution of a decree passed against all the co-heirs, no charge is created in favour of the co-heir making the payment, especially when the payment is made without the knowledge or consent of the other co-heirs—U Shwe Bwa v. Maung Thauk, 6 Rang. 500, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 278 (280), 113 I.C. 801. A co-sharer paying off the amount of the rent decree and the auction purchaser's fees, and getting a sale set aside under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not acquire a charge on the shares of the defaulting co-tenants—Gopi v. Ishur, 22 Cal. 800. Where one of the two persons having a joint holding from a mittadar, paid the whole of the mittadar's due for certain years, such payment did not create a charge on the land—Thanikachella v. Sudachella, 15 Mad. 258.

An agreement to execute a mortgage is not by itself a mortgage under sec. 58, nor even a charge under sec. 100—Hukumchand v. Radha Kishen, 34 C.W.N. 506 (511) (P.C.), A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 76, 123 I.C. 157; Ram Hait v. Pohkar, 7 Luck. 237, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 54 (56), 134 I.C. 1093.

Where a mortgagee has paid the revenue and land tax in respect of the mortgaged property, this section can have no application unless the mortgagee elects to have the money spent by him added to the mortgage-principal—Murray v. M. S. M. Firm, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 47 (48), 161 I.C. 626.

Where an ordinary bond provided that a factory would be held paibandh for the debt, it was held that the bond created no special lien on the factory—Jagatdhar v. Brown, 33 Cal. 1133. Where money was advanced but the transaction was found to be neither a sale nor a mortgage, it was held that no charge was created for the money—Phattechand v. Uma, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 24 (25), 35 Bom.L.R. 1138, 149 I.C. 241. Where a document was not relied upon as an equitable mortgage it would not of itself create any charge—Jowala Das v. Thakar Das, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 251 (254), 158 I.C. 562.

A charge created by a Mahomedan on the unknown share of property of one of his heirs defeats the provision of the Mahomedan law and hence it is invalid and cannot be enforced—Mutlub v. Mt. Kalawati, A.I.R. 1933 All. 934 (937).

533. "And the transaction does not amount to a mortgage":—There is a defect in the language of this section. It maintains a distinction between a mortgage and a charge—a distinction without important consequences—without in any way exhibiting the differentia. This section recognises that by the act of parties immoveable property may be made security for the payment of money in ways which do not amount to a mortgage, but it does not limit or define those ways—Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank, 57 Cal. 328, 34 C.W.N. 605 (613, 615), 127 I.C. 760, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 536. The words "and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage" do not mean that if the transaction on the face of it purports to be a mortgage, but the instrument is not operative as such by reason of defective execution or non-compliance with the formalities prescribed by law (e.g., stamp, registration, attestation) the transaction is converted into a charge—per Mookerjee, J. in Royzuddin v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985. As to the distinction between a mortgage and a charge, see Note 327 under sec. 58.

Therefore, an instrument which cannot operate as a mortgage for want of due attestation, as required by sec. 59, does not operate as a charge under this section—Debendra v. Behari, 16 C.W.N. 1075; Samoo Patter v. Abdul Samad, 31 Mad. 337; Anantarama v. Yussujzi, 31 M.L.J. 133. Pran Nath v. Jadu, 31 Cal. 729; Collector of Mirzapur v. Bhagwan Prosad, 35 All. 164 (F.B.); Maharaja Ram Narain v. Adhindra, 44 Cal. 388 (P.C.); Khemchand v. Malloo, 10 N.L.R. 81, 26 I.C. 691; Kumari Bibi v. Srinath, 1 C.W.N. 81; Priyhdas v. Saheb Khan, 18 S.L.R. 282, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 88, 93 I.C. 660; Official Receiver v. Tirthadas, 97 I.C. 321, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 66 (75); Narayan v. Lakshmandas, 7 Bom. L.R. 934; see Note 355, ante. So also, a mortgage is not converted into a charge by reason of non-compliance with the formalities of registration, prescribed by sec. 59—Ma Bon v. Maung Po, 32 I.C. 595, 8 L.B.R. 533. Maung Tun v. Maung Aung Dun, 2 Rang. 313 (318); Somasundaram v. Nachiappa, 2 Rang. 429 (436), A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 55, 84 I.C. 302. An equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds is invalid if it is not executed in any of the towns specified in section 59; and it cannot operate even as a charge under section 100—Konchad v. Siva Rao, 28 Mad. 54.

On the same principle, a sale which is invalid because of non-compliance with sec. 54 as to registration does not operate to give the purchaser a charge for the amount of the sale-price against the seller's estate. Section 100 was never intended to indemnify people who endeavour to get conveyances in violation of the express provisions of law—Ma Lan v. Maung Shwe, 4 Bur. L.T. 115, 10 I.C. 919.

534. Enforcement of charge :—A charge is in the nature of a mortgage and the charge-holder is entitled to recover the amount due to him from whichever portion of the property he chooses. The question how far each of the owners of the property burdened with the charge is liable, is a question of contribution among the owners themselves and does not concern the charge-holder—Parshadi v. Brij Mohan, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 52 (54), 11 Luck. 575, 159 I.C. 117; Sharif v. Hunter, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 420 (423), 167 I.C. 52. See also Raghubar v. Hussain, A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 147, 23 Luck. 13; Savitribai v. Radhakisan, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 44, I.L.R. 1947 Nag. 381. As a charge-holder has all the rights of a simple mortgage, he can, when the nett proceeds of the sale have proved insufficient, and if the balance is recoverable from the defendant, claim a personal decree for such amount. The mere fact that a charge has been created by operation of law does not disentitle the charge-holder from pursuing the personal remedy—Babu Ram v. Inamullah, A.I.R. 1936 All. 411, 157 I.C. 533. When a charge created by a decree is enforceable in execution, the statutory impediment contained in O. 34, rr. 14 and 15 C. P. Code does not apply and no suit is necessary—Manindra v. Radhasyam, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 676. A charge-holder is merely entitled to put the property charged to sale. He cannot claim a right to possession—Madho Ram v. Kritya Nand, A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 96, 49 C.W.N. 75.

Where an agreement which created a charge of maintenance on certain land of a mortgagor provided that in default of a certain sum, the charge-holder was entitled to possession of the land and on default the charge was sought to be enforced against the mortgagee, held, that the decree should approximate as near as might be a decree for foreclosure and that the mortgagee should be given a chance to redeem it if he desired to keep the property in possession, as the relief was an equitable one and could be moulded to suit the requirements of the case—Renukabei v. Bheosan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132 (136), 1939 N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33. Where two properties are burdened with a maintenance charge and the charge-holder by his own negligence allows his remedy to be lost as against one of the properties, he cannot claim as against the other property to recover anything more than a proportionate share of the original maintenance—Aisa Begam v. Raghubar Dayal, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 203, 1940 O.W.N. 1249, 192 I.C. 327. The fact that the maintenance was fixed by a will makes no difference—Ibid.

535. Para 2—Charge of trustee :—The second para must be read as referring to sec. 32 of the Indian Trusts Act.

A trustee of a mosque making advances out of his own pocket to meet the expenses of the mosque cannot enforce his charge against the trust property by bringing a suit for sale. He can use only for recovery of the money—Abban Saheb v. Soran, 38 Mad. 260; Peary v. Narendra, 37 Cal. 229 (P.C.).

The expenses incurred by the trustee are a first charge or lien upon the corpus of the estate—Ex parte James, 1 Dow & Cl. 272; Re Exhall Coal Co., 35 Beav. 449; but the Court of Law will not order the trustee's lien to be realised by giving a decree for foreclosure or sale, for it would have the effect of destroying the trust estate. The proper course for such realisation is to deliver the deeds into his custody, and to issue a prohibition against any disposition of the property without previous discharge of the trustee's lien—Darke v. Williamson, 25 Beav. 622.

A person in enjoyment of income of property subject to a charge for the expenses of a temple, is liable to make them good out of the profits derived from the property—Parshadi Lal v. Brij Mohan, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 52, 11 Luck. 575, 159 I.C. 117. Where a charge is created in favour of a Thakurdwara over a portion of the income derived from certain property, but the portion allotted is not spent over the Thakurdwara for several years, the trustees are entitled to interest on the amount which ought to have been spent on the temple—Ibid.

Construction :—A proviso excepts out of the earlier part of the section something which but for the proviso would be within it. Para 2 limits the operation of para 1, and the word “charge” must have reference to the charge mentioned in para 1.—Maresh v. Mt. Mundar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 141 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 39. But see Raichand Gulabchand v. Dattaray Shankar Mote, A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 1. The words “transfer for consideration” are used in a wider sense and include both a transfer by act of parties and one by operation of law or in execution of a decree, thus including an auction-purchaser in a Court sale—Nawal Kishore v. Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1943 All. 115 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1943 All. 453 overruling Indra Narain v. Md. Ismail, A.I.R. 1939 All. 687, I.L.R. 1939 All. 885. See also Rajkishore v. Sultan Jehan, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 58; Sheo Narain v. Lakhan, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 434, 24 Pat. 345.

Enforcement of charge against purchaser without notice :—One important point of distinction between a mortgage and a charge is that while a mortgagee can follow the mortgaged property in the hands of any transferee from the mortgagor, irrespective of notice, a charge can be enforced against a transferee only if it is shown that he has taken with notice of the charge. In other words, a charge cannot be enforced against a bona fide purchaser for value who was not aware of the charge—Royzuddi v. Kali Nath, 33 Cal. 985 (1903); Akshoy v. Corporation of Calcutta, 42 Cal. 625 (1906); Mohini v. Purna Sashi, 36 C.W.N. 153; Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram, 13 All. 28 (1904); Gur Dayal v. Karam Singh, 38 All. 254 (1905); Prabhu Dayal v. Baban Lal, 1 O.L.J. 43, 23 I.C. 867 (1906); Hunter v. Nisar Ahmad, 8 Luck. 168, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 336 (1907); Chhaganlal v. Chhnilal, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 189 (1908), 36 Bom. L.R. 277, 152 I.C. 267; Vir Bhan v. Salig Ram, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 35 (1909), 17 Lah. 659, 164 I.C. 381; Sharif v. Hunter, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 420, 167 I.C. 718; Ramji v. Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 31, 12 Luck. 353, 164 I.C. 1034; Badridas v. Raja Pratapgir, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 8 (11), 1939 N.L.J. 525, 188 I.C. 23. Contra—Srinicasa v. Ranganatha, 36 M.L.J. 618, 51 I.C. 963, where it is said that a purchaser without notice of the charge takes the property subject to the charge; see also Mahadeo v. Anandi Lal, 47 All. 90, 22 A.L.J. 887, 92 I.C. 348, A.I.R. 1925 All. 60, Fateh Ali v. Gobardhan, 5 Luck. 172, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 316, 117 I.C. 405, and Molloya v. Krishnaswami, 47 M.L.J. 622, 85 I.C. 855, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 95 (105), where the same view is taken. Certain property, which was subject to a charge, was sold to one H who purchased it for consideration without notice of the charge and subsequently transferred it to K who had full notice of the charge: held that the mere fact that H intervened would not change the situation. K purchased the property with notice and he could not avail himself of any defence under this section which H might have been able to do if he were the last owner—Harnam Singh v. Md.

Akbar Khan, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 76 (78), 170 I.C. 136. In an Allahabad case it was held that if the charge was created by a decree of Court, it could be enforced against a bona fide transferee for value without notice—Maina v. Bachchi, 28 All. 655 (659).

This section must be read along with sec. 52. Hence, where during the pendency of a suit by a Hindu widow for maintenance against her husband's coparceners and for a charge on the family property the coparceners executed a mortgage on that property, the mortgage would be affected by the charge granted in the widow's suit, even if the mortgagee took the mortgage without notice of the suit—Rajagopala v. Kesava, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 126, I.L.R. 1945 Mad. 726. But if a charge is not shown in the proclamation for sale under Or. 21, r. 66 the charge cannot be enforced against the auction-purchaser—Laxmi Devi v. Mukand, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 834. Where an auction-purchaser purchases a property without notice of a charge created on such property by a maintenance decree, the auction-purchaser is hit by lis pendens and the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser will be liable for discharge of the maintenance decree—Bela Dibya v. Ramkishore Mohanty A.I.R. 1969 Orissa 114.

Where there was no obligation on a purchaser to make inquiry in the mamlatdar's office to see if there was any charge on the land and all that he was bound to do was to see if there was any entry made of the charge in the record of rights which made no mention of the same, the purchaser could not be held to have had constructive notice of the charge—Laksman v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 183 (186), 41 Bom. L.R. 257, 182 I.C. 635. The principle of constructive notice should however be applied to arrears of taxes which form a charge under the Municipalities Acts on the property sold at an auction-sale—Municipal Board, Lucknow v. Ramji Lal, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 325, 1941 O.W.N. 122, 193 I.C. 290.

Either under this section or under the more general rule of law, the burden is on the transferee to establish that he is a bona fide transferee for value without notice—Renukabal v. Bheosan Hapsaji, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 132, 1939 N.L.J. 129, 185 I.C. 33.

It has been held that where a charge is created by a decree, no question of notice arises and a subsequent purchaser will be bound irrespective of whether he has notice of the charge or not—Hemlata v. Bhowani Charan, 39 C.W.N. 725; Maina v. Bachchi, 28 All. 655 (659); Sashi Bhusan v. Bhupendra Nath, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 112. But a recent Full Bench of the Oudh Chief Court have held that where a particular right is charged on specific immovable property by a decree of Court, such right cannot be enforced against a subsequent transferee for value without notice of the charge and that this principle applies also in cases where a charge is created before the amendment of 1929—Mt. Indrani v. Maharaj Narain, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 217 (F.B), 166 I.C. 662. The Nagpur High Court has held that where a charge is created by a decree, the correct way of approaching the matter whether the charge is binding on bona fide purchaser for value without notice, is not to found the rights of the charge-holder upon any provision of this Act, but upon the law of estoppel by record. The Transfer of Property Act does not purport to cut down the principles of estoppel by record—Ahsan v. Maina, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 129 (130), 172 I.C. 749. See in this connection Goswami v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 1, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 713. According to the Special Committee's Report the amendment made at the end of para 2 makes it clear that no charge can be enforced against a transferee for value without notice, whether the charge is created by act of parties or by decree of Court. See the Special Committee Report cited at pp. 541-542 ante. Though a charge created by a decree is, like any other charge, not enforceable against a transferee for consideration without notice, when the decree directs for sale of the property, it can be sold even when in the hands of such a transferee—Mahesh v. Mt. Mundar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 141 (F.B.), 1951 A.L.J. 39, per Malik, C.J.

If the charge is created by a registered instrument, the registration amounts to notice, and a purchaser of the property takes it subject to the charge—Nathan v. Durga, 52 All. 985, 1939 A.L.J. 1267, A.I.R. 1931 All. 62 (64), 130 I.C. 489. Thus, a stipulation in a registered lease to the effect that the lessee should deduct from the annual rent certain portion as repayment of a sum of money already borrowed by the lessor from him, creates a charge on the property leased and not merely a personal covenant. If, therefore, subsequent to the execution of the lease, a creditor of the lessor obtains a money-decree against him and at auction-sale purchases the property leased out, he purchases it only subject to the charge created by the stipulation in the lease (the registered lease amounting to notice of the charge)—Nathan v. Durga, supra.

The holder of a charge on a property is entitled to enforce the same against the transferee of the property with notice, even though the transferee has purchased only a part of the property. If he is obliged to satisfy the full amount of the charge, his remedy is a suit for contribution against the owners of the remaining portion of the property—Hunter v. Nisar, supra.

"Property in the hands of a person" :—A simple mortgagee cannot be considered to have the property "in his hands" within the meaning of the proviso in para 2—Surayya v. Venkataramanamma, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 701, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 831, 1940 M.W.N. 341.

Security bond :—A security bond relating to immoveable property under sec. 145, C.P.C., can be enforced without bringing a regular suit—Daw Ohn v. U Bah, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 126, 7 Rang 352, 118 I.C. 632, and the case cited there, See also Sukumari v. Mugneeram, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 889, 30 C.W.N. 683, 95 I.C. 908.

101. Where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immoveable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property, the charge or incumbrance shall be extinguished, unless he declares, by express words or Extinguishment of charges.

101. Any mortgagee of, or person having a charge upon, immoveable property, or any transferee from such mortgagee or charge-holder, may purchase or otherwise acquire the rights in the property of the necessary implication, that it shall continue to subsist or such continuance would be for his benefit.

mortgagor or owner; as the case may be, without thereby causing the mortgage or charge to be merged as between himself and any subsequent mortgagee of, or person having a subsequent charge upon, the same property; and no such subsequent mortgagee or charge-holder shall be entitled to foreclose or sell such property without redeeming the prior mortgage or charge, or otherwise than subject thereto.

This section has been redrafted by sec. 51 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

Thus, under the old section, 'extinguishment' was the rule, and 'keeping alive' was the exception (although this rule was rarely followed). Under the new section, 'keeping alive' is the rule.

535A. Amendments, whether retrospective:—This is one of the sections not specifically mentioned in sec. 63 of the Amending Act XX of 1929. It falls within the "other sections" referred to therein. For the reasons given in Note 1A, ante, the section, it is submitted, has retrospective operation. See also Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, A.I.R. 1932 All. 489 (492) (F.B.), 54 All. 897, 139 I.C. 127. Contra—Ko Po v. C. A. & C. Firm., A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 197, 140 I.C. 156. The Madras High Court has however consistently held that this section as well as other amended sections have no retrospective effect—Rajah of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 558, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 47 (following Lakshmi v. Sankaranarayana, 59 Mad. 359 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 171, 70 M.L.J. 1). It has been held in this case that it is not possible for the Courts to apply the principles underlying the amended section in cases arising before the passing of Act XX of 1929. For other cases for and against this view see Note 1A, ante.

535B. Principle:—A principle, which might clearly be apparent in this section before it was amended, does not underlie it after amendment when the amendment omits the words recognizing the principle—Basanewa v. Dodgowda, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 95 (96), 44 Bom. L.R. 15.

In this amended section the legislature has adopted the simple rule that the existence of a subsequent incumbrance prevents merger. But it did not amend or alter the old law of the union of estates which occurred when the mortgagee acquired the rights of the mortgagor or the purchaser of the equity of redemption acquired the rights of the mortgagee—Devichand v. Chintaman, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 116, 46 Bom. L.R. 763. When a charge is extinguished by the purchase of the property by the charge-holder at the prior mortgagee's auction sale, what is extinguished is not merely the security but the debt itself—ibid.

Merger.—Merger of estates takes place when two estates held in the same legal right become united in the same person. The question whether there has or has not been a merger of the equity of redemption with the mortgagee rights depends on the intention of the person in whose possession both rights were at the same time—Md. Abdul Samad v. Girdhari Lal, A.I.R. 1942 All. 175. Where the capacity in which a person is in possession of the mortgagee rights is something quite different from the capacity in which he is in possession of the equity of redemption, the mere fact that those two capacities are united in the same physical person cannot result in a merger : consequently there cannot be any extinguishment of the mortgage—Ibid. So far as the Indian law is concerned, this section codifies the law of merger and it is exhaustive, so far as it does—Rajah of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 558 (564), (1942) 2 M.L.J. 47.

535C. Application :—This section in term applies only when there is a subsequent mortgagee or charge-holder. The principle of this section does not apply to the case of a Court purchaser or to the owner of the property—Baswanneva v. Dodgowda, supra; Bhagerathibai v. Monohar, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 164, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 698. Though this section has generally been invoked in cases where the rights of mesne incumbrancers come up for decision, the principle of the section is not limited to those cases. It only lays down a general rule of presumed intention, and where the later conveyance will be inoperative as against any intermediate right, whether founded on an encumbrance or on an attachment, the principle equally applies—Mahalakshmi v. Somaraju, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 600, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 393 (396), (1939) 2 M.L.J. 72. This section does not apply where the mortgagee purchases the mortgaged property and there are no subsequent incumbrancer. But the equitable rule of intention applies and the presumption is that the mortgagee intended to keep alive the previous mortgage, if it would be for his benefit—Ram Sahai v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 407, (1943) O.W.N. 320. A prior mortgagee, whose mortgage is wholly satisfied by the purchase by the mortgagee himself of the property of the mortgagor, cannot claim the benefit of subrogation. It is ordinarily claimed by a person other than a prior mortgagee on the ground that such person has discharged prior mortgages; and where a prior mortgagee purchases the property of the mortgagor, as against the puisne mortgagee, his claim is covered by this section and he will still be entitled to keep his prior mortgagee's interest apart from the mortgagor's equity of redemption, and a subsequent mortgagee shall not be entitled to sell such property without redeeming the prior mortgage or otherwise than subject thereto. How the equities between the prior mortgagee and the puisne mortgagee are to be worked out in apportioning liability between the several items comprised in the mortgages and sales, is a matter which the executing Court can conveniently determine at the time the properties are directed to be sold, or the sale proceeds have to be distributed—Rama Aiyar v. Bagavattimuthu, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 473 (474-75), 70 M.L.J. 506, 163 I.C. 834.

In a sale of the mortgaged property free of incumbrance held by the Deputy Commissioner under sec. 138 C.P. Land Revenue Act, even if the decree-holder is the purchaser, he would obtain an absolute title free from all incumbrances. The considerations of merger under this section does not apply to the case—Ratanlal v. Sagarbai, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 289, I.L.R. 1945 Nag. 643. Where a purchaser at a Court sale or a private sale discharges what he thinks to be the only mortgage on it and subsequently discovers that there is still a later mortgage subsisting, he is entitled to sue on the mortgage he has discharged—Arumuga v. Semba, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 814 (816), 70 M.L.J. 719, 163 I.C. 704. But see Baswannewa v. Dodgowda, supra.

536. Principle of "keeping alive":—In the earlier part of the old section it was stated that when a mortgagee acquired the equity of redemption in his security, the general rule was that the mortgage was extinguished, and the onus was thrown on the mortgagee to prove that it was to his interest to keep the charge alive and that was his intention at the time of the transaction—Bai Rewa v. Vali Mohamed, 46 Bom. 1009 (1014), 70 I.C. 912, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 211; Darshan Singh v. Arjun, 1 Luck. 560, 3 O.W.N. 741, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 606 (607), 98 I.C. 28.

But in spite of the express words of the earlier part of the section, and in spite of the rule laid down in Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer. 310, on which it was based, it was held in a majority of cases that in such circumstances the Court would presume that it was to the benefit of the mortgagee to keep the charge alive and that the mortgagee intended to keep it alive. That is, the Courts laid more stress on the latter part of the section than on the earlier part.

In Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer. 310, it was laid down that the purchaser of an equity of redemption who paid off a prior mortgage out of the purchase-money and had taken a conveyance of the estate from the mortgagee, could not set up that mortgage as against a subsequent mortgagee who had taken subject to the prior mortgage. But this inflexible rule, being based on no intelligible principle, was never followed in India, and has been adversely commented on in several cases, even in England. See Manks v. Whittely, [1911] 2 Ch. 488 (per Parker, J.). It has been observed by the Judicial Committee and the Indian High Courts that the question to be asked in each case would be—What was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it, and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be presumed to have acted according to his interest—Gokaldas v. Puranmal, 10 Cal. 1035 (P.C.); Mahesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das, 9 Cal. 961 (977) (P.C.); Ibrahim Hossein v. Ambica Prosad, 39 Cal. 527 (P.C.); Thorne v. Cann, (1895) A.C. 11 (19); Ayyareddi v. Gopalakrishnayya, 47 Mad. 190 (195) (P.C.); Mehr Singh v. Amar Nath, 7, Lah. 212, 94 I.C. 152; Fakiraya v. Gadigaya, 26 Bom. 88; Dinobandhu v. Jogmaya, 29 Cal. 154 (P.C.); Jamiunnissa v. Arunachala, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 84, 136 I.C. 305; Ko Po v. C. A. & C. Firm, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 197, 140 I.C. 156; Pal Singh v. Sundar Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1000 (1001), 145 I.C. 719; Kalimuddin v. Baidyanath, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 572, 51 C.L.J. 565, 128 I.C. 192; Someshwari v. Moheshwari, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 426 (431), 10 Pat. 630, 135 I.C. 85; Lakshmi v. Shankar, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 171 (172) (F.B.), 43 M.L.W. 23; Karam Chand v. Ram Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 665, 39 P.L.R. 899; Pramatha v. Janaki, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 194 (198), 41 C.W.N. 472, 171 I.C. 747; Jagatdhar v. Brown, 33 Cal. 1133; Md. Ibrahim v. Ambika, 39 Cal. 527 (P.C.). "The mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If a charge is paid off by a tenant for life, without any expression of his intention, it is well established that he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance. Although he has not declared his intention of keeping it alive, it is presumed that his intention was to keep it alive, because it is manifestly for his benefit. On the other hand, when the owner of an estate in fee or in tail pays off a charge, the presumption is the other way, but in either case the person paying off the charge can, by expressly declaring his intention, either keep it alive or destroy it"—petr Jessel, M.R. in Adams v. Angell, (1877) 5 Ch. D. 634.

The question of merger depends upon the intention at the time when the mortgagee acquires the rights of the mortgagor. The mere possibility of a suit for pre-emption would not be sufficient to indicate such an intention—Ghaffur v. Budloo, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 284, (1943) O.W.N. 159. The question whether the continuance of the mortgage would be for the mortgagee's benefit is to be determined at the time of the mortgagee's acquisition of the full ownership—Damodarasami v. Govindarajulu, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 429 (F.B.), (1943) 1 M.L.J. 291.

A subsequent mortgagee can avail himself of his interest in a prior mortgage as a shield against intermediate mortgagee. The effect of this section is to keep the prior mortgage alive subject always to any question of limitation. It does not give it a re-birth. Thus a mortgage which at the date of the subsequent incumbrance is already barred by limitation will not be revived as a protection against an intermediate incumbrancer—Munshi Lal v. Hira Lal, A.I.R. 1947 All. 74 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1947 All. 11. After the mortgage the mortgagor granted a perpetual lease of the mortgaged property and then the mortgagee purchased it, but kept his mortgage alive. In a suit by the mortgagee against the lessee, it was held that the suit was maintainable provided it was not barred by limitation—Ramsahai v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 407, (1943) O.W.N. 320.

The mortgagee who purchases the equity of redemption is entitled to assert his right as mortgagee and may claim that his mortgage-interest has been kept alive, as this is for his benefit—Mangtulal v. Upendra, 57 Cal. 82, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 335 (337), 125 I.C. 661. Where the mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption with a stipulation to reconvey after a fixed period the mortgage is not extinguished by merger, because the stipulation to reconvey indicates a contrary intention—Madhappa

Gounder v. Karuppa Gounder, A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 343. Where a prior mortgagee purchased the property mortgaged to him, this section would protect him from the claims of puisne incumbrancers, for it was clearly for his benefit, when he became the absolute owner of the property, that his prior charge should be kept alive—Baldeo v. Uman Shankar, 32 All. 1 (3); Bhup Singh v. Sakha Ram, A.I.R. 1945 All. 158, I.L.R. 1945 All. 186. A contract to deprive the prior mortgagee of his charge must be a very clear one—Madan Mohan v. Nand Ram, A.I.R. 1943 All. 156, 1953 A.L.J. 62. Where a mortgagor sells his equity of redemption to a first mortgagee with possession, after the creation of a second mortgage over the properties, the first mortgagee is entitled to keep his incumbrance alive as against the second mortgagee, though it does not continue against the owner whose equity of redemption the first mortgagee had purchased—Ibrahim Sahib v. Arumugathayee, 38 Mad. 18. On a mortgagee purchasing the mortgaged property along with other properties and jointly with other persons in undivided shares, his mortgage lien is not extinguished by the purchase. The mortgage should be regarded as existing, it being evidently for the benefit of the mortgagee that it should be so regarded—Gunindra v. Baijnath, 31 Cal. 370. Where the mortgagor executes a fresh mortgage in renewal of the old one to the same mortgagee, there is always a presumption that the mortgagee intends to keep the prior mortgage alive for his benefit—Punjab & Sind Bank v. Kishen Singh, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 350 (353), 16 Lah. 881, 156 I.C. 795. Where the second transaction replacing a former mortgage is frustrated wholly or partially, the mortgagee can fall back on the earlier mortgagee—Dasari v. Onarasi, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 61 (62), 59 Mad. 44, 160 I.C. 757. Where a mortgagee takes another mortgage in renewal of the former deed, he has priority over incumbrances subsequent to the first deed—Kanhaiya v. Gulab, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 9 (12), 7 Luck. 655, 138 I.C. 206. Where a prior mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption in execution of a money-decree against the mortgagor, he is presumed to keep alive his mortgage against the puisne mortgagees, who will have to redeem him—Ram Sarup v. Ram Lal, 44 All. 659, 20 A.L.J. 596, 75 I.C. 472, A.I.R. 1922 All. 394. See also Gulam v. Pandharinath, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 379, 50 Bom. L.R. 271. Under the amended section, the purchase by the mortgagee of the equity of redemption has in itself the effect of keeping alive the prior mortgage, and the intention to do so need not be proved nor presumed; nor is it necessary to consider whether the continuance of the incumbrance would be to his benefit. When an earlier mortgage is renewed by the execution of a subsequent mortgage, the mortgagee has a right to extinguish the earlier mortgage and a right to keep it alive. In the absence of any express evidence of his intention, the ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest, and therefore the mortgagee must be deemed to have intended to keep the earlier mortgage alive. The fact that the renewal related only to a part of the property comprised in the earlier mortgage is no bar to keeping it alive—Himmat Sahai v. Md. Moin, A.I.R. 1941 All. 200, 1941 A.L.J. 234. Where a mortgagee after purchase by him of a part of the mortgaged property comes to Court and claims to enforce his entire mortgage against the remaining portion in respect of the whole unabated mortgage-debt, the burden lies heavily upon him for showing that special circumstances or a special bargain existed from which it must be concluded that no part of the mortgaged-debt was to be extinguished—ibid. See in this connection Mahalakshmi v. Somaraju, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 600, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 393 (396), (1939) 2 M.L.J. 72; Singheswar v. Medni Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 65, 187 I.C. 339; Ram Lal v. Bhagat Ram, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 247, 190 I.C. 673 and Subbarama v. Krishnaiya, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 718 (721, 722), (1939) 2 M.L.J. 16, 1939 M.W.N. 635. Where a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee paid off a prior mortgagee's foreclosure decree and later sued the mortgagor for the amount so paid and he too obtained a foreclosure decree it was held under the circumstances that an intention to keep alive the mortgage could not be inferred—Gaffoor v. Badloo, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 284, (1943) O.W.N. 159. The doctrine of "keeping alive" will not be applicable where the subsequent mortgage fails for want of registration—Ram Narain v. Nawab Singh, A.I.R. 1947 All. 214, I.L.R. 1946 All. 375. See in this connection Saila Bala v. Gouri Bala, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 749.

Where a third mortgagee (or a purchaser) professes to keep in his hands a part of the consideration in order to pay off the first and the second mortgages, but he pays off only the first mortgage, then in a suit by the second mortgagee to enforce his mortgage it is open to the third mortgagee (or the purchaser) to insist on his being treated as a first mortgagee whose mortgage must be paid off before the second mortgagee can bring the property to sale—Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, 54 All. 897 (F.B.), 139 I.C. 107, A.I.R. 1932 All. 489 (491); Bapu v. Venkatachalapathi, 64 M.L.J. 606.

A prior mortgagee, by purchasing the rights of a puisne mortgagee, does not lose the rights which had been secured to him by the prior mortgage. In such cases the presumption is that he intended to keep alive the prior security and would be entitled to fall back upon it in case of necessity—Fateh Ali v. Gehna, 9 Lah. 88, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 301 (303), 112 I.C. 17; Makhan Mal v. Gokul Chand, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 237, 137 I.C. 699. If a mortgagee of two properties purchases one of them in discharge of his mortgage, unaware of a subsequent mortgage of both the properties in favour of another, he must be deemed to have kept his own mortgage alive and is entitled to use it as a shield against the subsequent mortgagee—Abdul Majid v. Arunachala, 61 M.L.J. 857, 136 I.C. 305, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 84 (85). See also Kalimuddin v. Baidyanath, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 572, 51 C.L.J. 565, 128 I.C. 192.

The principle of this section applies not only where the mortgaged property is purchased by the prior mortgagee or charge-holder, but also extends to cases where the property is purchased by a third person. And so, where the mortgaged properties are sold to a third person, and the sale-proceeds are devoted to paying off prior incumbrances, and the circumstances at the time of the sale are such that it is for the benefit of the purchaser that the mortgages involved in the purchase should not be extinguished, it must be held that they enure for the benefit of the purchaser, and that he will be entitled to priority over puisne mortgagees—Natchiappa v. Ko Tha, 6 Rang. 488, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 287 (288), 113 I.C. 809; Nangunni Kovillamma v. Nedungudi, 31 L.W. 165, A.I.R.

1929 Mad. 860 (861); Ram Lal v. Bhagat Ram, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 247, 190 I.C. 673. But where an outsider having no interest to protect deliberately with his eyes open purchases in order to enable the owner and the charge-holder to extinguish the charge between them, the stranger purchaser is not entitled to keep the charge alive as against subsequent encumbrances—Nemasao v. Madhorao, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 33, 1941 N.L.J. 634.

The words "otherwise acquire" appear to indicate acquisition by succession as well. Thus where M succeeded to the mortgage-right to his father and then succeeded to the equity of redemption as heir of his mother who had purchased the same, it was held that M must be presumed to keep alive the mortgage—Chandra Bibi v. Mohanram, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 134, 13 Pat. 200, 153 I.C. 412.

Punjab:—Though the Act is not in force in the Punjab, the general principles to be applied are those embodied in the Act as amended in 1929 which must be held to be more in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience—Nizam Din v. Ram Sukh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 286 (287). It should always be presumed that in India a purchaser of previous mortgagee-rights intends to keep the mortgage alive for his benefit—Ibid.

537. Puisne mortgagee paying off prior mortgage:—Where a subsequent mortgagee redeems a prior mortgage, he becomes entitled to the position of the mortgagee redeemed, and he can keep alive the prior mortgage that he has paid off, if it suits his purpose to do so—Chhotelal v. Bansidhar, 24 A.L.J. 570, 95 I.C. 998, A.I.R. 1926 All. 653. Bhiku v. Shujjat Ali, 29 Cal. 25 (30); see also Ramdas v. Ramnandan, 9 P.L.T. 148, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 195, 108 I.C. 95. He must be assumed to have acted in the manner most beneficial to himself and to have kept the mortgage alive to be used as a shield against an intermediate incumbrancer. In other words, payments made to the prior mortgagee are to be regarded as purchases pro tanto of the prior mortgage—Ramsahai v. Kunwar, 7 Luck. 26, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 314 (317), 139 I.C. 626.

Where a mortgagor in executing a simple mortgage of the property on which there was a prior usufructuary mortgage, left with the subsequent mortgagee some portion of the consideration money for the discharge of the prior usufructuary mortgage, and it was redeemed subsequently, held that the question was whether the prior mortgage was kept alive for the benefit of the subsequent mortgage of the property who discharged it, was a question of intention, and in the absence of clear express evidence the presumption would be that the intention was to keep up the prior mortgage for the benefit of the subsequent mortgagee—Hari Narayan v. Har Prosad, 12 A.L.J. 470, 23 I.C. 827.

Where a subsequent mortgagee advances money for discharging a prior mortgage on which a decree had been passed, he is entitled to priority in respect of that money in a suit by an intermediate mortgagee. It is sufficient for him to show that there was a prior incumbrance which it was for his benefit to keep alive. The fact that the mortgage had taken the form of a decree does not affect the question—Purnamal

Chand v. Venkata Subbarayulu, 20 Mad. 486 (487); Ram Narayan v. Sahadeo, 1 Pat. 332 (334), A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 181, 3 P.L.T. 261, 67 I.C. 221. Where the prior mortgagee obtained a decree and the mortgaged property was brought to sale, and thereupon the mortgagor executed a fresh mortgage, the consideration of which was the discharge of the decree, held that the prior mortgage was not extinguished, and that the later mortgagee on discharge of the decree could hold the earlier mortgage as a shield—Ram Bilas v. Lachmi, 8 O.W.N. 541, 132 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 295 (296).

If a third mortgagee pays off a first mortgage, he does not thereby extinguish the first mortgage, but it is kept alive for the benefit of the third mortgagee, who gets priority over a second mortgagee—Seetharama v. Venkatakrishna, 16 Mad. 94 (96); Gangadhara v. Sivarama, 8 Mad. 246 (249); Mohanlal v. Md. Sujat, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 155, 144 I.C. 969. Where a person mortgaged his property first to A, then to another, and thirdly to A again, in which last mortgage there was a recital of the first mortgage and a statement as to the liquidation of the first debt, held, that the fact of the old debt being paid off by new transaction would not necessarily destroy the security; and if there was nothing to show a contrary intention, the creditor must be presumed to have intended to keep the security alive for his own protection—Gopal Chunder v. Herumbo Chunder, 26 Cal. 523; Inderdawan v. Gobind Lal, 23 Cal. 790. Where a mortgagor executed three successive mortgages in favour of B, C and D, and in the third mortgage-deed (executed in favour of D) the fact of the mortgage to C was not disclosed but only the mortgage to B, and it was recited in the deed that out of the money borrowed from D the mortgage in favour of B was to be paid off at once and that there was no other incumbrance affecting the property other than that in favour of B; held that when the mortgage in favour of D was executed the intention of the parties was that D should have the first and only charge on the property, and so it was utterly immaterial to consider whether D's intention was to keep alive B's mortgage. D would therefore be entitled to priority over C—Durga v. Baijnath, 8 Pat. 360, 10 P.L.T. 479, 118 I.C. 730, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 325 (327). A property, on which there were two mortgages, was attached subject to those mortgages. The mortgagor then made a third mortgage and by means of the sum raised thereby he paid off the two prior mortgages. The purchaser at auction sale, which followed the attachment, contended that he had purchased the property free from the two prior mortgages and that the third mortgagee was not entitled to any priority over the first two mortgages. It was held that the two prior mortgages were kept alive for the benefit of the third mortgagee. He had advanced the money to pay off the first two mortgages with the idea of keeping the benefit to himself and not to benefit the auction-purchaser—Dinabandhu v. Jogmaya, 29 Cal. 154 (P.C.). Madho Singh v. Panchanan Singh, 49 All. 233, 25 A.L.J. 45, 101 I.C. 409, A.I.R. 1927 All. 211 (212). A land was subject to three simple mortgages, of which the second was on the crops as well as on the land. A purchaser of the land subject to the three mortgages, and the respondents, who were assignees of his interest, paid money to the second mortgagee to save the crops from sale under a decree which he had obtained under the mortgage. Held that there being no covenant by the mortgagor to pay the third mortgage, the payments made to the second mortgagee were to be regarded as purchases pro tanto of the second mortgage, not as a discharge of it, the fact that the third mortgage did not include the crops not being material; and that accordingly the respondents were entitled to keep the second incumbrance alive for their own benefit, and thus obtain priority over the third mortgagee—Ayyareddi v. Gopalakrishna, 47 Mad. 190 (195) (P.C.), 46 M.L.J. 164, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 36, 79 I.C. 592.

Where an intermediate mortgagee discharged a mortgage-decree passed on a prior and a puisne mortgage, and the decree itself had been passed in a suit to which the intermediate mortgagee was a party but on a compromise arrived at between the other parties to the suit, held that the intermediate mortgagee must be deemed to have paid the decree amount not intending to extinguish the mortgage-debts but to keep them alive and to enable him to recover them from the mortgagor—Nagayyar v. Gobindayyar, 17 L.W. 14, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 349 (350), 70 I.C. 286.

Where a mortgagee, subsequently to the execution of the mortgage-deed, takes another mortgage in renewal of the former deed, the prior mortgage is not extinguished but is kept alive, and the mortgagee had priority over incumbrances subsequent to the first deed—Alangaran v. Lakshmanan, 20 Mad. 274 (275), following Seetharama v. Venkata Krishna, 16 Mad. 94 (96); Kanhaiya v. Gulab Singh, 7 Luck. 655, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 9.

538. Cases under old sections :—“Absolutely”—The word “absolutely” was used in the old section to indicate that the interest in which the encumbrance should merge must be the absolute interest and not a limited one; and the encumbrancer must become entitled to the absolute interest—Sonatulla v. Abu, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 530 (531), 57 Cal. 473, 126 I.C. 413; Rajah of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 558, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 47. There was nothing in this section which would entitle a person who had acquired an absolute title to the property or happened to become a charge or encumbrance holder of the property to plead the charge or encumbrance only by a way of defence—Rajah of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, supra.

Extinguishment :—Prior to the amendment of this section, as well as prior to the enactment of the T. P. Act, the principle which guided the Court was that where the absolute owner of an estate became also the owner of a charge thereon, in the absence of any intention, express or presumed, merger or extinguishment of title would take place—Someshwari v. Maheshwari, 10 Pat. 630, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 426 (432), 135 I.C. 85. But see Rajah of Kalahasti v. Parthasarathy, supra, at p. 562 where it has been held that under the exception in the old section even if the person did not declare either by express words or by necessary implication that the charge would continue, but if the Court found that the continuance of the charge or encumbrance would be for a person's benefit, it was required to presume, in accordance with the natural presumption, that a person would not have acted or intended to act against his benefit and that he must have intended to keep the charge or encumbrance alive. If the mortgaged property is sold to the mortgagee, and there is no mesne incumbrance at the time of the sale, the conclusion seems to be inevitable that the mortgage has been extinguished. The ordinary presumption in such a case is that the owner does not intend to keep up a charge upon the estate to which he has acquired a full title—Baj Rewa v. Fali Mahomed, 46 Bom. 1009 (1014), A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 211, 70 I.C. 912. If there is a mesne mortgagee, then it is conceivable that the prior mortgagee who acquires full proprietary rights may keep alive his prior mortgage and use it as a shield when occasion arises. But where there is no mesne mortgagee, and the transaction is a straight dealing between the mortgagee on the one side and the mortgagor on the other, whereby the mortgagee obtained the sale of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor and thus acquired full proprietary ownership, the result of the transaction being the confluence of the interest of the mortgagor and the purchaser of the equity of redemption, the doctrine of merger fully comes into operation, and there is no room for any presumption in favour of an intention to keep the prior mortgage alive—Lakshmi v. Partap, 12 Lah. L.J. 56, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 620 (623). See also Mahesh v. Mohant Bawan, 9 Cal. 961 (P.C.); Gobind v. Kuldip, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 377, 73 I.C. 764; Kanhaiya v. Ikram, 8 Luck. 103, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 268; Bibi Basirunnissa v. Habib Ahmad, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 264.

539. Subsequent mortgagee suing for sale is bound to redeem prior mortgage :—See the last sentence of this section : “and no such..... subject thereto.” A prior mortgagee who has purchased the property mortgaged to him has a right to be repaid the money due in respect of his mortgage before a subsequent mortgagee can bring such property to sale in execution of a decree on the mortgage held by the latter—Baldeo v. Uman Shankar, 32 All. 1 (3). In a suit by a subsequent mortgagee to enforce his mortgage where the prior mortgagee who has also purchased the equity of redemption and is in possession, is also added as a party to the suit, it is premissible for the subsequent mortgagee to sell the property subject to the prior incumbrances under the earlier mortgages without redeeming them. The prior mortgagee is however entitled to remain in possession until the prior mortgages are redeemed irrespective of the question of limitation—Hari Ram v. Munshi Singh, A.I.R. 1939 All. 660 (662), 1939 A.L.J. 559, 185 I.C. 126.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by section 52 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

103. Where, under the provisions of this Chapter, a Notice, etc., to or by person incompetent to

notice is to be served on or by, or a tender or deposit made or accepted or taken out of Court by, any person incompetent to contract, such notice may be served on or by, or tender or deposit made, accepted or taken, by the legal curator of the property of such person ; but where there is no such curator, and it is requisite or desirable in the interests of such person that a notice should be served or a tender or deposit made under the provisions of this Chapter, application may be made to any Court in which a suit might be brought for the redemption of the mortgage to appoint a guardian ad litem for the purpose of serving or receiving service of such notice, or making or accepting such tender, or making or taking out of Court such deposit, and for the performance of all consequential acts which could or ought to be done by such person if he were competent to contract; and the provisions of Order XXXII in the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 shall, so far as may be, apply to such application and to the parties thereto and to the guardian appointed thereunder.

Amendment :—By section 53 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), the words 'on or by' have been added to correct a mere clerical error (Report of the Special Committee), and the reference of Chapter XXXI of the old C. P. Code of 1882 has been replaced by a reference to O. XXXII of the present Code.

540. Minor mortgagee :—Where the mortgagee is a minor, the mortgagor may make a tender to the lawful guardian; if he makes a deposit, the notice of the deposit must be served on the lawful guardian. If there is no lawful guardian, and the mortgagor makes a deposit under sec. 83, it is his duty to make an application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of the mortgagee under this section, and to see that a proper person is appointed guardian for the purpose of receiving service of notice under sec. 83. Until the mortgagor has done this, he cannot be said to have "done all that has to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court," so as to exempt the mortgagor from the payment of interest under sec. 84—Pandurang v. Mahadaji, 27 Bom. 23 (29); Sheo Saran v. Ram Lagan, 44 All. 64 (67); Shivanath v. Manohar, 16 O.C. 261, 22 I.C. 245. Gokul v. Chandra Sekhar, 48 All. 611, A.I.R. 1926 All. 665, 96 I.C. 1, 24 A.L.J. 769; Appa Pai v. Somu, 49 M.L.J. 327, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1017, 90 I.C. 754. Where the mortgagor deposited in Court the correct amount but took no steps to have a guardian ad litem appointed by the Court for the minor mortgagee, but merely asked for service of notice on the mortgagee 'under the guardianship of his father,' held that the proceedings were not valid and interest would not cease to run—Sheo Saran v. Ram Lagan, 44 All. 64 (65), 19 A.L.J. 852, 64 I.C. 413 A.I.R. 1922 All. 355. Where the mortgagor applied for the appointment of the minor mortgagee's mothers as their guardians, and notices were issued to the mothers but were not served on them, and Court eventually ordered service by proclamation but no formal order was recorded appointing the mothers as guardians, held that such substituted service was not sufficient. It is necessary for a proper guardian to be appointed that the notice should be served, not by substituted service, but by ordinary service on a person who is capable of becoming a guardian and who agrees expressly or by implication to become a guardian—Phool Kuer v. Rewari, 1930 A.L.J. 1020, A.I.R. 1930 All. 609 (610), 124 I.C. 191. See also Note 511 under sec. 84.

No guardian need be appointed under this section when there is already a guardian of the property of the minor mortgagee; but the fact a certain person had appeared as next-friend of the minor in a previous litigation between the same parties, does not dispense with the necessity of appointing a guardian under this section because the proceedings under this section cannot be called a continuation of the previous suit—Shionath v. Manohar, 16 O.C. 261, 22 I.C. 245.

If there is a dispute as to whether the person in whose favour a deposit is made is a minor or not, the Court has to be satisfied of the fact of minority, and this cannot happen unless the Court inquires into the matter—Ganeshi Lal v. Rohni, 50 All. 655, 26 A.L.J. 355, A.I.R. 1928 All. 311 (312), 108 I.C. 570.

When a mortgage, though executed in favour of a minor member, is in reality a mortgage taken by the head of the joint family of which the minor is a member, the mortgage-money being supplied from the joint family funds, it may well be held that an offer to pay the money on such a mortgage to the managing member of the family is a good and valid tender in the eye of the law, and no guardian ad litem is necessary to be appointed for receiving the tender—Sheo Saran v. Ram Lagan, 44 All. 64 (66), 64 I.C. 413, A.I.R. 1922 All. 355.

The procedure of this section must be strictly fulfilled. Every precaution must be taken to safeguard the interests of the minor, and on this principle, the minor should always have the benefit of any doubt that may exist, where it is a question whether the procedure in a case has been of a nature to bind him or not—Shivnath v. Manohar, supra. The procedure is consequent upon the deposit having been made and not precedent to an intention to make a deposit—Ganeshi v. Rohni, A.I.R. 1928 All. 311 (312), 50 All. 655, 108 I.C. 570.

104. The High Court may, from time to time, make rules consistent with this Act for carrying out, in itself and in the Courts of Civil Judicature subject to its superintendence, the provisions contained in this Chapter.

541. Power to make rules :—The section is an enabling one; it merely empowers the High Court to make rules for carrying out the provisions of this Act, but it does not make it compulsory on the High Court to do so—Mallikarjunadu v. Lingamurti, 25 Mad. 244 (F.B.), 12 M.L.J. 279. In the absence of rules framed under this section, the procedure applicable to suits for the enforcement or realisation of mortgages prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure will apply—Dakhina Mohan v. Basumati, 4 C.W.N. 474; Raja Ram Singhji v. Chunni Lal, 19 All. 205 (208).

Before the procedural section of this Act (i.e., secs. 85—90 etc.) were relegated to the Civil Procedure Code, it was held in a Madras case that this section was wide enough to enable the High Court to make rules for the execution of decrees—Mallikarjunadu v. Lingamurti, 25 Mad. 244 (F.B.). But this decision is no longer of any practical value: for the procedural sections being now incorporated into the new C. P. Code, the rules for the execution of decrees would now be framed under the powers conferred on the High Court by sec. 122 of the Code, and not under this Act.

In the same Madras case, it has been held that this section must be read subject to sec. 15 of the Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104) which provides that the High Court shall have power to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction—Ibid. That is, the rules framed under this section would not be binding upon the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction in suits on mortgages. And so it has also been held in a Calcutta case that the practice and procedure on the Original Side of the High Court in suits on mortgages differ altogether from the practice and procedure in force in the Courts outside Calcutta. The practice on the Original Side of the High Court is based partly on the rules of the old Courts of Equity in England, partly on the present practice in the Courts in England and partly on its own rules, and is not governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. In the Courts outside Calcutta, the practice and procedure has been, and must be, governed by this Act—Mackintosh v. Watkins, 1 C.L.J. 31.

CHAPTER V.

OF LEASES OF IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

105. A lease of immoveable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised, or of money, a share of crops, service or any other thing of value, to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee, who accepts the transfer on such terms.

The transferor is called the lessor, the transferee is called the lessee, the price is called the premium, and the money, share, service, or other thing to be so rendered is called the rent.

“Lessor,” “lessee,” “premium,” and “rent”
defined.

541A. This Act codifies for the first time the law relating to landlord and tenant. Prior to the passing of this Act, the Hindu law was held to be strictly applicable to a tenancy created by express contract between Hindus—see Russick Lall v. Lokenath, 5 Cal. 688; and the English rules regarding the relation of landlord and tenant were applied whenever no precise rule regarding the subject was to be found in Hindu law or other laws—Tara Chand v. Ram Gobind, 4 Cal. 778.

Even in case of a tenancy created after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, if it does not come strictly within this Act, the rule of English law may be applied—Kishori Mohun v. Nund Kumar, 24 Cal. 720. (723). But it has been held by the Privy Council that the Act, though founded on English law and drafted in the first instance by eminent lawyers in England, has only applied the English law so far as it was considered to apply to India. Before therefore resorting to English decisions for determining the relations of landlord and tenant, it should be seen what the law in India is—Hansraj v. Bejoy Lal, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 59 (59-60), 57 Cal. 1176, 57 I.A. 110, 34 C.W.N. 342, 122 I.C. 20.

Before the Act "lease" meant that if the owner of land consented by deed that another person should occupy the land for a certain time, there was a lease—Nagindra v. Purna, 39 C.W.N. 98.

542. Essentials of a lease :—The following things must concur in the making of every good lease :—

(i) There must be a lessor, who is able to make the lease. If any lease is granted by one against whom a decree for recovery of possession on declaration of title has been passed, the lessee gets no title—Rentala Lachaiiah v. Chimmappudi Subrahmanyam, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1793.

(ii) There must be a lessee, who is capable of taking the thing demised.

(iii) There must be a thing demised which is demisable.

(iv) If the thing demised or the thing expressed to be granted be not grantable without a deed, the lease must be made by a deed, containing a sufficient description of the lessor, the lessee, the thing demised, the term granted, and the rent and covenants; and all necessary circumstances must be observed.

(v) If it be a lease for years, it must have a certain commencement, at least when it takes effect in interest or possession, and a certain determination either by an express enumeration of years or by reference to a certainty that is expressed, or by reducing it to a certainty upon some contingent event, which must happen before the death of the lessor or lessee, unless, it should be added, the lease is a permanent one.

(vi) There must be acceptance of the thing demised and of the estate by the lessee—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 16 Edn., pp. 134, 135.

A lease is the outcome of the rightful separation of ownership and possession. Before the lease the owner had the right to enjoy possession of the land but by the lease he excludes himself during its currency from that right. A lease is therefore not a mere contract, but is a transfer of interest in land. It creates a right in rem—Anwar Ali v. Jamini Lal, 43 C.W.N. 797, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 254, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 89.

A statutory tenancy under a Rent Act is a personal right which comes to an end upon the death of the tenant—Nihal Chand v. Shiv Narain, A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 263.

The provisions about the amount of rent, the time of payment thereof and the consequences of default relate to the essential elements of a lease—Lalit Mohan v. Gopalchuck Coal Co., 39 Cal. 284 (297) (F.B.), 12 I.C. 723.

Moreover, it is essential for a lease that the exclusive possession of the property leased should be intended to be vested in the transferee. A right of access to a land for the enjoyment of specific interest therein (e.g., cutting and removing trees) attended by a simultaneous right of possession by some other person does not amount to a lease—Seeni Chettiar v. Santanathan Chettiar, 20 Mad. 58 (F.B.). A lease for undefined area is void—Beharilal v. State of M.P., 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 58.

In order to come within the purview of a lease it should be transfer of a right to the enjoyment of immoveable property—Kadulal v. Beharilal, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 60. An agreement under which a contractor agrees to pay a lump sum in consideration of a right to recover bazar dues or tolls, does not amount to a lease—Kamaludin v. M. C. Bhandara, 1962 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 23. The essential characteristic of a lease is that the subject of it is one which is occupied and enjoyed and the corpus of which does not in the nature of things and by reason of the user disappear—Giridhari v. Meghlal, 45 Cal. 87. (P.C.). Mining leases are leases within the meaning of this section and sec. 108 or within the legal acceptance of the word in this country—Kamakshya v. Comr. of Income Tax, A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 153. But where under the hukumnama a right was given to the grantee to dig mica with 105 Kudalis and to appropriate the mica, the hukumnama was not a lease—Traders & Miners Ltd. v. Dhirendra, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 261, 23 Pat. 115. A coal mining settlement does not partake of his character, but still as some portion, however small, of the surface has to be used for carrying on the mining operations and taking the coal out, to that extent it may be regarded as satisfying the requirements of this section and treated as a lease—Fala Krista v. Jagannath, 59 Cal. 1314, 36 C.W.N. 709 (719, 820), 140 I.C. 788, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 775. A document of lease may contain a direction that the lessee might enjoy all kinds of rights and incomes possessed by the lessor—State of Madras v. Zakini Bivi, A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 749. See also State of Madras v. V. S. Ayyangar, A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 94.

For transfer of possession it is not necessary that the transferee should be put in physical possession of the property. Transfer of the right to be in possession is sufficient—Sanku v. Hari, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch 333 (F.B.). Where a proprietor of sir rights parts with only the occupancy rights in a field and the parties agree that a specified rent shall be paid, then the transfer amounts to a lease—Balram v. Mahadeo, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 389, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 849. Where the terms of the document clearly indicated that what was granted was a right to a furnished cinema house and an exclusive right to the enjoyment thereof was conferred in consideration of a lump sum per month, the transaction was a lease—Kali Prasad v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 149. Delivery of possession of the property demised is not a condition precedent to the creation of a lease. A lessee out of possession can sue for possession but cannot sue for specific performance—H. V. Rajan v. C. N. Gopal, A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 29.

Under a kirayanama executed by the tenant it was agreed that he was taking a plot of land from the landlord for constructing a katcha house on it and to live in it as a reyeya, and it was further agreed that whenever the landlord wanted he could get the land vacated. In a suit by the landlord for possession of the plot and recovery of ground rent, held (1) that the kirayanama could not operate as a lease, nor as a license; (2) but it was perfectly legal, and having been executed by the tenant he was bound by its terms—Ganga Sahai v. Badrul Islam, A.I.R. 1942 All. 330, (1942) A.L.J. 386. If possession is given under a transaction purporting to be a sublease, the transaction being illegal, such possession is not of a licensee but of a trespasser—Jaswantlal Jagjiwandas v. Westrex Company, I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 1482.

Where the user and enjoyment of certain land acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act was granted by it to a railway company which was expressly allowed to have possession of the land for the period of the contract, it was held that the requirements of a lease under this section were present and the company was a lessee from the Government—District Board v. B. N. Railway, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 200, 23 Pat. 931. An annual patta is a lease for one year. It confers no right of transfer or inheritance—Mafizuddin v. Manindra, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 140, I.L.R. (1951) 3 Ass. 35.

Sec. 107 requires that an instrument of lease must be executed both by the lessor and the lessee or the counter parts by each and if the lease be for more than one year it should be registered also. A kabuliyat executed by the lessee alone does not therefore operate as a lease, but it is admissible in evidence for determining the nature of possession—Chotey Lal v. Durga Bai, A.I.R. 1950 All. 661. See also Mohan Lal v. Ganda Singh, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 127 (F.B.), I.L.R. 1943 Lah. 695; Maqbool v. Debi, A.I.R. 1949 All. 55; Md. Liaqat Ali v. Ajudhia Prasad, A.I.R. 1948 All. 212, 1948 A.L.J. 66. In such a case if the lessee remains in possession for 12 years, he acquires a title which a valid lease would have conferred upon him—ibid. Similarly a rent chit executed by the tenant does not amount to a lease. It would however be admissible to prove admission of lease—Ramanna v. Rangaswamy, A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 13. Receipt of rent under misrepresentation does not create a relationship of landlord and tenant—Shamsuddin v. Asst. Custodian, Evacuee Property, A.I.R. 1953 Sou. 73. If a limited company takes some land on perpetual lease the leasehold interest reverts to the lessor on the dissolution of the company unless it is validly assigned by the company before dissolution—Shankar Lal v. Narendra Bahadur Tandon, (1968) 1 Company L.J. 31.

It is only within the competence of the rightful owner of property to lease out that property and a trespasser has no such right—Mt. Lachmina v. Mt. Makfula, A.I.R. 1938 All. 316 (318-19), I.L.R. 1938 All. 441, 175 I.C. 902. Where land belonging to several co-sharers is let out by one of them without the consent of other co-sharers, the lessee does not acquire the right of a statutory tenant and is not entitled to retain possession of the land as such—Ibid, at p. 319.

Where the co-sharer in exclusive possession of certain lands settles them the settlee is entitled to remain on the lands, until the other co-sharers raise any objection and sue trespassers for ejectment, claiming khas possession, whereon a decree for khas possession and not joint possession may be passed—Dassain Nonia v. Ramdeo Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 692.

The agent of an owner having right to grant a lease can execute the lease—Ugar Sen Trebhuwan, A.I.R. 1943 All. 82, 1942 A.L.J. 671. Where the respondent agreed to pay rent to the appellant pending the completion of sale of a house by the appellant's agent there was a tenancy and the respondent was liable for rent—Hanuman Box v. Bibhuti Prasad, A.I.R. 1950 Ass. 17.

Where the plaintiff gave possession of certain land to the defendant under an arrangement that the defendant was to render the usual village service and to give the plaintiff a half share of the produce, it was a case of lease—Sayi v. Subhanna, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 310, (1946) 1 M.L.J. 92. A kharposh grant of certain property made by the owner of an impartible estate in favour of a junior member is not a lease as the grantor has no interest left in the property—Shiba Prasad v. Lakraj Shewakaram & Co., A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 162, 23 Pat. 871. If one person is required to pay a fixed sum periodically to another and is allowed on such payment to carry on business in his own name on the property of the other, the transaction is a lease and not partnership—68 C.W.N. 786.

The term inam means the grant of a freehold interest divesting the grantor of his ownership of the property. Where the instrument provided for payment of rent and cancellation of the grant for non-payment thereof and of re-entry, the grant was held to be a lease and not an inam—Gobinda v. Pattavi, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 161. There is a difference between a lease and a sale of under-proprietary tenure in Oudh—Sant Bux v. Ali Raza, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 129, 21 Luck. 194; Kamala Prasad v. Ram Narain A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 7.

Where a debtor in satisfaction of his debt granted the creditor the right to occupy and enjoy certain land for 20 years, the interest created was a lease and not a mortgage—Kotayya v. Annapurnamma, A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 189. But if on the basis of a compromise in a suit for redemption the mortgagee is allowed to retain possession of the security for a specified period in lieu of the amount payable to the mortgagee for improvement on payment of some definite amount as profits his possession is that of a mortgagee and not of a lease—Sankaran Namboodiri v. Avira Mathai, 1964 Ker. L.T. 75.

Renewal clause in lease :—Where a lease for 5 years contained a renewal clause and the lessee sent a notice to the lessor a few days before expiry of the lease that he was prepared to take a second settlement but in spite of this the lessor instituted a suit for ejectment after serving notice to quit, it was held that the provision of the lease gave an option of renewal to the lessee—Girindra v. Kamini Naih, A.I.R. 1949 Ass. 78. But where the lessee after termination of the lease did not ask for resettlement and remained in possession, the lessor not accepting rent from the lessee, it was held that the lease was not renewed—Tarak v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 41. See in this connection Narendra v. Rampal, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 378, 51 C.W.N. 482. Where the lessee is given the option of 5 years subject only to such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, the option is one to renew the lease on the original terms—H. V. Rajan v. C. N. Gopal.

543. Agreement of lease :—An instrument by which the conditions of a contract of letting are finally ascertained and which is intended to vest the right of exclusive possession in the lessee either at once (if the term is to commence immediately) or at a future date (if the term is to commence subsequently) is a lease; it is said to operate by way of actual demise, and when the lessee has entered under it, the relation of landlord and tenant is fully created. On the other hand, an instrument which only binds the parties, the one to create and the other to accept a lease hereafter, is an agreement for a lease, and although the intending lessee enters, the legal relation of landlord and tenant is not created, unless he also pays rent, in which case he becomes a tenant—Richardson v. Gifford, (1834) 1 Al. & E. 52. See also Governor-General v. Indar Mani, A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 298, 52 P.L.R. 107. Where there is no present demise, the agreement to lease does not operate as a lease, and does not affect the land. It will affect the land only when specifically enforced in a suit properly framed for the purpose, or when followed by the grant of a lease—Rani Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapore Zemindari Co., 22 C.L.J. 44 (49), 19 C.W.N. 347, 28 I.C. 879; Brijnandan v. Jamuna Prasad, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 589. A mere offer or agreement to grant or take a lease does not amount to a lease. Thus, a mere offer by the lessor to grant a new lease after the expiration of the current lease, without stating the terms on which the new lease will be granted, will not operate as a lease—Macnaghten v. Rameshwar, 30 Cal. 831. So also, where a document ran in the following terms : "I take the shop on a rent of Rs. 50 per annum. I shall pay the rent month after month. On non-payment of rent a right to eject the tenant shall at once accrue to the owner of the shop." It was held that the document was nothing more than an unilateral statement drawn up by the intended lessee in which he set out his intention as to various matters. The document was not addressed to any one, it was not accepted by any one, and no one but the executant was a party to it. It was, therefore, not a lease, nor even a counterpart of a lease for as there was no lease in existence, there could be no counterpart. It was not even an agreement to pay rent, because an agreement implies a consent of two parties—Beni v. Puran Das, 27 All. 190 (191). Where a patta is tendered to but is not accepted by a tenant, it is not a lease—Bangat Singh v. Bolama, 8 M.L.T. 371, 7 I.C. 750. As to the admissibility of such documents, see Shubrati v. Kunj Behari, A.I.R. 1946 All. 403, 1946 A.L.J. 236; Hassan Sait v. Mir-Chandani, A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 24. The commencement of a lease is a matter of intention to be ascertained from the facts and circumstances of the case—Iswar Dayal Thakur v. Sheoprasan Singh, A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 71.

Whether an oral agreement is a lease or amounts merely to an agreement to let, is a question of intention of the parties. If the intention was not to create immediately the relation of landlord and tenant or that something more had to be done before the relation commenced, it is to be presumed that their agreement was intended to operate only as an agreement to let and not as a lease. Where, therefore, parties enter into a verbal agreement that on the expiry of the present lease the same be renewed for a further period of three years, the lease to be renewed each year as formerly in accordance with the Waste Lands

Grants Rules, the relationship of landlord and tenant should come into existence on the signing of a new lease at the expiry of the existing lease. Such an agreement is valid, although not reduced to writing—Syriam Land Co. v. Rodriguez, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 220 (222). The plaintiff wrote to the defendant: "I do hereby agree to take by our personal agreement your house and premises No..... on a lease for 21 years" and then the term followed. The defendant replied: "I do confirm your letter.....all terms will be settled on agreement": held that the terms contained in the two letters amounted to a present demise of the said premises and created an immediate interest therein—Ramjoo v. Haridas, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1087 (1039), 52 Cal. 695, 91 I.C. 320. Although the term of a lease is to commence at a future date or a formal document is to be executed, it does not necessarily follow that the agreement will not operate as a present demise—Ibid, at p. 1089. It is immaterial whether possession has passed or not—Sultanali v. Tyeb, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 210 (211, 213), 32 Bom. L.R. 188, 125 I.C. 428. As to the effect of a clause for forfeiture of deposit in a contract of lease see Parampal v. Budh Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 62 and H. V. Low & Co. v. Jyoti Prasad, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 299, 35 C.W.N. 1246, 58 I.A. 392, 135 I.C. 632. Whether an agreement for a lease operates as a present demise or is merely a contract is a matter of construction of the language of the document in each particular case—State of Bihar v. India Copper Corporation Ltd., I.L.R. 38 Pat. 1160.

544. Lease and license distinguished:—The cardinal distinction between a lease and a license is that in a lease there is a transfer of interest in land whereas in the case of a license there is no transfer of interest, although the licensee acquires a right to occupy the land—Secretary of State v. Karunakant, 35 Cal. 82 (92) (F.B.); see also Board of Revenue v. Agent, S. I. Ry. Co., 48 Mad. 368 (F.B.), 86 I.C. 688, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 434, where the distinction is pointed out in detail; Parameswaram Kartha v. Ouseph, 1958 Ker. L.J. 541; Krishanchand v. Gangadhar Juyal, (1964) All. W.R. (H.C.) 329; Shaik Mohamad Shah v. State of Madras, A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 454; Sohanlal Narain Das v. Laxmidas, 68 Bom. L.R. 400. See also In re Burma Shell, 1933 A.L.J. 749 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1933 All. 735 and Bengal & N. W. Ry. v. Janki Prasad, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 362, 163 I.C. 525 (held to be a license); Jai Narain v. Ali Murtaza, A.I.R. 1051 Pat. 190. If the effect of the instrument is to give the holder an exclusive right of occupation of the land, though subject to certain reservations or to a restriction of the purposes for which it may be used, it is in law a demise of the land itself—Secretary of State v. Bhupal, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 739 (743), 57 Cal. 655, 129 I.C. 177; Sherif v. Emperor, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 165 (166), 126 I.C. 872; Durjendra v. K. Shaw, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 147; Ouseph v. Kunjathun, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 189; Ganguly v. Kamalepat, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 236, 51 C.W.N. 208, Kuber Nath v. Gorakh Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 All. 369. Each case must be decided on its own facts and regard must be had to the substance of the agreement and the intention of the parties—ibid; Baldeo v. Rawaram, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 107, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 218; Dammulal v. Mohammad Bhai, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 306. If the land of a hat is leased for a term and an aggregate rent is payable and the control of the hat is in the lessees subject to certain restrictions and reservation in favour of the lessor, it amounts to a transfer of interest in the land—Sherif v. Emperor, supra. Where defendant enters into possession of land as tenant but the deed of lease is inadmissible in evidence, the defendant cannot be deemed to be a licensee—Dammulal v. Mohammad Bhui, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 306.

Where a licensee, a potter, was allowed to erect a mud house by the landlord and the defendant purchased the potter's rights and erected pucca structures without the landlord's consent, it was held that the potter had no transferable rights—Ramkrishna v. Bibi Sohila, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 561 (562), 145 I.C. 567. Where the landlord provides for the use of his tenant residing in a number of rooms a privy which is not expressly included in the lease of the rooms, the tenants are mere licensees in respect of the privy and it remains under the control of the landlord, both as regards user and repairs—Lakhmichand v. Ratanbai, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 115 (117), 51 Bom. 274, 101 I.C. 210. An agreement by a lessee of a limestone mine authorizing a third party to extract and remove limestone on his own behalf is in the nature of a license and not a sub-lease—Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co. v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 372 (379), 15 Pat. 460, 163 I.C. 501; Sri Mungaliamma Temple v. Loganatha Naicker, (1962) 1 Mad. L.J. 128, Gugarmal v. Moti Lal, I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 98. A right to collect and remove leaves from trees for a certain period is a license coupled with a grant amounting to profits a pendre and not lease—Mulji Sicca & Co. v. Nur Mohammad, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 377 (379, 382).

A document which purports to grant a right to cut and remove trees of a certain description for a certain period, and which expressly provides that the grantee has no right to the land, is not a lease, but a mere license to cut trees—Mammi Kutti v. Pazhakkhal, 29 Mad. 353; see also Seeni v. Santanathan, 20 Mad. 58 (F.B.). Where the plaintiff permitted the defendant to occupy his house-site so long as the latter did blacksmith's work for the plaintiff, held that there was no lease but a mere license—Athakutti v. Gobinda, 16 Mad. 97.

An agreement was made by which a certain quantity of grain was agreed to be paid to the owner of a strip of land every year on account of the damage to be sustained by him by his allowing the other party (defendants) to take their cattle or carts over the strip of land, and this agreement created a right in the defendants which could be exercised by their transferees or their servants or agents and could not be revoked by the grantor. Held that this agreement was a lease and not a mere license or easement—Indal v. Debi, 92 I.C. 683, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 174.

Where the document did not create an interest in land it was not a lease but a license coupled with a grant giving exclusive right to cultivate and collect lac—Samarthmal v. Sunderbai, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 325. Where a person has a licence to enter on the land, not for the purpose of enjoying the land, but for removing something from it, namely, a part of the produce of the soil he is not a lessee but a grantee of a profit a prandre—Shantabai v. State of Bombay, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 532. When by a deed the right to rear and pluck fruits for some years from the forests of certain villages is granted no interest in land is created thereby—Manohar Lal Rameswardas v. State of M. P., A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 120. Where a

Kabuliat executed by one party only provided for payment certain rent every month in lieu of occupation of the house, it was not a lease, but a license—Dau Dayal v. Brej Mohan, A.I.R. 1952 All. 344. Where a house belonging to a bank was allowed to be occupied by its manager without payment of rent, so long as he occupied the post, the occupation was as a licensee—Corporation of Calcutta v. Allahabad Bank, A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 109. See in this connection Governor General v. Corpn. of Calcutta, A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 8, 51 C.W.N. 517. Where a Municipality by an instrument granted for 3 years a right to collect fees from the butchers at its slaughter house, it was a license and not a lease—Gopaldas v. Municipality, Hyderabad, A.I.R. 1949 Sind 1. Where the defendant by an agreement obtained the right to enjoy the toddy yield from a coconut garden, but had no right in the land, it was held that he was a licensee and not a lessee of the garden—Vennogopala v. Thirunavakkarasu, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 148, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 155. But where the document was styled as a lease in perpetuity granted for the nistar of cholla grass land in occupancy right stating a yearly rent and that in spite of this the lessor will be entitled to take away wood for fuel and to every other kind of nistar, it was held that the transaction was a lease and not a license—Baldeo v. Rewaram, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 107, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 218. If the stall holders in a market are not allowed to remain in occupation of the stalls beyond the closing hour and pay rent for each day of occupation they are licensees—M. N. Clubwala v. Fida Hussain Saheb, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 610. The right to collect coconut during the period of its growth amounts to a lease—Arumugha Vettian v. Angamuthu Nattar, I.L.R. (1965) 2 Mad. 518. If a divorced wife is allowed to reside in the house to look after the issue of marriage she is a licensee and not a tenant—Bai Hanifa Jusab v. Memin Dadu, A.I.R. 1964 Guj. 44. A right to tap palm trees for making toddy is a lease—Sheikh Jan Mahomed v. Umanath Misra, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 440. A document whereby a tenant agrees to give certain premises to B for five years with an option to renew for another five years and the document is registered as an agreement and not as a lease, it creates a license and not a lease—Sm. Mina Ghosh v. Daulatram Arora, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 633. If an employee is given a personal privilege to stay in a house for the greater convenience of his work he is a licensee even if the employer reserves the right of charging fee for such occupation. A person in exclusive possession is not necessarily a tenant—B. M. Lall v. Dunlop Rubber Co., A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 175; Narayanan Namboodiri v. Appukutty Nair, A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 34. Where after a suit for ejectment has been decreed by a trial court a compromise is arrived at in the appellate court whereby the tenant is allowed to remain in occupation for another five years on payment of rent month by month, the landlord reserving the right to execute the decree on the tenant's failure to pay rent for three consecutive months, the compromise creates a license and not a lease—Konchada Ramamurthy v. Gopinath Naik, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 919. See also Associated Hotels of India Ltd. v. Sardar Ranjit Singh, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 933 where tests have been laid down for ascertaining whether the occupier is a licensee or a tenant. Where residential right is given to a person in respect of a house belonging to a Society on condition that the Society shall have the right to have the house vacated if the occupants fails to keep the house neat and clean or violates the rules of the Society, the occupant is a licensee even though he is in exclusive possession on payment of rent—Santi Sarup v. Radhaswami Satsanga Sabha, Dayalbagh, A.I.R. 1969 All. 248. See also Rajappan Nair K. R. v. Veeraraghavan, I.L.R. (1969) 1 Ker. 1; Chinna Pillai v. N. Govindaswami Naidu, A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 191. Where a municipal committee without executing a written lease in accordance with law by a resolution allows a club to occupy a building for one year during specified hours on payment of rent, the transaction is a licence and not a lease—Punjab State Club v. Municipal Committee, Simla, A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 220. A Kabuliyat authorising the executant to realise dues from the market does not operate as a lease—Sada Sheo v. Raja Jagadambika Pratap Narain Singh, I.L.R. (1957) 2 All. 261. If rooms in a building where a hotel is run are let out the occupants of the rooms are tenants and not licensees—Associated Hotels of India Ltd. v. R. N. Kapoor, A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1262. Where by an indenture P is given the right to remove sludge and occupy a specified area to facilitate such removal, the indenture operates, not as a lease but as a licence—Bengal Agr. & Industrial Corporation Ltd. v. Corporation of Calcutta, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 123.

A license is not determined by forfeiture, even if the licensor's title is denied by the licensee—Punnamma v. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 456, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 473.

As to the difference between an occupier and a tenant see Dinendro v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 915; Nihalchand v. Noratmal, I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 450; Velayudhan Kesava Panicker v. Ibrahim Ismail Saif, (1963) 1 Ker. L.R. 453.

544A. Difference between lease and easement :—The difference between a lease and an easement is well defined. By a lease the owner of the land retains his ownership, but parts with possession. The lessee is entitled to possess the land to the exclusion of all others. But by the granting of an easement the owner of the land retains not only his ownership but also his possession. The grantee does not get possession of the land, but get merely a right to the limited use of the land. Thus where by a Kabuliyat a person has been given merely a passage over the land, the Kabuliyat is not a lease. It merely seeks to create an easement in favour of the grantee—Haran Chandra v. Shyama Charan, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 447, 71 C.L.J. 248, 190 I.C. 433; Ram Prosad Mondal v. Sri Snehalata Ghosh, 71 C.W.N. 17.

544B. Tenancy-at-will :—A tenancy-at-will in English law is determined by the death of either party or by doing any act inconsistent with the continuance of the tenancy—James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 383; see also Anwar Ali v. Jamini Lal, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 254, 43 C.W.N. 797, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 89. The law in India appears to recognize a tenancy-at-sufferance—Abdul Razak v. Seth Nandlal, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 506, (1938) N.L.J. 317. A tenancy-at-will or at sufferance arises by implication of law and is not a creature of a contract—Mozam v. Annala, 46 C.W.N. 366; 75 C.L.J. 444. A tenancy-at-will is determined at the will either of the landlord or of the tenant. The law implies a tenancy-at-will of one party to be a tenancy-at-will of either party. It arises by implication of law in cases of permissive occupation or it may arise expressly by an agreement to let for an indefinite term for a compensation accruing from day to day so long as both parties please. A tenant-at-will is not entitled to notice to quit—Bansidhar v. Ram Charan, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 401, 1940 O.W.N. 586, 189 I.C. 488; see also Ramdhani v. Scott, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 256, 6 P.L.T. 577, 85 I.C. 77; Ram Kishun v. Bibi Sohila, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 561, 14 P.L.T. 685, 145 I.C. 567 and Janki v. Kanhaiya, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 102, 1935 O.W.N. 1238, 159 I.C. 316. Where a tenant who has no right to alienate his right of residence without the permission of the owner of the site, sells it without such permission and the owner of the site takes rent from the purchaser and there is no written document to witness the new tenancy, the purchaser is a tenant-at-will—Abdul Ghafur v. Jeta Mal, A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 74. The distinction between a tenancy-at-will and a tenancy from month to month has been pointed out in Shiv Nath v. Ram Bharosey Lal, A.I.R. 1969 All. 333.

Where a rent note provided that after 11 months the landlord could at his will give the lessee a month's notice to vacate and vice versa, it was held that the lessee was a tenant-at-will at the time of his death—Raman v. Bhagwan, A.I.R. 1950 All. 583, 1951 A.L.J. 179. See also Thacker v. Bhatia, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 13.

A tenant holding over is a tenant-at-will—Kumaraswamy v. Thiruchettambalam, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 369; Gopi Kishan v. Murlidhar, A.I.R. 1953 Aj. 24 (2). Where there was possession under an invalid lease, it was a case of a tenancy-at-will. The law implied this in the first instance and it might be converted into a tenancy from year to year or from month to month as the case might be—Muralidhar v. Tara Dye, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 349. A tenancy-at-will is to be implied from permissive occupation under a void lease. The tenancy-at-will is a license to occupy—Sudhir Kumar v. Dharendra Nath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 625; but see Sudhir Kumar v. Dharendra Nath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 625 where it has been held that a lease is made by possession under a void lease accompanied by payment and acceptance of rent.

There is a distinction between a tenancy-at-will and a tenancy for a fixed term. In the former case the tenancy does not determine until notice to quit has been served on the tenant or he has denied the landlord's title. In the latter case the tenancy is determined automatically at the expiry of the term of the lease, and after that date the relationship of landlord and tenant does not subsist, unless it is proved that there was a novation of contract, express or implied, and the tenancy has been converted into a tenancy-at-will or a tenancy from year to year—Banwari Lal v. Mt. Hussaini, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 410, 42 P.L.R. 535, 191 I.C. 289. Where a tenancy is terminable at the will of the tenant, it is terminable at the will of the landlord also—Ram Lal v. Bibi Zohra, 20 Pat. 115, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 228; Kanwar Lal v. Kamkhya Narayan, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 350. Where the lessee undertakes to vacate on demand by the lessor, the lessee too can terminate the tenancy whenever he expresses his desire to do so to the lessor—Harish Chandra v. Choithmal, 1959 Raj. L.W. 353. The interest of the lessee, unless terminated by terms of the lease, is heritable—Narayana Narasimha. Desh Pande v. Kashiraya Sengappa, A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 35. The interest of a tenant from year to year as well as a tenant from month to month is heritable—Shiv Nath v. Ram Bharosey Lal, A.I.R. 1969 All. 333 (F.B.).

544C. Lease by minor :—A lease granted by a minor through his next friend is not invalid. Where in such a lease a contract of renewal is not enforceable against the minor on account of his disability, such partial failure would not exonerate the lessee from liability to pay the stipulated rent nor entitle him to treat the lease as void. Principles recognized or enacted for the benefit or protection of minors should not be held to apply to their prejudice—Zeebunnissa v. Danagher, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 564 (568, 570), 59 Mad. 942 165 I.C. 384.

545. Lease for indefinite period :—The Calcutta High Court is of opinion that if a lease is made for an indefinite period, the Court should apply the general rule of construction that such a grant enures generally for the life-time of the grantee, unless there are some words showing the intention that a heritable grant is made—Ashutosh v. Chandi Charan, 31 C.W.N. 46, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 179, 99 I.C. 200; Jogesh Chandra v. Makbul Ali, 47 Cal. 979; 25 C.W.N. 857, 60 I.C. 984; Jagadisa v. Bisweswari, 41 I.C. 227 (230) (Cal.); Higgins v. Nobin Chander, 11 C.W.N. 809. See also Md. Azizal Bari v. Raziuddin, 43 C.W.N. 794, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 423, 184 I.C. 216. This rule of construction ought to be applied in spite of the terms of the next section—Ibid. But this rule of construction does not apply if the term for which the grant is made can be definitely ascertained. Thus, the word “taluk” or “etman” used in the deed of grant imports a permanent tenancy—Jogesh v. Makbul, supra. The Bombay High Court, however, is of opinion that in order that there may be a valid lease, it is necessary that there should be fixed a definite period during which the lease is to continue, or that there should be words indicating that the lease is to continue in perpetuity. A disposition of land which purports to be a transfer of the right to enjoy the property neither for a certain time nor in perpetuity is an attempt to create by lease an interest not known to law and as such is bad—Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Secretary of State, 29 Bom. 580.

In the absence of a provision that the tenancy will not continue after the lessee's life-time, a lease for a definite period does not terminate on his death. A lease for an indefinite period on the other hand enures for the life-time only of the lessee, unless there are words in the document or other circumstances indicating an intention to grant a perpetual lease—Rammohanrai v. Sonabai, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 161, 52 Bom. L.R. 97; see also Donkangouda v. Revanshiddappa, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 148, 45 Bom. L.R. 194. In Ram Krishna v. Bargavi, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 424, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 205 though the lease was only for 1 year, the terms thereof contemplated the tenancy to continue beyond the lease on the same terms. A characteristic of a periodical tenancy is that as each period begins it is an accretion to the old tenancy—Utility Articles Manufacturing Co. v. R. B. M. Bombay Mills Ltd., A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 306, 45 Bom. L.R. 605. It is not necessary under this section that every lease must be for a term or in perpetuity. A periodical lease is recognized as one of the lease under this section and is covered by sec. 106—ibid.

Where the lease is totally silent as to duration, the presumption of sec. 106 will apply. A lease for which no term is fixed is a lease running from month to month terminable upon proper notice. Such a lease is heritable—Rajib v. Yanus, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 321 (322), 172 I.C. 543;

Abdul Razak v. Seth Nandlal, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 506 (509), (1938) N.L.J. 317. But it has been held by Nāsim Ali, J. that a grant made for an indefinite period enures, generally speaking, for the life-time of the grantee and such a grant passes no perpetual or heritable interest in the absence of words to that effect or in the absence of it appearing from the object of the grant, the circumstances under which it was created and the subsequent conduct of the parties that a perpetual grant was intended—Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52. His Lordship has further held that a lease which is silent as to the duration of its terms would not be a lease within the meaning of this section—Anwar Ali v. Jamini Lal, 43 C.W.N. 797, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 89, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 254.

A tenancy for a period during which a tenant remained in the station is not bad for uncertainty. The term is definite, if it is defined either by express limitation or by reference to some event which will afterwards fix its exact length—Rām Chand v. Lush, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 890.

The duration of time may be express or implied. A lease between the mortgagor and the mortgagee to last during the pendency of the mortgage is not bad, as the lease is not for an indefinite period but is dependent upon a contingency—Mohammad Cassum v. Ezekial, 7 Bom. L.R. 772; Ramchandra v. Narasinha, 33 Bom. L.R. 590, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 466, 133 I.C. 839.

A lease for a particular period after which an option is given to the lessee to continue in possession on payment of rent, enures for the lessee's benefit. After the expiry of the lease, the lessee can continue in possession as long as he pays the rent, that is, it enures during the lessee's life-time—Abdulrahim v. Sarafalli, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 66 (67), 30 Bom. L.R. 1596, 114 I.C. 374.

546. Lease in perpetuity :—The words "perpetual" and "for ever" are words of fixible amplitude and it the circumstances under which the instrument is made and the subsequent conduct of the parties show an intention with clearness and certainty that a heritable and transferable grant was made, then it is open to the Court to give that meaning to these words—Amar, Krishna v. Nazir Hasan, 14 Luck. 723, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 257 (265), 1939 O.W.N. 825. The words 'istimrari mourasi mokarari' in a lease create a permanent and heritable estate and not merely for the life-time of the grantee, even though no other words indicating a heritable interest (such as, the grantee, his sons and grandsons in succession should enjoy the property in perpetuity) are used in the document—Baikanta v. Lakshman, 41 I.C. 875 (876) (Cal.); Monmohini v. Kalidas, 2 C.W.N. 292. The word 'taluk' used in a lease implies a permanent tenancy; as also, the word 'etman' (used in Chittagong) imports a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure—Jogesh v. Makbul, 47 Cal. 979, 25 C.W.N. 857, 60 I.C. 984. But a lease described as 'istimrari' only is good only for the life-time of the lessee, and cannot create an estate of inheritance in the lessee, in the absence of specific clauses referring to succession and transfer—Haddutt v. Jaikaran, 56 I.C. 656; Gaya v. Ramjiwan, 8 All. 569. So also, the term 'istimrari mokurari' in a lease does not primarily imply a heritable character in the grant as the term.

maunasi does—Naras Singh v. Ram Narain, 30 Cal. 883 (892); Tulshi Pershad v. Narain, 12 Cal. 117 (130) (P.C.); Agin Bindh v. Mohan Bikram, 30 Cal. 20 (31); Beni Pershad v. Dudh Nath, 27 Cal. 156 (165) (P.C.). The words 'istimrari mokarari' do not per se convey an estate of inheritance, but an istimrari mokarari patta, notwithstanding the absence of words indicative of heritability (as ba farzandan, naslan bad naslan, or al-aulal) may be perpetual grant, if the other terms of the instrument, the circumstances under which it was made or the subsequent conduct of the parties show such an intention with sufficient certainty—Ram Narain v. Chota Nagpur Banking Association, 43 Cal. 332, 36 I.C. 321; Tulshi Pershad v. Ram Narain, 12 Cal. 167 (P.C.); Narsingh v. Ram Narain, 30 Cal. 883 (893). A bayam saswatham patta is a lease of a permanent character—Rama Iyenger v. Anga Guruswami, 35 M.L.J. 129, 46 I.C. 62. A mirasidar is a permanent tenant—Ramchandra v. Sidu, 1888 P.J. 30. Mourasi tenures are permanent tenures because the word "mourasi" meaning a succession from generation to generation conveys the idea of permanency—Giribala v. Kedar Nath, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 454 (456), 56 Cal. 180, 117 I.C. 534. The term 'mulgeni' when used in a tenure denotes its permanent character—Nagapaya v. Anantaya, 1891 P.J. 248; Unhamma v. Vaikunta, 17 Mad. 218. The Mukaddami tenure in the United Provinces does not create any permanent or heritable interest in the lessee—Bhagwati v. Hanuman, 23 All. 67. The words 'patni tenure' imply a tenancy of a permanent and heritable character—Turini v. Watson, 3 B.L.R. (A.C.) 437; Modhu Sudan v. Rooke, 25 Cal. 13. A lease for five years stated that at the expiration of the term the lessee was to take a fresh settlement under a fresh kabuliyat, and it further stipulated that the lessee was not to make a gift, sale or mortgage of the tenure to any body. Held that as there were no words of inheritance in the lease, the tenure could not be presumed to be heritable or permanent, and that the tenancy at the end of the five years was for an indefinite period and not in perpetuity—Jagadisa v. Bisweswar, 41 I.C. 227 (230) (Cal.). A lease in which no period is specifically mentioned is not necessarily a perpetual lease—Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52. A lease for five years with a condition that after that period the lessee should hold the property as long as he pleased on the same terms, is a lease merely for the life of the lessee—Higgins v. Nobin, 11 C.W.N. 809.

The omission of the words of inheritance is not conclusive that the lease is not hereditary. So also the prohibition of alienation of the leasehold right does not take away from the permanent character of the tenancy—Rammohanrai v. Sonabai, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 161, 52 Bom. L.R. 97. See also Donkangouda v. Revanshiddappa, A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 148, 45 Bom. L.R. 194. A right of transfer is not a necessary incident of the legal status of a perpetual lessee, and therefore a condition making the rights of the perpetual lessee of a village non-transferable, but heritable, is not illegal—Bhairo v. Ambika, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 374, (1942) O.W.N. 225, 199 I.C. 776. On the other hand the fact that the lessee's interest has been made transferable does not show that it is heritable; for a tenancy for life is transferable under cl. (j) of sec. 108, but not heritable—Donkangouda v. Revanshiddappa, supra.

A lease for building purposes, in the absence of any definite terms in the grant, should be presumed to be a permanent one. The absence of the words 'maurasi mokarari' in such a lease does not necessarily indicate that it was not the lessor's intention to grant a permanent lease—Pramadanath v. Srigobind, 32 Cal. 648; Hira Lal v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 436, 134 I.C. 721; Chapsibhai Dhanjibhai v. Pursottam Matilal, A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 287; Sivayogeswara Cotton Press v. M. Pan-chakoharappa, A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 413. It is extremely unlikely that a lease for residential purposes in a town would be taken on precarious terms. Hence, it has been held by Henderson, J., the fact that premises which are situated in a town are being and have been used for the purpose of residence shows that the lease is permanent—Sukumar v. Nagendrabala, 71 C.L.J. 209, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 393, 190 I.C. 622. See in this connection Commissioners of Income Tax v. Visheswar, 18 Pat. 805, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 24. Where the land is given for building purposes and the tenancy is an ancient one, there is a presumption that it is a permanent lease—Ven-katesh v. Bhujaballi, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 97 (98), 57 Bom. 194, 142 I.C. 481; Kanhaiya v. Abdullah, A.I.R. 1936 All. 385 (386), (1936) A.L.J. 1218, 165 I.C. 402; even in cases of holdings created before the T. P. Act where permanent structures have been built for many years with the landlord's acquiescence and there have been transfers in the past and the rent has throughout remained unchanged, the tenancy is permanent and transferable—Kumud v. Himanshu, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 373 (374), 65 C.L.J. 333; Kamala Moyee v. Nibaran, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 431, 36 C.W.N. 149, 138 I.C. 72; Ambika v. Baldeo, 20 C.W.N. 1113, 1 Pat. L.J. 253, 36 I.C. 125. Where the rent is variable the mere fact that buildings have been erected with the knowledge of the landlord is not sufficient to raise the presumption that the tenancy is permanent—Secretary of State v. Beni Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 444, 170 I.C. 677. The mere fact that permanent buildings have been erected on the land cannot in any way alter the incidence of the tenancy. At most it can be said that if there has been a representation by the landlord which leads the tenant to believe that he has a permanent tenancy and therefore a right to erect buildings there might be an estoppel—Bansi v. Chakradhar, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 569 (572), 17 Pat. 358, 19 P.L.T. 731. See also Ariff v. Jadunath, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 79 (81), 58 Cal. 1235, 58 I.A. 91, 35 C.W.N. 550, 131 I.C. 762. As an instance of such estoppel see Forbes v. Ralli, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 146 (149), 4 Pat. 707, 52 I.A. 178, 30 C.W.N. 49, 87 I.C. 318. Where a Muk-tear took a bemeadi lease in a municipal town for building a basha, erection of corrugated iron sheds with pucca plinths and a pucca compound wall was not inconsistent with the lease being for his life-time and erection of such structures being within his rights, consent to the erection did not import an intention on the part of the lessor to grant a permanent lease or attract the doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence as a bar to ejectment—Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52. Where a lease is granted for the construction of a house with merely a titled or thatched roof and not a pucca roof, the mere fact that the lessee has constructed a pucca structure without interference by the lessor will not estop the lessor from contending that the lease is not a permanent one—Ram Lal v. Bibi Zohra, 20 Pat. 115, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 228 relying on Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, 26 I.A. 58, 21 All. 496, 3 C.W.N. 502 (P.C.). The mere fact that the tenant erected some valuable structures on the land including a pucca wall and a pucca building at the connivance or with the consent of the landlord would not in itself be sufficient ground for holding that the tenancy was a permanent one—Giridhari v. Pur-nendu, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 291, 68 C.L.J. 481, 182 I.C. 8. A lease for an unlimited period in favour of the lessee, her heirs, administrators and assignees at a stipulated yearly rental, for a period of ten years, to be liable thereafter to equitable adjustment as may be determined from time to time, according to the market rate prevailing at the time is a perpetual lease—Maperaji Kumar Irfan Rasul Khan v. U. P. Govt., I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 71.

In order to raise an equitable estoppel when a landlord allows the tenant to erect permanent buildings, it is incumbent upon the lessee to show that the conduct of the owner, whether active or passive, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that he had by plain implication contracted to change the tenancy into a perpetual one. The tenant must further show that he was acting under an honest, though mistaken belief, that he had a permanent right and that the landlord knowing this purposely obtained from interference—Secretary of State v. Rajendra Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 391 (394, 398), 170 I.C. 316; Syed Ali v. Manik, 27 C.W.N. 909. Landlords may refrain for one reason or another from evicting the tenant. No inference as to permanency of the tenancy can be drawn from such conduct—Chagganlal v. Indra Keot, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 495, 194 I.C. 459; see also Abdul Hakim v. Elahi Baksh, 52 Cal. 43, 29 C.W.N. 188, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 309. Where a small piece of land was settled with the tenant and it was intended that the tenant should himself build a house on it and accordingly a house, not of any great value, was constructed on it, it was held that the mere fact of the house being constructed would not of itself create any great likelihood that the tenancy was intended to be a permanent one—Chagganlal v. Indru Keot, supra. See in this connection—Dhammathena v. Nyanokitara, A.I.R. 1942 Rang. 11. But where a trespasser claimed permanent possession and the landlord allowed such person to remain in possession and accepted rent from him on the basis of a permanent tenancy, the latter was estopped from setting up a claim that the tenancy was non-permanent—Bhubaneswari v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 374 (379), 169 I.C. 756; see also Peryanan v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 328 (332), 137 I.C. 487. But where a person is given possession of land as tenant, the mere fact that he asserts a permanent tenancy will not by lapse of time (60 years in this case) convert the tenancy into a permanent one—Baman v. Khandarao, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 247, 37 Bom. L.R. 376, 156 I.C. 120. No tenant in this country can obtain any right of permanent tenancy by prescription against his landlord from whom he holds the land—Nainapillai v. Ramanathan, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 65, 47 Mad. 337, 51 I.A. 83, 82 I.C. 226; Md. Mumtaz Ali v. Mohan Singh, A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 118, 50 I.A. 202, 45 All. 419, 74 I.C. 476; Gopala v. Juvappa, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 587, 133 I.C. 359.

It has however been held that possession of a limited interest in immoveable property may be just as much adverse for the purpose of barring a suit for determination of that limited interest, as adverse possession of a complete interest in the property operates to bar a suit for the whole property—Ramasray v. Ramsurat, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 131, 21 P.L.T. 181, 184 I.C. 838; so also Ishan Chandra v. Ramranjan, 2 C.L.J. 125. But the simple assertion of a proprietary right in a judicial proceeding cannot by the mere lapse of six or twelve years convert what was an occupancy or tenant title into that of an under proprietor—Amar Krishna v. Nazir Hasan, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 257, 14 Luck. 723, 1939 O.W.N. 825; Narayana Narasimh Desh Pande v. Kashiraya Sen, A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 35. Similarly if a landlord serves a notice to quit on a tenant and instead of taking further steps to evict him accepts rent from him for a period of more than 12 years, the tenant cannot in a subsequent suit for ejectment take the plea that he has acquired a right to remain in occupation by adverse possession—Chagganlal v. Indra Kesh, supra. An oral permanent lease acted upon for more than 12 years creates a permanent lease by adverse possession—Abdul Ghafoor v. Lala Kunj Behari, A.I.R. 1957 All. 346.

Where a permanent mokarari lease contained a clause that "on the lessee's failure to pay rent according to the instalments every year," the mokarari will be cancelled at the end of the year, held that the clause merely provided for the forfeiture of the mokarari tenure, but did not affect the permanency of the tenure—Meghlal v. Rajkumar, 34 Cal. 358 (361); Bhagwati v. Balgobind, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 161 (162), 8 Luck. 377, 142 I.C. 885. A slight increase of rent, provision for eviction on default of payment of rent or relating to the cutting down of trees or digging of new tanks, prohibition against sale or mortgage do not affect in any way the permanent character of a tenancy—Bhabataran v. Trailakhya, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 764 (766), 59 Cal. 1282, 36 C.W.N. 632, 140 I.C. 743; Hafiz Mahammad v. Hari Ram, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 370 (377), 39 P.L.R. 602.

A mere long and continuous possession "for a time so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" is by itself insufficient to raise a presumption of permanency—Narayan v. Dowlata, 15 Bom. 647; Nahanchand v. Modi Kekhushru, 31 Bom. 185; Kamal v. Nandalal, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 37, 56 Cal. 738, 33 C.W.N. 211, 116 I.C. 378; Subramanya v. Subramanya, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 156, 52 Mad. 549, 56 I.A. 248, 33 C.W.N. 734, 116 I.C. 601. Mere long possession of homestead land is not sufficient to justify the presumption of a permanent grant, and before such a presumption can be made, there must be something more, viz., that either the land was let for the erection of pucca buildings, or that the landlord stood by while the tenant erected permanent buildings or effected substantial improvements on the land—Nabu v. Cholim, 25 Cal. 896 (908); Secretary of State v. Rajendra Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 391, 170 I.C. 316; Atmakuri Rajeswar Rao v. Joinadha Patro, 34 Cut. L.T. 1131. A distinction should be drawn between cases in which the origin of the tenancy cannot be traced, and cases in which the origin of the tenancy is known. Where the origin of the tenancy is known and the terms thereof were put in writing at the inception of the tenancy, the tenancy is not a permanent one—Ram Lal v. Bibi Zohra, 20 Pat. 115, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 228 relying on Secretary of State v. Luchmeswar Singh, 16 I.A. 6, 16 Cal. 233. Where the origin of the tenancy and the circumstances attending its creation are not known, evidence of the mode of dealing with the land demised and of the acts and conduct of the parties generally is an evidence to prove the nature of the tenancy—Ismail Khan v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (582); Syed Ali v. Manik, 27 C.W.N. 969. In such a case, the facts of long possession of a land by the tenants and their ancestors at an unaltered rate of rent, and of the landlord having permitted them to build a pucca building which has existed for a very considerable time and which has been added to by successive tenants, and of the tenure having been from time to time transferred by succession and purchase wherein the landlord acquiesced are sufficient to warrant the Court in presuming that the tenancy is a permanent one—Caspersz v. Kedar Nath, 28 Cal. 738; Grant v. Robinson, 11 C.W.N. 242; Nilratan v. Ismail, 32 Cal. 51 (P.C.); Upendra v. Ismail, 32 Cal. 41 (P.C.); Nabakumari v. Behari, 34 Cal. 902 (P.C.); Debendra v. Pashupati, 35 C.W.N. 1047 (1051), 136 I.C. 889, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 198; Afzalunnissa v. Abdul Karim, 47 Cal. 1 (P.C.); Dargahan v. Hafiz Mahammad, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 333 (334), 176 I.C. 562; Pramatha v. Champa, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 473 (474), 56 Cal. 275, 118 I.C. 353; Rukmini v. Rayaji, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 454 (455), 48 Bom. 541, 83 I.C. 45; Madhusudan v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 7 (8), 173 I.C. 259; Satyendra v. Charu, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 100, 40 C.W.N. 854, 161 I.C. 427; Hafiz Muhammad v. Shaik Dargahan, 18 Pat. 571, 20 P.L.T. 579, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 448; Ram Daur v. Lachmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 All. 51, 1941 A.L.J. 7; Anant v. Ramdhan, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 350, 179 I.C. 940; U. P. Government v. Church Missionary Assn., A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 54, 22 Luck. 93. The mere fact of the land being brought under cultivation subsequently cannot nullify the lease originally granted and alter the position of the lessee and his successors to that of agricultural tenants—Ram Daur v. Lachmi Prasad, supra. If, however, the origin of the tenancy is known, any presumption arising from long possession is negatived, and evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties is not admissible to prove the permanency of the tenancy; and if it is found that the tenancies were created by kabuliyats or pattas which did not contain any words of inheritance, and which limited the tenant's rights to the term of the possession of landlord who happened to be a mativalli, the fact that the tenants held the lands at a fixed rent for a very long period and that the holdings had been the subject of several transfers is not sufficient to warrant the presumption that the tenancy was, when first created, intended to be permanent—Ismail Khan v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (582, 583). Where the evidence shows the origin and the particular purpose of a tenancy, long continued possession at a low and unvaried rent does not prove a permanent tenancy—Secretary of State v. Luchmeswar, 16 Cal. 223, (P.C.); Kamal v. Nandalal, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 37, 56 Cal. 738, 33 C.W.N. 211, 116 I.C. 378. But the fact that a tenancy has been held at a low rate of rent for a considerable number of years though the whole of the land and with it the letting value thereof has increased to a great extent is an element which with other facts leads to an inference of fixity of rent and of permanency—Prodyot Kumar v. Radhakisen, (1938) 42 C.W.N. 304. Where a person is unable to prove the terms of the tenancy, it must be assumed, in the absence of circumstances to the contrary, that the tenancy was from year to year or a tenancy-at-will. Such a tenancy can be determined on the expiry of the year or by a pure demand for, or suing for, possession—Surja Mohan v. Rama Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 37, 189 I.C. 745 relying on Martin v. Smith, 30 L.T. 268. The onus of proving that a tenancy is permanent is on the tenant—Abdul Ghafoor v. Lala Kunj Behari, A.I.R. 1957 All. 346.

Lost grant :—Where the origin of the tenancy is unknown and is lost in antiquity, the principle of lost grant can be invoked, and from the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances the Court can make a presumption of permanency—Tirtha Naik v. Lal Sadananda, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 99. Where the defendant was in possession for a very long time under a claim that he was a rent-free tenant under the plaintiff and the record of rights support his claim, the presumption of lost grant arose—Manohar v. Charu, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 285. See also Kumud v. Province of Bengal, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 209, 81 C.L.J. 274. The presumption of lost grant of permanent tenancy is equally applicable to agricultural land—Dinabandhu v. Gopinath, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 12, 13 Cut. L.T. 10. A presumption of an origin in some lawful title may in certain circumstances be made in cases of long and quiet enjoyment, but it cannot be made where there is sufficient evidence of the nature of the grant and the persons to whom it was made—Satyanarayana v. Venkatapayya, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 195. There can be no presumption of a lost grant in favour of a fluctuating and unascertainable body of persons constituting the inhabitants of a village. Such right can only be acquired by custom—Braja Sundar v. Mani Behara, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 247, 1951 S.C.J. 363, 30 Pat. 871. Where no custom is pleaded, the Court cannot hold that the right of tenancy has been acquired by prescription—Sahabu v. Hari Ram, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 43. See in this connection Muthegowda v. Narayanappa, A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 29.

Service tenure :—Where the holder of a service tenure did not produce any sanad nor proved otherwise that the grant was of estate burdened with certain services, but merely contended that the land had been allowed to devolve from father to son and that the tenure was created many years ago and that the Zamindar did not avail himself of the services but allowed her to hold on, it was held that there was no justification for holding that the grant was of a permanent heritable character—Hari Shankar v. Chandu Urain, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 362, 1939 P.W.N. 99, 183 I.C. 80, following Radha Prasad v. Budhu Dashad, 22 Cal. 938. Where the holder of a service tenure refuses to perform the services on the ground that no services can be demanded from her, such tenant is liable to be ejected without notice to quit, Ibid following Hurrogobind v. Ramrutno, 4 Cal. 67.

But see Radha Gobinda Jeu v. Shyam Ray Jeu, A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 208, 52 C.W.N. 319 where it has been held that the inability or unwillingness of the holder of the service tenure to perform the services does not entitle the grantor to put an end to the tenure, in the absence of a provision to that effect in the agreement. At any rate the tenant would be entitled to a reasonable notice before he can be evicted. Whether the notice is reasonable or not is a question of fact—Rudra Narayan v. Chintargm, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 86, I.L.R. (1951) 3 Ass. 171 ; Balarami v. Duvvuru Joya Singh, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra: 477.

A Zemindar is not entitled to resume the grant of land burdened with service, even if it is of a personal nature, so long as the grantee is willing to perform the services, whether required by the grantor or not, unless the terms of the grant establishes such a right—Padmalochan v. Budhram, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 85, 27 Pat. 313. Where a grant of land was made by the jagirdars to their Patels as remuneration for future services and the grant was subsequently converted into inam by Government, it could resume and regrant such lands to rotatory working Patel—Viswarao v. Bhagwat, A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 20. Resumption depends upon the nature and extent of the terms of the grant—Sooramma v. Venkataratnam, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 166.

Once a tenure is held to be a service tenure the onus to prove that the holder thereof had the right to hold the same in his own right adversely to the Zamindar lies on the holder—Hari Shankar v. Chandu Urain, supra. There is no presumption whether the grant is one in lieu of wages or one burdened with service. The question is one of fact—Dodla Balarami v. Duvvuru Joya Singh, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra. 477.

Onus :—Broadly speaking the burden of proof of permanent tenancy is on the tenant—Hafiz Muhammad v. Shaik Dargahan, 18 Pat. 571, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 448; see also Kamal Kumar v. Nanda Lal, 33 C.W.N. 211, 56 Cal. 738, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 37; and long possession with uniform payment of rent is not sufficient to prove permanent tenancy—Bantu v. Mantha, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 88, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 168. Where the grantee of a lease alleges that the lease is a permanent one, it is for him to prove by definite evidence that it is so—Secretary of State v. Chimanlal, A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 161, 44 Bom. L.R. 295. If the lease is for 99 years, there is nothing strange if pucca structures are built by the grantee on the land, because in such a case the structures would be built in the expectation that the lease would be renewed, even though at higher rent, on the termination of the period—Ibid. Mere proof of long occupation at a low and uniform rent does not shift the onus from the lessee on to the lessor—Hira Lal v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 436 (443, 444), 33 Bom. L.R. 828, 134 I.C. 721; Gopala v. Juvappa, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 577, 133 I.C. 369. Where land is let after the passing of the T. P. Act for building purposes or otherwise it lies on the lessee to show that by the terms of the grant he was entitled to occupy the land in perpetuity. Unless he adduces evidence to rebut the presumption arising under sec. 106 in favour of the lessor, he is bound to be treated as a year to year or a month to month tenant, as the case may be. The fact that he holds under a building lease will not prevent the presumption arising in favour of the lessor—Nand Ram v. Saraj Hussain, A.I.R. 1938 All 42 (43), I.L.R. 1938 All. 53, 173 I.C. 153. Where a permanent tenant or his predecessor-in-title executed leases containing conditions inconsistent with permanent tenancy, a strong presumption against permanent tenancy arises, and it is for the tenant to show that the tenancy is permanent and why he or his predecessor accepted such conditions—Hamidullah v. Abdul Khaliq, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 56, 165 I.C. 322.

The inference of permanence of a tenancy is an inference which requires the presence of circumstances explicable, when taken as a whole, only on the hypothesis of permanence—Harendra v. Benoyendra, 75 C.L.J. 431. Such inference only be drawn where the facts point irresistibly to the conclusion of permanency; and where the facts are equally consistent with permanency or a tenancy-at-will, then permanency cannot be inferred—Ram Ranbijaya v. Ramjivan, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 397, 23 P.L.T. 294, 8 B.R. 727, 200 I.C. 769; Singaraju Rama Rao v. Nellore Linga Reddy, 1956 Andhra. W. R. 89. In the case of a non-agricultural tenancy, the origin of which is not known, the question whether the tenancy is permanent or precarious is not only a legal inference from facts, but is also not itself a question of fact—Ibid. In so far as it depends upon facts, the finding of the Court of first appeal must be accepted in second appeal—Ibid. The payment of selami, substantial in amount, is one of the surest indications of permanency—Bara Lal v. Bhaju Mian, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 499.

Bemiadi lease :—A bemiadi lease may or may not be permanent according to the circumstances of the case. In ascertaining the nature of the grant, the Court must construe the lease according to the expressions used in it along with the surrounding circumstances—Dinanath v. Janaki, 55 Cal. 435, 110 I.C. 368, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 392 (394); Forbes v. Hanuman Bhagat, 2 Pat. 452, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 88, 77 I.C. 32; Bara Lal v. Bhaju Mian, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 499. In both these cases, it was held, upon a proper construction of the terms of the bemiadi lease, that it was a permanent grant. But in another case, where the grant of bemiadi lease included the minerals and was hereditary, it was held, upon a construction of the lease, that it was only a lease from year to year, and not a permanent one—Parshan v. Tulsi, 2 P.L.J. 180, 39 I.C. 658. A bemiyadi lease was obtained after the expiry of the last of the six meyadi leases. The lessee paid a substantial premium and agreed to pay enhanced annual rent with power to increase rent under specified circumstances, but the lessee was in no case entitled to an abatement of the fixed rent nor was he entitled to surrender. The lessee was further prevented from granting bemiyadi sub-lease to any shop-keeper and the lessor was entitled to take khash possession under specified circumstances: held that the lease was permanent, determinable only in the special case therein provided, and not on service of notice to quit—Janaki Nath v. Dina Nath, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 207, 35 C.W.N. 902, 133 I.C. 732, affirming Dina Nath v. Janaki, supra. An inference of permanent tenancy is a question of fact—Abdul Ghafoor v. Lala Kunj Behari, A.I.R. 1957 All. 346.

547. Immoveable property :—See Notes 17-18 under sec. 3.

A right to collect dues from a weekly market is a right in immoveable property—Sikandar v. Bahadur, 27 All. 462. A lease of a hat (market) is a lease of immoveable property—Surendra v. Bhai Lal, 22 Cal. 752. The right to collect lac from trees is immoveable property—Parmanandy v. Birkhu, 5 N.L.R. 21, 1 I.C. 903.

If trees are sold for being cut and removed within a reasonable time, it is a sale of moveable property; on the other hand if during a certain period of transfer the transferee is entitled to appropriate the produce, it is a lease of immoveable property—Dan Singh v. Janki Saran, A.I.R. 1948 All. 386, 1949 A.L.J. 46. But a right merely to cut and remove trees and not to enjoy the produce of the trees, is not an interest in immoveable property—Mathura v. Jadubir, 28 All. 277 (278). A tree patta differs from an ordinary ryotwari patta in being more in the nature of a lease which was the original meaning of the word patta—Secretary of State v. Hussain Saheb, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 783, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 13, 1940 M.W.N. 573. A lease of a right to take juice from fruits from palmyra trees and to cut such leaves which are necessary to be cut in drawing juice, is not, however, a lease of immoveable property and does not require registration—Natesa v. Thangavelu, 38 Mad. 883 (885). But in a later case the same High Court has held that the right to tap cocoanut trees for getting toddy is in the nature of immovable property, because it is a benefit arising out of land—Venugopala v. Thirunavukkarasu, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 148, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 155. A yajman vritti, which denotes an obligation imposed upon the priest to perform certain religious rites, and which carries with it certain emoluments, is not immoveable property in the proper sense of the term, although it is treated as such; and the transfer of the duties and obligations attached to the status of a priest cannot be said to be a transfer of a right to enjoy immoveable property so as to amount to a lease—Kodulal v. Beharilal, 25 S.L.R. 451, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 60, 137 I.C. 136.

The property sought to be leased must be in existence, i.e., must be under the control of the lessor. Where the subject-matter of a contract purporting to be a lease was a property not only not in the possession of the transferor, (viz., a property which was mortgaged and was in the possession of the mortgagee), but also was one to which the transferor might never establish a title to redeem, and the document of lease provided that a suit was to be brought to redeem the property, and upon possession being recovered the rent agreed upon in the contract should become payable, held that having regard to the terms of the lease it was not operative in effecting a present transfer of the property leased, but was only a contract of lease to be performed in future—Mohendra Nath v. Kali Proshad, 30 Cal. 265.

There is nothing in the T. P. Act to preclude the lease of a reversion. If a document has mentioned simply that a lease of the lands which were also the subject matter of a prior lease is being granted, that would in law, without anything more, operate as an assignment of the reversion and entitle the lessee under the later lease to recover the rent due and payable under the former lease—Rathnaswami v. Nagaraja, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 100 (101, 102), 46 M.L.W. 730. The distinction between the assignment of rents and profits and the lease of a reversion has been pointed out in this case.

Commencement of a lease:—When a lease executed on a particular date provides that the lease shall commence from a subsequent date, the grantee becomes a tenant not from the date when it is executed but from the date when the lease is to commence—Birendra Pratap Singh v. Gulwant Singh, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1068.

548. Consideration of lease:—In India there may be a lease even if no rent is payable. But where rent is payable annually, the agreement to pay rent is a valuable consideration although no salami is paid—Rajendra v. Jogjiban, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 440, 51 C.W.N. 767. One of the essentials of a lease is that there should be a consideration to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the lessor. Plaintiff and defendants purchased certain shares in a certain village and entered into an agreement by which one of the defendants was to realise his share of profits from certain tenants, and the plaintiff and the remaining defendants were each to realise the rent from all the other tenants of the village and take all the profits for a period of six years in turn. Held that the agreement was not a lease because one of the essentials of a lease, viz., consideration to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the lessor, was entirely absent in it. The agreement was nothing but an agreement between co-sharers as to the method of distribution of profits. Instead of dividing the profits each year, it was agreed that each party should take the profits for six years in turn—Sita Ram v. Sarju Prasad, 25 O.C. 39, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 201, 68 I.C. 333.

When the owner of a piece of land grants a perpetual lease of it in consideration of rent to be paid as well as premium, he has got no charge on the lease-hold right for the premium as the grant was not a sale—Venkatacharyulu v. Venkatasubba, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 55 (56), 48 Mad. 821, 90 I.C. 725.

As to whether a particular sum is a premium or purchase price of an electric generating station purported to be let out, see U. P. Electric Supply Co., in re, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 803, 38 C.W.N. 627, 61 Cal. 556, 152 I.C. 601.

Price paid:—The price paid may be an outstanding debt. A document may amount to a lease though the consideration partly consists of an advance made long before the date of execution of the lease—Beni Prasad v. Mulchand, 6 I.C. 817, 6 N.L.R. 65 ; Nidha Shah v. Muralidhar, 25 All. 115 (P.C.). A premium cannot be regarded as rent simply because it is payable in instalments—Commissioner of Income tax v. Panbari Tea Co., A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1871.

549. Rent :—One of the indicia of rent is its recurring character on specified occasions—Harimohan v. C. K. Sen & Co., A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 391. But personal agreement by the lessee to pay a certain annual sum may not be rent—Ananta v. Bibhuti, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 293, 23 Pat. 334. Where the covenant does not provide for the place where rent is payable, the tenant is to find the landlord—Satibai v. Vishnebai, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 280, 55 Bom.L.R. 242. Unless there is an express agreement to pay enhanced rent or there are circumstances or conduct from which one can be inferred, a claim for enhanced rent is not maintainable—Ranjilal v. Ahmad Ali, A.I.R. 1952 M.B. 56. Municipal Taxes paid by a lessee can be regarded as part of the rent—S. Yusufuddin v. A. V. Ramalingam & Co., 1958 Andh. L. T. 723 ; Rupeswari Devi v. Lokey Nath Hosiery Mills, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 608.

Where a fixed quantity of paddy was payable at rent and in case of default a fixed sum was payable as its price, on default it was held that the landlord was entitled to recover only the stipulated sum and not the price of the crop at the market rate—Md. Sheikh v. Ramesh, A.I.R. 1954 Ass. 45 ; Mulluk Chand v. Surendranath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 217 ; Raman Kunhappu v. Ali Ahmed, A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 80.

A servant who occupies land rent-free by way of remuneration for his service is a tenant, and the service rendered by him is to be deemed as rent—Bandhu v. Balram, 15 C.P.L.R. 42. So also, where it was agreed that instead of paying rent, the defendant was to give his service as a family doctor to the plaintiff, it was held that the agreement between the parties amounted to a lease—Jyotish Chandra v. Ramanath, 32 Cal. 243, 8 C.W.N. 904.

A and B as owners and C as their tenant bring a suit for possession against the defendants as trespassers. The suit is comprised on the terms that the defendants are to hand over possession to C by a certain date and that in the meantime they are to pay rent at a certain sum per month. No lease is created by the decree between C and the defendants—Bui Manuben v. Bhimabhai Nagariji, A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 471.

In the case of a coal mine, the rent is a royalty on the amount of minerals extracted, payable at fixed intervals of time—Manindra Chandra Nandy v. Secretary of State, 5 C.L.J. 148 (172).

A certain sum described as collection charges and mentioned in the lease as payable annually in addition to rent and forming part of the consideration for the lease, is not to be regarded as abwab but as part of the rent—Radha Charan v. Golak, 31 Cal. 834. So also, the stipulation to pay collection charges at 2 annas in the rupee is in reality a part of the consideration of the lease, and so long as it is certain and definite in its nature, it would be enforced—Muhammad Fayez v. Janoo, 8 Cal. 730.

The payment of muhtarifa is not necessarily a payment of cess, but is in the nature of rent by non-agricultural tenants for occupation of the village Abadi—Muhammad Abdul Hai v. Nathu, 27 All. 183.

The amount which a patnidar agrees to pay to the Zemindar on account of Chowkidari tax is considered as rent—Assanulla v. Thirthabasini, 22 Cal. 680. But the amount which the tenant agrees to pay to the Government as land revenue on behalf of the Zemindar is not rent—Sheikh Gulam v. Kashinath—25 Bom. 244. Where a lease provides that municipal taxes and electric charges are payable by the tenant, both items form part of rent—Khemchand Dayalji & Co. v. Mohamadbhai Chandbhai, (1965) 6 Guj. L. J. 829. But where accommodation is provided rent free to the employees, money paid by them for conservancy and repairs is not rent—Br. India Corporation Ltd. v. Excise and Taxation Commissioner, Punjab, I.L.R. (1957) 2 Punjab. 1840.

By payment of rent of a particular amount no permanent tenancy can be established by prescription. The acceptance of rent specified in an unregistered document which required registration creates no estoppel in a suit to eject the tenant, for there is no representation that the acceptance of the rent should confer tenancy on the terms suggested—Datto v. Babasaheb, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 194 (197), 58 Bom. 419, 150 I.C. 555. Displaced persons from Pakistan put up structures on a vacant site controlled by the Improvement Trust without the consent of the Trust. Some compensation wrongly described as rent was paid by them for use and occupation. Held that they were trespassers even though rent was accepted from them—Gurcharan Singh v. Delhi Improvement Trust, A.I.R. 1955 Punjab 34. From the use of the word rent in the receipt it cannot be inferred that a tenancy has been created—Dr. Rikhy H. S. v. The New Delhi Municipal Committee, A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 554.

550. Lease with security :—In consideration of the lessee paying to the lessor Rs. 4,000 by way of security without interest, the lessor leased certain lands to the lessee for a term of years, with a provision for return of the deposit of Rs. 4,000 after the expiry of the term. Held that the transaction amounted to a lease and not a mortgage—Sital Prosad v.

Dildar Ali, 1 P.L.J. 1, 33 I.C. 408; Sitaramma v. Ankaiah, A.I.R. 1957 Andhra Pra. 504; Krishnan v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 239.

As regards Zur-i-pesghi leases, see Note 344 under sec. 58.

106. In the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, a lease of immoveable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy; and a lease of immoveable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by fifteen days' notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy.

Every notice under this section must be in writing, signed by or on behalf of the person giving it, and tendered or delivered either personally or to the party who is intended to be bound by it, or to one of his family or servants at his residence, or (if such tender or delivery is not practicable) affixed to a conspicuous part of the property.

Every notice under this section must be in writing signed by or on behalf of the person giving it, and either be sent by post to the party who is intended to be bound by it or be tendered or delivered personally to such party, or to one of his family or servants, at his residence, or (if such tender or delivery is not practicable) affixed to a conspicuous part of the property.

Amendment :—This section has been amended by sec. 54 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

551. Agricultural lease :—Although this section speaks of leases for agricultural purposes, still such leases have been expressly exempted from the provisions of this Act by sec. 117, infra. The presumption of this section should not be applied to agricultural tenancies. The reason is that agricultural tenants hold lands for an unlimited period subject to the performance of the obligations incident to the tenure. Any presumption such as is warranted by this section if made in the case of agricultural tenancies would be incompatible with the ordinary local conditions—Cheekati v. Ranasooru, 23 Mad. 318; Venkata v. Dandamudi, 20 Mad. 299; Narayana v. Orr, 12 M.L.J. 447; Venkatachala v. Ranganatha, 24 M.L.J. 571, 20 I.C. 374; Moore v. Makhan Singh, 53 I.C. 180 (Pat.); Veeranna v. Annasami, 21 M.L.J. 845, 12 I.C. 1; Mahomed Ayejuddin v. Prodyat Kumar, 25 C.W.N. 13, 61 I.C. 503.

But although by virtue of sec. 117, the present section does not apply to agricultural leases, the rules in this section being founded on reason and equity apply, and a notice giving a reasonable time to the tenant to vacate is sufficient—Brahmayya v. Sundaramma, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 275

(F.B.), I.L.R. 1948 Mad. 757; Narayanan v. Maunadier, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 127, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 559; Bapayya v. Venkataratnam, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 884; Verugopala v. Thirunavukharasu, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 148, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 155. It has been held by the Nagpur High Court that where such a lease is invalid for want of registration, the relation of the parties will be governed by sec. 106 and the tenant will be one from year to year—Karimullakhan v. Bhanupratap Singh, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 265, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 978.

The requirement of this section as to notice does not apply to an agricultural lease, unless it is required by the special enactment governing the lease. Thus, the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act does not require that the raiyat seeking to eject an underraiyat should serve him with notice before the expiry of the agricultural year; and the provisions of this section as to notice will not apply to the case—Jhagru v. Raghunath, 10 P.L.T. 625, 119 I.C. 551, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 630 (633).

The reasonable notice to quit mentioned above need not necessarily determine the tenancy at the end of a year. It will be for the final Court of fact in each case to determine what is reasonable notice having regard to all the circumstances and whether it would be reasonable for it to determine with the year—Damodar v. Lachimi, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 354 (356), 7 Pat. 496, 110 I.C. 642; Nabin v. Ramesh, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 745, 37 C.W.N. 727, 60 Cal. 771, 116 I.C. 858.

For the meaning of the word 'agricultural' see under section 117.

551A. Manufacturing lease :—The word "manufacturing" in this section should be given its commonly understood meaning. The popular concept is that there must be the production of a new or a different article. In this sense printing simpliciter is not manufacturing—Sati Prasanna v. Md. Fazel, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 320. At the time of creation of the lease, if both parties know that, it is for manufacturing purposes. If not, then subsequent user of the premises by the tenant without the landlord's consent will not convert the lease into one for manufacturing purposes—ibid.; Bulkan Sah v. Gaga Devi Nathani, A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 214. A lease for mixed purposes like dwelling, setting up printing press and for ordinary business purposes is not a lease for "manufacturing purposes." It is for "any other purposes" within sec. 106—ibid. But where the essential part of a hosiery manufacture, namely, the knitting and cutting operations were carried on in the premises, the lease was held to be for manufacturing purposes. The fact that the yarn was not produced in the premises is immaterial—Jayanti Hosiery Mills v. Upendra, A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 317, 50 C.W.N. 441. In deciding whether a lease is for manufacturing purposes, the original intention of the parties must be looked into and not the subsequent conduct of the lessee. Where after taking a lease for a show room, the lessee began to carry on a manufacturing operation in the premises, the lease is not converted into one for manufacturing purposes—Manzoor Ali v. Lal Devi, A.I.R. 1951 All. 396, 1951 A.L.J. 154. Where the tenancy is for residential and manufacturing purposes the tenancy is for any other purpose and not for manufacturing purposes—L. A. Saunders v. Land Corporation of Bengal, A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 169; Ramesh v. Surya Properties Ltd., A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 198. In the case of a lease to a company the purpose of the lease is to be ascertained not with reference to the memorandum of business but with reference to the actual business done by the company—Steurat & Co. Ltd. v. C. Mackertich, A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 198. A lease for both building and repairing of coaches and motor cars is one for manufacturing purpose—Ibid. If a lessee to the knowledge of the lessor uses the land for manufacturing purposes, then, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, he is entitled to six months' notice—Ibid. If hosiery goods are manufactured in a rented premises the tenancy is one for manufacturing purpose even if one room is occupied by an officer for residence—Rupeswari Devi v. Lokenath Hosiery Mills, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 608. Where a tenant under a lease for manufacturing purposes admits in his written statement and evidence payment of monthly rent, the deed of lease being inadmissible in evidence, the lease is from month to month—Binda Din v. Sm. Prun, 1968 All. L.J. 721. A lease for starting a motor repairing workshop is not a manufacturing lease—Krishna Das v. Bidhan Chandra, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 181.

552. Scope of section :—The provisions of this section relating to notice do not apply to suits instituted before this Act came into operation—Amabai v. Bhau, 20 Bom. 759; or to a tenancy which commenced prior to this Act—Haridas v. Upendra, 22 C.L.J. 75, 16 I.C. 937; Debendra v. Pashupati, 35 C.W.N. 1047 (1055), 136 I.C. 889.

Where the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties was created not by lease but by a decision of Court, no question of serving a notice to quit under this section arises—Sazwar v. Satyendra, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 406, 46 C.W.N. 464. Where a tenancy which is found to be non-permanent, is in existence from before the T. P. Act, the provisions hereof do not apply, and the tenants are only entitled to a reasonable notice to quit—Harendra v. Benoyendra, 75 C.L.J. 431. In such a case, on the analogy of the provisions of this Act, 6 months' notice was deemed reasonable, but if such notice fell short by a few days, that would not render it unreasonable—Ibid. What is reasonable notice is largely a question of fact—Faguneswari v. Dhum Lal, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 269.

Sec. 105 does not say that the period of a lease should be certain on the date of the lease. The period of the lease can be express or implied by law or usage. Normally in the absence of a written lease a presumption of annual tenancy may be drawn from the fact that rent is payable annually—Hamida Khatoon v. Shibananda, A.I.R. 1954 Ass. 58. But where the agreement of lease for residential purpose is not in writing, the stipulation as to payment of annual rent is a condition of an in-operative lease and sec. 106 comes into play. Consequently, the tenancy would be from month to month and fifteen days' notice expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy would be sufficient—Ibid.

The only leases recognized by sec. 105 are leases for a certain time, periodical leases and leases in perpetuity. Where, therefore, the status of a person does not fall under any of these heads he cannot be a lessee, and hence he cannot insist upon a notice to quit as contemplated by this section—Ma Gyi v. Maung Tet, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 291, 151 I.C. 971. This section does not apply to the case of a lease for a fixed term when the term expires—Bishen Sarup v. Abdul Samad, A.I.R. 1931 All. 649 (650), (1931) A.L.J. 666; Bansidhar v. Ram Charan, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 401, 1940 O.W.N. 586, 189 I.C. 488. On the expiry of the period the tenant is only a tenant at sufferance and is not entitled to any notice to quit—Kundan Lal v. Deep Chand, A.I.R. 1933 All. 756 (758), 146 I.C. 762. In the case of a tenant-at-will also no formal notice to quit is necessary—Ram Krishna v. Bibi Sohila, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 561 (562), 145 I.C. 567.

Where a tenancy becomes one for a definite term and expires by efflux of time, it is not governed by this section and no notice terminating the tenancy is necessary—Bharat Insurance Co. v. Bivathu, A.I.R. 1953 Tr-coch. 577.

This section has no application to a notice under sec. 108 (e) avoiding the lease on the ground of destruction of the lease-hold property by irresistible force. Such a notice takes effect immediately on service—Damoda Coal Co. v. Hurmook Marwari, 19 C.W.N. 1019, 31 I.C. 677.

In case of utbandi holding, the rights to occupy the land does not enure beyond a particular season or a particular year, and the tenancy not being a lease from year to year, this section has no application—Surendra v. Baidya Nath, 60 Cal. 681, 37 C.W.N. 335.

The principle of this section has been applied to the Punjab. Thus, where there was a condition in the lease that the landlord would give one month's notice if he wanted to have the premises vacated, held that it did not mean that notice could be given at any time but that the rule of this section should be applied and the notice must be one expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy—Chumilal v. Chumilal, 79 I.C. 957, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 659 (distinguishing 56 I.C. 7). In the case of a monthly tenancy in the Punjab, in the absence of a specific contract, the lessee is entitled to at least 15 days' notice ending with the month of the tenancy—Rattan v. Krishna Kaur, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 135, 141 I.C. 400.

Even though a case does not come strictly within this section, still the principle of this section in regard to the giving of notice may be applied to the case—Kishori Mohun v. Nund Kumar, 24 Cal. 720 (723).

Leases granted by a Municipality are subject to the provisions of this Act, and a Municipality can determine a lease only by giving a proper notice under this section—Aminullah v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 328, A.I.R. 1928 All. 95, 107 I.C. 690.

Contract to the contrary.—The rule in this section is made subject to any 'contract to the contrary'. It is only in cases where there is no contract as to notice, that the provisions of this section would be applicable. But where there is a contract as to giving notice or waiving notice, the parties are governed by the terms of the contract, and the law enacted in this section cannot apply—Moosa Kutty v. Thekke, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 687 (689), 110 I.C. 396. Thus, the parties may validly stipulate for two months' notice on either side; see Bholanath v. Durga Prosad, 12 C.W.N. 724; or for a week's notice—Shibdayal v. Dhanpat, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 281, 75 I.C. 490; or there may be a covenant in a lease for a term of one year that the tenant should vacate the house as soon as the landlord desired him to do so, in which case no notice would be necessary before suing the tenant in ejectment—Khuda Baksh v. Abid Husain, 3 I.C. 873, 12 O.C. 279; Kelu v. Ammad, 9 M.L.T. 198, 1910 M.W.N. 794, 8 I.C. 362; Mukat Singh v. Misra Paras Ram, 79 I.C. 106, A.I.R. 1924 All. 726 (727); Moosa Kutty v. Thekke, supra; or there may be a contract in a lease that the tenant should vacate within one week or one month or two months of the receipt of notice, whatever be the day of the month, and that the week or month or two months would count from the date of receipt of notice; in such a case the notice need not expire with the end of a month of the tenancy—Rure v. Ghulam, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 643, 75 I.C. 1034; Sh. Kasim v. Haji Yusuf, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 220; Rudha Kisen v. Rattan Lal, 56 I.C. 7; Ram Nath v. Badri, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 348, 106 I.C. 537. So again where a lease provides that the landlord may at any time resume possession of the land on payment of full compensation to the lessee for the buildings he may have erected thereon, such a provision is a 'contract to the contrary'; and no notice to quit is necessary in order to entitle the landlord to get back khas possession—Monindra v. Radha Prasanna, 47 I.C. 19 (Cal.). But the contract between the parties must be a valid one—Debendra v. Syama Prosanna, 11, C.W.N. 1124 (1126). If there is a covenant in a lease giving option to the lessor to determine the lease under specified conditions, the heirs of the lessor can determine the lease according to the covenant without any notice under sec. 106. Such a covenant does not violate the rule against perpetuity—Ganesh Sona v. Purnendu, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 201.

The contract to the contrary mentioned in para 1 is not necessarily an express contract. It may be implied but should be a valid one. Where the rent for a house taken for manufacturing purpose is payable by the month fifteen days' notice is sufficient as there is an implied agreement to the contrary—Fatesh Chand v. Mst. Radha Rani (1956) All. L.J. 625. Mangilal v. Pyarchand, 1966 Jab. L.J. 490. The section will regulate the duration of the lease where there is no contract to the contrary—Ram Kumar v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 23, (1951) S.C.J. 813; Hamisa Khatoon v. Shibananda, A.I.R. 1954 Ass. 58. If the contract contains a stipulation as to the period of notice only it does not affect the other requirement of this section, viz., that the notice should expire with the end of a month of the tenancy—Sundarji v. Gangabai, A.I.R. 1951 Sau. 64; see also Mukanchand v. Gulabchand, A.I.R. 1950 Aj. 79. If the rent-deed provide for a notice of one month not expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy, it is a perfectly valid notice—Ghulam Md. Lakshmi Bux, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 88. In the case of a manufacturing lease, if the lease deed provide that the lease would be determined by one month's notice, six months' notice is not necessary—Nagendra v. Jotish, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 221; Jewan Singh v. Mandalal Agarwala, A.I.R. 1955 Assam 102. A condition in the rent note that the tenant should deliver possession to the landlord whenever he makes the demand merely means that the tenancy is not for a fixed period. It is not a contract to the contrary—Keshab-lal v. Bai Ajawali, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 119. When a contract governs the question, the Court should read the contract in a reasonable way and ascertain the real intention of the parties—Arunachala v. Ghulam Mahmood, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 408, (1950) 2 M.L.J. 535. Where there is a specific contract that rent will be paid from month to month and the lease is for a fixed period of eleven months only, the lease is not from year to year even though it was for a manufacturing purpose—Radha Ballabh v. Ramchand, A.I.R. 1955 All. 679. Where a deed of lease, admissible in evidence but incapable of creating a lease, contains a contract to the contrary as to the service of the notice to quit, any notice in accordance with the contract to the contrary is valid in law—Lal Chand v. Radha Ballabh, A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 240.

There was an agreement for a yearly lease which could not be used in evidence for want of registration, but there were subsequent letters, one from the landlord stating that the lessee would be a monthly tenant after 1st July, 1933 and that the tenancy would be terminable by either party on 15 days' notice expiring with the end of a calendar month, and a reply from the lessee stating that he would remain as an "ordinary" tenant from the 1st of July, 1933, "subject to the termination by giving you 15 days' notice in writing". The lessor gave 15 days' notice ending with the month. The lessee contended that his was the yearly lease of an agricultural or manufacturing tenant under this section, and then even as a monthly tenant his tenancy could not be terminated on the last day of a month as his original tenancy had commenced either on a 12th or a 1st: Held by the Privy Council—(i) that assuming that the tenancy was for an agricultural or a manufacturing purpose, there was a "contract to the contrary" constituted by the two letters; (ii) that reading the two letters together the second was an acceptance of the first, although the term "ordinary" was used for a "monthly", and although no reference was made to the landlord's right to give notice which was a right under the ordinary law.—Prahaladrai v. Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta, A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 11, 48 C.W.N. 309. Unless there is some indication to the contrary the term "ordinary tenant" would in Calcutta mean monthly tenant, even though there be no reference to payments of monthly rent and such a tenancy would be terminable on 15 days' notice expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy—Ibid.

If there is a contract between the parties, such a contract will be strictly enforced. Thus, where a kabuliyat provided for full two months' notice, a notice less by one day was held to be not a valid one—Bhola Nath v. Durga Prosad, 12 C.W.N. 724.

Where a tenancy was created by a writing in the following terms : "We rent the vacant land on a rent of Rs. 31 per month and declare that we will pay the rent by the 5th of each month, and when it will be necessary to give khaski possession we will do the same within 7 days;" held that it was a tenancy from month to month and there was no "contract to the contrary." A 7 days' notice was therefore ineffective. Even if the period of notice is so reduced, such notice must expire with the end of a month of tenancy—Baidyanath v. Onkarmull, 42 C.W.N. 598, I.L.R. (1938) Cal. 656. See also M/s. Mehra C. L. v. Kharak Singh 70 Punj. L.R. (D.) 55.

The landlord can avail himself of the statutory period of the notice even though the period of notice has been made by agreement longer than the statutory period in the case of the tenant—Sister, Louise v. Jatindra Nath Mondal, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 475.

Local law to the contrary:—Where the local law provides for six months' notice in place of fifteen days' notice, it does not relieve the landlord from complying with the requirements of this section that the notice must expire with the end of the month of the tenancy—Vishwa Nath v. Bishen Dass, A.I.R. 1953 J. & K. 15. The Bombay tenancy Act displaces the presumption arising under the present section—Jagannath v. Vasant, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 332, 55 Bom. L.R. 341.

"Usage to the contrary" :—In an old case, viz., Nocoor Das v. Jewraj, 12 Beng. L.R. 263, it was held that in Calcutta a month's notice was necessary to determine a tenancy from month to month. This has, however, been dissented from recently by Macnair, J. in Prafulla v. Nandalal, 39 C.W.N. 1069, where it has been held that in Nocoor Das v. Jewraj, no prevailing custom in Calcutta was proved or even asserted which rendered a month's notice obligatory; so 15 days' notice under the provisions of this section is quite sufficient to terminate a monthly tenancy in Calcutta.

Where a tenant of Calcutta premises under a lease for 3 years holds over after the expiry of the term, he does so as a monthly tenant, and each month of the tenancy expires on the midnight of the 1st day of the succeeding month—Sushil v. Birendrajit, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 837, 38 C.W.N. 782.

553. Presumption as to duration of lease :—The rule of construction embodied in this section applies not only to express leases of uncertain duration, but also to leases implied by law from possession, acceptance of rent and other circumstances—Ram Kumar v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 23, 1951 S.C.J. 813; Jewan Singh v. Mandalal Agarwal, A.I.R. 1955 Assam 102. Where the Kabuliyat was not an operative document under sec. 107, the tenancy created by implication of law is from month to month. The stipulation for payment of annual rent would certainly raise a presumption of its being a tenancy from year to year, but being contained in an inoperative document, would not come in the way of raising a presumption under this section—Ibid. A lease for one year certain could not also be inferred, for that would be substituting a new agreement which the parties never intended to do—Ibid. See in this connection Kamakshya v. Harkhu, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 265; Darbari Lal v. Ranegganj Coal Assn., A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 30, 22 Pat. 552; Adinath v. Krishna Chandra, A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 474, 47 C.W.N. 127; Muralidhar v. Tara Dye, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 349. Where the defendants admit that there is a relationship of landlord and tenant between them and the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs, but there is no valid lease in their favour, the duration of the tenancy in such a case must be determined by sec. 106; they cannot claim permanent tenancy by reason of their possession for 15 years—Dr. Sudhir Kumar Mukherjee v. Nirsi Dhobin, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 321 (F.B.) Where by an oral contract it was stipulated that the tenant should occupy the premises at least for one year and thereafter the tenancy would be terminable by one month's notice, the lease was deemed to be one from month to month—Ram v. Lalit, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 351. But where an annual rent is fixed, the tenancy cannot be from month to month because a house stands on the land—Banamali v. Padmalava, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 262. A lease from year to year is, one for uncertain duration. Such a tenant has an interest for one year certain with a growing interest during every year thereafter—Kamakshya v. Harkhu, supra. Where it is alleged that a monthly rent is paid in respect of a tenancy for residential purposes and there is no allegation of a tenancy-at-will, it is a monthly tenancy—Chhoti Dei v. Gangadhar, A.I.R. 1953 Or. 245, 19 Cut. L.T. 29. Where even though the parties intended to create a permanent lease, no operative lease came into existence but the defendant remained in possession on payment of rent, the tenancy should be deemed to be from month to month—Sm. Durgesh Nandini Devi v. Aolad Shaikh, A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 502.

When the tenant holds no written or registered lease and the land is let for other than agricultural or manufacturing purposes, the tenant has only a monthly tenancy of the land terminable by fifteen days' notice, even though the rent appears to have been payable annually—Debendra v. Syama Prosanna, 11 C.W.N. 1124; Sheikh Akloo v. Emanon, 44 Cal. 403, 33 I.C. 889; Mangal Singh v. Atra, 3 Lah. L.J. 222, 60 I.C. 226; Sarat Chandra Chandra v. Jadab Chandra, 44 Cal. 214; Anwar Ali v. Jamini Lal, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 254, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 89, 43 C.W.N. 797. See also Chinti v. Kripashankar, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 488, 194 I.C. 300; Surya Kumar Manji v. Trilochan Nath, 59 C.W.N. 526, A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 495. Similarly when a shop is taken on lease for manufacturing purpose without any registered instrument it is lease from year to year terminable on six months' notice—Balwant Singh v. Murari Lal, A.I.R. 1965 All. 187. If a usufructuary mortgagee leases back on monthly rent to the mortgagor who executes an unregistered Kerayanama, a tenancy from month to month is created on acceptance of rent—Ganpat Turi v. Mohammad Asraf Ali, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 133. The mere fact that the rent of a holding or dwelling house is payable in one sum yearly is not sufficient to make the tenancy a tenancy from year to year—Mohendra v. Narendra, 50 I.C. 918 (Cal.); Biseswar v. Pitambar, 51 I.C. 44 (Cal.); Durgi Nikarini v. Gobardhan, 19 C.W.N. 525 (530), 24 I.C. 183. Where a co-sharer got an oral lease of a tank from the joint owners on an annual rent, no period being fixed and had been in possession for 15 years on payment of rent, the tenancy was held to be from month to month—Adinath v. Krishna Chandra, 47 C.W.N. 127. The mere payment of rent annually would not make the tenancy on annual tenancy, if there are clear indication to show that the rent is calculated on a monthly basis—Nanakram Das v. Nagarmal, A.I.R. 1956 Orissa 95.

In this country the practice of letting shops and dwelling houses on monthly tenancies is so widespread as to warrant the legislature in raising a presumption in favour of monthly tenancies by this section, unless it is proved by a written contract that the lease was an annual one—Aruneche-lla v. Ramiah, 30 Mad. 109 (112); Sanker Ram v. Tulshi, 2 P.L.T. 178, 61 I.C. 976. The ordinary inference as to leases of buildings in Calcutta would appear to be that the tenancy is from month to month—Kally Das v. Monmohini, 24 Cal. 440; Nocordas v. Jewraj, 12 B.L.R. 263.

A lease of land, which did not specify any period, provided that the tenant should enjoy and possess the land after building a bashabari upon it. Held, that as no period was fixed, the lease was a lease from month to month—Mohim v. Anil Bandhu, 13 C.W.N. 513, 1 I.C. 66, 9

C.L.J. 362. Where rent has all along been paid for one or more full years commencing from the 1st of Baisakh and there is nothing in the lease to indicate that it shall commence from the date of execution, the lease commences from the 1st of Baisakh—Tirtha Nath v. Ishwar Bamlingadeba, 61 C.W.N. 170.

In view of the provisions of this section the lease of land for the purpose of putting up a permanent construction, that is, for building purposes cannot be deemed to be a permanent lease. Such a lease in the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary must be deemed to be a lease from month to month—Bajrang Sahai v. Mt. Mulia, A.I.R. 1941 All. 399, 1941 A.L.J. 557. See also Ram Lal v. Bibi Zohra, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 296, 182 I.C. 618; Shanmugha v. Ananthakrishnaswami, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 247, 1939 M.W.N. 1236, 48 M.L.W. 894; Tirtha Nath v. Bamalingadeva, 61 C.W.N. 170. Where a lease is created verbally after the commencement of the T.P. Act it cannot be regarded as a permanent lease simply because the tenant has been in possession for a long time and has constructed substantial building, because the doctrine of lost grant cannot apply to such a lease—Ambika Devi v. Sachita Nandan Prasad, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 289. Where the lessee is allowed to construct building on the land leased and the lease is found to be one from month to month, it is unjust for the lessor to claim the structure to be demolished. He should give the lessee a notice to quit—Jadunandan v. Mt. Maho, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 428, 185 I.C. 284. There can be an agreement to pay rent annually in a tenancy from month to month—Gussainram v. Mohammad Siddiqu, 1966 All. L.J. 414.

Where a certain property was let out by Government for building purposes without any mention of or agreement about the duration of the term, the tenancy was a tenancy-at-will which became converted by payment of rent into a tenancy from year to year—Secretary of State v. Sarat, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 399 (406), 171 I.C. 461. If a registered lease is granted by the Administrator of a superseded municipality, who had no such power to grant such lease, and permission is granted subsequently by the Municipal Committee regularly constituted to construct buildings, then a tenancy on the terms contained in the lease deed is created by the acceptance of the stipulated rent from the lessee—Hitkarini Sabha, Jabalpur v. Corporation of the City of Jabalpur, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 324.

Holding over :—Where there is no agreement as to the terms of the holding over, the tenancy under this section must be deemed to be one from year to year terminable by six months' notice, or from month to month terminable by fifteen days' notice according to the purpose for which the property was leased—Sailabala v. Tappassier, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 455. Where after the termination of an old lease a new lease for two years with enhancement of rent is created by an unregistered deed and the lessee continues in possession even after the expiry of two years a presumption of a monthly tenancy can be drawn—Ebrahim Rawther v. Moideen Batcha Rawther, 1964 Ker. L.T. 455.

554. Notice :—The object of the provision as to notice is to enable the tenant to gather up the fruits of his labour. A notice to quit is therefore a necessary prelude to the legal determination of a tenancy, and a suit for ejectment brought without a notice is liable to be dismissed—Rajendranath v. Bassidar Ruhman, 2 Cal. 146; Sheikh Sonaula v. Troylukho, 2 C.W.N. 383; Ganga Prasad v. Prem Kumar, A.I.R. 1949 All. 173.

A landlord is entitled to eject a tenant after notice to quit, unless the tenant can prove that he has a right to remain on the land permanently and the onus is on the tenant to prove permanency of his tenancy—Golam Hossein v. Abu Bakkar, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 351, 166 I.C. 811.

Notices under this section must be construed very strictly. Under such a construction of a notice it appeared that the landlords plaintiffs undertook either to give or tender to the tenant defendants the reasonable price of the materials of the structures of the tenant defendants before compelling the latter to give up possession, although according to the term of the lease the landlords plaintiffs were not in any way bound to do this: held that the clause in the notice with regard to payment of compensation was not a mere surplusage and in the event of non-compliance with the clause the plaintiffs were not entitled to evict the defendants—Shambhu v. Kanai, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 581. But see Ganga Prasad v. Prem Kumar, supra, where it has been held that a notice should be liberally construed, and it should only be seen that the person served has understood what has been meant by the notice. A notice to quit, though not strictly accurate and consistent may still be good and effective in law. The test of its sufficiency would be what it would mean to the tenant who is presumably conversant with all the facts and circumstances of the holding. The notice should not be construed with a desire to find fault with it but to be construed ut res magis valiat quam pereat—Utility Articles Manufacturing Co. v. Raja Bahadur Motilal Bombay Mills Ltd., A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 306, 45 Bom. L.R. 605. See also Gaya Prasad v. Munni Lal, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 101. The reason given in the notice is not material for determining its sufficiency. The essential point is whether the person was asked to vacate the premises or not—Nagendra v. Jotish, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 221. In a notice to quit it is not necessary to state any ground, and a suit for ejectment need not be on the same ground as stated in the notice—Amarendra v. Bibhuti, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 773.

After a notice to quit has been given, a subsequent notice is of no effect, nor does it amount to a waiver of the first notice—Basheshwar v. Delhi Improvement Trust, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 243 relying on Loewenthal v. Vanhonte, 1947 All. G.R. 116. Where the tenants have constructed a dwelling house and has been in occupation of the land for as long as 70 years paying a uniform annual rent, the tenancy cannot be terminated without serving a reasonable notice to quit—Banamali v. Padmanabha, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 262. What is a reasonable notice is largely a question of fact—Faguniswari v. Dhum Lal, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 269.

The question of notice to quit, its requirements, or service is not affected by the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946—Amarendra v. Bibhuti, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 773. Notice under sec. 106 is the essential condition precedent to the filing of a suit for eviction on grounds mentioned in sec. 11 of the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act—Adit Prasad v. Chhaganlal, A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 26. A notice to quit can be issued on the previous written permission from the Rent Controller, even when an appeal from that order is pending—Phanibhusan v. Gulabchand, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 203, I.L.R. 1951 Nag. 401. A Rent Controller is not competent to split up a tenancy and give permission to the landlord to serve a notice to quit in respect of a portion of the tenancy—Sakharampant v. Lothi, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 265, 1953 N.L.J. 235. In spite of a permission from the District Magistrate under sec. 3 of the U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947, a notice under the present section is necessary—Ghasi Ram v. Choubey, A.I.R. 1953 All. 218, 1952 A.L.J. 727.

When not necessary:—No notice is necessary if the lessee is a tenant by sufferance. Where a tenant-at-will has constructed expensive building on the site and the landlord has been keeping quiet for a long time and did not take any steps to stop such building being constructed, it is, however, equitable that the tenant should be compensated for the building before he is evicted—Abdul Chafur v. Jet Mal, A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 74. See notes to sec. 116, under heading "Holding over". Where a tenant undertakes to give vacant possession whenever the landlord may desire him to do so the tenancy is a tenancy-at-will, for the termination of which no notice under sec. 106 is necessary—Ramnarain v. Kishorelal, A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 79; Subramania Iyer v. Ammu, A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 218.

Where the tenant, repudiated the title of the landlord and set up the title of a third party, the landlord could bring an ejectment suit without giving any previous notice to quit, since the tenant forfeited his tenancy by denying the landlord's title—Anandamoyi v. Lakshmi Chandra, 33 Cal. 339; Haidri Begum v. Nathu, 17 All. 45; Ramayana Prasad v. Mt. C. Gulabokuer, A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 35. But under clause (g) of section 111 as now amended, the lessor must give notice of his intention to determine the tenancy.

A licensee may also be ejected without notice—Athakutti v. Govinda, 16 Mad. 97.

A trespasser is not entitled to any notice. Thus, on failure to perform the service, a service-holder becomes a mere trespasser; and no notice to quit is necessary before ejectment—Wazir Nonian v. Ram Prasad, 59 I.C. 893 (Pat.).

A tenant holding over, after expiry of his lease, without his landlord's consent is a tenant on sufferance. No question of notice arises in his case—Hasanali v. Dara Sah, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 282, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 922; Ramzan v. Ghani, A.I.R. 1952 J. & K. 35.

Where the rent-note provided that in case of lessee's failure to pay the rent agreed, the lessor would be entitled to eject him, no question of notice arose—Amar Singh v. Hoshia Singh, A.I.R. 1952 All. 141. When a sub-tenant becomes a direct tenant by operation of law during the pendency of a suit for eviction against the tenant as well as the sub-tenant, the latter is not entitled to any notice, under sec. 106—V. R. Verma v. Mohan Kumar Mukherjee, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 563 (S.B.).

Where a lease is for a fixed period, it is determined under section 111 (a) by the efflux of time limited by the lease, and notice must be presumed by implication as given when it was executed; therefore no notice under sec. 106 is required for the termination of the lease—Fazihuzza-man v. Anwar, 1932 A.L.J. 126, A.I.R. 1932 All. 314, 139 I.C. 828; Gokul Chand v. Shib Charan, 9 A.L.J. 574. 13 I.C. 59; Bishen Sarup v. Abdul Samad, 1931 A.L.J. 666, A.I.R. 1931 All. 649 (650).

Where the tenant had expressly agreed to give up possession on a certain fixed date, he need not be given a formal notice to quit—Dina Singh v. Jamal Singh, 78 I.C. 446, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 48. No notice is necessary where it is waived by the parties by a contract to the contrary; see 12 O.C. 279 and other cases cited under "Contract to the contrary" in Note 552, supra.

A sub-lessee is not entitled to a notice before ejectment after the surrender by the original lessee—Shyam Lal v. Bachchu Lal, 11 A.L.J. 981, 20 I.C. 11.

The position of a lessee holding under an unregistered deed, which is compulsorily registrable, is that of a mere tenant-at-will and a mere demand for possession is sufficient to determine the lease and no notice under this section is necessary. Where, therefore, a notice to the lessee does not fulfil the requirements of a valid notice, it amounts to demand for possession and the Court can grant a decree for ejectment—Janki v. Kanhaiya, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 102 (105), 159 I.C. 316; Gur Prasad v. Hansraj, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 144, 21 Luck. 292. If the local law provides that even after a decree for surrender the landlord cannot recover possession unless the tenant incurs forfeiture under the local law, the plaintiff can recover rent but not mesne profits—Ouseph Thomman v. Lekhamikutti Amma Kunjikutti Amma, A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 86.

Period of notice :—A lease from year to year is terminable with six months' notice. In a tenancy with an annual rent reserved, i.e., in an annual tenancy, the tenant is entitled to six months' notice before he can be ejected—Kishori Mohan v. Nund Kumar, 24 Cal. 720 (723); Ismail v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (577). A lease of a homestead land is a lease from month to month terminable by '15 days' notice—Debendra v. Syama Prosanna, 11 C.W.N. 1124 (1126).

If the tenancy is one from month to month, and the tenant is entitled to 15 days' notice, a six months' notice requiring him to quit at the end of the year is not invalid. In fact it is more than sufficient—Debendra v. Syama Prosanna, 11 C.W.N. 1124 (1126). But where the tenancy is a yearly tenancy, it is terminable only by six months' notice, and any notice which falls short of this period is not sufficient—Kishori Mohun v. Nund Kumar, supra. A notice which gives less than 15 days' notice to a monthly tenant is invalid, and cannot determine the tenancy—Farzand Ali v. Motilal, 2 P.L.T. 282, 62 I.C. 421 (422).

Effect of a valid notice upon sub-tenants :—A valid notice to quit not only determines the right of the original demise, but any lease which the tenant might have made. A decree in ejectment passed against a lessee at the instance of a lessor is binding not only upon the lessee, but also upon his sub-tenants, provided they have no right independent of the right of their lessor. The sub-tenants are, therefore, liable to be evicted in execution of a decree under O. 21, r. 35, and it is not necessary for the decree-holder to proceed under O. 21, r. 97, C. P. Code—Shiekh Yusuf v. Jyotish, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 241, 35 C.W.N. 1132, 59 Cal. 739, 137 I.C. 139; see also Ram Kissen v. Binraj, 50 Cal. 419; Green v. Herring, (1905) 1 K.B. 152; Minet v. Johnson, 63 L.T. 507.

555. What is a valid notice :—Notice to quit, though not strictly accurate or consistent in the statements embodied in them, may still be good and effective in law. The test of their sufficiency is not what they would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the holding to which they refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances. The notices are to be construed with a view to their validity and not with a desire to find faults in them which would render them defective. A notice need not be worded with the accuracy of a plea—Harihar v. Ram Sashi, 46 Cal. 458 (P.C.), 23 C.W.N. 77; See also Ganga Prasad v. Prem Kumar, A.I.R. 1949 All. 173; Mrs. Cacasie v. Safdar Ali, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 585, 57 C.W.N. 567. But if a Dist. Board files a suit for eviction on the basis of a notice to quit served by the Government asking the tenant to deliver possession to the Dist. Board as the agent of the Government the suit is liable to be dismissed—Dist. Board, Tippera v. Sharafat Ali, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 408. Where a notice was given to a lessee stating that he should vacate the lands on 13-5-27 and the notice was given on 9-11-27, the notice was valid; for it was sufficient if the person on whom the notice was served could understand what was really meant by the notice—Tika Ram v. Dooji Maharaj, A.I.R. 1934 All. 787, 152 I.C. 189. If a notice to quit calls upon the tenant to quit and prescribes the time for giving up possession, the notice is valid even though the particulars as regards tenancy are not accurately set out—Alphanso Pints v. Thukru Hengsu, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 206. But where the notice ran thus : "If for any reason these fields have not been handed over to us before 31st March, 1950, you are to hand over possession thereof to us for our personal cultivation before the above mentioned date" the notice was held to be bad because the tenant was called upon to deliver possession not on 31.3.50 itself but even on any day before that date—Devshankar Gangaram v. Bachubha Devsingh, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 113.

A notice to quit need not be worded with the accuracy of a plea. Where a monthly tenancy commenced from the 1st of each month, the notice was not invalid because the tenant was asked to vacate not by the end of the month, but by the 1st of the next month—Gaya Prasad v. Munnilal A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 101. See also Ghasi Ram v. Charebey, A.I.R. 1953 All. 218, 1952 A.L.J. 727.

Where a tenant gives notice to quit premises in the occupation of a sub-tenant entitled to protection under the Rent Act the tenant is not liable for rent in future on account of the termination of the tenancy nor is he liable for damages for use and occupation—S. K. Bose v. Phanindra, 62 C.W.N. 176.

The notice must designate the date on which the tenant is to vacate. A notice to quit "at the expiration of the current year to your tenancy, which shall expire after the end of one-half year from the service of the notice" (Doe d. Digby v. Steel, 3 Camp. 117) or simply a notice to quit "at the expiration of the present year's tenancy" (Deo d. Gorst v. Timothy,

2 Car. & K. 351) or a notice "at the expiration of the current year" (Deo d. Baker v. Wombwell, 2 Camp. 559) are valid notices. See also Iatindra v. Malai, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 352, 88; C.L.J. 118; Ismail v. Julekhabai, A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 181, I.L.R. 1944 Bom. 361; v. Sabitri v. Jalikha, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 244, 52 C.W.N. 13; Bawa Singh v. Kundan Lal, 1952 Punj. 422; Ananta v. Osimuddin, A.I.R. 1952 Ass. 132; Mohan Lal v. Kunwar Sen, A.I.R. 1953 All. 598, 1951 A.L.J. 702. But a notice to quit generally without referring to some distinct time would be invalid—Goode v. Howells, 4 M. & W. 199. By the notice the tenant was asked to vacate within the 30th April and deliver possession on 1st of May. The notice was held to be valid—Niwaran v. Abinash, 60 C.W.N. 308; Hirjibhai v. Balarambhai, A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 125; Panchoo Singh v. Bala Sahai, A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 306; Riyasat Ali Khan v. Mirza Wahid Beg, A.I.R. 1966 All. 165.

A notice to quit calling upon the tenants of a holding to quit a portion of it is absolutely bad and an action for ejectment can be defeated by tenants by proof that the contents of their holding are more than the part named—Harihar v. Ramsashi, 46 Cal. 458 (P.C.). Bodardoza v. Azimuddin, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 651 (654), 57 Cal. 10, 33 C.W.N. 559, 120 I.C. 455—Giridhari v. Purnendu, 68 C.L.J. 481, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 291, 182 I.C. 8. A notice to quit is not however bad for slightly wrong statements, e.g., where it includes some lands which it is found the defendant does not hold under the plaintiff—Shama Churn v. Wooma Churn, 25 Cal. 36; Giridhari v. Purnendu, supra. A notice stating that if the tenant thinks that the tenancy commenced on some other date he might vacate on the corresponding date is valid—Bhagwan Sri Krishnaji M. V. Mandir v. Chuttan Lal, A.I.R. 1963 All. 54. Where the landlord warns the tenant that if he fails to clear the arrears within a month of the receipt of the notice he will be liable to ejectment and in that event he must treat the notice as a legal notice and vacate within a month, there is a valid notice to quit—Ram Swarup v. Brij Nandan Prasad, A.I.R. 1963 All. 366. A notice to quit coupled with a demand for rent in arrears is valid—Rajendra Nath v. Sm. Lalli Devi, I.L.R. (1962) 2 All 120.

The giver of a notice is not bound to admit the person to whom it is given as a tenant. A notice is not bad because it is addressed to the tenant not as tenant but as a trespasser—Ram Charan v. Hari Charan, 7 C.L.J. 107; Secy. of State v. Madhu Sudan, 36 C.W.N. 918 (921). A notice expiring on the anniversary of the commencement of the tenancy is a valid notice—Ram Palak v. Bilas Mahton, A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 69. A notice terminating a non-agricultural sub-lease under this section is valid—Abdul v. Jotoo, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 54, 54 C.W.N. 149.

But where a tenant has remained in occupation of the land for 70 years and has put up a dwelling house thereon and paid a uniform annual rent, the tenancy cannot be terminated without a reasonable notice whether the tenancy is agricultural or not. A notice not signed either by the lessor or his agent is of no value—Banamali v. Padmanabha, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 262. A notice given by brothers without joining their mother who has an interest in the property, is invalid—Chhoti Dei v. Gangadhar, A.I.R. 1953 Or. 245. A notice asking the lessee to vacate by the day following the date of the ending of the monthly tenancy is invalid—Motilal v. Thandiram, A.I.R. 1951 Aj. 52 (1). See also Siddarama v.

Kalappa, A.I.R. 1950 Mys. 63. A typed copy of the notice served on the tenant is invalid—Hira Lal v. Dy. Comr., A.I.R. 1951 All. 483. Where a tenant under a year to year tenancy terminable by 6 months' notice on either side subleased a part of the premises to a man on 12th December, 1937 for 1 year 4 months from 31st December, 1937 to 30th April, 1939 and on 26th January, 1938 gave notice to the landlord to terminate the lease as on 15th May, 1938, it was held that the notice being dated less than 6 months before 15th May, 1938 was ineffectual—Gooderham & Worts Ltd. v. Chandian Broadcasting Corpn., A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 90. Where in the notice there is no allegation as to when the tenancy commenced or what the month of the tenancy is, the notice is invalid—Gulam Mohammood v. Ammani Ammal, (1960) 2 Mad. L.T. 351.

Even if lessees are guilty of laches in not replying to the lessor's notice, that does not necessarily make the notice to quit valid if it was invalid otherwise—Prodyot Kumar v. Maynuddin, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 724 (726). A notice to quit addressed to the managing partner of the tenant firm and acknowledged by the firm is a valid notice—J. P. Sharma v. Rakhag Das Jai, I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj. 179.

Onus :—It is for the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment of a tenant upon notice to quit to prove the sufficiency of notice by proving the date of the commencement of the tenancy. In order to prove that the notice legally determined the lease, he must show that the notice served upon the tenant expired either with the end of the year or the month of the tenancy. In the absence of evidence to show when the year or the month of the tenancy commenced, the plaintiff's suit must fail—Mozam Shaikh v. Annada Prasad, 46 C.W.N. 366, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 341, 75 C.L.J. 444. Where the notice to quit gives more than 15 days' time but there is some doubt as to the actual date of receipt the notice is to be regarded as good if the averment in the plaint that the cause of action arose on the date of the notice is not specifically denied in the written statement—Sm. Bhagwati Devi v. Surendrajit Singh, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 257.

Notice stating enhanced rent :—It was held in an earlier case of the Allahabad High Court that a notice to quit must not be coupled as "if you do not quit within a month from this, I will sue you for rent at an enhanced rate" was held to be a conditional one and therefore not a valid notice to quit—Bradley v. Atkinson, 7 All. 899 (F.B.). But in England, it has been held that a notice otherwise sufficient is not rendered insufficient by its being accompanied with something else; and therefore, where the lessor gave the lessee notice in writing to quit upon a specified day and then went on to say, "and I hereby further give you a notice that should you retain possession of the premises after the day before mentioned, the annual rent of the premises now held by you be £150," it was held that the explicit first portion of the notice was not impaired or rendered nugatory by the alternative given by the second portion of continuing to hold the premises at an increased rent—Ahearn v. Bellman, 4 Ex. D. 201. And now the Allahabad High Court has laid down in a later case that a notice to quit with a condition superadded for enhancement of rent on failure to quit in accordance with the notice, is good enough to terminate the tenancy, and is not to be treated as an offer of a new tenancy at a higher rent; and the landlord is entitled to a decree for ejectment. The notice does not amount to an offer to renew the tenancy at an enhanced rate of rent—Shankar Lal v. Babu Ram, 43 All. 330 (332) (following Ahearn v. Bellman, supra). See also Sahir Hussain v. Sirajul Haq, A.I.R. 1951 All. 853, 1951 A.L.J. 192. The Bombay High Court has also taken this later view in Vaman v. Khanderao, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 247, 37 Bom. L.R. 376, 156 I.C. 1620. The Patna High Court holds that a notice of ejectment is quite distinct from a notice of enhancement; in the former case the lease is determined by the notice and thereafter the lessee becomes a trespasser. If in the notice an alternative term enhancing the rent from the date mentioned in it is proposed on which the defendant is required to vacate the premises, the continuance of the tenant to hold over implies an acceptance of the term proposed—Farzand Ali v. Motilal, 2 P.L.T. 282, 62 I.C. 421 (422). See also Madan Mohan v. Ram Lal, A.I.R. 1934 All. 115 (117), (1934) A.L.J. 421, 153 I.C. 432 where the same view has been taken. For a contrary view see Md. Noor v. Ashiq Beg, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 465, 145 I.C. 647. Demand for arrears of rent and termination of the tenancy can be made by the same notice—Mushtaq Husain v. Mahomed Saddiq, 1967 All. L.J. 764. But a notice asking the tenant to pay rent by the end of a particular month and also to vacate on the expiry of the period of the notice, preceded by a number of similar notices, cannot be treated as a notice to terminate the tenancy—Sunder Lal v. Ram Krishan, A.I.R. 1960 All. 544. A notice to quit with a demand for enhanced rent if the tenant stays is not sufficient to terminate the tenancy because it amounts to an offer of a fresh tenancy—Mohammad Ninave v. Neelacandan, A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 216.

Where the landlord gave notice to a monthly tenant either to vacate the premises or to pay an enhanced rent, but the tenant vacated some months after time mentioned in the notice, he was liable to pay the enhanced rent—Madan Mohan v. Ram Lal, supra. Where a landlord gives notice to his tenant that he would be charged at an enhanced rent from a certain date and should vacate if he does not accept the enhancement and the tenant refuses to pay the enhanced rent and also refuses to vacate, he should be deemed to have accepted the enhanced rent. Of course, the Court has a discretion in the matter and where the enhanced rent is obviously penal, the Court would not grant it—Parekh v. Anant, A.I.R. Nag. 140, N.L.J. 118, 189 I.C. 895. The proposition that a notice to quit though admittedly invalid for the purposes of ejectment can nevertheless be good to support a decree for arrears of rent at the enhanced rate should not be applied for the period for which the notice was invalid—Ibid.

Where a landlord wrote to his tenant asking him to execute an agreement to pay increased rent and concluded by saying "otherwise I shall take steps to eject you and hence you consider this 15 days' notice expiring with the end of this month," it was held that this was a good notice to quit—Ganga Das v. Ananda, 13 C.W.N. 146, 2 I.C. 548; Jugla v. Hur Narain, 19 I.C. 758 (All.) distinguishing 7 All. 899 cited above. But where the first part of the notice asks the tenant to vacate but the second part shows an intention to continue the tenancy if the tenant pays enhance rent, the notice cannot terminate the tenancy—

Chidda Ram v. Naru Mal, A.I.R. 1965 All. 323. If the notice to quit gives option to the tenant either to vacate on the date mentioned or on a later date the notice is good—Gurdit Singh v. Tata Iron & Steel Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 311. Notice terminating tenancy and demanding arrears of rent is not invalid—Ahmad Ali, v. Jamal Uddin, A.I.R. 1963 All. 581. A notice only demanding possession does not terminate the tenancy—Ibid.

Where the lessor's solicitors gave notice to quit in the following terms—"We give you notice that our client will require you to vacate and give up possession of the premises on the 29th February next, and that, should you fail to comply with the request, our client will take proceedings against you to eject you from the premises and he will charge you the sum of Rs. 350 per month as damage sustained by him during such period as you continue in possession after the 29th proximo," it was held that it was a good clear notice to quit and the addition of the second portion of the notice did not vitiate it—Strager v. Price, 12 C.W.N. 1059; Bhagwan v. Savitri, 78 I.C. 651, A.I.R. 1925 All. 199 (200).

Where a landlord gives notice to a monthly tenant to vacate the premises by a certain date, or in the alternative to pay enhanced rent from that date, and the notice is invalid for not giving clear 15 days' time, the tenancy is not determined and therefore the landlord cannot sue the tenant either for ejectment or for rent at the enhanced rate on the basis of the notice—Farzand Ali v. Motilal, (supra). A notice to quit need not specify the premises to be vacated—Lakhanlal v. Udhoram, 1960 M. P.L.T. (Notes) 161.

556. Notice according to Bengali calendar:—This section contemplates any kind of "monthly tenancy," viz., according to English, Bengali, Sambat calendar and so forth, and may commence on any day of the month. Therefore, it is not correct to say that all tenancies from month to month under this section must be according to the English calendar in view of sec. 33 of the General Clauses Act—Ahumad Ali v. Jyotsna Kumar, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 19 dissenting from the view of Rau, J. in Calcutta Landing & Shipping Co. v. Victor Oil Co., 49 C.W.N. 76. A notice to quit written in Bengali was given on 20th December, 1948 asking the tenant to vacate 15 days after the notice within the month of Poush, that is, by the 1st of Magh. The tenancy was according to Bengali month: Held that the notice was not defective—Ahumad Ali v. Jyotsna Kumar, supra. See also Haridas v. Sailendra, A.I.R. 1953 Ass. 202; Banarsilal v. Shri Bhagwan, A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 167.

Where the tenancy is regulated and rent paid according to the Bengali year, a notice calculated according to the Bengali calendar is sufficient to terminate the tenancy—Debendra v. Syama Prosanna, 11 C.W.N. 1124 (1126); Haridas v. Upendra, 22 C.L.J. 75, 16 I.C. 937; Ismail Khan v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (577); Raj Behari v. Kailash, 22 C.L.J. 78, 30 I.C. 887; Gobinda v. Dwarka Nath, 19 C.W.N. 489 (492), 26 I.C. 962. Thus, if the year of the tenancy commences from 1st Baisakh and ends with the last day of Chait, a six months' notice served on the 31st Aswin (17th October) requiring the tenant to quit at the end of Chait (13th April) is valid, even though if calculated according to the corresponding days of the English calendar the notice falls short of six months by 4 days—Debendra v. Syama Prosanna, 11 C.W.N. 1124 (1126). In the case of a lease of a shoproom, a notice given on the 16th Baisakh calling upon the tenant to vacate on the 31st Baisakh (the last day of the month) is a valid notice—Gobinda v. Dwarka, supra, “within 30th Chaitra” means with the expiry of that date—Mozam Shaikh v. Annada Prasad, 46 C.W.N. 366, 75 C.L.J. 444.

557. “Expiring with the end of a year or month” :—It is not sufficient that the duration of the notice should be six months or 15 days, as the case may be; it is also required that the notice should expire with the end of the year or month. Thus, if the year of a tenancy is computed from the 1st Baisakh to the end of Chaitra, a notice given on the 26th Jaistha, calling upon the tenant to quit the land on the last day of Aghran is not valid (even though the duration of the notice is more than 6 months). It ought to have required the tenant to vacate on the end of Chaitra—Hemangini v. Sri Gobinda, 29 Cal. 203 (205, 206). So also, in the case of a monthly tenancy, the notice to quit must require the tenant to vacate at the end of the month, and not before. Thus, if the tenancy is regulated according to the English Calendar, the notice must require the tenant to vacate on the 31st January, or 28th February or 31st March and so on; and a notice asking the tenant to quit before the end of the month would be invalid, even though it gives 15 days’ time. So, a notice given on the 1st January requiring the tenant to quit on the 20th January (or even on the 20th February) is invalid though there is an interval of more than 15 days between the date of notice and the date of the required surrender. Thus, a notice was given on the 9th June that the lessee should vacate the premises after lapse of a month from that date; held that the notice was inoperative in law as it did not expire at the end of a month although it was of a longer duration than 15 days. Such a notice cannot terminate the tenancy—Bijay Chandra v. Howrah-Amta Ry. Co., 38 C.L.J. 177, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 524, 72 I.C. 98. If the tenancy commences from any day in the middle of the calendar month, (e.g., 10th or 12th or 15th), the month of the tenancy must be calculated as ending on the corresponding day of the next month. Thus, if a monthly tenancy is from the 6th of one month to the 5th of the next month, a notice given on the 30th June requiring the tenant to quit at the end of July is bad—Bengal National Bank v. Janaki, 54 Cal. 813, 31 C.W.N. 973, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 725 (730); Carrara Marble etc. v. Charu Chandra Guha, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 357. But where a house was taken on three years’ lease but no lease-deed was executed and the house was occupied in the middle of a month and the first amount of rent paid was for the period during which the house was occupied prior to the 1st of the following calendar month, the tenancy must be deemed to begin on the 1st of each calendar month—Ramji Lal v. Secretary of State; A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 306 (307), 162 I.C. 712. Alteration of the month of tenancy must be proved either by direct or by circumstantial evidence—Carrara Marble v. Charu Chandra, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 357; Mohonbai Lilawati v. Kishanlal and Mohonlal, I.L.R. (1966) 16 Raj. 651.

If the tenancy is created according to the Indian Calendar, the notice must be given in accordance with that calendar. Thus, a house was let on a monthly tenancy, the month being calculated from the 27th of one month to the 26th of the next month of the Hindi calendar: Notice was served on the 31st December 1915 (11th Pous) directing the tenant to vacate on the 31st January 1916 (12th Magh). Held that the notice was invalid. The notice in order to be valid ought to have directed the tenant to vacate on the 26th day of a month, the day on which every month expired according to the terms of the tenancy—Sheoti Bibi v. Jagannath, 18 A.L.J. 854, 57 I.C. 593. A notice to vacate on 31st July, tenancy commencing from 1st day of an English calendar month, is valid—Tolaram v. Ayaldas, A.I.R. 1965 Madh. Pra. 140; but see Chhaganlal Maganlal v. Chhaganlal Mannalal, 1961 Jab. L.J. 1175.

If a tenancy commences from the 14th Pous, the year of the tenancy must be calculated as commencing from 14th Pous and ending with the 13th Pous of the next year. A notice calling upon the tenant to quit in Ashar is bad; see Kishori Mohun v. Nund Kumar, 24 Cal. 720 (724). But if it appears that although the tenancy was created from the middle of a Bengali month (e.g., 19th Chait), still the rent has all along been paid according to the ordinary Bengali year calculated as commencing from 1st Baisakh and ending with 30th Chait, held that the year of the tenancy in this particular case must be calculated according to the ordinary Bengali year, and a six months' notice given on the 23rd Aswin requiring the tenant to quit on the last day of Chait is a valid notice—Ismail v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (577). When the tenant's entry takes place in the middle of a calendar month and rent is payable from the date of entry, but the parties agree that the rent should be payable at the end of the calendar month, the reasonable inference is that they intended that the monthly tenancy should coincide with the calendar month. In such cases, the fifteen days' notice to quit must be so given as to expire with the end of the calendar month, unless the intention of the parties appears to the contrary—Arunachella v. Ramiah, 30 Mad. 109 (111, 112). When the tenancy is according to the Hindi calendar, a notice to quit under sec. 106 must be given according to that calendar—Sheobux Singh v. Paras Ram, I.L. 9, (1959) 9 Raj. 1157.

A lessor served the lessees (yearly tenants) with a notice on the 28th September 1891 in the following terms: "Within two days from the receipt of this notice, meet us, increase the rent and give us a legal writing or in default on the 31st March 1892 I shall take full possession of the said land." Held that the lessees were by that notice given two days to make a fresh agreement with the landlord, failing which the notice to them to quit at the end of the year of the tenancy became unconditional and absolute. The notice was therefore a good and valid one to terminate the tenancy—Kikabhai v. Kalu, 22 Bom. 241.

If the notice is insufficient (on the ground that it requires the tenant to vacate before the end of the year of the tenancy), a suit based upon such notice must fail, and the Court cannot even pass a decree to the effect that the tenant must quit at the end of the year—Hemangini v. Srigobinda, 29 Cal. 203 (206), dissenting from Ram Lal v. Dina Nath, 23 Cal. 200.

A notice given on the 16th of a month requiring the tenant to vacate "within" the 31st (the last day of the month) is not invalid—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (492). Even a notice calling upon the tenant to quit "before" the expiry of the last day of the year is not bad—Ismail

Khan v. Jaigun, 27 Cal. 570 (578). But a notice requiring the tenant to quit on the last day at noon is bad, because the tenant is not bound to vacate before midnight—Page v. More, (1850) 15 Q.B. 684.

But a notice giving a longer time by a few hours is not bad. Thus, if the notice issued on the 15th September asked the tenant to quit on the forenoon of the 1st October, it was not bad by being too long by a few hours—Gnanaprakasam v. Vaz, 60 M.L.J. 293, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 352 (355). Where the tenancy is for 11 months commencing on 20.4.49 and the tenant remains in occupation even after the term on payment of rent, a notice asking the tenant to quit on 21.1.54 is valid—Vishnu Ganesh v. Laxminarayan, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 293. Where a tenancy commences on the 2nd day of a month, a notice determining the tenancy from the 1st day of the month is valid—Madhav Rao v. Bhagwandas, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 138.

Where no date is fixed as to the commencement of a lease and the lease-money is payable by monthly rent, the lease is terminable by 15 days' notice expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy. In case of such a lease, a notice given on the 24th June calling on the lessee to vacate the premises by midnight of the 31st July following is a valid notice—A. P. Bagchi v. Mrs. Morgan, A.I.R. 1937 All. 36 (38), 166 I.C. 897. A lease reserving a yearly rent payable in the four usual quarterly instalments creates a tenancy from the commencement of the calendar year or month, as the case may be, in the absence of any indication in the lease that it was to commence from the date of the lease—Udaytara v. Habibar Rahaman, (1938) 42 C.W.N. 771. If the lessor who is in doubt as to the correct date of commencement of tenancy, gives a notice proposing three alternative dates and giving the lessee option to choose anyone, the notice is good—Mohonalal v. Vijai Narain, A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 136.

Where the tenancy was from month to month commencing on the 10th of every month and the lessor gave notice on the 13th June calling on the lessee to vacate the land "by" the 10th July, it was held that the word "by" did not exclude but included 10th, so the notice was valid—Sheikh Nuroo v. Seth Meghraj, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 139 (140), I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 214, 170 I.C. 790; Eastaugh v. Macpherson, (1954) 3 All. E.R. 214.

Where the tenancy was from 10th of one month to 9th of the next month the landlord asked the tenant to vacate after 10.5.46. A second notice was given in these terms : "...I call upon you to definitely vacate ...by 10.10.47...you are further required to pay Rs. 1245 as arrears of rent upto 10.5.46 and Rs. 23,310 as damages till 10.10.47." The first notice was held to be invalid and the second notice was held to be a valid notice under sec. 111 (h)—Ram Chandra v. Lala Dulichand, A.I.R. 1958 All. 729. If the tenant is asked to vacate before the expiry of the last date of the month the notice is valid—Mir Abdul Hanan v. Anil Ch. Dey, I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 122; Madhab Rao v. Bhagwan Das, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pr. 138.

Fifteen days' notice :—The fifteen days' notice referred to in the section means 15 clear days. Thus, where the plaintiff served his notice on the defendants on the 16th Falgoon, and required them to quit the land on the 30th of the same month, so that the defendants had only fourteen clear days, the notice to quit was held to be bad—Subadini v. Durga Charan, 28 Cal. 118, 4 C.W.N. 790. In other words, the day on which the notice is given is excluded from calculation. See sec. 110. But the day on which the notice is to expire is not to be excluded. And, therefore, a notice served on the 16th Baisakh calling on the tenant to quit on the 31st is a good notice, as it gives 15 clear days' time (the 31st Baisakh not being excluded from calculation)—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (493), 26 I.C. 962. The date on which the notice is received is included in computing the period of 15 days—Mt. Natho v. Sital Prasad Sahu, A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 310. In the case of a monthly tenancy according to the English calendar the notice asking the tenant to quit by the morning of 1.10.49 was held to be valid—Bharat Sahu v. Gadadhar Ramanuj Das, A.I.R. 1956 Orissa 128.

557A. Month or year of tenancy—Effect of sec. 110 :—If a tenancy under an agreement is said to commence from 1st June 1921 and to last for 4 years, the lease will commence (according to the first para of sec. 110) on 2nd June 1921 and expire (according to second para of sec. 110) on the midnight of 1st June 1925. Thereafter, the tenant holding over will hold from month to month, i.e., from 2nd June to 1st July, and so on. Therefore, if on the 1st February 1928, the tenant gave notice of his intention to quit on the 1st March, the notice was valid and effective. The notice was operative till the midnight of the 1st March—Benoy Krishna v. Salciccioni, 60 Cal. 389 (P.C.), 37 C.W.N. 1, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 279, 141 I.C. 514; Durga Prasad v. Bhagwan Devi, A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 404. See also Susil v. Birendrajit, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 837, 38 C.W.N. 782, 153 I.C. 673. See in this connection Venkataram v. Suryanarayana, A.I.R. 1953 Or. 58. Khumani v. Saktey Lal, A.I.R. 1952 All. 579. Similarly, if a tenancy is created on the 1st December 1924 for a period of one month, "and thereafter unless and until the tenancy should be determined by a 15 days' notice expiring within the calendar month", it must be held that the first month of the tenancy commenced on the 2nd December 1924 (according to the provisions of sec. 110), and expired on the 1st January 1925, but thereafter it continued according to the calendar month, i.e., January, February and so on. Therefore, if a notice is given on the 15th September requiring the tenant to vacate on the forenoon of the 1st October, the notice is not strictly speaking a correct notice; because it ought to have called upon the tenant to quit on the midnight of the 30th September, that being the time and date of expiry of the calendar month; but the Court excused the mistake on the ground that a notice need not be worded with the accuracy of a plea—Gnanaprakasam v. Vaz, 60 M.L.J. 293, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 352 (353). "The validity of a notice to quit ought not to turn on the mere splitting of a straw. If hyper-criticisms are to be indulged in, a notice to quit at the first moment of the anniversary ought to be just as good as a notice to quit on the last moment of the day before." "The law upon notices to quit is highly technical, and I do not desire to add one more technicality to it"—thus observed Lindley, L.J., and Smith, L.J. in Sidebotham v. Holland, (1895) 1 Q.B. 378, in which the yearly tenancy ran from 19th May of one year to the 18th May of the next year, and the landlord gave a wrong notice requiring the tenant to quit on the 19th, instead of on the 18th May. Where a tenancy is in accordance with the Indian calendar, but the tenant is asked to deposit rent under the Rent Control Act according to English calendar, the notice to quit must be given according to the Indian calendar—A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 120.

A periodical tenancy such as from month to month is not governed by sec. 110. Therefore the 1st day of the months need not be omitted from the period of notice to quit. In such a case the notice must expire with the end of a month of tenancy—Chand Md. v. Murtazakhan, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 203, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 437, dissenting from Sheikh Nuroo v. Meghraj, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 139, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 289; Banchhanidhi v. Lachminarain, A.I.R. 1950 Or. 1, I.L.R. 1949 Cut. 231; Krishnaiah v. Lakshmana, A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 139; Ram v. Lalit, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 351; Carrara Marble etc. v. Charu Chandra Guha, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 357. Where the tenancy has commenced on the first day of a month, the notice to quit must expire with the last day of a month—Ganesi v. Jamuna, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 385, 24 Pat. 449. Where the tenancy commenced on the 13th of a calendar month the tenant could be asked to vacate only at the beginning of the 13th—Ilahibux v. Munierkhan, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 219.

A characteristic of a periodical tenancy is that as each period begins, it is not a new tenancy but an accretion to the old tenancy. A provision that either side will give one clear months' notice does not affect the rule that the notice must expire with the expiration of the tenancy—Utility Articles Manfg. & Co. v. R. B. M. Motilal Mills Ltd., A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 306, 45 Bom. L.R. 605.

A lease for 7 years commenced on 1st Baisakh 1318, but there was an express stipulation in the lease that the time limited by the lease was up to the end of 1324. The lessor served a notice on the lessee to vacate the land by the end of the month of Asar: held that the notice was valid. In view of the express agreement the lease lasted only up to the last day of 1324 and not up to the 1st Baisakh of 1325 under sec. 110. The term of the lease having expired on the last day of 1324, the monthly tenancy began from 1st Baisakh, 1325—Deb Das v. Abdul Gani, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 358 (359), 42 C.W.N. 443, 67 C.L.J. 291.

558. Who can give notice :—The notice may be given by either the lessor himself or his agent. Thus, in the case of notice given by a landlord, it is sufficient if it is given at the instance of the landlord, and signed by his agent, and it is not necessary that it should be signed by the landlord himself—Mohendra v. Biswanath, 29 Cal. 231; Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (493). Gomez v. Ram Kumar, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 127, 149 I.C. 559, 58 C.L.J. 133. See also Md. Nural Huda v. Kekabhoy, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 251. An agreement of tenancy provided as follows: "The tenancy may be determined by three months' notice. ...If determined by the council (landlords), shall be by a written notice signed by the valuer of the council..." The notice to quit by the landlords was signed, "J.E.J.T. valuer and agent of the...council (Landlords)". The valuer's name was written by his assistant. There was no indication that the assistant was acting on behalf of the valuer or with his authority. Held the notice was validly signed—London County Council v. Vitamins Ltd., London (1955) 2 All. E.R. 229. A joint notice to quit by the landlord's transferees, owing distinct portions of the demised property, is sufficient to terminate the tenancy—Shambhoo Dayal v. Chandra Kali Devi, A.I.R. 1964 All. 350.

In the case of notices given on behalf of Government in respect of Crown lands, the Collector is competent to sign them and it is not necessary that the Secretary of State should sign—Rakhal Chandra v. Secretary of State, 10 C.W.N. 841 (844).

The recognized Secretary of a Corporation is competent to give or receive notice on behalf of the Corporation—Deo d. Birmongham Canal Co. v. Bold, 11 Q.B. 127.

A notice to quit certain premises belonging to a temple may be validly signed by the authorised agent of the manager of the temple and need not be signed by the manager himself—Bhagwan v. Shiv Sabitri, 78 I.C. 651, A.I.R. 1925 All. 199. Where notice to quit was given by the shebait on the footing as if the idols were the sole owners of the premises and it directed that the tenants should vacate the entire premises, while it was found that the idols had only an undivided share in the premises : held if the notice was sufficient with regard to the whole of the premises, it was sufficient with regard to a portion of it even if the property from which ejectment was sought might have been an undivided portion of the said premises—Sashi Mohan v. Lakshmi-Narayanji, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 331.

In case of joint landlords one of them cannot give notice without the consent of others. The reason is, that if any one of them is to be at liberty to enhance rent or eject tenants at his own peculiar pleasure, there would be no safety for tenants, and it would be impossible for them to know how to regulate their conduct or whom to regard as their landlord—Balaji v. Gopal, 3 Bom. 23; Kamarat Ali v. Hanuman, 34 I.C. 56 (Cal.); Abdul Hawid v. Bhanwaneswar, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 18.

A receiver being an officer of the Court cannot serve a notice to quit as he is not a representative or agent of the landlord. But where the Receiver issues the notice with the consent or at the instance of the lessor, he acts not as a receiver but as the agent of the lessor and therefore the notice is valid—Vinod v. Vishnubhaji, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 338.

Where a tenancy is created by joint landlords, it can only be put an end to by all the lessors acting together. But there is an exception when one of the joint landlords is acting as manager of the estate with the consent of the others—Krishna Bhima v. Laxmibai, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 316 (317-18), 40 Bom. L.R. 439; Arun Chandra v. Panchu Modak, A.I.R. 1957 Assam 70. Notice signed by the sons of the deceased landlord and not by their mother is valid—Fatesh Chand v. Brij Bhusan, A.I.R. 1957 All. 801. A notice to quit signed by one of the joint-owners on behalf of all is valid—Misri Lal v. Ram Gopal, 1966 All. L.J. 35.

Proper execution of ammuktearnamas giving authority to use in ejectment, confers also the power to issue notices, but it is not necessary that the authority should be in writing—Badardoza v. Ajijoddin, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 651 (653), 57 Cal. 10, 33 C.W.N. 559, 120 I.C. 455.

A mortgagee in possession is entitled to determine the tenancy of an annual tenant without the consent of the mortgagor—Barjorji v. Shripat, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 145 (148), 29 Bom. L.R. 215, 100 I.C. 1033. A notice to quit served by a Government officer without authority on a tenant under the Government is invalid—Abdul Haque v. State of West Bengal, 67 C.W.N. 1064.

559. Service of notice :—This section does not require that the notice should be delivered to the tenant personally by the landlord or his agent, or that it should be given direct to the tenant. Anyhow if the notice is delivered by some one to the tenant, the requirements of this section are complied with. If, therefore, notice is given in the first instance to the solicitor of the tenant, and is then conveyed by him through a relative or servant to the tenant, it is sufficient—Bhojabhai v. Hayem Samuel, 22 Bom. 754.

When two tenants hold premises in common, notice to quit to one of them is sufficient to determine the tenancy—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 16th Edn., p. 379. Where, therefore, a notice to quit addressed to all the joint tenants who lived in commensality was handed over to one of them who signed an acknowledgement of it, held that the service was a good service—Rojoni Bibi v. Hafizoonissa, 4 C.W.N. 572; Doe v. Watkins, (1806) 7 East 531, 8 R. R. 670; Vaman v. Khanderao, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 247, 156 I.C. 1620, 37 Bom. L.R. 376; Bodardoza v. Ajijuddin, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 651 (654), 57 Cal. 10, 33 C.W.N. 559, 120 I.C. 455. In the case of joint tenants, if there is a tender or delivery of the notice to the head of the family, the service is sufficient. It is not necessary to deliver or tender the notice on each of the tenants personally—Kedarnath v. Madhusudan, 37 C.L.J. 478, 75 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 682. The procedure in case of joint tenants is that each is intended to be bound, and it has long ago been decided that service of a notice to quit upon one joint tenant is prima facie evidence that it has reached the other joint tenants—Harihar v. Ramsashi, 46 Cal. 458 (P.C.); Mohanlal v. G. G. in Council, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 255. But the notice must be addressed to all the tenants. If a notice is addressed to one joint tenant, and served on him, another joint tenant is not bound by such notice—Bejoy Chand v. Kali Prosanna, 29 C.W.N. 620, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 752 (754), 87 I.C. 708.

If a notice calling upon two joint tenants is sent to the address of one who refuses to accept, the tenancy is terminated—Roshan v. Purshottam Lal, A.I.R. 1965 All. 287; Shri Nath v. Smt. Saraswati Devi Jayswal, A.I.R. 1964 All. 52.

Under this section, the notice may be served on one of the family or servants of the tenant. If the notice has once been delivered to the addressee's relative or servant, it becomes immaterial whether the addressee actually receives it or not—Doe de Neville v. Dunbar, N. & M. 10; see also Manzoor Ali v. Lal Devi, A.I.R. 1951 All. 396; 1951 A.L.J. 154; Ghulam Md. v. Lakshmibux, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 88. "When once you constitute your servant as your agent for that general purpose, service on that agent is service on you: he represents you for that purpose—he is your alter ego, and service upon him becomes an effective service upon yourself. Therefore the fact that the agent who received the notice put it into the fire would liberate entirely the person who delivered the notice, but it would not liberate the receiver of the notice when once the agency was established; it would not avail him as a mode of escaping from the consequences of his having employed such an agent"—per Lord Hatherley, L.C. in Tanham v. Nicholson, 5 App. Cas. 561 (568, 569). But it should be noted that such service on the relative or servant must be made by delivery at the residence of the tenant. A service on a man's wife at a place other than his residence is not sufficient service—Doe de Blair v. Street, 2 A. & E. 328. If a Hindu taking a lease of shop in his personal capacity dies leaving several heirs a notice to quit served on one or more of the heirs is valid in law, provided the notice is intended to be a notice to all the heirs—Mst. Ramubai v. Jiyaram Sharma, A.I.R. 1964 Bom. 96. A notice to quit served on one of the joint tenants is sufficient and suit for ejectment against one of the tenants is also good—Kunj Manji v. Trustee of the Port of Bombay, A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 468. In the case of tenants-in-common, there is only unity of possession and not of title or interest; hence to determine such a tenancy notice must be issued to all the tenants—V. Konnappan v. Kunniyil Manikkam, A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 229.

The publication of notice in a newspaper does not amount to service of notice. Thus, where the landlord gave notice to vacate to the defendant, along with several other tenants, by means of an advertisement in a local newspaper, and it did not appear that the same form of notice was handed to the defendant or any member of his household, or that even a copy of the newspaper was sent to the defendant by hand or by post, it was held that to allow a mere advertisement in a newspaper to take the place of a notice to the tenant (or to the landlord) in terminating the tenancy was against reason and authority and that the persons to be affected must be addressed in a way which left no reasonable doubt as to his having knowledge of the notice—Chandmal v. Bachraj, 7 Bom. 474.

As a last resort, notice may be served by affixing it to a conspicuous part of the leased property. But before such service can be held to be valid, the Court will require strict proof to show that the service by tender or delivery as prescribed by this section was not practicable. A Civil Court peon went to serve a notice upon two tenants, one of whom was a pardanashin lady and the other a minor boy. Being told that the lady was indoors and that the boy had gone out to look after the cattle, the peon beat a drum, read the notice aloud and affixed a copy of the notice on the wall of the house. There were servants present, but no attempt was made to tender the notice to them or to find the boy and tender the notice to him. Held that the service of notice was not valid, inasmuch as the affixing of the notice to the wall was of no avail unless it was made out that tender or delivery was not practicable—Biseswan v. Pitambar, 51 I.C. 44 (Cal.). When the tenant is away from the premises and there is nobody else to receive notice, service by affixing the notice at the door is good service—Satya Chorone v. Suresh Chandra, 65 C.W.N. 1239.

Notice sent by post:—Service of notice may be made by a registered letter through the post office. Such service is not necessarily bad, provided it is proved that the post-peon delivered the letter either personally to the party or to one of his family or to his servant—Subadmi v. Durga Charan, 28 Cal. 118; Harihar v. Ramshashi, 46 Cal. 458 (P.C.); Bodardoza v. Ajijuddin, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 651 (653), 57 Cal. 10, 33 C.W.N. 559, 120 I.C. 455; Saibalini Saha v. Snehalata Bose, 65 C.W.N. 690. This is now expressly provided by the amendment made in the second para. When a notice by registered post comes back with the remark 'refused' the notice must be deemed to have been properly served without formal proof of refusal by the postman—Saibalini v. Snehalata, 65 C.W.N. 690; 71 C.W.N. 282. When an acknowledgment comes back signed by some person on behalf of the addressee, the service is good—Radharani v. Angurbala, 65 C.W.N. 1119.

Sending by post must mean sending by post to the tenant's proper address—Prahladrai v. Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta, A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 11, 43 C.W.N. 309 (P.C.). Where notice to quit though not properly addressed was accepted by the tenant and replied to the notice cannot be held to be invalid merely on the ground that it was not properly addressed—Dwarka Prasad v. Central Talkies, A.I.R. 1956 All. 187.

A notice sent by post must be addressed to the place of residence of the tenant. If addressed to the tenant at his gadi or place of business, the notice is not duly given—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (499).

It may be generally said that a notice is duly served if it is sent by registered letter, though it is refused by the tenant, and the bare fact of refusal to take and open the registered cover does not entitle the tenant to plead non-service of notice—Jogendra v. Dwarka Nath, 15 Cal. 681. Contra—Vaman v. Khanderao, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 247, 37 Bom. L.R. 376, 156 I.C. 1020. If the letter containing the notice is properly addressed to the residence of the tenant, and is registered at the post office and left in the custody of the postal authorities, it must be presumed under sec. 114, Evidence Act, that the letter reached the tenant in the ordinary course, and the fact that the post office afterwards returned the letter as refused by the addressee does not destroy the presumption—Girish v. Kishore, 23 C.W.N. 319 (320), 54 I.C. 5. The tenant refusing the notice cannot afterwards plead ignorance of its contents, for he will be fixed with constructive notice—Isma'il Khan v. Kali Krishna, 6 C.W.N. 134 (137). If a notice is sent under certificate of posting at the address where the family of the tenant resides the notice is valid—Sukumar v. Naresh Chandra, A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 49. The presumption available for service under certificate of posting should not be given effect to when it is found that the notice by registered post and the notice served personally are both invalid—M/s. Surajmull Ghanshyamdas v. Samadarshan Sur, A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 109.

If a notice is sent by post, and is refused by the addressee, certain questions of evidence arise as to the date of sending the notice, the fact of return, and the date of tender or refusal. These are considered below:—

(1) If the notice is sent by post, it is first of all necessary to ascertain the date on which it was posted, and for that purpose it is necessary to rely on the date of the post mark, because the mere fact that a notice is dated 16th of a month does not show that it must have been posted on that date—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (495), 26 I.C. 962. For instance, if the notice is dated 16th of a month calling upon the tenant to vacate on the 31st day of the month, but the notice is posted (as evidenced by the post mark) on the 17th, the notice is prima facie insufficient.

(2) If the notice sent by registered letter comes back to the sender through the Dead Letter Office, that fact does not justify the presumption that it has been refused by the tenant; for it may well be that it has been returned by the Post Office because the addressee has not been found; much less is there a presumption that the cover has been tendered to the addressee on a particular date—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (498).

(3) The date of the post mark of the post office of destination does not necessarily show that the letter was tendered to the addressee on the same date, especially if it is registered letter which is delivered by the post office only between specified working hours. Therefore, if a notice sent by registered post on the 16th of a month (calling upon the tenant to vacate on the 31st) reaches the post office of destination on the same day (16th) as evidenced by the post mark of that post office, that does not conclusively prove that the letter was tendered to the addressee on the 16th. And in the absence of such proof, the notice would be insufficient—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (495).

(4) If the letter comes back to the sender with an endorsement on the cover to the effect that the letter is returned as the addressee refused to receive it, and the endorsement is signed and dated by the peon, such endorsement is no evidence of the fact that the cover was tendered to the addressee on that date nor of the fact that it was refused by him on that date. These facts must be proved by calling the peon as a witness—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (496).

In view of the amendment in this section, sec. 114 of the Evidence Act and sec. 27, General Clauses Act, there is a presumption of law in favour of effective service where the notice is sent by registered post—Bachcha Lal v. Lachman, A.I.R. 1938 All. 388, (1938) A.L.J. 511. A lessor is not bound to prove service of notice if he sends the notice to the lessee by the registered post properly addressed. Where a firm is the lessor the identity of the partners need not be disclosed in the notice—Saligram v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1953 Ass. 206. Where a notice sent by registered post is returned with a postal endorsement "refused", the endorsement is admissible in evidence, even though the postman is not examined. Unless rebutted, it is sufficient notice under this section—Bapayya v. Venkataratnam, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 884; Nirmala v. Pravat, 52 C.W.N. 659; Sushil v. Ganesh, 62 C.W.N. 193; Saibalini v. Snehalata, 65 C.W.N. 690; Munni v. Pushpalata, 71 C.W.N. 282. But see Jankiram v. Damodhar, A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 266; Balgovind Rastogi v. Bhargava School Book Depot, A.I.R. 1958 All. 369. It is submitted that for the purposes of this presumption, even sending the notice by ordinary post is sufficient, questions of correctly addressing the letter and posting it being questions of fact. Keeping a certificate of posting may be helpful.

If the defect in a notice is not pleaded at proper stage it is deemed to be waived—Nathusingh v. Laxmanrao, 1960 Jab. L.J. 549. New ground regarding defect in the notice to quit cannot be taken for the first time in second appeal—Nathusingh v. Laxmanrao, 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 189.

107. A lease of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument.

Leases how made.

All other leases of immoveable property may be made either by a registered instrument or by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession.

Where a lease of immoveable property is made by a registered instrument, such instrument or, where there are more instruments than one, each such instrument shall be executed by both the lessor and the lessee :

Provided that the “State Government” may,.....from time to time, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct that leases of immoveable property, other than leases from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, or any class of such leases, may be made by unregistered instrument or by oral agreement without delivery of possession.

Amendment :—The third para has been added by sec. 55 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). See Note 568 below.

By the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, which came into operation on 1st April, 1937, in the first line of the Proviso after the word “may”, the words “with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council” were omitted, the words “State Government” have been substituted for “local Government” by A.L.O. 1937 read with A.L.O. 1950 and the words “Official Gazette” have been substituted for “local official Gazette” by A.L.O. 1937.

The amended section deals with the mode of creation of a tenancy so exhaustively that a lease cannot be created in any other mode—Mohan Lal v. Ganda Singh, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 127 (F.B.).

560. This section, like sections 54 and 59, must be read as supplemental to the Registration Act. (See sec. 4 and Notes thereunder). The effect of this section is to abolish optional registration in respect of leases mentioned in the second para of the section. Such leases may be effected by simple delivery of possession without any written instrument; but if they are in writing and no possession is delivered, they must be registered (O’Leary v. Maung On Gaing, 4 Bur. L.T. 197, 11 I.C. 863) unless there is any Government Notification sanctioning the creation of such leases by unregistered writing only. And so, an unregistered lease for a term of less than one year is invalid if possession is not delivered to the lessee—Gulab Khan v. Lal Muhammad, 96 I.C. 410, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 609. A lease for a period less than one year if made in writing (and not by an oral agreement accompanied with delivery of possession) must be registered under the 2nd para of this section, although it is not compulsorily registrable under sec. 17 of the Registration Act—Rama Sahu v. Gowro Ratho, 44 Mad. 55 (64) (F.B.). If such document is not registered, it will be inadmissible under the Transfer of Property Act for the purpose of proving the creation of a lease by its own force or for the enforcement of the terms of it, but it is valid under sec. 17 of the Registration Act, and is therefore admissible in evidence under sec. 49 of that Act for the collateral purpose of proving either an oral lease or for explaining the nature of the possession of the persons in occupation—Ibid; Kedar Nath v. Dungar, 32 P.L.R. 361, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 501, 134 I.C. 289. See also the new proviso of sec. 49, Registration Act, cited under Note 289, ante, and in Appendix V.

The last para has been added by the Amendment Act VI of 1904, because of the Madras High Court decision in Vairanandan v. Miyakan Rowther, 21 Mad. 109 where it was held that leases falling under sec. 107 of the T. P. Act were compulsorily registrable notwithstanding the Government Notification issued under the proviso to sec. 17 (d) of the Registration Act.

560A. "Lease" :—This section is not governed by the definition of the term "lease" in the Registration Act, but by the definition given in sec. 105, ante—Taj Din v. Abdul Rahim, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 423, 41 P.L.R. 498 relying on Ram Krishna v. Jai Nandan, 14 Pat. 672 (F.B.), 16 P.L.T. 451, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 291.

Oral lease :—An oral lease being invalid under this section cannot be relied upon regarding the period of the tenancy—Sengayyam v. Rasu, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 863.

The provisions of this Act were extended to Lahore in 1935, and thereafter an oral lease for a term exceeding one year could not be validly granted there—Vinod v. Vishnubhai, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 388.

561. Agricultural lease :—Sec. 117 makes this Chapter inapplicable to leases for agricultural purposes. Consequently, the letting out of agricultural land need not be by a registered document; it may be by oral agreement or even by conduct of parties—Alam Mulla v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 432 (433), 69 I.C. 57; Giribala v. Dwarka, 55 C.L.J. 312, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 715; Mohadeo v. Sheoram, 90 I.C. 51, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 9. Where, however, the lease relates to agricultural land, but is not a lease for agricultural purposes (e.g., where it is a lease granted to a rent-farmer or middleman) it is clearly governed by this Act, and can only be made under this section by a registered instrument—Rash Behari v. Tiluckdhari, 20 C.W.N. 485, 29 I.C. 797, 23 C.L.J. 111. Where the primary object of the lease is not agricultural, the lease must be treated as not an agricultural lease. Thus, where the lease was for 10 years in respect of a village and certain shops in a city and it was signed by the lessor but not by the lessee, it was held that the combination of the lease of shops in the city with a lease of zemindari rights rather than cultivation rights showed clearly that the lease was not for agricultural purposes. It, therefore, fell within the mischief of this section and was void ab initio—Bithal Das v. Mt. Iqbalunnissa, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 425, 1940 O.W.N. 842, 190 I.C. 44. A lease for planting casuarina trees is a lease for an agricultural purpose, and does not therefore require a registered instrument for its creation—Panadai Pathan v. Ramasami, 45 Mad. 710, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 351.

This section has no application to kabuliyat in respect of agricultural land. A tenancy in respect of such land can be created by an oral agreement, but if an instrument is executed then it must be registered under sec. 17 (1) (d) of the Registration Act, and if not registered, it becomes inadmissible under sec. 49 of that Act—Ali Hossein v. Jonabali, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 770 (772), 62 C.L.J. 534; Imamali v. Priyawati, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 289 (290-291), I.L.R. (1938) Nag. 31, 171 I.C. 553; Sivasubramania v. Theerthapati, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 451, 64 M.L.J. 676, 144 I.C. 27. Thus, an amalnama or kabuliyat relating to growing straw requires registration—Ali Hossein v. Jonabali, supra. So a lease for three years for working out lac-bearing trees need not be in writing and registered, but if reduced to writing it must be registered—Imamali v. Priyawati, supra.

562. Agreement of lease—Possession—Part performance :—If there is an agreement of lease, and the tenant enters into possession in pursuance of that agreement, it is not in the power of the landlord to repudiate the agreement. "A party who has permitted another to perform acts on the faith of an agreement shall not insist that the agreement is bad and that he is entitled to treat those acts as if it had never existed. Between landlord and tenant, when the tenant is in possession at the date of the agreement, the admission into possession, having unequivocal reference to contract, has always been regarded as an act of part performance"—per Plumer, M.R. in Morphett v. Jones, (1818) 1 Sw. 172 (181) : 18 R.R. 48; Maddison v. Alderson, (1883) 8 App. Cas. 467 (479).

It was formerly held that as this section refers to leases, i.e., actual transfer of property, and not to an agreement to grant a lease, such an agreement, if made orally was valid; and if in pursuance of such agreement the intended lessee had taken possession, though the requisite document had not been executed, the position would be the same as if the document had been executed, provided that specific performance could be obtained between the same parties in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question fell to be determined—Baranashi v. Papat Velji, 25 C.W.N. 220, 63 I.C. 118 (124); Chunilal v. Gopiram, 45 C.L.J. 32, 100 I.C. 404, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 275 (277). But then came the judgment of the Privy Council in Ariff v. Jadunath, 58 Cal. 1235, 35 C.W.N. 550, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 79, 131 I.C. 762, which repudiated the doctrine of part performance, on the ground that in view of the provisions of sec. 107, the verbal agreement alone could not create a lease in favour of the so-called lessee, in the absence of a registered instrument, and that the English doctrine of part performance could not be invoked to override or nullify the statutory requirement of a registered document. The result is that in view of the authoritative decision of the Privy Council, the doctrine of part performance cannot be invoked in cases in which the new sec. 53A did not apply.

In cases which will be governed by the Amendment Act, the provisions of section 53A will come into play, but that section requires the agreement to be in writing; and if either party brings a suit for specific performance, the case will fall under the new sec. 27A, Specific Relief Act (added by the T. P. Amendment Supplementary Act XXI of 1929); but even under this Act there must be a document in writing, otherwise the lessee will not be allowed to rely on the doctrine of part performance.

In connection with this section it has been held that if there is a proposal in writing and it is also accepted in writing, the proposal and acceptance constitute a contract in writing. But if the proposal is in writing, but the acceptance is not in writing, the entire agreement not being in writing, it cannot be said that the contract of lease is "in writing"—Gokul v. Md. Din, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 136 (138), 42 C.W.N. 97.

This section, i.e., sec. 27A, overrules the case of Sanjib Chandra Sanyal v. Santosh Kumar Lahiri, 49 Cal. 507, 26 C.W.N. 329, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 436, 69 I.C. 877, in which it was held that if the lessee took possession under an unregistered agreement of lease, he could not sue for specific performance, because he could not prove the agreement, it being unregistered. Under the present law, it is sufficient for a suit for specific performance if the document containing the contract of lease is in writing signed by the parties, and the lessee has taken possession.

The doctrine of part performance requires that there must be a contract of tenancy between the parties. But where there is no evidence to show that there was any agreement at all between the parties, much less is there evidence to show that the agreement, if any, was in the nature of a tenancy, and it has not been shown that the alleged tenant had at any time paid rent in respect of the land, held that there could be no presumption of tenancy from the mere fact of possession being held by the alleged tenant—Mati Lal v. Darjeeling Municipality, 17 C.L.J. 167, 18 I.C. 844 (845).

Part performance cannot override registration:—The doctrine of part performance can be invoked only in a suit for specific performance, but it cannot override the provisions of this section or of sec. 17, Registration Act, as regards registration. Therefore, where a lease which ought to be registered has not been registered, the lessor cannot enforce the terms of the lease, by relying on the doctrine of part performance—Baij Nath v. Kundan, 1929 A.L.J. 1134, A.I.R. 1929 All. 831 (832), dissenting from Jogendra v. Kurpal, 49 Cal. 345. See the Report of the Special Committee cited under sec. 53A, ante.

The doctrine of constructive possession of the entire lands by proving possession of a part can be relied on in favour of a person who has the legal title vested in him in the leasehold. But a person in possession under an invalid lease being a mere trespasser cannot invoke the principle of constructive possession. His possession is limited to the lands actually in his physical possession—Hari Prasad v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 160.

Where under a written agreement to lease yearly rent is reserved, a lease in pursuance of it can only be created by executing a registered deed. The fact that the proposed lessees were in possession does not mean that a valid lease was created. In such a case they are mere licensees—Anand v. Taiyab, A.I.R. 1943 All. 279. Where an agreement does not alter the terms of a lease, but merely dissolves a dispute regarding its construction, it does not however require registration—Jagadish v. Md. Bukhtiyar, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 409.

Agreement to lease:—Specific performance:—"It is elementary", observe their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, "that specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease cannot be decreed unless that agreement, either expressly or impliedly to be granted, fixes the date from which the term is to run"—Giribala v. Kalidas, A.I.R. 1921 P.C. 71, 57 I.C. 626, following in Khushi Ram v. Munshi Lal, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 225, 42 P.L.R. 194, 189 I.C. 418.

Where present demise:—Where possession has been given under an agreement to lease and from that date the parties act exactly as though the tenancy has been in force, the fact that the tenancy is to commence at a date subsequent to the agreement does not prevent there being a present demise and the contract contained in the writing requires registration—Bechar Das v. Borough Municipality, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 346, 43 Bom. L.R. 603; see also Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapur Zemindari Co., 46 I.A. 240, 47 Cal. 485; Ramjoo v. Haridas, 52 Cal. 695, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1087, 91 I.C. 320; Sultanali v. Tayeb, 32 Bom. L.R. 188, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 210, 125 I.C. 188.

This section only lays down how a lease is to be made and not how an agreement to lease can be made—Radhabai v. Nayadu, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 285, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 799. A written agreement to lease not creating a present demise need not be signed both by the lessor and the lessee. Such a writing, where it is a term exceeding one year, would however require registration—ibid. Where before preparing the instrument of transfer the parties prepared a draft lease, the contract itself was reduced to writing and the document served as a protection under sec. 53A of this Act—Ibid.

As to meaning of the lease:—An agreement as to the meaning of a lease does not by itself amount to the creation of a new lease. Thus, where in the case of a dispute between the parties as to their respective rights under the lease, a compromise petition fixing the rate of rent and prohibiting the lessee from constructing pucca roofs without the lessor's permission was filed, it was held that it did not create a new lease—Manik Chandra v. Gour Krishna, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 536.

563. Lease from year to year :—A lease is deemed to be from year to year when the lessor has at the end of the year no power to determine it—Hand v. Hall, 2 Ex. D. 318. A lease which under sec. 106 is "deemed" to be a lease from year to year is nonetheless a lease from year to year under sec. 107 and must be registered subject to the provisions of sec. 53A—Sali Prasanna v. Md. Fazel, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 320. Sec. 107 does not apply to a lease from year to year under sec. 116—Zahoor Ahmad Abdul Sattar v. State of U.P., A.I.R. 1965 All. 326. Where the lease is in fact for a manufacturing purpose even though there is no registered lease deed, it must be deemed to be a lease from year to year for the purpose of notice under sec. 106—Steurat & Co. Ltd. v. C. Mackertich, A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 198.

A be-miadi patta is a lease without a term or a lease not for a definite period, but one from year to year. Even though a be-miadi patta recites that the lessee and his heirs and successors should hold possession of the property, still the lease would not be construed as a permanent one—Parshan v. Tulsi Kuer, 2 P.L.J. 180 (182), 39 I.C. 658.

The words "this is to remain in force until another patta is granted" in a patta for one year, show an intention to create or regulate the terms of a tenancy beyond the year from year to year—Venkatachellam v. Audian, 3 Mad. 358.

A lease of a hut or house which fixes a monthly rent is a monthly lease; it is not a lease from year to year by reason of the fact that the rent is made payable annually—Mangal Singh v. Atra, 3 Lah. L.J. 222, 60 I.C. 226.

If there is a lease of immoveable property from year to year or for a term exceeding a year reserving a yearly rent, the fact that it is embodied in a decree, will not save it from the necessity of registration—Ramsao v. Shrimant, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 480, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 281, 42 Bom. L.R. 501.

564. Lease for a term of one year or exceeding one year :—A lease of house property for a definite period of one year only can be established by proof of an oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession—Md. Farooq v. Mt. Masjide Begam, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 408, (1942) O.W.N. 357, 200 I.C. 593. A lease for one year certain with an expression on the tenant's part of readiness to hold the land longer at the same rent, if the landlord should so desire it, does not create in the tenant any interest exceeding one year—Apu Budgavda v. Narhari, 3 Bom. 21. See also Boyd v. Kreig, 17 Cal. 548 and Jagjivandas v. Narayan, 8 Bom. 493. So also, a lease under which the lessor agrees to let his premises for a period of one year and also agrees "not to increase the rent nor to have the premises vacated for further two years if the said tenant wish to occupy it for that period" is not lease for a term exceeding one year and is not therefore compulsorily registrable—Beni Menahim v. Pebologo, 8 Bom. L.R. 580. The reason is that if in a document in which a term of one year is specifically prescribed, any subsequent words are used for the continuance of possession, they are to be considered to appertain to the future consent of the parties, and cannot in any way affect the actual term fixed—Apu Budgavda v. Narhari, 3 Bom. 21. All leases of immoveable property for more than a year must be in writing and registered—Battersby v. DeCruz, 63 Cal. 31; Bashir v. Nederlandsche Handel, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 180, 171 I.C. 643. Where a building is leased out for an indefinite period for carrying on business at a rent to be settled on the basis of percentage of profits earned after fifteen months, the lease is one for a period exceeding one year, it is compulsorily registrable and it does not attract sec. 106 T. P. Act—Delhi Motor Co. v. Basrurkar, U.A., A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 794.

A lease for so long as the lessee continues to pay the stipulated rent is a lease not limited to one year—Sheo Gholam v. Budreenath, 4 N.W.P. 36. Where the lease of a rice mill is executed for one month with a condition that if there is paddy unmilled at the expiry of the lease, a fixed monthly rent every month will be paid for 5 years, the lease is a lease for over one year and requires registration—U Min Sin v. Ko Kye, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 117.

A lease of immoveable property for the life of the lessee is a lease for a term exceeding one year and must be registered—Parsotam v. Nana, 18 Bom. 109; Wazir v. Ram Prasad, 59 I.C. 893 (Pat.).

Though a Hindi Sambat year is more than one year calculated according to the English calendar, a lease for one Sambat year is not compulsorily registrable—Moti Ram v. Seth Lakshmi Chand, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 216.

The transfer of the right to enjoy immoveable property in perpetuity made by the holder of an impartible zemindary to a junior member on terms that the latter will give up all claims for maintenance and will pay annually to the zemindar a sum of money does not amount to a lease so as to be without effect unless in writing registered. Such a transaction should be regarded as a family arrangement and is effective though oral—Arumugham v. Subramaniam, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 882 (892) (F.B.), I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 638, 171 I.C. 444.

Where under an oral agreement for a lease of 3 years the lessee was given possession and rent was taken from him, only the formal execution of the deed was to be done later, it was held that the oral agreement amounted to a lease and required a registered document—Mopurappa v. Ramaswami, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 760, 152 I.C. 538.

A verbal lease for more than a year is valid for one year, if it is accompanied by delivery of possession. Hence the tenant who continues to be in possession beyond one year is holding over and the landlord is entitled to claim rent under sec. 116—Aziz v. Alauddin, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 485, 144 I.C. 788 ; Anand v. Taiyab, A.I.R. 1943 All. 279. But where a term of an oral agreement to lease of residential premises was that the tenant should occupy the premises at least for one year and thereafter the tenancy would terminate by one month's notice on either side, it was held that the lease was for a period exceeding one year. Such a lease could only be made by a registered instrument, and there was no valid lease for one year—Ram v. Lalit, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 351. An agreement to lease though void for want of registration as a transfer of property may yet be valid, regarded as an agreement—Chandulal v. Keshavlal, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 246 (249), 163 I.C. 579.

A permanent lease can only be created by a registered instrument. So, when the origin of the tenancy is known and the document by which it was created is ruled out for want of registration, oral evidence as to the terms of the tenancy is inadmissible, nor can attendant circumstances be looked into to find out what was its nature or incidents, and an estoppel against statute cannot be pleaded. But an equitable estoppel may arise where the tenant has spent money in raising permanent structure under the belief, though mistaken, that he had a permanent right—Badal v. Debendra, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 612, 37 C.W.N. 473, 145 I.C. 892. Where a person was let into possession not as a donee but as a tenant, and the permanent tenancy which he set up has failed as being in contravention of this section, the status of that person originated as that of a yearly tenant. After the expiration of the first year of this tenancy he is merely holding over with the consent of the landlord until the landlord seeks to assess rent on the land, and if the person denies his right to do so, a suit by the landlord for ejectment within 12 years after the date of the denial is within time—Naim Sahib v. Tata Iron & Steel Co., A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 244, 191 I.C. 686.

The right of fishing is an interest in immoveable property and therefore a lease thereof for any term exceeding one year can be created only by a registered instrument—Thakur v. Jagdambika Pratap, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 93, (1941) O.W.N. 1065, 196 I.C. 694. Consequently, in the absence of a registered instrument, the lessor can succeed only on the basis of use and occupation—Ibid.

A document executed by the landlord or the tenant varying the terms of the tenancy as to the amount to be paid requires registration—Parbati v. Bandeali, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 155, 40 C.W.N. 638, 162 I.C. 33, relying on Lalit v. Gopali Chuk Coal Co., 39 Cal. 284 (F.B.). But see contra, Ramsao v. Shrimant, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 480, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 281, 42 Bom.L.R. 501.

564A. Lease contained in several documents :—Where a lease is created by more documents than one, the whole correspondence, or at any rate the letters containing the offer and the acceptance, must be registered—Morgan v. Fernandez, 30 M.L.J. 519, 33 I.C. 439, 3 L.W. 370.

So also a document which varies the amount of rent payable under an existing registered lease, requires registration—Lalit Mohan v. Gopalichak Coal Co., 39 Cal. 284 (F.B.).

565. Failure to give possession :—The first para of this section lays down that certain leases (e.g., a lease reserving a yearly rent) can be made only by a registered instrument, and in such leases delivery of possession is not necessary for the vesting of the interest in the lessee. The lessee in spite of the fact that he has not obtained possession, holds the position of a lessee, and can maintain an action against the lessor for mesne profits as damages for keeping the lessee out of possession—Razia Begum v. Md. Daud, 6 Pat. 94, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 508 (511), 96 I.C. 558. In England, however, livery of seisin is necessary to complete the title of the lessee, and he is not regarded as a tenant before actual entry; consequently, he cannot maintain any action of the nature referred to above. This doctrine of English common law ought not to be applied in India—Razia Begum v. Md. Daud, supra.

As to the lessor's duty to give possession to the lessee, see Note 573 under sec. 108.

566. Effect of non-registration :—Acts indicative of establishing the relationship of landlord and tenant can create a tenancy. These acts may be expressed, implied or gathered from conduct or circumstances of the parties—Ram Rachhya v. Kamakhya, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 216 (224), 4 Pat. 139, 84 I.C. 586. If a person relying on an unregistered patta is admitted in possession, he is entitled to refer to the unregistered patta for the purpose of explaining that he was let into possession as a tenant—Kuer Rai v. Baburam Kuer, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 498, 187 I.C. 583; see also Janki Kuer v. Brij Bhikan, 3 Pat. 349, 5 P.L.T. 541, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 641. Persons who are in possession of property under unregistered lease-deeds are not trespassers but merely tenants-at-will—Gaya Prasad v. Baijnath, 14 All. 176; Sheo Karan v. Parbhu Narain, 31 All. 276; Ram Chandra v. Syameshwari, 42 C.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1171 (1172); and the lessor is entitled to recover rent from them. Even if they are not liable to pay rent, they are still liable to pay compensation for use and occupation of the land—Ajam Saheb v. Meenatchi, 35 Mad. 95 (F.B.); Sheo Karan v. Parbhu Narain, 31 All. 276 (F.B.); Ramchandra v. Tama Ragho, 36 Bom. 500. See also Md. Farooq v. Mt. Masjidi Begam, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 408, (1942) O.W.N. 357, 200 I.C. 593. But a suit originally brought for rent will not be allowed at a late stage of the case (e.g., in second appeal) to be amended into one for use and occupation—Surendra v. Bhai Lal, 22 Cal. 752. In order that a plaintiff may get a decree for use and occupation on his failure to get a decree for rent, the claim must be specifically laid for rent and in the alternative for use and occupation—O'Leary v. Maung On Gaing, 4 Bur.L.T. 197, 11 I.C. 863.

An unregistered agreement of lease is a sufficient basis for a suit for specific performance. See Note 562, ante, and sec. 27A, Specific Relief Act cited therein. Every lease reduced to writing is not necessarily registrable, but assuming that it is so, it cannot be disallowed as evidence because "equity will support a transaction, though clothed imperfectly in legal forms, to which finality attaches, especially if it had been acted upon by the parties"—Md. Mussa v. Aghore Kumar, 42 Cal. 801, 42 I.A. 1, 28 I.C. 930; Mt. Sajjo v. Basdeo, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 505, 171 I.C. 84.

A compromise decree creating a lease from year to year is compulsorily registrable; if not registered a monthly tenancy is created—Konchada Sundara Narayana Subadi v. Sodai Bhima Gouda, I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 229; Md. Azizul Haque v. Debendra, A.I.R. 1959 Assam 57. An unregistered Kirayanama for a term of three years on monthly rent for residential purpose being void and inadmissible in evidence the duration of the tenancy is to be ascertained in accordance with sec. 106 T. P. Act—Adit Prasad v. Chhaganlal, A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 26. But see Ram Pratap v. National Petroleum, 54 C.W.N. 58 where it has been held that no tenancy is created by an unregistered lease for five years though the person in possession is entitled to protection under sec. 53A T. P. Act and that the unregistered deed is admissible in proof of part performance. See also Biswabani Pvt. Ltd. v. Santosh Kumar, A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 235 in which Ram Pratap's case has been followed.

Where the lessees admit the lease but plead that the lease-deed is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, the Court is fully entitled to go behind the lease and determine its validity—U Min Sin v. Ko Kye, A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 117. Where the lessees admit a lease, but only one of them pleads that the lease-deed is inadmissible for want of registration and the lease is found to be invalid, it is invalid against all the lessees—Ibid. But see Baldeoprasad v. Dasrathilal, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 27 where it has been held that a lease from year to year or reserving annual rent cannot be proved except by a registered instrument; all other evidence is shut out including admission of the landlord—Baldeoprasad v. Dasrathilal, A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 27; Sudhir Kumar v. Dharendra Nath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 625.

The effect of this section and sec. 17 (d) of the Registration Act is, however, to exclude from evidence all unregistered leases which have been reduced to writing. A rent note purporting to grant lease for 11 months which is not registered is not admissible in evidence to prove the period for which the lease was granted and the rent due under it—Mt. Nasiban v.

Md. Sayed, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 174 (175), 164 I.C. 557. Where the agreement or kabuliyat by which a tenancy was created is not registered and no patta in respect of the tenancy is produced, the kabuliyat is inadmissible for the purpose of proving that the tenancy is permanent—Ram Lal v. Bibi Zohra, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 296, 182 I.C. 618.

Section 49, Registration Act, applies only to instruments which are required to be registered by sec. 17 of that Act, and is not applicable to instruments which have to be registered under the provisions of the T. P. Act. Hence an unregistered lease for less than one year which is required to be registered under sec. 107, T. P. Act, but not under sec. 17, Registration Act, is admissible in evidence to prove the nature of the possession under the instrument—Rama v. Gauro, 44 Mad. 55 (F.B.); Ramkishore v. Ambika Prasad, A.I.R. 1966 All. 515.

Section 15 of the T. P. (Second Amendment) Act 21 of 1929 refers only to questions of right, title, etc., which have already accrued and does not affect a question of admissibility in evidence. Consequently, the Proviso to sec. 49 of the Registration Act introduced by sec. 10 (3) and (4) of Act 21 of 1929 is retrospective in operation and applies even to documents executed prior to 1st April, 1930—Swarnamayee v. Sarajubala, 43 C.W.N. 956. Under the Proviso to sec. 49 of the Registration Act correspondence amounting to an unregistered agreement to lease can be looked at for the collateral purpose of determining whether an attachment of the leased property is legal—Khimji v. Pioneer Fibre Co., A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 337, 43 Bom.L.R. 576.

As regards the evidentiary value of an unregistered document of lease, see the new proviso to section 49, Registration Act (cited in Note 271, ante). The document is inadmissible to prove the tenancy, but it is admissible in evidence to prove the nature of the possession held under the instrument—Ram Sahu v. Gowro, 44 Mad. 55 (F.B.). An unregistered document (lease-deed) though inadmissible for the purpose of affecting immoveable property, may yet be looked to, not in any way as creating a title or as showing a transaction that affected the property, but merely as containing a clear and exhaustive statement of the adverse possession set up by a person holding under the unregistered deed—Thakore Fatte Singhji v. Bamanji, 27 Bom. 515. In a suit for rent, or for damages for use and occupation, the unregistered document of lease may be admissible in evidence for determining the amount of rent or establishing the rate of rent agreed upon between the parties, but in a suit to enforce the terms of the lease, the unregistered document would not be admissible to prove those terms—Baij Nath v. Kundan, 1929 A.L.J. 1134, A.L.R. 1929 All. 831 (832). The amount of rent mentioned in the unregistered document cannot be looked at in order to establish the rent fixed; it might be looked at in order to ascertain what amount the landlord suing for arrears of rent was entitled to by way of damages for use and occupation—Kidar Nath v. Dungar, 32 P.L.R. 361, 134 I.C. 289, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 501 (502).

Although a tenancy cannot be established by reason of the fact that the lease-deed is not registered, yet it can be established if the defendants admit that they are tenants and that they had paid rent—Venkatagiri v. Raghava, 9 Mad. 142; Ramchandra v. Ragho, 36 Bom. 500.

567. Absence of writing and registration—Presumption :—Under this section, lease from year to year, or for a term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent must be made by a registered instrument. If however, a (non-agricultural) lease is neither put into writing nor registered but is only accompanied by delivery of possession, the presumption will arise that the lease is from month to month (for which no writing is required), even though the rent appears to have been payable annually in a lump sum—Debendra v. Shyama, 11 C.W.N. 1124 (1126); Sarat Chandra v. Jadav Chandra, 44 Cal. 214; Mohendra v. Narendra, 50 I.C. 918 (Cal.); Bisweswar v. Pitambar, 51 I.C. 44 (Cal.); Sheikh Akloo v. Emanon, 44 Cal. 403, 33 I.C. 899; Raval & Co. v. Ramachandran A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 57 (F.B.); Sampat v. Idol Sri Chandra Prabhaji Bhagwan, 1968 Raj. L.W. 412. Where a lease was granted for construction of a house with merely tiled or thatched roof, the rent was fixed monthly and it was stated that the lessee was free to give up the house and remove the materials thereof whenever he chose, it was held that the tenancy was either a tenancy-at-will or a tenancy from month to month and that being so, the Kabuliyat though unregistered, was admissible in evidence—Ram Lal v. Bibi Zohra, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 228, 20 Pat. 115. So also, where a person takes a lease at a fixed yearly rent, without settling the period of lease, and there is no written instrument, the presumption will be that he becomes a tenant for one year only—Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (491), 26 I.C. 962. So again, a verbal lease for more than one year accompanied by delivery of possession, will be presumed to be a lease for one year only and is valid for one year—Mohamed Musa v. Joganund, 20 I.C. 715 (Cal.). A lease of a dwelling house must be presumed to be held on a monthly term where there is no written and registered contract to show that the lease was an annual one—Shankar Ram v. Tulshi, 2 P.L.T. 178, 61 I.C. 976; Arunachella v. Ramiah, 30 Mad. 109 (112). If the parties enter into an agreement for a lease for 15 years, and a document is executed but not registered, the effect is that the lease must be regarded as a lease for one year only, as a lease for a term exceeding one year can be made only by a registered instrument—Matilal v. Darjeeling Municipality, 17 C.L.J. 167, 18 I.C. 844 (845). See also Alauddin v. Aziz, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 369, 148 I.C. 684. But this is no longer good law; see Ram Kumar v. Jagadish, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 23.

In the absence of a written lease creating a tenancy, the nature of the tenancy must be determined from the surrounding circumstances and in particular from the course of dealings by the parties—Dwarka v. Parbati, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 486, 46 C.W.N. 770. Section 107 does not control sec. 106—Krishna Das v. Bidhan Chandra, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 181.

568. Third para, Kabuliyat :—The third para which has been newly added lays down that both the patta and the kabuliyat must be executed by the lessor and the lessee respectively; in the absence of a patta, a mere kabuliyat executed by the lessee is of no avail. Prior to this amendment there was difference of opinion on this point, which will be evident from the under-noted cases.

It was held by the Allahabad High Court as well as Oudh and Nagpur Courts that where the plaintiff agreed to give the defendant a lease of the land for five years, and the defendant executed a registered kabuliyat to the effect, but no patta was written or registered, held that the transaction did not amount to a lease; in the absence of a deed of lease executed by the lessor, a kabuliyat executed by the lessee, even though registered and accepted by the lessor, was not equivalent to a lease for the purpose of this Act—Kedar Nath v. Shankar Lal, 46 All. 303 (309), 78 I.C. 934, A.I.R. 1924 All. 514; Sheo Karan v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain, 31 All. 276 (F.B.); Raj Kuar v. Nabi Buksh, 9 O.C. 396; Nand Lal v. Hanuman, 26 All. 368; Kashi Gir v. Jogendranath, 27 All. 136; Ahmed Khan v. Sadasheo, 80 I.C. 736, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 121 (122); Safdar Ali v. Ambika, A.I.R. 1930 All. 678 (681), (1930) A.L.J. 1385, 130 I.C. 8; A. P. Bagchi v. Mrs. Morgan, A.I.R. 1937 All. 36 (38), 166 I.C. 897; Md. Hasan v. Buddhu, A.I.R. 1938 All. 32, 172 I.C. 973. Where there was an unregistered patta as well as a registered kabuliyat, held that the patta being unregistered was ineffective to constitute a lease, and that the kabuliyat alone, though registered, did not create a lease—Sikandar v. Bahadur, 27 All. 462. The Rangoon High Court, following the Allahabad view likewise held that since according to the definition given in section 105, a lease was a transfer of a right to enjoy property, a kabuliyat executed by the lessee could not be termed a lease, because it did not transfer any right in the property; it was merely an agreement to cultivate and pay rent—U Tha Nyo v. Mg. Kyaw Tha, 3 Rang. 379, 90 I.C. 693, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 273, 4 Bur. L.J. 99; Mg. Ba v. Htoon, 5 Rang. 95, 102 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 169. The same view has been taken by the Patna High Court—Ramkrishna v. Jainandan, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 291 (F.B.), 14 Pat. 672, 157 I.C. 98. A Kabuliyat cannot form the basis for a claim for rent—Jagannath v. Amarendra Nath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 479. But the landlord is entitled to recover compensation for use and occupation—Ramnarain Passi v. Sukhi Tewary, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 24. A patta executed by the landlord was sufficient for the purpose of creating a lease before the amendment of 1929—Bastacolla Colliery Co. Ltd. v. Bandhu Beldar, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 344 (F.B.). A lease for an indefinite period on payment of yearly rent cannot be created by a unilateral registered Kabuliyat. On acceptance of rent by the landlord the executant becomes a periodic tenant under sec. 106—Chandra Nath Mukherjee v. Chulai Pashi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 40; Jagannath Mahaprabhu v. Saunti Lenka, I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 296. A forfeiture clause in a Kabuliyat is admissible in evidence—Chandra Nath Mukherjee v. Chulai Pashi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 40.

But the Calcutta High Court held in Raimoni v. Mathoora, 39 Cal. 1016, 16 C.W.N. 606, 14 I.C. 540, and Dinanath v. Janakinath, 55 Cal. 435, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 393 (396), that a kabuliyat executed by the lessee constituted a valid lease, though no formal patta was executed by the lessor; and the same view was taken by the Madras High Court in Syed Ajam v. Ananthanarayan, 35 Mad. 95 (F.B.), 8 I.C. 668 (over-ruling Turof Sahib v. Esuf Sahib; 30 Mad. 322). The Bombay High Court was of opinion that a kabuliyat or rent note executed by the lessee did not operate as a transfer of an interest in the property to the lessee and could not therefore operate as a lease; but if the lessee obtained possession, such possession would then be attributable to the document (kabuliyat) he had signed, which had been registered and accepted by the lessor, so that in equity he would be entitled to retain his possession against the lessor seeking to eject him—Ram Singh v. Bai Dyanba, 27 Bom. L.R. 626, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 512, 88 I.C. 648.

The Calcutta and Madras (Full Bench) rulings are now rendered obsolete by this new third para of sec. 107.

Such a document is, however, admissible against the executant himself and would entitle the owner to eject the person in occupation—Md. Hasan v. Buddhu, supra. Although a patta is not a title-deed, it is a document of title to which great weight is generally given both by the possessor and by the Government. The latter cannot say that the pattadar is not entitled to the land nor the tress granted under the patta, nor can the pattadar say that he is not holding from the Government—Secretary of State v. Hussain Sahib, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 783, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 13, 1940 M.W.N. 573, 191 I.C. 631. Though a Kabuliyat cannot operate as a valid lease, it can be used for explaining the plaint—Jagannath v. Amarendra Nath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 479.

The right to collect the fees of slaughter-houses and fish bazars is immoveable property. The letting of such right would, therefore, fall within the definition of "lease" and would require to be executed by both the lessor and lessee—Md. Rowther v. Tinnevely Municipal Council, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 746 (747), 48 M.L.W. 74.

The amendment of this section requiring documents of lease to be in a bilateral form applies to contracts entered into before 1st April, 1930, so that if such an agreement is to be specifically performed afterwards, it must be performed by a document in the bilateral form and not by two separate documents—Swarnamayee v. Sarajubala, 43 C.W.N. 956.

A lease has to be signed both by the lessor and the lessee. Consequently a rent note (kabuliyat) signed only by the intending lessee is not a lease under the Act and would not require registration under this section. It may be a lease under the Registration Act according to the definition in sec. 2 (7) of that Act. But if it is neither from year to year nor for any term exceeding one year nor reserving a yearly rent, it does not require registration under sec. 17 (1) (d) of the Registration Act—Tulsiram v. Govinda, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 143 (144), 1940 N.L.J. 110, 189 I.C. 753. Where a sarkhat has been executed by the tenant alone, it does not constitute a lease. There is nothing in this section which would make the registration of such a sarkhat compulsory or exclude it from evidence. The sarkhat is admissible as showing the terms of the contract previously entered into by the parties. A suit for ejectment and rent can be based upon it, although it does not create a lease—Md. Farooq v. Mt. Masjidi Begam, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 408, (1942) O.W.N. 357, 200 I.C. 593.

A lease from year to year or for a term exceeding one year not executed in the manner specified in the third para of this section is invalid and the invalidity cannot be cured by construing it as a lease for one year made by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession and thereafter to be a case of holding over under sec. 116—Hari Prasad v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 160. See also Sant Bux v. Ali Raza, A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 129, 21 Luck. 194. A Kabuliyat alone cannot create a lease—Shiv Dutt v. Ghasita, A.I.R. 1953 All. 499. Where the landlord accepts the Kabuliyat and receives rent as provided therein, the lessee cannot be denied the status of the tenant—Asa Ram v. Mst. Ram Kali, A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 183. Payment and acceptance of rent can create a tenancy—Tulum Dhari Rai v. Devi Rai, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 279. A deed of Bharapatra by which the executant states that he is a tenant at a particular rent for a period of 3 years is not however a lease and is not covered by the third para so as to be excluded from evidence—Birendra v. Sukumar, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 352. A rent-deed executed by the tenant, if not registered, can be relied upon to establish the relation existing between the parties—Mohan Lal v. Gauda Singh, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 127 (F.B.). A lease for more than one year cannot be created by a unilateral Kabuliyat even though it be registered one and even though it be accepted by the landlord orally or by writing unregistered—Dip Narain Singh v. Kanai Lal Goswami, 64 C.W.N. 293. A Kabuliyat is not a lease within sec. 105—Ibid. Where the lessee remained in possession for 12 years under a Kabuliyat, the lessee acquired the title which the agreement, if accompanied by a registered lease would have conferred upon him—Ibid.

Where the lessor alone executed a patta and the lessee alone executed a Kabuliyat, no valid lease is created—Budhan v. Ramanugrah, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 78, 13 B.R. 332. Terms of contract embodied in a Kabuliyat cannot be proved either by the Kabuliyat or by any other evidence—Hiralal Rewani v. Bastacolla Colliery Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 331. If a person executes a registered Kabuliyat purporting to take a settlement of some land for 10 years for building purposes and pays rent only for the first two years, he is neither a tenant for ten years nor for one year but he is a tenant from month to month—Ram Kumar v. Jagdish Chandra, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 23. If a Kabuliyat for three years is unregistered, a monthly tenancy is created—Lalchand v. Radha Ballabh, A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 240.

569. Delivery of possession :—Under this section a lease for less than one year must be made either by a registered instrument or by an oral agreement to be completed by delivery of possession. So where in a suit for recovery of rent on the basis of certain unregistered rent notes (leases for less than one year) no oral agreement was relied upon, nor was the suit for recovery of compensation for use and occupation, the suit was dismissed in view of the provisions of secs. 105 and 107—Md. Malan v. Dayal Singh, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 162, 41 P.L.R. 178. It has been held under sec. 54 that a sale of immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100, which is already in the possession of the purchaser, need not be effected by any further delivery of possession, nor by registration. See Note 292 "Delivery of Possession" under sec. 54. The same principle will hold good in case of leases also. Therefore, a lease not being a lease from year to year, etc., does not require any further delivery of possession or registration where possession has already been delivered to the lessee under a prior valid lease. See Hari Chand v. Hammond, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 81, 148 I.C. 548. The correctness of this well-recognised principle has, however, been doubted in Fakira v. Leakut, 18 C.W.N. 858, 23 I.C. 318; see also Mt. Malan v. Dayal Singh, supra.

When a registered deed purporting to create a lease in favour of the plaintiff is not signed by both the parties and the plaintiff fails to obtain delivery of possession on account of the land being in the possession of a trespasser the plaintiff's suit for possession is bound to fail even if the landlord had accepted rent—Orient Paper Mills v. Sitaram Agarwala, A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 276. But when the lease is for agricultural purpose the executant of the Kabuliyat not signed by the landlord can sue the trespasser even if he subsequent to the lease intended to build a house on the demised land—Dassain Nonia v. Ramdeo Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 692.

The mere execution of a rent-note unaccompanied by transfer of possession does not transfer interest in the property—Ramsing v. Bai Dyanba, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 512, 27 Bom.L.R. 626, 88 I.C. 648. But where an oral lease accompanied by possession has been established, the deed of rent can be used as a corroborative piece of evidence to support the terms of the lease—Taz Din v. Abdul Rahim, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 423 (425), 41 P.L.R. 498. An oral lease for more than one year accompanied by delivery of possession is valid for the first year and thereafter the lessee continuing in possession with the assent of the lessor becomes a tenant by holding over—Laxminarayan v. A.D.C. Akola, 1958 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 22.

Delivery of constructive possession is quite sufficient for the purposes of this section—Mohan Lal v. Gauda Singh, A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 127 (F.B.); Parameswar Lal Agarwalla v. Dalu Ram Jalan, A.I.R. 1957 Assam 188.

570. Leases by Government :—Leases granted by Government are outside the operation of the Transfer of Property Act. See the Crown Grants Act (printed in the Appendix). But although the Crown Grants Act exempts such leases from the operation of the Transfer of Property Act, it does not exempt them from the operation of the Registration Act; and the question whether a particular lease granted by Government does or does not require registration, is to be decided with reference to sec. 90 of the Registration Act. See Munshi Lal v. Notified Area, 36 All. 176, 12 A.L.J. 219, 22 I.C. 933; Secretary of State v. Nistarini, 6 Pat. 446, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 319 (321, 322), 104 I.C. 209; Kallingal Moosa v. Secretary of State, 43 Mad. 6, 53 I.C. 345.

It is not necessary under the Crown Grants Act that the grant should be evidenced by a writing signed by or on behalf of the Crown. All that is required is that in point of fact the transaction has the effect of a grant by or by the authority of the Crown. So a lease executed by the lessee alone and accepted and acted upon by the Government operates as a grant by the Crown. Hence para 3 of sec. 107 of the present Act does not apply to the lease—Manindra v. Amiya, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 361, 55 C.W.N. 171. A license given by Government to prospect minerals in land is not required to be registered, as it is in the nature of a Crown grant—Rangaswami v. Nimbaker, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 180, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 400. See also Ramnarayan v. State of M. P., A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 93 (F.B.).

108. In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, the lessor and the lessee of immoveable property, as against one another, respectively, possess the rights and are subject to the liabilities mentioned in the rules next following or such of them as are applicable to the property leased :—

Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.

(A) Rights and Liabilities of the Lessor.

(a) The lessor is bound to disclose to the lessee any material defect in the property, with reference to its intended use, of which the former is and the latter is not aware and which the latter could not with ordinary care discover :

(b) the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property :

(c) the lessor shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease and performs the contract binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption.

The benefit of such contract shall be annexed to and go with the lessee's interest as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

(B) Rights and Liabilities of the Lessee.

(d) If during the continuance of the lease any accession is made to the property, such accession (subject to the law relating to alluvion for the time being in force) shall be deemed to be comprised in the lease :

(e) if by fire, tempest or flood, or violence of an army or of a mob or other irresistible force, any material part of the property be wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which it was let, the lease shall, at the option of the lessee, be void :

Provided that, if the injury be occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the lessee, he shall not be entitled to avail himself of the benefit of this provision :

(f) if the lessor neglects to make, within a reasonable time after notice, any repairs which he is bound to make to the property, the lessee may make the same himself, and deduct the expense of such repairs with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor :

(g) if the lessor neglects to make any payment which he is bound to make, and which, if not made by him, is recoverable from the lessee or against the property, the lessee may make such payment himself, and deduct it with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor :

(h) the lessee may even after the determination of the lease remove, at any time whilst he is in possession of the property leased, but not afterwards all things which he has attached to the earth ; provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it :

(i) when a lease of uncertain duration determines by any means except the fault of the lessee, he or his legal representative is entitled to all the crops planted or sown by the lessee and growing upon the property when the lease determines, and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them :

(j) the lessee may transfer absolutely or by way of mortgage or sub-lease the whole or any part of his interest in the property, and any transferee of such interest or part may again transfer it. The lessee shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease :

nothing in this clause shall be deemed to authorize a tenant having an untransferable right of occupancy, the farmer of an estate in respect of which default has been made in paying revenue, or the lessee of an estate under the management of a Court of Wards, to assign his interest as such tenant, farmer or lessee :

(k) the lessee is bound to disclose to the lessor any fact as to the nature or extent of the interest which the lessee is about to take, of which the lessee is, and the lessor is not, aware, and which materially increases the value of such interest :

(l) the lessee is bound to pay or tender, at the proper time and place, the premium or rent to the lessor or his agent in this behalf :

(m) the lessee is bound to keep, and on the termination of the lease to restore, the property in as good condition as it was in at the time when he was put in possession, subject only to the changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force, and to allow the lessor and his agents, at all reasonable times during the term, to enter upon the property and inspect the condition thereof and give or leave notice of any defect in such condition, and, when such defect has been caused by any act or default on the part of the lessee, his servants or agents, he is bound to make it good within three months after such notice has been given or left :

(n) if the lessee becomes aware of any proceeding to recover the property or any part thereof, or of any encroachment made upon, or any interference with, the lessor's rights concerning such property, he is bound to give, with reasonable diligence, notice thereof to the lessor :

(o) the lessee may use the property and its products (if any) as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own ; but he must not use, or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased, or fell or sell timber, pull down or damage buildings belonging to the lessor, or work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, or commit any other act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto :

(p) he must not, without the lessor's consent, erect on the property any permanent structure, except for agricultural purposes :

(q) on the determination of the lease, the lessee is bound to put the lessor into possession of the property.

Amendment :—Clauses (h) and (o) have been amended by sec. 56 of T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). See Notes 579 and 585 below.

571. Scope :—This section applies only in the absence of a contract to the contrary—Megh Lal v. Raj Kumar, 34 Cal. 358 (371). The provisions of this section are also subject to local usage—Kanai v. Rasik, 19 C.W.N. 361. Where the exact nature and terms of the tenancy are obscure, they must be gathered from the conduct of the parties and the apparent use which has been made of the land ever since the grant—Joti Prasad v. Har Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 All. 473, (1932) A.L.J. 567, 139 I.C. 346.

A lease for a term cannot be avoided by the lessee for breach of a covenant by the lessor—Govindaswami v. Palaniappa, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 833, 48 M.L.J. 397, 87 I.C. 10.

The breach of any of the obligations imposed by this section does not entitle the lessor to determine a lease governed by the Rent Control Order; the lessor can merely claim damages and injunction—Pandit v. Narsinghdas, A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 870.

Agricultural leases :—Though this section is not applicable to agricultural leases (see sec. 117), yet the principles of this section ought to be followed in the case of such leases, as embodying the rules of justice, equity and good conscience—Srinivas v. Ranga Swami, 1 L.W. 858, 25 I.C. 812; Narayan v. Krishna Rao, 14 N.L.R. 188, 43 I.C. 970; Penu-metsa v. Gopiseti, 40 I.C. 590.

572. Clause (a)—Material defects :—Compare notes under sec. 55, cl. (a). A defect in the lessor's title cannot be said to be a material defect in the property within the meaning of this clause—Syed Mukhtar v. Rani Sunder, 17 C.W.N. 960 (963), 19 I.C. 815.

The landlord must inform his tenant of all latent defects in the property. If the furniture of the tenant of a thatched bungalow is destroyed by a fire caused by a defect in the chimney not disclosed to the tenant the landlord is liable for the loss sustained by the tenant—Radha Krishna v. O'Faherty, 3 B.L.R. (A.C.) 277.

The landlord is bound to disclose the defects which exist at the time of granting the lease; it is not necessary that he should apprise the tenant of any subsequent deterioration of the demised property rendering it unfit for occupation—Sarson v. Roberts, (1895) 2 Q.B. 395 (399).

572A. Covenant of title :—The lessor's obligations to disclose defects is limited to "any material defect in the property with reference to its intended use." These words have reference only to the nature and condition of the property to be demised. No obligation as to production of documents or giving answers to questions (requisitions) is mentioned in this section. And the lessee cannot call upon the lessor to produce satisfactory evidence of his title, before completion of the lease. The lessee may, however, repudiate a lease by proving that the title is bad. And this he can do, not necessarily by establishing that the lessor has no good right to convey, but by showing that the interest which would be conveyed to him (lessee) would be nugatory, precarious or incomplete—Jyoti Prosad v. H. V. Low & Co., 57 Cal. 1189, 34 C.W.N. 347 (351, 354, 355), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 561, 128 I.C. 321.

The lessee suing to get possession must prove both title of his lessor and his own title under the lease—Bithal Dass v. Mt. Iqbalunnissa, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 425, 1940 O.W.N. 842, 190 I.C. 444. One of the joint lessors or lessees cannot enforce the covenant of a lease—Jadunandan v. Mt. Maho, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 428, 185 I.C. 284.

Where a lessor covenants to indemnify the lessee against all persons, this is but a covenant to indemnify against lawful title—Keshab v. Sher Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 930, 171 I.C. 114; see also Indu Bhusan v. Mozzam Ali, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 272 and Ayyanna v. Gangayya, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 465, 144 I.C. 16.

573. Clause (b)—Delivery of possession:—Compare section 55, clause (1) (f). This clause lays down that the lessor is bound, on the lessee's request, to put him in possession of the property; hence non-delivery of possession is a good answer to a suit for rent—Meenakshi v. Chidambaram, 23 M.L.J. 119, 15 I.C. 711 (714); Ganda Sing v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 101, 152 I.C. 231. If the lessee obtains possession of only a portion of the property leased, he is liable to pay rent only for the portion of which he has obtained possession—Abdul Karim v. Upper India Bank, 19 P.R. 1918, 40 I.C. 684 (685); Surendra v. Bhudar, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 690 (691), 67 C.L.J. 136. Where the lessor fails to give the lessee possession of the whole leasehold, it is open to the lessee to repudiate the entire contract. But if he remains in possession of a portion of the property, he must pay a reasonable sum for use and occupation—Hanumantha v. Doraiswami, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 380 (381), 54 M.L.J. 354, 109 I.C. 465. If the tenant is not given occupation of the whole of the land demised, the landlord has no right to the entire rent and unless he has a right or some equity to an apportionment he can recover nothing on the contract—Abhoy v. Hem, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 568, 33 C.W.N. 715; Sajjad v. Trailakhya, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 479, 55 Cal. 464, 31 C.W.N. 472. But the doctrine has no application where the rent is so much per acre or bigha—Katyanai v. Uday, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 97 (99), 52 I.A. 160, 52 Cal. 417, 30 C.W.N. 1, 88 I.C. 110. It has however been recently held by the Privy Council that in Bengal the doctrine of suspension of rent should not be applied to cases where the lessor fails to give possession to the lessee of part of the tenure demised, for relief by specific performance, by damages, by abatement of rent is not unobtainable in the Courts—Ram Lal v. Dhirendra, A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 24, on appeal from Dhirendra v. Ram Lal, infra. Katyanai v. Uday, 52

I.A. 160 does not lay down that if the rent is a lump sum rent, then in all cases of failure to give possession of any part, there can be a suspension of rent—ibid. Where there is no dispossession, but an original failure of making over possession of a small portion of the demised land, and the tenant has paid the full rent for a long period there should be abatement but no suspension of rent—Dhirendra v. Ramlal, (1938) 42 C.W.N. 1030; Manohar Lal Seal v. M/s. Bengal, A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 457.

If the land is already in the possession of a third person to the knowledge both of the lessor and the lessee, it would be the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession by removing the third person from the possession thereof. But where the lessee knows the land and there is no obstruction to his going upon the land the lessor is not required to put the lessee in possession unless the latter requests him to do so; and if the lessee neither requests the lessor to put him in possession nor himself chooses to take possession, he cannot resist a suit for rent on the ground of not getting possession—Narayanaswami v. Yerramilli, 33 Mad. 499 (501). If the leased land is in the occupation of a third person, viz., a previous lessee, the present lessee is entitled to bring a suit for possession not only against the lessor but also against that third person; in fact the suit should be brought against both—Bishen Sarup v. Abdul, 1931 A.L.J. 666, A.I.R. 1931 All. 649 (651); Md. Fazehzzaman v. Anwar Husain, A.I.R. 1932 All. 314, (1932) A.L.J. 126, 139 I.C. 828. The mere fact that the lessor in the course of the suit entered into a compromise with the former lessee whose lease had expired, does not disentitle the latter lessee from obtaining his decree against the former lessee—Ibid. In spite of the lease the landlord can also maintain a suit to eject a trespasser for the purpose of putting his lessee in possession. He is not bound to implead his tenant in such a suit—Damodar v. Lachimi, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 354 (355), 7 Pat. 496, 110 I.C. 642.

Where the property leased is in the occupation of raiyats, delivery of possession may be sufficiently given by the giving of a notice to the tenants requiring them to attorn and pay rent to the lessee—Natesan v. Vengu Nachiar, 33 Mad. 102 (110); Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Behara, 25 Mad. 587 (592); but the mere execution and delivery of the lease-deed would not in such cases amount to delivery of possession—Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Behara, 25 Mad. 587 (591). It should also be noted that a notice to the raiyats to pay rents to the lessee would amount to delivery of possession only where the lessor himself has possession to give, and not where he is himself out of possession—Natesa v. Vengu, supra; Abdul Karim v. Upper India Bank, 19 P.R. 1918, 40 I.C. 684 (685).

If the tenant denies that he has ever got possession of the subjects let, the identity of which is not disputed, the landlord cannot claim rent without proving not only that the tenant is in possession but that such possession is referable to the lease. Where, however, the tenant has already paid rent the onus is on the tenant to prove that certain subjects, of which he did not get possession are within the subjects let—Jogesh Chandra v. Emdad, 59 Cal. 1012 (P.C.), 36 C.W.N. 221 (229), A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 28, 136 I.C. 398.

Where the lessor has failed to put the lessee in possession, the lessee can sue the lessor either for the profits of the immoveable property wrongfully received by the lessor for the lessee's use, or for damages for breach of contract—Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Behara, 25 Mad. 587 (595); see also Razia Begum v. Md. Daud, 6 Pat. 94, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 508 (511), 96 I.C. 588, cited in Note 565 under sec. 107; Purna Nand Puri v. Kamala Sinha, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 39. Stipulations to the effect that the lessee shall not be competent to raise any objections on the ground of drought, inundation, dispossession, etc., of any kind and that he shall not claim any dags, etc., which may have been included in the lease but which are owned and possessed by anybody else, do not in any way take away from the lessee the ordinary rights of being put in possession and in default claiming a rescission of the contract—Ahamad v. Jamini, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 385 (386), 57 Cal. 114, 125 I.C. 607. This section does not mean that the parties can agree that the lessee shall have no right of possession. If they do so, then the transaction would not be a lease at all. Therefore, the transfer of a mere right to the usufruct of a property without the right to possess the land will not be a lease—Governor-General v. Indar Mani, A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 296, 52 P.L.R. 107.

574. Clause (c)—Covenant for quiet enjoyment :—Under this clause the so-called covenant for quiet enjoyment is deemed to be a part of the contract and to be read into the contract; whereas under section 55, it is not a part of the contract, but merely a statutory obligation—Ramparikha v. Mt. Ramjhari, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 44 (47), 15 Pat. 753, 166 I.C. 599. The present section, read with secs. 18 and 25 of the Specific Relief Act reveals that the question of a transferor's title is as material in a lease as in a sale, although when the lessee sues for recovering his premium from the lessor, the burden of proving the lessor's defective title lies on the lessee—Vinayake Rao v. Bhundu, A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 103 (105), I.L.R. 1942 Nag. 349, 202 I.C. 9. Where the lessor has no title to the land and a stranger does not allow the lessee to have possession of the leased property, the lessee is entitled to a refund of the premium paid to the lessor—Ibid.

Though this section is not in force in the Punjab, yet the principle relating to covenant for quiet enjoyment is of universal application. Where a lessor covenants to indemnify the lessee against all persons, this is but a covenant to indemnify against lawful title—Keshav v. Sher Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 930; see also Ayyanna v. Gangayya, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 465, 144 I.C. 16; Vaskuri v. Vedangi, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 465, 144 I.C. 16, where the principle was applied in the case of a contract by a Receiver. The covenant for quiet enjoyment contemplated by this clause extends only to the disturbance of the lessee's possession by the lessor or by persons claiming under him or by his landlord, but not to disturbance by a trespasser—Srinivasa v. Rangaswami, 1 L.W. 858, 25 I.C. 812; Syed Mukhtar v. Rani Sundar, 17 C.W.N. 960; Udai v. Katyani, 49 Cal. 948, 35 C.L.J. 292; Douzelle v. Girdharee, 23 W.R. 121; Dharam Narain v. Labh Singh, 60 I.C. 477 (Lah.); Surendra v. Bhudar, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 690 (691), 67 C.L.J. 136; Vaskuri v. Vedangi, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 465, 144 I.C. 16. The implied covenant protects the lessee against all disturbances by the lessor whether lawful or not; but as against other persons, it protects the lessee only against lawful disturbances—Naurang v. A. J. Meik, 50 Cal. 68 (74), 36 C.L.J. 28; Banka Behari v. Madan Mohan, 26 C.W.N. 143; Indu Bhushan v. Chowdhury Moazam, 33 C.W.N. 106 (111); Wolton v. Hele, (1670) 2 Wms. Saund. 177, 178 (b). The law has been thus stated by Woodfall, Landlord and Tenant, 16th Ed., p. 713: "The lessee is to enjoy the lease against the lawful entry, eviction or interruption of any man, but not against the tortious entries, evictions or interruptions, and the reason for the law is solid and clear, because against the tortious acts the lessee has his proper remedy against the wrong-doers." Therefore, where the lessee is disturbed in his possession by the wrongful acts trespassers and there was nothing to show that the trespassers were instigated by the lessor, the lessee is not entitled to suspend the payment of rent, and if he suspends the payment, the landlord is entitled to cancel the lease and evict the lessee—Vithilinga v. Vithilinga, 15 Mad. 111 (121) ; British India Corpn. v. Secy. of State, A.I.R. 1945 All. 425, I.L.R. 1945 All. 412. As to the basis of damages recoverable by the lessee from the trespasser see Kanchanlal v. Hariprasad, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 379, I.L.R. 1951 Nag. 516. Where a third person dispossesses both lessor and the lessee by purchase in execution sale by title paramount, and the lessee thereafter attorns to the third person by payment of rent, the lessor's title becomes extinguished and there occurs a surrender of the lease by operation of law. Consequently the lessor cannot claim rent from the lessee after the eviction—Hanumanthaiya v. Thavakal San, A.I.R. 1950 Mys. 9.

Where the sub-lessee of a theatre is prevented by the original lessor from using the theatre on the ground that he had served a notice on the lessee determining the lease and the sub-lessee is compelled to take a fresh lease from the proprietor on payment of an additional sum, there is a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment which entitles the sub-lessee to bring a suit for damages against the original lessee—Gajadhar v. Rambhau, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 439.

The words "without interruption" in this clause are not qualified in any way, and have been understood to mean what is known in England as a covenant for quiet enjoyment in a unqualified form. In other words, the lessee is protected against interruption by whomsoever it is occasioned, i.e., interruption caused by the lessor or by persons who claim under the lessor, or by persons claiming by right paramount to the lessor—Tayawa v. Gurshidappa, 25 Bom. 269 (273); Narayan v. Gokuldas, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 48, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 568. The grant of a tenancy of the surface land does not preclude the landlord from exercising his right to drain his premises by underground drain through the demised land—Bothra Bros. Ltd. v. Sm. Pramila Bala Dutt, A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 309. Against the covenant to pay rent, eviction by the title paramount is a good defence and to constitute it three conditions must be fulfilled: the eviction must have been from something actually forming part of the premises demised; the party evicting must have a good title; and the tenant must have quitted against his will. To constitute eviction forcible expulsion is not necessary—Jogendra v. Mahesh, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 22 (25), 55 Cal. 1013, 32 C.W.N. 559, 112 I.C. 172. The lessor is bound to protect the possession of the lessee against persons claiming under paramount title. Therefore, where the lessor knowing that he had no title gave a lease, but in consequence of his want of title failed to secure possession to the lessee or failed to secure him undisturbed possession, the lessee being ejected by the true owner of the land, held that the lessor failed to carry out the obligation imposed by this clause and was not entitled to recover rent—Motilal v. Yar Mahammad, 47 All. 63, A.I.R. 1925 All. 275, 85 I.C. 756. Tayawa v. Gurshidappa, supra. If a tenant has been evicted against his will or forced to attorn to a person holding title paramount, he would be freed from his liability—Narayanaswami v. Lakshmi Narasimha, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 220 (222, 223), 1939 M.W.N. 98, 48 M.L.W. 759, relying on Bilas v. Desraj, 42 I.A. 202., 37 All. 557. But if the person claiming title has no registered deed on which his title rests, the tenant is liable to pay rent to his lessor—Narayanaswami v. Lakshmi Narasimha, supra, at p. 224. Where a tenant is dispossessed in execution of a decree by a person having paramount title, the landlord cannot obviously claim any rent without restoring possession, since every lease conveys a covenant for quiet enjoyment. But the landlord is entitled to recover the rent for the period prior to the dispossession by virtue of sec. 116 of the Evidence Act—Parkash Kuar v. Giam Chand, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 341, 191 I.C. 555. But the mere institution of a suit for possession by a person having a title paramount in law does not amount to such eviction—Amrita Lal v. Uttam Lal, I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 559, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 216, 181 I.C. 529. A considerable portion of land was given by A in lease, but out of it 61 acres belonged to another owner B who dispossessed the tenant. Later on A brought a rent suit against C, B's wife, who had acquired the tenure as purchaser at an execution sale of a decree against the tenant. Seeing that she had not obtained possession of the land included in the tenure, C claimed an abatement in the rent: held that C was entitled to the abatement—Jatindra v. Uday, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 104 (105, 107), 58 Cal. 1281, 58 I.A. 141, 35 C.W.N. 583, 131 I.C. 309. As to the meaning and instance of "eviction by title paramount" see Narayan v. Gokuldas, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 48, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 568. Where a lessee is evicted from his tenancy by a person having a title paramount to his lessor, he can recover from the latter the consideration of the lease and also the pecuniary loss he has suffered, that is, the cost of defending the suit for ejectment and any sum recovered against him as costs or as mesne profits—ibid. But the paramount title of a third party does not necessarily connote want of title of the lessor. And the lessee cannot claim abatement of rent by reason of being deprived of a portion of the lands owing to the Government having a paramount title thereto, unless he can establish his lessor's defect of title to that portion of the lands. Thus, where the Government made a survey of certain khas mahal lands adjoining the lands occupied by the lessee, and fixed the boundaries in such a way as to lessen the amount of the lessee's lands, he cannot claim an abatement of rent from his lessor, because it cannot be said that the lessee has been evicted from a portion of the lands by reason of any defect of title in his lessor—Indu Bhusan v. Chowdhury Moazam, 33 C.W.N. 106 (109), 117 I.C. 838, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 272. "Eviction by title paramount means an eviction due to the fact that the lessor had no title to grant the term, and the paramount title is the title paramount to the lessor which destroys the effect of the grant and with it the corresponding liability for payment of rent"—per Lord Buckmaster in Malthey v. Curling, [1922] A.C. 130.

The lessor is bound to protect the lessee against all disturbances caused by persons claiming under him (the lessor). This means that he is responsible for disturbances committed by a person claiming under him the right to do the act complained of, i.e., the lessor becomes bound by any act of interruption caused by a person whom he has expressly or impliedly authorised to do the act. The lessor cannot be made responsible for all interruptions by any person claiming title through him, whether assignee or under-tenant, however wilful or negligent the interruption. This would be beyond reasons; there must be some limit to the lessor's liability. Therefore, where A and B were the lessees of C to work adjoining mines, and A could not properly work the mine owing to the wrongful act of B, and claimed a reduction of rent, held that C could not be held liable for the wrongful act of B, as his act was unauthorised, and consequently A was not entitled to a reduction of rent. He had a remedy against B in tort—Naurang v. A. J. Meik, 50 Cal. 68, 36 C.L.J. 28, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 41.

When the lessee is evicted by an Act of the Legislature (e.g., when under the Epidemic Diseases Act it becomes unlawful for him to occupy the premises any longer in the manner contemplated by the lease) there is no breach of the lessor's covenant for quiet enjoyment, and the lessee cannot sue the lessor on the covenant. He will be liable to pay the rent for the whole period—Merwanji v. Syed Sardar Ali Khan, 23 Bom. 510. So, also, if the lessee is ejected by Government acting under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, the lessee cannot sue the lessor for disturbance of possession—Minto v. Kaleechurn, 8 W.R. 527.

It should be noted that although this clause is worded in a conditional form ("if the latter pays the rent", etc.), it should not be construed to mean that the actual prior payment of the rent is a condition precedent to the lessee's right to quiet possession and enjoyment. It would be hardly reasonable to interpret this clause to mean that the failure to pay any instalment of rent would deprive a lessee of the right to continue in enjoyment of the leased property—Meenakshi v. Chidambaram, 23 M.L.J. 119, 15 I.C. 711 (713, 714). See in this connection Abdul v. China, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 62. If a property jointly owned by the father and his minor son is let out to a tenant by the father alone and the minor son brings a suit for partition asking for recovery of possession of the demised property and the tenant compromises the suit with the minor son on payment of a certain sum, the tenant can recover the said sum in a separate suit from the father for breach of covenant for quiet possession.—Jabbar Sahib v. R. Renu, (1964) 2 Mad. L.J. 142. A refusal by the landlord to give consent to electric installation amounts to a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and the court can grant mandatory injunction—Dr. Daryaosingh v. Dr. Pramilaibai, A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 191.

574A. Dispossession by landlord :—When the land of the tenant is in actual possession of a trespasser, and a third party is granted a settlement by the landlord and the third party dispossesses the trespasser, the ouster amounts to dispossession of the tenant—Abdul v. Hamed, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 898, 38 C.W.N. 61. If there is an interruption to the tenant's enjoyment of the property, his obligation to pay the rent ceases. And the tenant enjoys this immunity from the payment of rent until the landlord again permits him to have quiet enjoyment—Meenakshi v. Chidambaram, 23 M.L.J. 119, 15 I.C. 711 (714); Dhunput v. Mahomed Kazim, 24 Cal. 296; Jyoti Prasad v. Seldon, 19 Pat. 433, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 516 (523-524), 192 I.C. 17. Substantial interference, short of actual dispossession, by the landlord with the quiet possession of the tenant entitles the tenant to claim suspension or abatement—B. Ahmed Marocair v. Muthuvalliappa Chettiar, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 28. Where the land is sub-let by the tenant and the landlord starts collecting rent from the subtenants the tenant can claim total suspension even if the lessor fails to collect the entire rent from the subtenants—Ibid. If the landlord keeps logs of wood in one room of the house let out to the great inconvenience of the tenant the entire rent can be suspended until the mischief is removed—Jatindra v. Raimohan, A.I.R. 1961 Assam 52. The doctrine of suspension of rent has no application in India if the landlord fails to give possession of a part of the demised premises—Surendra Nath v. Stephen Court, 63 C.W.N. 922. There will be suspension of rent in cases where the landlord has by his action dispossessed or where the lessee has not, owing to his action, been able to take possession of a part of the holding—Joyram v. Bishnu Charan, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 805, 85 I.C. 781. If the tenant is evicted from a portion of the property, the tenant is entitled to rescind the lease; but if instead of throwing up the lease, he elects to retain possession of the remaining portion, he cannot refuse to pay rent for that portion; he is bound to pay the rent for the portion retained, and is entitled to sue for damages in respect of the portion of which he has been deprived—Meenakshi v. Chidambaram, 23 M.L.J. 119, 15 I.C. 711 (716, 718). In other words, the tenant is not entitled to claim total suspension of rent, but can claim only a proportionate abatement of the rent in respect of the portion from which he has been evicted. It should be noted that this rule of proportionate abatement of rent applies only where the rent is fixed at a certain rate per bigha; but where the rent is fixed in a lump sum for the whole land leased, treated as an indivisible subject, the tenant is discharged from the payment of the whole rent if he is evicted from any portion of the land—Katyani v. Uday Kumar, 52 Cal. 417 (P.C.), 30 C.W.N. 1, 88 I.C. 410, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 97; Dhirendra v. Bhabatarini, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 395 (396), 33 C.W.N. 367, 119 I.C. 297; Deoki Kaur v. Shiva Prasad, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 356, 1939 P.W.N. 263, 22 P.L.T. 378. But see Ram Lal v. Dhirendra Nath, 47 C.W.N. 489 (P.C.) where it has been laid down that "as a matter of broad general principle, the law of India no longer proceeds upon the notion that where a contract is for an entire sum, there is a necessity of reason which prevents a party from recovering anything where his full obligations under a special contract have not been discharged". Where the lessee does not deny that he actually possesses the land which is depicted in the plan attached to the lease deed, nor is there any doubt that the land is within the boundaries, if there is a question between boundaries and area, the former should prevail—Keshabji v. Piramall, 42 C.W.N. 405, 67 C.L.J. 521, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 129; see also Bara Kalim v. Rajendra Nath, A.I.R. 1920 Cal. 865, 64 I.C. 751 and Gossain Das v. Mrittunjoy, 18 C.L.J. 541. In later decisions it has, however, been held that if a landlord dispossesses a tenant from a portion of the tenure, he is not entitled to recover any rent from the tenant unless he restores the portion to him, and it makes no difference that at some time the tenant is found to be in possession of some more lands, but not the entire tenure—Krishna v. Surendra, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 385, 36 C.W.N. 72, 137 I.C. 696; Hajira Bibi v. Abrar Hussain, A.I.R. 1964 All. 343. The mere obtaining of a decree by the tenant for possession is not sufficient to defeat a tenant's right to suspension of the entire rent for eviction from a portion of the demised premises. That right continues until effective steps are taken by the landlord to restore possession of the land—Reshee Case v. Satish, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 397 (400), 35 C.W.N. 46, 132 I.C. 81. The eviction whether from part or whole entails a suspension of the entire rent while the eviction lasts whether the tenant remains in possession of the residue or not. Perhaps, the sound course is to determine what is equitable in the particular case and that might range from the apportionment of rent per bigha where the dispossession is trivial or slight in a rapidly rising gradient to entire suspension where the interference with the enjoyment of the tenancy is considerable—Dalip v. Suraj, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 38 (39), 14 Pat. 323, 153 I.C. 298. Tenants would not be entitled to a suspension of rent simply because of a mistake of the landlord in including certain portion of the land in a previous decree not comprising the subject-matter of that suit, and consequently having it sold, as the tenant could have corrected the mistake in a subsequent suit—Biseswar v. Kali Charan, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 908 (910), 44 C.L.J. 27, 94 I.C. 418. Where a tenant claims suspension of rent owing to an encroachment of a few inches on the leased premises by the erection of a platform, the question was, did the landlord do something of a grave and permanent character with the intention of permanently depriving the plaintiff of a portion of the subject-matter of the demise—Nishi Kanta v. Ezra, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 135 (138), 166 I.C. 299. In a rent suit for the applicability of the doctrine of suspension of rent on account of dispossession from a portion of the tenancy in respect of which a lump rental is payable, it must be shown that the landlord has deliberately set out to dispossess the tenant—Sukhraj v. Dip Narain, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 266, 8 B.R. 153, 197 I.C. 160; Hakim Saxdot Bahadur v. Tej Prakash Singh, A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 385. Consequently, where by mistake a small portion of the tenancy has gone out of possession of the tenant, because it was inserted by mistake in a kabuliyat executed by the landlord in favour of a third person, the plea of suspension of rent cannot prevail—Ibid. If the landlord fails to give possession of one out of three bed rooms of demised premises, the tenant cannot suspend rent, but must pay proportionate rent—Surendra Nath v. Stephen Court Ltd., A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1361.

The landlord cannot sue for possession during the continuance of a tenancy even if there is a trespasser on the land. His rights in that respect do not accrue until the tenancy is determined. Until then, all he can do is to sue in respect of injuries to his reversionary interest, but not for possession. The adverse possession of the trespasser would not run against the landlord during the currency of the tenancy—Punjaram v. Ramu, I.L.R. 1940 Nag. 348 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 49, 1940 N.L.J. 121 relying on Katyayani v. Uday, 52 I.A. 160, 52 Cal. 417, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 97. A tenant cannot recover the premium paid on the ground of disturbance by a trespasser—Dr. Prabhu Narain v. Kamla Prasad, A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 59.

575. Clause (d)—Accessions :—The true presumption, it was held, as to encroachments made by a tenant during his tenancy upon the adjoining lands of his landlord was that the lands so encroached upon were added to the tenure and formed part thereof for the benefit of the tenant so long as the original holding continued, and afterwards for the benefit of his landlord; and the tenant could not be ejected from them while the tenure lasted—Gooroodas v. Issur Chunder, 22 W.R. 246; Chapsibhai Dhamjibhai v. Pursottam Matilal, I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 27. But see Naddiyar Chand v. Meajan, infra. The Zemindar was not entitled to disassociate the accretions from the original grant and to turn the tenant out of the accreted lands, so long as the original holding continued—Bhagabat v. Durga Bejai, 16 W.R. 96. Nor is the tenant entitled to claim such accessions as his own property. The rule is that all increments made by the lessee upon land adjoining to or in the neighbourhood of his holding are presumed to have been made for the benefit of his landlord, and if the tenant has acquired a title against a third person by adverse possession, he has acquired it for his landlord and not for himself—Naddiyar Chand v. Meajan, 10 Cal. 820.

Since the accretions become a part and parcel of the original tenure, the landlord cannot treat the accreted lands as a separate tenure altogether in order to claim compensation for use and occupation of such lands; but he is, of course, entitled to an additional rent which must be fixed after investigation into the value of the increment due to the accretion—Assanullah v. Mohini Mohan, 26 Cal. 739.

The rule in this clause does not apply where the tenant encroaches upon the land of his landlord. In such a case it is in the option of the landlord either to treat him as a trespasser (and thus to eject him out of the encroached lands) or to treat him as a tenant in respect of those lands. The tenant has no right to compel the landlord to treat him as tenant; "It would seem strange, if, as a matter of law, a tenant were allowed, without the landlord's permission, to appropriate any land which adjoins his own tenure, and then when the landlord complained of the trespass and required him to give the land up, he were allowed to take advantage of his own wrong and to insist upon retaining possession of it until the expiration of his tenure"—Naddiyar Chand v. Meajan, 10 Cal. 820. But once the landlord has accepted him as a tenant for some time in respect of the encroached lands, he cannot afterwards turn back and treat the tenant as a trespasser—Khondar Abdul Hamid v. Mohini Kant, 4 C.W.N. 508.

On the above principle, a tenant of land, even having a permanent right of tenancy on the land, cannot acquire an easement by prescription upon other lands of his lessor. For, a tenant is always a tenant and never an owner of the land. He always derives his rights from the lessor, and as the latter cannot have the right of enjoyment of an easement as of right against himself, so neither can his tenant against him—Mani Chander v. Baikanta, 29 Cal. 363; Udit Singh v. Kashi Ram, 14 All. 185; Jeenab Ali v. Allabuddin, 1 C.W.N. 151.

576. Clause (e)—Destruction of property:—This clause does not apply where the parties have specifically agreed that inspite of land being lost by diluvion or damage being caused by flooding, the lessee would be liable to pay the whole rent—Surpat v. Sheo Prasad, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 300, 24 Pat. 197. A let out to B a thatched shed at a monthly rent. During the tenancy, the shed was burnt by fire. Thereafter B raised another structure on the land inspite of A's protest: held (1) this section in terms did not apply, as B neither elected to walk out; nor to suspend payment of rent; (2) that the doctrine of frustration applied to leases and A could claim that the lease had come to an end by destruction by fire; and (3) that under the tenancy B had no right to raise the structure of his own treating the lease as the lease of the land only—Kshitish v. Shiba Rani, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 441. Sec. 108 (e) cannot be invoked in the case of agricultural leases—Gurdarshan Singh v. Bishan Singh, A.I.R. 1963 Punj 49 (F.B.). Where the property leased is not destroyed or substantially or permanently unfit, the lessee cannot avoid the lease on the ground that he does not or is unable to use the land for purposes for which it was let out to him, because the doctrine of frustration applies to an executory contract but not to a completed conveyance—Raja Dhruv Deb Chand v. Raja Harmohinder Singh, A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1024.

This clause applies where the house is rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purpose for which it was leased. The mere fact that the house is damaged to some extent and is in need of immediate repair does not entitle the lessee to avoid the lease. Thus, where a house was damaged by earthquake and an engineer who examined the house certified that the house was not in imminent danger but that it required immediate repairs in some portions, held that the building had not been rendered substantially and permanently unfit for occupation within the meaning of this section—Donaghey v. Weatherdon, 7 I.C. 201. In the case of a lease of coffee plants in the coffee garden it appeared that the whole of the plants had been absolutely destroyed by fire and the lessee consequently abandoned the garden before the period; the lessee was held not liable for the rent reserved under the lease—Kanhayan v. Mayan, 17 Mad. 98. This clause does not in terms apply to agricultural leases. It requires that any material part of the property owing to any of the specified causes should have been wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which it was let. Thus, where some of the trees in the land perished or decayed in the ordinary course of nature, this clause did not apply—Kandoth v. Cheriqaulanthol, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 664 (665), 71 M.L.J. 552, 165 I.C. 855.

A lessee is not liable for a damage caused to the leased property by fire while the property was in the lessee's occupation, unless negligence of the lessee is proved. The burden of proof is on the lessor to establish negligence of the lessee. But in certain circumstances and on proof of certain facts a presumption of negligence may be raised against the lessee—Deputy Lal v. Reoti Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 All. 327, 1941 A.L.J. 861.

Where a portion of the property demised is inundated by sea water and is rendered unfit for cultivation, the tenant is, in an action for rent, entitled to proportionate abatement. The principle underlying this clause is not applicable to such a case—Subramania v. Kattambath, 43 Mad. 132, 53 I.C. 397. The right of a tenant at the general law to claim an abatement of rent by reason of a portion of the land having been washed away by the action of a river cannot be disputed. The onus is upon the tenant to prove the extent of the diluvion and the corresponding abatement which he may claim—Arun v. Bhagaban, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 537 (543) (F.B.), 59 Cal. 155, 35 C.W.N. 1011, 133 I.C. 577; Krista Das v. Abdul, 25 C.W.N. 328; Vishnu v. Kunnungal, A.I.R. 1962 Ker. 239. Defendants took a certain property on lease for 3 years on a fixed annual rent. In the second year the crop was completely destroyed by floods and it was not possible to raise a second crop. Held: the defendants lessees were not liable to pay any rent during that year—P. Valiapally v. C. Thomman, A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 59.

Where a shed demised by the cantonment authorities was blown off and the tenant carried on his business on another premises an express agreement was necessary to enable the cantonment authorities to realize rent of the premises which had been destroyed—Benarsi v. Cantonment Authority, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 517 (519). But a lessee of salt pans could not be excused from repairing or working them as agreed, on the ground of strike of workmen, when the strike was not unforeseen—Hari Laxman v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 61 (62), 52 Bom. 142, 103 I.C. 19.

If the rent of the whole period of the lease had been paid in advance, but before the expiry of the period the leased property is destroyed by fire, the lessee is entitled to a refund of a proportionate part of the rent paid in advance, under sec. 65 of the Contract Act—Dhuramsey v. Ahmedbhai, 23 Bom. 15.

Upon the destruction of the leased premises the lessee is entitled to treat the lease as void by giving a notice to the landlord; and as soon as he avoids the lease, he must vacate the building and give vacant possession of it to the landlord. He is not entitled to retain possession of the premises till such time as it suits him, and then make the destruction of the premises by fire, the ground for putting an end to the lease so far as the remainder of the term is concerned—Bruel & Co. v. Haji Siddick, 12 Bom. L.R. 474, 6 I.C. 909. Unless he has given vacant possession of the house to the landlord, he cannot be said to have exercised his option of avoiding the lease. Where, therefore, a tenant who rented a godown gave notice to his landlord that he (the tenant) had exercised his option to terminate the tenancy upon the destruction of the godown, but it was found that several bags of sugar belonging to him were still lying in the godown, held that the tenant must be taken to have been in occupation either under his original tenancy or under a similar one resulting from his holding over, and was therefore liable for rent—Siddick Haji v. Bruel & Co., 35 Bom. 333, 8 I.C. 1049; Munnu-swamy v. Muniramiah, A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pr. 167. If the tenant does not invoke the doctrine of frustration the lease shall continue for the benefit of both the parties. Therefore in case of partial destruction of the leased property the tenant cannot claim reduction of rent, nor can he claim suspension in the case of complete destruction—Dr. Kundan Lal v. Shamshad Ahmad, A.I.R. 1966 All. 225; Jiwanlal & Co. v. Manot & Co., 64 C.W.N. 932. Even if a house is destroyed wholly, the lease is not terminated unless the lessee so chooses—Jiwanlal v. Manot & Co., 64 C.W.N. 932.

Proviso to clause (e) :—The lessee is not entitled to the benefit of clause (e) if the property is destroyed through the wrongful act of his own. Thus, the lessee of certain premises stored cotton bales therein. The watchman in charge of the bales left a lighted kerosene oil lamp near the bales and went away to have his meals. The lamp burst, the cotton bales caught fire and considerable damage was caused to the leased premises by the fire. Held that the lessee was liable for the damage caused—Girdaridoss v. Ponna Pillai, 39 M.L.J. 233, 59 I.C. 252. But where the lessee of a building stored alcohol in it, and through some unknown cause fire broke out and the building was burnt to ashes, and it appeared that the lessee's watchman was absent when the fire broke out, held that there was no negligence on the part of the lessee—East Indian Distilleries Ltd. v. Mathias, 51 Mad. 994, 55 M.L.J. 663, 114 I.C. 234, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1140 (1141, 1142).

577. Clause (f)—Repairs :—None of the clauses of this section entitles the lessee to call upon the lessor to repair the property. Unless there is an express contract to that effect, the lessor is not necessarily bound to make any repairs whatever—Bijoy v. Howrah Amata Light Ry., 38 C.L.J. 177, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 514; Steuart & Co. Ltd. v. C. Macker-tich, A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 198. This Act imposes no obligation on the landlord to repair. On the contrary, a qualified obligation in that respect lies on the tenant under clause (m)—Lakhmichand v. Ratanbai, 51 Bom. 274, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 115 (118). In the absence of a contract to do repairs or of an obligation imposed by statute, there is no obligation on the part of the landlord to put the premises in a habitable condition—Chappell v. Gregory, (1864) 34 Beav. 529; or to do any repairs whatever upon them—Gott v. Gandy, (1853) 2 E. & B. 845, even though by the neglecting to do so they become uninhabitable—Arden v. Pullen, (1840) 10 M. & W. 321. The lessee in exercise of his right to repair cannot replace the tiled roof by a roof made of cement slabs—Smt. Gyan-wati Naithani v. Udai Raj, A.I.R. 1964 All. 417.

Even if the lessor was under an obligation to effect repairs and fails to comply with the request of the lessee, the latter is not entitled to terminate the tenancy. He can execute the repairs himself after giving reasonable notice to the lessor and recover the amount expended by him by deducting it from the rent of otherwise—Bijay v. Howrah Amata Light Ry., 38 C.L.J. 177, 72 I.C. 98, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 524.

The tenant is entitled to deduct from the rent the expenses of necessary repairs done by him, even though there is a covenant in the lease to pay rent without deduction—Graham v. Colonial Government, 12 C.L.J. 351, 6 I.C. 131. See in this connection Abdul v. China, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 62 and Augustine v. Chandi, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 462. Where the landlord fails to carry out the repairs which the Rent Act requires him to do, the tenant is not entitled to suspension or abatement of rent—N. M. Industries Ltd. v. Birendra Nath, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 232.

The tenant can deduct from the rent the expenses of only those repairs which the landlord was bound to execute, and it is for the tenant to establish that the landlord was bound to execute them. It is not enough to show that the landlord had executed similar repairs in previous years—Bolton v. Donald, 3 A.L.J. 134.

Upon a breach of covenant to repair by the lessor the lessee's remedy is only deduction from rent, or damages or re-imbursement of money spent in repairs. There is no question of specific performance—Bansi v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 508. The claim must however be put forward in the pleadings—ibid. Where the Rent Act imposes a duty on the landlord to repair, the tenant cannot invoke the remedy provided by sec. 108 (f) T. P. Act—Behari v. Kunjar Lal, A.I.R. 1963 All. 439.

578. Clause (g)—Payment by lessee for lessor :—A putnidar making certain revenue payments due by his defaulting superior landlord is entitled to recover the same from the latter, even though a separate account had been opened for such payments—Smith v. Dinonath, 12 Cal. 213. Where the lessee pays the land revenue payable by the lessor, the lessee can recover it from the lessor—Faiyazunnissa v. Bajrang, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 609, 104 I.C. 358. In a suit for rent the tenant can ask for the deduction of water-tax and the property tax paid by him—Acharya, T. K. S. v. Satyamma, S. (1966) 1 An. L.T. 11.

Where the lessee is threatened with disturbance or eviction by the act of a prior mortgagee, for payment of which debt the lessor has made himself liable, that threat amounts to a breach of covenant for his enjoyment. If a sum is paid by the lessee to avoid eviction and disturbance, it must in reason be one which the lessor is bound to make good, and hence the lessee is entitled to recover the same from the lessor—Iswara v. Ramappa, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 658 (661), 152 I.C. 201.

In the case of a sub-lease of property which is subject to a maintenance charge and the sub-lease contains a covenant for quiet enjoyment, on the sub-lessor failing to pay the amount of the maintenance the sub-lessee is entitled to pay the same in order to secure quiet enjoyment and to recover it from the sub-lessor—Nanjappa v. Rangaswami, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 410, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 200, 1940 M.W.N. 266.

The lessee can make only those payments on behalf of the lessor which the latter was bound by law to pay. Thus, where in execution of a decree against the lessor his interest in the property was put to sale, and the lessee deposited money under sec. 310A, C. P. Code, 1882 (now O. XXI, r. 89 of the Code of 1908) to set aside the sale, and brought a suit against his lessor to recover the money, held that the money paid by the lessee under sec. 310A was not money which the lessor was bound by law to pay, and that therefore such payment did not afford any ground to sue the lessor for its recovery—Bipin Behari v. Kalidas, 6 C.W.N. 336.

Where the tenant pays Corporation rates due by the owner on receipt of a demand notice from the Corporation under sec. 246, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951 the amount so paid can be adjusted against rent if there is an understanding between the parties for such adjustment—Nashiban Bibi v. Parul Bala Dutta, 62 C.W.N. 778.

579. Clause (h)—Removal of trees, fixtures :—The old clause ran thus: "The lessee may remove at any time during the continuance of the lease, all things, etc." That is, this clause only allowed the tenant to remove "during the continuance of the lease," all things which he might have attached to the land, and nothing was said as to the rights of the parties in respect of such things after the determination of the lease, if they had not already been removed by the tenant. The question arose whether the tenant forfeited all his rights in such things if he had not so removed them; and it was held that according to local usage, the option was with the lessor either to take the building on paying compensation, or if he was unwilling to pay compensation, to allow the tenant to remove the building—Ismaj Kani v. Nazarali, 27 Mad. 211 (217); Angammal v. Aslami Sahib, 38 Mad. 710 (735); Kanai Lal v. Rassik Lal, 19 C.W.N. 361, 23 I.C. 762. Where the terms of the lease did not provide for payment of compensation to the tenant, the Court had a discretion, in a proper case, to allow reasonable time to the tenant after the expiry of the tenancy to remove his superstructure from the land—Raja Avergal v. Noor Mohomed, 66 I.C. 48, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 349; Angummal v. Aslami Sahib, 38 Mad. 710 (736); Govinda v. Charusila, 60 Cal. 1042, 37 C.W.N. 791 (795), A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 875. Where after the termination of the tenancy, the tenant took no steps for 2 years to remove his structures, and after 2 years brought a suit to remove the structures or to recover compensation, his claim must be disallowed—Govinda v. Charusila, supra.

The present clause, as now amended, allows the tenant to remove the fixtures even after the determination of the lease, so long as he is in possession, but not afterwards.

The amended clause has introduced no new principle but has only extended the period within which the tenant could remove, beyond the 'continuance of the lease' to any further time during which he is in possession of the property leased. The old clause (h) limited the tenant's right to remove as a right to be exercised during the term, but it failed to notice that cases of hardship might arise where a tenancy was suddenly determined, e.g., by a mortgagee's sale or by Land Acquisition proceedings. These difficulties have been removed in the amended clause by an extension of the period—Govinda v. Charusila, 60 Cal. 1042, 37 C.W.N. 791 (796). If the tenant once quits possession, the fixtures become the property of the lessor—Khimjee v. Pioneer Fibre Co., 43 Bom. L.R. 576, A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 337 (338). But see India Electric Works Ltd. v. B. S. Mantosh, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 148, wherein it has been laid down that clause (h) "is not a clause of forfeiture and it is not declared therein that after the expiry of the term of the lease or after the lessee has ceased to be in possession his title to the fixtures will be forfeited."

According to the maxim "Quincquid plantatur solo solo cedit" in England the buildings etc. created upon or affixed to the soil by a lessee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, cannot be removed by the lessee at the termination of the lease and become the property of the lessor. But in India the position is governed by cl. (h) of this section under which the buildings etc. upon termination of the lease can be removed by the lessee, unless there is a contract to the contrary—Bally- gunge Bank v. Comr. of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 159, 50 C.W.N. 598. But see contra Jungreja v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. 1950 M.B. 39. The effect of this clause is that the lessee is the owner of the buildings etc. put up by him on the lessor's land—Laxmipat v. Larsen, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 205, 52 Bom. L.R. 688. Equitable principles cannot override the operation of this clause. Even where the lessor has granted or contracted to grant permanent rights, and on the faith thereof the lessee has created the structures, he is not entitled to compensation for them notwithstanding this clause—Darbari Lal v. Raneegang Coal Assn., A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 30, 22 Pat. 552. See also Chhedi v. Mahipal, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 600. A lease of certain brick-fields provided for forfeiture of the materials remaining on the land on expiration of the lease. After its expiration the lessor allowed certain items as a matter of grace to be removed by the lessee: held that there was no waiver on the part of the lessor of the condition of forfeiture—Karnani Industrial Bank v. Province of Bengal, A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 47, 53 C.W.N. 195.

This section is subject to a contract to the contrary; and so where the terms of the lease provided that "on determination of the tenancy the erections raised on the premises would belong to the lessor, unless the lessee removed them on the determination of the lease or within 2 months thereafter, upon payment of all rent due and performance of all conditions"; and the lease was determined for non-payment of rent, whereupon the lessee agreed to the lessor's entering into possession, held that the fixtures would pass to the lessor—Cook & Co. v. Phillips, 34 C.W.N. 786 (788), 130 I.C. 222, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 133; Indian Electric Works Ltd. v. B. S. Mantosh, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 148.

Apart from estoppel or contract, the tenant has no right to demand compensation for buildings left by him on the premises when he quits them. In the absence of evidence of an express consent on the part of the landlord to the erection of the superstructure by the tenant, the mere fact that the landlord knew of the construction of the building would not lead to the presumption that there was any undertaking by the landlord to pay for the house if the tenant did not remove it—Angammal v. Aslami Sahib, 38 Mad. 710. (735). Where the lessee for a term is permitted to build structures consistent with the lease and there is no contract or usage against his removing the structures the lessor cannot be compelled to take the structure on payment of compensation—Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52.

Where the lessees lost their right by a decree in a mortgage suit not having given them an opportunity to remove the building, they were allowed to remove them unless the lessor chose to take them on payment of compensation—Kanai v. Rasik, 19 C.W.N. 361. A sub-lessee is entitled to the benefit of cl. (h) and can remove a structure made by him—Mana Devi v. Malki Ram, A.I.R. 1961 All. 84.

If after the tenant has erected buildings on the land, the lease turns out to be invalid, the tenant is only entitled to have the superstructure removed by him, and not to any compensation—Govindasami v. Ethirajammal, (1916) 1 M.W.N. 180, 34 I.C. 1. A tenant cannot claim compensation for improvements, but he is entitled to remove the materials—Smt. Chapala Devi v. Rakhal Chandra Sen, A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 363. If the landlord appropriates the materials of any super-structure the tenant can recover the value thereof—Sundareswar Devasthanam v. Marimuthu, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 369. If any structure is built with the consent of the lessor the lessor cannot claim compensation for the structure so built on the determination of the lease, his only right being to remove the structure—B. Mohammad Hayath Saheb v. Radhakrishna Bhatta, (1968) 1 Mys. L.J. 63.

This clause should be read with the clause (o), and the meaning of the two clauses read together is that the lessee is entitled to remove those trees and buildings which he himself has attached to the earth, and that he is prohibited from removing the trees and buildings which he has not himself attached to the earth and which stood on the land at the time of lease—Vasudeva v. Valia, 24 Mad. 47 (53); Gangamma v. Bhomakka, 33 Mad. 253; Kedar Nath v. Govinda, 32 C.W.N. 366 (371), 108 I.C. 242. As regards trees planted by the mulgeni tenant himself since the grant of the lease, the tenant has every right to cut them whether they are timber trees or otherwise—Ganesh v. Hanmant, A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 100, 53 Bom. L.R. 800. The lessee is not entitled to fell or sell timber trees but he can make use of non-timber trees and utilise its usufruct as a person of ordinary precedence—ibid. As regards the spontaneous growth after the lease was granted, the lessee cannot cut timber trees, but he can cut the non-timber trees and put them to any other use as he pleases—ibid.

The principle underlying sec. 108 can be invoked in the case of agricultural leases in the absence of special custom to the contrary. Consequently in the case of a perpetual lease of land for agricultural purposes, the lessee is, in the absence of special custom to the contrary not entitled to claim timber of trees which has spontaneously grown on the land—Gur Prasad v. Mehdi Husain, A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 460 (462), (1942) O.W.N. 435, 201 I.C. 728. See also Ganesh v. Hanmant, supra. Where no underproprietary rights have been conferred upon the lessee, he cannot claim ownership of such trees as mentioned above—Ibid.

'Attached to the earth':—For the meaning of this term, see Note 20 under sec. 3 and Note 78 under sec. 8.

A tenant who has planted trees on the land has the right of cutting down and making use of them—Sitabai v. Shambhu, 38 Bom. 716. A lessee may remove trees which he has himself planted and buildings which he has himself erected, provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it—Vasudeva v. Valia, 24 Mad. 47 (53) (F.B.). See in this connection Velu v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.Coch. 584. A trespasser is not entitled to any compensation for the trees planted by him—Rev. Father K. C. Alexander v. State of Kerala, A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 72.

A trade fixture, i.e., a fixture put up for business can be removed by the tenant—Chaturbhuj v. Bennett, 29 Bom. 323, (335). If a Municipal Board fails to remove night-soil deposited on land taken on lease even after delivery of possession to the lessee, its right to the night-soil is not lost—Municipal Board, Meerut v. Bir Singh, A.I.R. 1965 All. 527.

579A. Clause (i)—Growing crops:—Compare the last para of sec. 51, and see Notes 8 and 78, ante. Where the effect of an award and the decree passed thereon in a suit for possession of land was that if X did not deposit the money payable to Y before certain date, Y was entitled to remain in possession and he raised crops on the land: held that Y was entitled to the benefit of this clause and X was not entitled to insist that Y should make over possession of the crops to X along with the land or pay the value of the crops—Gangamma v. Mahabala, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 879 (882), 46 M.L.W. 676.

580. Clause (j)—Transfer by lessee of his interest :—This clause is not retrospective, and does not apply to tenancies created before the passing of this Act—Madhav Chandra v. Bijoy Chand, 4 C.W.N. 574; Hari Nath v. Raj Chandra, 2 C.W.N. 122; Umakanta v. Kashiram, 23 I.C. 246 (Cal.); Mohendra v. Krishna Kumari, 46 I.C. 656 (Cal.). Thus, a permanent tenancy created before the passing of this Act for the purposes of habitation cannot be transferred (even though no buildings have been erected on the land for the purpose of habitation), if the document creating the tenancy does not confer upon the lessee the right to transfer and there is no evidence of a local custom in favour of such transfer—Safar Ali v. Abdul Rashid, 39 C.L.J. 585, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 1012; Bansi Singh v. Chakradhar, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 569 (572), 17 Pat. 358, 19 P.L.T. 731. So also, a tenancy of homestead land from year to year which was in existence before the passing of this Act and which was not transferable except by custom, is not governed by this Act, and this clause does not make it transferable absolutely or by way of sub-lease—Ananda Mohan v. Govinda, 20 C.W.N. 322, 33 I.C. 565 (567); Ramcharan v. Hari Charan, 7 C.L.J. 107; Umakanta v. Kashiram, 23 I.C. 246 (Cal.); Madhusudan v. Kamini, 32 Cal. 1023; Sarada Kanta v. Nobin Chandra, 54 Cal. 333, 31 C.W.N. 231 (234), A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 39; Hanuman Prasad v. Deo Charan, 7 C.L.J. 309; see also Kamala v. Nibaran, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 431 (432-33), 36 C.W.N. 149, 138 I.C. 72. But see Md. Sharif v. Waqf Banam-i-Khuda, A.I.R. 1947 All. 49 where it has been held that this section has only declared the law as previously administered. A lease-hold interest was transferable even before the Act, as there was no rule of law imposing restriction upon such alienation. So a permanent lease created before the passing of the Act can be transferred by the lessee. If the lease of homestead land is created after this Act, the interest of the lessee is transferable under this clause—Mohendra v. Krishna Kumari, 46 I.C. 656 (Cal.). A non-agricultural tenancy created after the passing of this Act is transferable, unless any custom or contract is established to the contrary—Kishori Lal v. Kamini, 37 Cal. 377 (383). A tenancy from month to month is assignable,—Ram Barai Singh v. Tirtha Pada Misra, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 173.

In the Punjab the rule contained in the clause is followed. Thus, where the question as to whether a particular right of tenancy is transferable or not, the presumption under the general law as laid down in this clause is that in the absence of contract or local usage to the contrary, the right is alienable. Where, therefore, the landlord alleges that the tenancy is by custom not alienable, the onus is on him—Rahmatullah v. Atta Mohammad, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 360 (362), 173 I.C. 198. There is no presumption that a right of residence on a city site is inalienable such as arises in the case of villages or small towns where the residential sites belong to the agriculturists—Ibid. Sub-lessee from a statutory tenant acquires no right of tenancy—Anand Nivas v. Anandji, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 414. Where a tenant forms a partnership in a shop let out to him obliging himself to work for the firm only, there is no sub-letting, even though rent is to be paid out of the partnership fund—Sivanandan v. Tribuendadas Vendravan, 81 Mad. L. W. 478.

Where the land in dispute or part of it is covered by a kothi, the presumption is that it was let for building purposes and the lessee of such land has a right of transfer. Where the land is merely appurtenant to it as part of the compound of the kothi and was let as such, the lessee possesses a right of transfer of the nature described in this clause—Joti Prasad v. Har Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 All. 473, (1932) A.L.J. 567, 139 I.C. 346.

In spite of the rule contained in this clause as to the alienability of leases, it is open to the parties to covenant against such alienation and a sub-lease given in contravention of such covenant is invalid as between the original lessor and lessee, though it is valid as between the original lessee and the sub-lessee—Abdulla v. Mahammad, 26 Mad. 156; and the landlord will be entitled to bring a suit for damages—Sital Prasad v. Dildar Ali, 1 P.L.J. 1, 33 I.C. 408. A covenant not to sub-let premises is not broken by the subletting of part only of the premises—Esdaille v. Lewis, (1956) 2 All. E.R. 357. Where a tenant is forbidden under the terms of the lease to sublet the premises, a sub-tenant in possession cannot contend that the premises are lawfully sub-let for the purpose of claiming the benefit of sec. 11 (3) of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act—Haripada v. Sailesh, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 141. Where one of the conditions of the tenancy was that the tenant must carry on business on the premises let, then the application of cl. (j) is excluded—Md. Safi v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 729. In the case of a lease containing a covenant against sub-letting without the landlord's consent: (1) There can be at law a sub-lease without the previous consent of the lessor. The sub-lease is not invalid, but it is liable to be affected by the forfeiture of the head lease, unless consent has been unreasonably withheld. (2) Upon the sub-lessee taking possession on the expectation of the lessor recognizing the sub-tenancy, the lessee becomes responsible to the sub-lessee on a covenant for quiet enjoyment. (3) On the other hand, the transaction is to be regarded as an agreement to grant a lease with the landlord's prior written consent and the lessee may protect himself against possible claims of damages by making the contract subject to the landlord's consent. (4) Where the lessee does not apply for the landlord's consent at the time fixed or after a reasonable time (fixing the same by due notice), the sub-lessee is entitled to rescind. If the sub-lessee repudiates before that time, the lessee is entitled to relief—Battersby v. De Cruze, (1936) 63 Cal. 31. An absolute demise by sub-lease for the unexpired residue of the term operates not as an assignment of the term, but only as a sub-lease, and is not a breach of covenant against assignment—Hansraj v. Bejoy Lal, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 59, 57 Cal. 1176, 57 I.A. 110, 34 C.W.N. 342, 122 I.C. 20. See in this connection Lodna Colliery Co. v. Bepin, 55 I.C. 113, 1 P.L.T. 84.

Where the grantee of a lease transfers the whole of his term to the sub-grantee on terms similar to the original lease, such transfer operates by way of sub-demise and not of assignment—Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, 66 I.A. 50, (1939) 1 Cal. 283, 43 C.W.N. 281, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14; Nanjappa v. Rangaswami, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 410, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 200, 1940 M.W.N. 266; see also Hansraj v. Bejoy Lal, 57 I.A. 110, 57 Cal. 1176, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 59. The distinction between a sub-lease and an assignment is that in a sub-lease the whole or any part of the lessee's interest can be transferred, while in an assignment the whole of the interest in the property must be transferred. Even if the whole of the lessee's interest is subdemised, the sub-lease does not operate as an assignment. So there is no privity of contract or privity of estate between the sub-lessee and the superior landlord—Abba Ali v. Mulraj, A.I.R. 1947 Sind 163, I.L.R. 1946 Kar. 454. A transferee of a specific portion of a holding is not liable for the entire rent, but only to that portion of the rent which could be apportioned to the area in his exclusive possession—Madhabilata v. Butto Kristo, A.I.R. 1911 Pat. 129, 10 B.R. 652; and the apportionment may be effected in accordance with the principle laid down in the latter part of sec. 109 post—ibid. Even where the lessor's consent is required for the assignment of a lease by the lessee and he assigns it without such consent, the assignment is valid and operative, and the only right that the lessor has is to sue the lessee for damages for breach of the contract—Treasurer v. Tyabji, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 349, 50 Bom. L.R. 240. In such a case the obligations of the lease will continue and the assignee will also be liable for them—ibid. The words "such consent, however, not to be unreasonably withheld in the case of respectable or responsible person" in a lease do not amount to a separate and independent covenant by the lessor that he would not refuse consent except upon reasonable grounds. These words relieve the lessee from the burden of the covenant if the lessor unreasonably withholds his consent in the case of a proposed assignment to a respectable or responsible person—Kamala Ranjan v. Baijnath, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 1, 1951 S.C.J. 13; Shankar Prasad Goenka v. State of Madhya Pradesh, A.I.R. 1965 Madh. Pra. 153.

The distinction between an assignment and relinquishment is clear. The consent of the lessor to an assignment is not necessary in the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary. But in the case of relinquishment, it can only be in favour of the lessor by mutual agreement between them—W. H. King v. Republic of India, A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 156.

A lessee cannot make an underlease for a longer term than his own lease. If an underlease mentions no term, it cannot be construed to have effect beyond the interest of the grantor—Harish Chunder v. Sree Kali, 22 W.R. 274. During the subsistence of tenancy the tenant A brought B on the land as a sub-tenant. After the expiry of lease of A, B continued possessing the property exclusively. A sold her interest to C. B never paid rent to C nor was recognized as tenant by him: held, as soon as the interest of A came to an end, the interest of B as sub-tenant also came to an end and B could not subsequently rank as tenant of C. Hence C could not sue B in ejectment as tenant after service of a notice to quit—Biraja Sundari v. Mahamaya, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 599. When the original lease has not been determined, the lessor cannot treat the sub-lessee, holding under a valid sub-lease, as if he was his tenant and not the tenant of his sub-lessor, and sue him directly for rent—Ganges Manfg. Co. v. Radharani, A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 89, 49 C.W.N. 63. As purchaser in the lessee's interest at an execution sale, the lessor would no doubt be entitled to realise rent direct from the sub-lessee, but the rent would be the rent which the sub-lessee was liable to pay under the sub-lease—ibid. It is elementary that as between the lessor and the sub-lessee there is neither privity of contract nor privity of estate and the sub-lessee would not be bound by the covenants of the principal lease—Jagadish v. Md. Bukhtiyar, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 409; covenants of the principal lease—Jagadish v. Md. Bukhtiyar, A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 409; Baban v. Champabai, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 336, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 432. Permission granted by the tenant to others to use the premises does not amount to sub-letting—Petroleum Workers Union v. A. Mohamed & Co. A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 33.

A decree for ejectment of the lessee obtained by the lessor can be executed against the sub-lessee as he is bound by the decree within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 35 (1), C.P. Code—Yusuf v. Jyotish, 59 Cal. 739. See also Ramkissen v. Brijaraj, 50 Cal. 419. But see contra Ezra v. Gubbay, 47 Cal. 907. If the sub-lease is a permanent one the decree for ejectment against the lessee does not bind the sub-lessee unless he is made a party to the suit—Sukumar v. Nagendrabala, 71 C.L.J. 209, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 393, 190 I.C. 622. A valid notice to quit not only determines the original demise, but any sub-lease which the tenant might have made, provided the sub-tenant has no right independent of the right of his lessor. Such a sub-tenant is not a necessary party to a suit for ejectment brought by the superior landlord—Yusuf v. Jyotish, supra. A lessee by a voluntary surrender of his lease cannot however prejudice the right of his underlessee—Ibid.

This clause provides that the liability of the lessee shall not cease by reason only of the transfer. Therefore, a lessee does not cease to be liable to pay rent to his landlord even after he (lessee) has transferred his interest in the property leased—Bhola Nath v. Durga Prosad, 12 C.W.N. 724; Manmatha v. Balai, 70 I.C. 111, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 359; Manmatha v. Nalinaksha, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 423; Ardeskar v. K. D. Bros., A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 330, 27 Bom. L.R. 553, 88 I.C. 79, and it is no answer to a suit for rent brought by the landlord against the lessee, that the transferee from the lessee is willing to pay the rent—Akrurmani v. Madhab Chandra, 47 I.C. 800 (Cal.). A mere assignment of a lease does not release the lessee from his liability under the personal covenant. There must be actual substitution of the assignee as the person liable on the personal covenant. Thus, a judgment against the assignee for the rent due which remains unsatisfied is no bar to a subsequent claim against the lessee for the amount unpaid, the causes of action being different—Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Vasantlal, I.L.R. (1938) Bom. 471, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 360, 40 Bom. L.R. 497. There is no consistency whatever between the liability of the original lessee on his covenant and that of the assignee by reason of privity of estate, though the several liabilities are in respect of the same subject-matter—Ibid. Where there is a direct covenant by the lessee to pay to the lessor the rent; mere acceptance of rent from an assignee of the lessee by the lessor will not relieve the lessee from his personal covenant. The English rule of reddendum does not apply to such cases—Abdul v. Phiroz, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 88 (89), 60 Bom. 394, 161

I.C. 57. Where the lease provides that the lessee is not competent to transfer his ijara right, that such transfer, if made, shall not bind the lessor and that if by operation of law such transfer becomes binding on the lessor even then the lessee shall remain bound to pay the rent so long as the transferee shall not furnish security to be fixed by the lessor for the payment of rent, the lessor is not bound to fix the security for the due payment of rent by the transferee whenever the lessee chooses to transfer his right and the lessee's personal liability to pay rent shall continue even after transfer—Satyaniranjan v. Sarjubala, 33 C.W.N. 865 (871); affirmed 33 C.W.N. at p. 872 (P.C.). The lessee's liability (e.g., to pay rent) does not cease even though he gives notice of the transfer to the landlord, unless the lessor consents to it—Sashi Bhushan v. Tara Lal, 22 Cal. 494 (500); Satyaniranjan v. Sarajubala, 33 C.W.N. 865 (870); affirmed 33 C.W.N. at p. 872 (P.C.); Devidas Bhatta v. Ratnakar Rao, (1965) 1 Mys. L.J. 731.

But when, after a tenant has transferred his interest to another the landlord accepts rent from the transferee, the presumption is that the latter is accepted by the landlord as his tenant—Nabakumari v. Behari Lal, 34 Cal. 902 (P.C.). The lessee shall cease to be liable if the lessor accepts rent from the assignee and thereby creates privity of contract between himself (lessor) and the assignee—Theethalan v. Eralpad, 40 Mad. 1111 (1113). But see Abdul v. Phiroj, supra. A lessor cannot recover rent from one only of the heirs of the deceased original lessee when he admits an assignment of the lease to a third party though unrecognized, and does not prove that such assignee is not in possession but the defendant is—Lakshminarayan v. Giriya Sankar, (1938) 42 C.W.N. 1088.

The assignee also is liable to the original lessor in respect of all covenants running with the land, which include a covenant to pay rent. The assignee is therefore directly liable to the lessor for the payment of rent. The doctrine applies even where the title of the assignee is derived under a Court-sale—Viravadrappa v. Basangowda, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 328, 42 Bom. L.R. 279, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 154. The assignee of the lessee, however, is not liable for interest on the arrears of rent—Ibid. The lessor may at the same time sue the lessee on the express covenant and the assignee upon the privity of estate, though he can have execution against one only—Kunhamian v. Anjelu, 17 Mad. 296; Mammatha v. Nalinaksha, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 324, 79 I.C. 557; Govinda v. Md. Hosain, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 296, 87 I.C. 802. Covenant to pay ground rent and taxes is a covenant which runs with the land—Ardeskar v. K. D. Bros., A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 330 (331), 27 Bom. L.R. 553, 88 I.C. 79. An express covenant in restraint of alienation is a covenant running with the land. It binds not only the lessee but also his assignees and auction-purchasers of the land—Dayal Singh v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 493 (494), 15 Pat. 673, 164 I.C. 811. Covenants that touch and concern the thing demised, and not collateral thereto, run with the land and bind the assignees. Thus, a covenant by the lessee of a mine not to work the mine in a certain direction and to have a barrier between the mine leased to him and another mine, is a covenant which runs with the land—Lodna Colliery Co. v. Bipin, 55 I.C. 113, 1 P.L.T. 84. An assignee by way of sub-demise is bound by a restrictive covenant (a covenant against the working of a coal mine in a certain way) of the head lease, if he has notice, either actual or constructive, of the covenant—Mati Lal v. Ishwar Radha Madhav Jew, 41 C.W.N. 203. In the case of a lease granted without express authority to extract minerals if the lessee and sub-lessee join to extract coal from under the land, they are joint tortfeasors. If there is a bona fide belief in them in their right to extract the coal that would go only to mitigate the measure of damages—Mangobinda v. Brahma Niranjana, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 326 (327), 174 I.C. 130. A covenant to pay a part of the price if the lessee assigns his interest can be enforced only against the assignor, and not against the assignee unless the latter in his turn assigns—Lala Madho Prasad v. Raja Jaleshpuri Pratap, A.I.R. 1960 All. 513 (F.B.).

A mining lease is not mere sale of the land or minerals, but also partakes the character of a lease—Jyoti Prasad v. Seldon, 19 Pat. 433, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 516, 192 I.C. 17; see also Falakrishna v. Jagannath, 59 Cal. 1814, 36 C.W.N. 709, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 775. In the case of assignment of a share of such leased premises the lessor is entitled to sue the assignees for the whole rent. The assignees are liable jointly and severally with the lessee—Jyoti Prasad v. Seldon, supra.

Privy of estate :—When the liability of a tenant to pay rent is founded on privity of estate, the liability ceases as soon as the interest is transferred to some other person. But so far as the original lessee is concerned, his liability does not cease with mere assignment; his liability can only cease after the assignee is accepted as tenant by the lessor either expressly or impliedly—Saradindu v. Kunja Kamini, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 514, 46 C.W.N. 798. See also Krishna v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 618, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 191 and Dwijendra v. Promode, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 251, 54 C.W.N. 673. Both the assignor and the assignee can be sued for ejectment—Pandit Kishan Lal v. Ganpat Ram Khosla, A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1554.

It has been held by the Lahore High Court that there being no privity of contract between the original lessor and a sub-lessee, the former is not entitled to claim rent from the latter, his remedy being only against the lessee with whom he made the contract—Jetha Nand v. Udho Das, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 614, 131 I.C. 121. But the liability of the assignee of a lease to pay rent to the landlord arises by reason of the privity of estate and this privity of estate is created by the transfer to him and not by his obtaining possession. Similarly, when the assignee in turn assigns over, his privity of estate ceases and consequently his liability also ceases in respect of breaches of covenant committed after he has assigned over—Saldanha v. Subraya, 30 Mad. 410; Mehra Godadhar, 37 Cal. 683.

By Indian, as by English, law an assignee of a lease is liable by privity of estate for all the burdens of the lease—burdens which are imposed upon him by the mere assignment, whether he enters into possession or not—Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14, 43 C.W.N. 281. Therefore a lessor can hold the assignees from the lessee, liable for royalty even though they may not have obtained actual possession under the assignment—Jyoti Prasad v. Seldon, supra. On the other hand, since the privity of estate is created by transfer and not by possession sion, it follows that mere possession of a leasehold property will not render a man liable for rent, if the lease has not been assigned to him—Ananda v. Abdullah, 41 Cal. 148 (155). Moreover, the liability of the assignee for rent arises from the date of the assignment and not from the date of his taking possession—Saldanha v. Subraya, 30 Mad. 410; Bengal National Bank v. Janaki, 54 Cal. 813, 31 C.W.N. 973, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 725 (730), 104 I.C. 484.

These principles relating to the privity of estate between the lessor and the lessee's assignee does not apply except when the whole of the lessee's interest is assigned over. No privity of estate arises when a subsidiary interest is carved out of the lessee's interest, as where the lessee mortgages or sublets his leasehold interest—Sukhdeo v. Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 522, 185 I.C. 557. There is no privity of estate between a lessor and the mortgagee from the lessee—Thethalan v. Earlpad Raja, 40 Mad. 1111 (1112, 1114), 40 I.C. 841. Since in the case of a mortgage a legal interest remains in the mortgagor, the interest taken by the mortgagee of leasehold interests is not an absolute interest and is not such as to render him liable for the burdens of the lease by reason of privity of estate or contract between him and the lessor. Nor can privity of estate result from his entry into possession—Jagadamba Loan Co. v. Shiba Prasad, A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 36. In this case their Lordships held that no question arose of novation by reason of the mortgagees having paid rent to the lessor. Their Lordships were of opinion that although in Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, (supra) the mortgagees had not entered into possession of the properties mortgaged, the principle of that decision was equally inconsistent with privity of contract as with privity of estate as a ground of claim against the mortgagee of leaseholds in such a case as the case under consideration—Jagadamba Loan Co. v. Shiba Prasad, supra, at p. 38. Similarly, a sub-lease differs from an absolute assignment of a lease in that it creates no privity of estate between the sub-tenant and the landlord. The landlord has to deal with his lessee and not with the sub-tenants of the latter—Timmappa v. Rama, 21 Bom. 311 (313). Under the Indian law as embodied in the T.P. Act, even the English mortgage of a lease does not amount to a transfer of the whole and an absolute interest and does not create a privity of estate between the lessor and the mortgagee, so as to make the latter liable on the ground for the burdens of a lease—Ram Kinkar v. Satya Charan, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 14.

A mortgagee of a lease who has foreclosed is liable for rent to the lessor, because in such a case the entire interests of the lessee and the mortgagee have become by operation of law merged in the person of the latter—Macnaghten v. Bheekaree, 2 C.L.R. 323. If the lessee mortgages the demised land in violation of the term of the lease and the landlord obtains a decree for eviction on the ground of forfeiture, the mortgagee not being an assignee cannot say that the notice under cl. (g), sec. 111 is bad or that there has been no violation of the condition of the lease—Kshiroda Sundari v. Bhupendra, A.I.R. 1961 Assam 70.

It is only when the person in possession is a pure trespasser and there is no privity between him and the tenant, that the Court will grant a decree for possession to the landlord. In other cases where the person in possession holds under a transfer by the tenant, possession will not be decreed unless abandonment by the tenant is proved—Nandanlal v. Shree Hanumanji, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 46, (1939) N.L.J. 551.

581. Clause (k) :—Compare cl. (5) (a) of sec. 55. The distinction between sec. 55 and the present section is that while under the earlier section the non-disclosure amounts to fraud on the part of the purchaser and entitles the vendor to rescind the contract of sale, a non-disclosure under this clause has no such serious effect but only entitles the lessor to sue for compensation.

582. Clause (l)—Payment of rent :—The tenant's liability to pay rent commences from the date he is put into possession and not from the date when the landlord merely signs the lease—Shama Prasad v. Taki, 5 C.W.N. 816; and the tenant is not bound to pay rent for the portion of the property of which he has not obtained possession—Siba Kumari v. Bipprodas, 12 C.W.N. 767. Where a lump rent was fixed for the whole land and the lessor dispossessed the lessee in a highhanded manner from a portion of the land he is not entitled to claim any rent till he again puts the tenant in possession of the portion dispossessed. The mere fact that the area dispossessed is a small one is not of an overriding importance—Nilkantha v. Kshitish A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 338. A lessee is not entitled to claim remission for loss suffered due to cyclones—Alanduraiappan v. T. S. A. Hamid, A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 94. Where a mortgagor executes a rent-note in favour of the mortgagee in respect of the mortgaged property the mortgagee is competent to sue for arrears of rent, except where the mortgage-deed specifically provides that on failure to pay rent a suit for the entire money can be filed—Kushal Raj v. Mst. Mooli Bai, I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 980. If a tenant gives notice to the landlord purporting to surrender the unexpired period of the lease but the landlord refuses to accept the surrender, the tenant does not cease to be liable for the rent—Thiagarajaswami v. Kamalappa Thevar, A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 439. A tenant denying the title of the landlord but willing to pay rent under protest commits default in payment of rent when the landlord does not accept rent offered under protest—Bhagwandas v. Surajmal, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pr. 237.

This clause makes it obligatory on the tenant to pay or tender the rent at the proper time and place. There is nothing in this section to require the lessor to make a demand—Allibhoy v. Gordhandas, 23 S.L.R. 29, A.I.R. 1929 Sind. 13, 111 I.C. 530; Nasiruddin v. Umerji Adam & Co., A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 286 (287), 43 Bom. L.R. 546. The place of payment of the rent is a matter of contract, and, in the absence of express provisions, is to be implied from custom; and if there is no custom, it is normally the duty of the debtor to seek out his creditor—In the matter of Maung Pyu, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 84 (88) S.B., 1940 R.L.R. 325, 188 I.C. 422. The tenant is not bound to make a useless tender when he knows for certain that the tender would be refused—S. K. Shaw v. Brij Raj, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 475, 30 P.L.T. 183.

In India rent does not accrue from day to day, but according to kists—Ram v. Harihar, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 237, 16 Pat. 184, 168 I.C. 502.

Where there is no assignment by the lessor and the lessee pays the rent in advance which the lessor accepts, he will be bound to appropriate the advance towards the rent as it accrues due—Krishnaswamy v. Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 535, I.L.R. 1949 Mad. 657.

In the absence of a stipulation in the lease it cannot be forfeited for non-payment of rent—Harsur v. Samat, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 94. A tenant can claim abatement of rent on the ground of diluvion of a portion of the land demised, even if there is no provision for this in the Tenancy Act—Medini Kumar v. P. C. Mallik, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 322. In such a case the onus is on the tenant to show how much has been diluviated—ibid. A tenant cannot claim assessment of fair rent where the tenancy is governed by the present Act. Abatement of rent cannot be claimed, if there is no deprivation of the tenant from a part of the premises by reason of non-repairs by the landlord—Bansi v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 508, 30 P.L.T. 231.

Where the lessor has no title to the property and the lessee is ejected by the true owner, the lessee is not bound to pay any rent to the lessor—Moti Lal v. Yar Mahammad, A.I.R. 1925 All. 275, 47 All. 63, 85 I.C. 756. But a sub-tenant who remains in possession even after the passing of a decree for eviction against the head lessee is bound to pay rent to the head lessee for the period during which he remains in possession after the decree—National Jewellery Works v. Diana Printing Works, 63 C.W.N. 192. In order to sustain the defence to a rent suit, founded upon eviction by title paramount, two things must be proved by the defendant, namely, (i) that he has been evicted by a third person, and (ii) the third person had a paramount title, superior to the title of his lessor. Though physical expulsion is not necessary, the mere assertion by the third person that he has better title to the knowledge of the lessor and the lessee, is not a defence to a rent suit instituted by the lessor against the lessee, even if this assertion be a true assertion. It is essential that the person asserting such title should take possession or should be taken in the eye of law to have taken possession of the demised premises. The mere institution of a suit for possession by a person having title paramount in law does not amount to such eviction—Amritalal v. Uttamlal, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 216 (218), I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 559, per R. C. Mitter and Edgley, JJ.

Where a landlord has at the beginning of the tenancy a title or possession, the tenant cannot deny his landlord's right to let the property to him, although the plea that the tenancy has ceased or that his liability to pay rent either wholly or partially has come to an end, is available to him on the ground that he has been evicted against his will or forced to attorn to a person holding title paramount. In that case he would be freed from his liability to pay rent—Seeram v. Kethavarapu, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 220, 48 M.L.W. 959.

As to the tenant's right to suspend payment of rent in case of obstruction to his possession or deprivation of the whole or portion of the land, see Note 574, ante.

This Act gives no authority to a landlord to enhance the rent of his tenant during the term of the lease, whether it be in perpetuity or for a definite term—Satish Chander v. Rai Jatindra, 7 C.L.J. 284.

Where the lease discloses a joint demise, no one of the lessors with or without the consent of his co-lessors can sue for an aliquot part of the whole; the suit must be for the whole of the interest demised, else it fails—Baraboni Coal Concern v. Gopinath Jiu, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 58 (59), 61 Cal. 313, 61 I.A. 35, 38 C.W.N. 325, 147 I.C. 884. An inter se partition of the mokarrari interest amongst the mokarraridars does not affect their liability, qua the lessor, for payment of the whole rent, as several tenants of a tenancy constitute in law but a single tenant. Such is the case also in a lakhiraj holding subject to a mokarrari interest—Badri Narain v. Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 186, 1951 S.C.J. 252, 30 Pat. 664. See also Krishna v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 618, (1949) M.L.J. 191. A co-sharer can file a suit for the entire rent by impleading the other co-sharers as defendants. But a suit for a proportionate part of the rent is not maintainable in the absence of a contract to that effect between the tenant and the co-sharer landlords—Vijai Kumar Tandon v. Ganga Devi Rathor, 1969 All. L.J. 403.

A stipulation that if a tenant does not pay rent on the due date interest shall be charged on the arrear, is enforceable—Bhyrub v. Meer Ameerooddeen, 17 W.R. 173; and the mere omission to claim interest for some time cannot amount to a waiver of the landlord's right to claim interest at the stipulated rate—Shyama Charan v. Heran Mollah, 26 Cal. 160; Jahoory v. Bullab, 5 Cal. 102. Moreover, the Court has no power to reduce the stipulated rate of interest payable upon non-payment of rent in due time—Sayed Shahid Hussain v. Jagmohan, 2 P.L.T. 276, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 301.

Where the plaintiff prays for rent in his one third share making the co-sharers proforma defendant the suit is not maintainable because the contract for payment of rent cannot be split up at the will of a co-sharer—Dhaneswar v. Subodh Kumar, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 334. If the tenant purchase the interest of one of the landlords, others can get only a decree for joint possession and proportionate rent in a suit for eviction and for rent in arrears—Hari Pratap v. Ramgopal, A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 18.

Concurrent lease:—When a lessor executes two concurrent leases of the same property, that is to say, two leases in which the term of the second commences before the term of the first has expired, the second lessee is to be taken as the assignee of the lessor's interest during the concurrent portion of the terms, and the lessor after the execution of the second lease can recover rent only from the second and not from the first lessee—Ram Anant v. Shanker, 30 All. 369. A concurrent lease operates as a grant of the reversion upon the existing term and would entitle the concurrent lessee to recover the rent from the earlier lessee. Where, therefore, the lessor grants a usufructuary mortgage of the property when both the leases had some time to run, the mortgagee's right to recover rent would be only to proceed against the concurrent lessee and not against the original lessee—Periaswami v. Periaswami, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 718, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 165. If the lessor is authorised by the lessee to collect rent from the sub-tenants in satisfaction of his claim for rent from the lessee, the authority cannot be subsequently withdrawn because the lessor becomes the agent of the lessee coupled with interest—B. Ahmed Maracair v. Mulhuvalliappa Chettiar, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 28.

If the lessor realises only a part of the rent from the sub-lessees and the claim against the latter becomes barred by limitation he cannot realise the balance from the lessee—Ibid.

583. Clause (m) :—The provisions of the Act can not be applied by analogy to patni taluqs and a patnidar is competent to use or lease out land for manufacture of bricks—Surendra v. Bijoy, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 962 (964), 52 Cal. 655, 30 C.W.N. 233, 41 C.L.J. 527.

The use of electric energy for lighting or other domestic purposes is so reasonable and prevalent that to bring electricity in the premises for such purposes is to use the land or premises in a natural and not in unnatural way—Dhanal Soorma v. Rangoon Indian Electric Telegraph Association, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 401 (403), 13 Rang. 369, 160 I.C. 245.

Omission by a tenant of land to put manure would only lead to lesser return of crop. There can be no detriment to the land itself—Pokar v. Lakshman, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 120.

In a suit for ejectment by a tenant against his sub-tenant on the ground of expiration of the sub-tenancy, the sub-tenant cannot plead that the tenant's title to the land has been terminated by a notice from his landlord and that he has got a fresh lease direct from the landlord. The sub-tenant is bound to restore possession to the plaintiff under this clause—Sorthia v. Karamshi, A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 19.

Repairs by lessee :—This clause lays down that on the termination of the lease the lessee is bound to restore the property in as good condition as it was in when he was put in possession. But this does not mean that if a tenant has taken a house which is out of repairs, he should put it in repairs when the lease comes to an end; but he is bound to maintain and restore the property in the condition in which it was when it was leased out to him. If the building when demised was an old one, and there was a covenant to repair, it is not necessary that the old building be delivered up in a renewed form—Lister v. Lime, (1893) 2 Q.B. 212. Where the lessee terminates the tenancy by notice to the lessor and offers possession, but the latter refuses the offer on the ground that the premises were not in a state of proper repair, the lessor cannot challenge the notice or termination of the lease, but must sue for damages for wilful negligence of the tenant—Raman v. Kunhi, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 996.

The implied obligation of a tenant from year to year is to keep the premises wind and water tight—Anworth v. Johnson, (1832) 5 C. & P. 239; Leach v. Thomas, (1835) 7 C. & P. 327; Wedd v. Porter, [1916] 2 K.B. 91 (100); and to make fair and tenantable repairs—Cheltham v. Hampson (1791) 3 T.R. 313. Gregory v. Mighell, (1811) 18 Bes. 328 (331); as by putting fences in order, or replacing windows or doors that are broken during his occupation or cleansing drains and sewers—Russell v. Shenton, (1842) 3 Q.B. 449. Where a godown, when it was let, was in a fit and proper condition and the landlord had contracted only to make minor repairs, he was not liable for damages caused by the collapse of one of its walls to the neighbouring wall of the plaintiff's godown; but the assignee of the unexpired portion of the lessee's lease was liable as tenant to make good the damage sustained by the plaintiff—Bai Monghibai v. Lakhmidas, 19 Bom. L.R. 887, 43 I.C. 273.

This clause which directs the lessee to restore the property in the same condition in which it was let, subject to the change caused by reasonable wear and tear or by any irresistible force, has no application where the parties have fixed their own terms—and made their own bargain. Thus, where the lessee covenanted to keep the premises “wind and water tight and in habitable condition” and the premises were subsequently damaged by an earthquake, held that as the parties had made their own terms as to the condition in which the lessee was to keep the house and in which it was to be delivered up at the end of the term, the lessee was bound by his contract to make good the damage, irrespective of whether or not the damage was caused by earthquake or any other irresistible force—Heckle v. Tellery, 4 C.W.N. 521. But in such a case the lessee is not liable to do all and every repair that is necessary by reason of the earthquake, but only to make the damage to the extent of making the premises “wind and water tight and in habitable condition”—Ibid. All that the lessee is bound to do is to put the premises in such repair as having regard to the age, character and locality of the house, would make it reasonably fit for the occupation of a tenant of the class who would be likely to take it—Proudfoot v. Hart, 25 Q.B.D. 42, cited in the above case. When there is a covenant in a lease to leave the premises in repair at the end of the term, and such covenant is broken, the lessee must pay what the lessor proves to be a reasonable and proper amount for putting the premises into the state of repair in which they ought to be left—Sarafali v. Subraya, 20 Bom. 439 following Joymer v. Weeks, [1891] 2 Q.B. 31 (43).

The general rule of law with respect to covenants to repair is that where the covenant to repair is in general terms to keep the premises in repair, the covenant will attach to new buildings which are subsequently erected upon the demised premises during the currency of the term. On the other hand, where the covenant to repair refers to certain specified property that is demised, such as the “said building” or the “said houses,” then unless the additional buildings in fact become part of the specific buildings which the tenant covenanted to repair, the covenant will extend to such new and separate erections. Whether or not a covenant to repair extends to any particular property depends upon the terms of the covenant and the facts proved in the case under consideration—Debendra v. Cohen, 54 Cal. 485, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 908 (910), 106 I.C. 477. If the new buildings are so constructed that they cannot be treated as separate buildings but are in fact and in truth made part of the original buildings, the covenant to repair would extend to such new erections—Debendra v. Cohen, supra; Cohen v. Debendra, 32 C.W.N. 154 (157, 158), 107 I.C. 86, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 89. “A general covenant to repair includes not merely buildings existing when the demise is made, but all those which may be erected during the term”—Field v. Curnick, [1926] 2 K.B. 374; Cornish v. Cleife, (1864) 3 H. & C. 446; Foa’s Landlord and Tenant, 6th Edn. p. 228. The mere fact that an agreement between the landlord and tenant embodied in a rent note imposes an obligation on the tenant to do plastering and repairs of the premises, does not, however, impose on the tenant an obligation to re-build a house which falls down or is re-constructed in obedience to a dilapidation notice—Abdul Razak v. Seth Nandlal, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 506 (511-12), (1938) N.L.J. 317.

Destruction by fire:—A lease of a building for the purpose of storing alcohol and other spirits for a distillery contained a covenant that "the lessees on the expiry of the period of lease should restore the building at their own cost to the condition in which they took the same, and that in case the lessees fail to remove the additions and alterations made by them and to restore the building to its original and habitable condition at their own cost, the cost thereof shall be paid by the lessees to the lessor." The building having been subsequently accidentally burnt down by fire, the lessor sued the lessee for damages for reinstatement of the building. Held that the covenant merely intended that any structural alterations made by the lessees for the purposes of their business should be restored on the expiration of the lease so as to make the building suitable for occupation as a dwelling house; that the covenant did not refer to the complete destruction of the building and its complete reinstatement; that the T. P. Act clearly contemplates that a lessee should not be responsible for the consequences of fire unless he has definitely taken that burden on his own shoulders by his covenant; and that as the covenant of this lease did not contemplate the case of fire at all, the lessee could not be made responsible for the damage—East India Distilleries Ltd. v. Matthias, 51 Mad. 994. 55 M.L.J. 663, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1140 (1141, 1142), 114 I.C. 234.

584. Inspection by landlord:—Under the English law, the landlord has no right to go upon the premises if he desires to make repairs, and if he does so in the absence of an express power in the lease, he will be guilty of trespass and may be restrained by injunction, although the non-repair may cause a forfeiture of his own lease—Barker v. Barker, (1829) 3 C. & P. 557; Stocker v. Planet Building-Society, (1797) 27 W.R. (Eng.) 793.

Clause (n):—This clause throws a duty upon the lessee in order that the lessor may, if he chooses, protect his own interest and may be safeguarded against the results of a collusive eviction submitted to by the lessee—Indu Bhusan v. Chowdhury Moazam, 33 C.W.N. 106 (111).

585. Clause (o)—Scope:—This clause deals with the ordinary rights of a lessee in an ordinary lease, and its terms cannot be held to cut down the right to work a mineral expressly conveyed—Satya Niranjan v. Ram Lal, 4 Pat. 244 (P.C.), 29 C.W.N. 725, 86 I.C. 712, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 42. If certain premises are let out as a go-down but the tenant sublets it for residential purpose and the premises are destroyed by fire, the tenant is prima facie liable for damages caused to the premises and the onus is upon him to show that there was no negligence either on his part or on the part of the sub-tenant—Gurupada Haldar v. Haripada Mukherjee, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 263.

This clause means no more than that a tenant is to use the demised premises in a good tenant-like manner, and to effect all repairs which are necessary to be effected in order to prevent the building from falling into ruin or at any rate give the landlord notice of the detection of any serious danger of that kind—Bai Monghibai v. Doongersey, 43 I.C. 273, 19 Bom. L.R. 887. Ordinarily, a tenant can make improvements on his holding, but has no authority to use it for any purpose inconsistent with the purpose for which the land has been given to him—Binda Prasad v. Behari Tewari, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 316, 163 I.C. 186. Where the lease is for residential purpose the tenant may be restrained by an injunction from running a flour mill in the demised property—Behari Lal v. Chandrawati, A.I.R. 1966 All. 541. Storing of cloth in premises let out for selling cloth does not amount to use for a different purpose—Mahmadumar Abdul Rahim v. Firm of Shah Manilal Gokuldas, 9 Guj. L.R. 104.

Where the appellant had got a right from the Government to win and get oil from a well site and he let it to the respondent for tapping oil who sank wells, got no oil but gas came out which he enclosed in pipes and used for his purposes, it was held that the word "oil" did not include gas and there is nothing inconsistent with the terms of this section in the use of the gas which is set free by reason of the sinking of the oil well for the respondent's purposes without doing any damage or injury to the property—U Po v. Burma Oil Co., A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 108 (110), 33 C.W.N. 545, 7 Rang. 157, 56 I.A. 140, 115 I.C. 705.

The "right to enjoy such property" in sec. 105 means the right to enjoy the property in the manner in which that property can be enjoyed. If the subject-matter of the lease is coal land, it can only be enjoyed and occupied by the lessee by working it as indicated in section 108 which regulates fully the rights and liabilities of lessors and lessees in this country—Commissioner of Income Tax v. Kamakshya Narain, 20 Pat. 13 (S.B.), 21 P.L.T. 897, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 633 (647). Where land is leased for the purpose of cultivation and settling tenants thereon, the lessee is only entitled to a reasonable right of user in the soil, but he has no right to dig or quarry stone or to collect and sell surplus stones. The right to collect them can be established only by custom—Kusum Kamini v. Jagadish Chandra, A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 13 relying on Bejoy Singh v. Surendra Narain, 55 I.A. 320, 56 Cal. 1, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 234 and Bhupendranarayan v. Rajeswar Prasad, 58 I.A. 228, 59 Cal. 80, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 162. As to custom referred to above see Tucker v. Linger, 21 Ch.D. 18 affd. in 8 App. Cal. 508. A tenant has a right to take electric connection in the portion let out to him to improve the premises—Sheodayal v. Daluram Agarwala, A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 413.

Where there is an agreement between a Zemindar and tenant that the latter should have a specified area for the purposes of a grove, and the tenant either does not use a definite ascertainable portion for the purpose by neglecting to replant for a considerable period or affirmatively uses a definite ascertainable portion, even a small portion for some other purpose, e.g., building a house, he commits a breach of the contract and is liable to ejectment from the whole—Bansidhar v. Bindeshwari, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 411 (412), 1940 O.W.N. 894, 190 I.C. 620. Here even if the structures erected are temporary, the Zemindar can sue for ejectment—Ibid; see also Roghunath v. Md. Ali Hasan, A.I.R. 1928 All. 117, 106 I.C. 268 and Doraikannu v. Ramaswami, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 32, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 773, (1939) M.W.N. 1163 where injunction was granted to demolish the house and buildings. The demolition of a wall is not necessarily an act of waste—Ahmad v. Muhammad, 1967 Ker. L. T. 841. The landlord can claim damages for cutting fruit-bearing trees or removing earth only at the time of recovering possession—Lakshmi Amma v. Kalliani Amma, I.L.R. (1967) 2 Ker. 168. A landlord cannot claim damages for the removal of fruit-bearing trees; he can claim damages only for timber trees—Abdulla v. Govinda Nair, 1968 Ker. L.T. 563.

The words "belonging to the lessor" have been added to this clause by the amendment of 1929.

Jack trees are both timber and fruit trees, and the lessee cannot cut them—Gangamma v. Bhommakka, 33 Mad. 253 (254). Trees of spontaneous growth on the land belong to the owner, A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 62. Timber includes bamboos—B. L. Mehra v. State, 1957 All. L.J. 917.

Act of waste :—The following are "acts destructive or permanently injurious to the property":—

(a) Felling the timber (see the section); "cutting down, destroying or tapping all trees which are timber either by the general law or by the particular custom of the country, is waste"—Woodfall, 16th Edn., p. 660. See also Mahavaraya Udpa v. Dasa Tantri, A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 179.

(b) Pulling down or damaging buildings (see the section);

(c) Working mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted (see the section); In re Purmandas, 7 Bom. 109; Christian v. Tekaitni, 19 C.W.N. 796;

(d) Converting arable land into woods and conversely meadow into arable land; suffering houses to be uncovered, whereby the rafters or other timber of the houses become rotten; permitting the walls of houses to decay for defaults of plastering; suffering the house to be wasted and then felling down timber to repair the same, etc.—Woodrall's Landlord and Tenant;

(e) Making bricks upon land not specially let for the purpose—Anund v. Bissonath, 17 W.R. 416.

(f) Digging tank on the property demised for agricultural purposes—Tarini v. Debnarayan, 8 B.L.R. App. 69;

(g) Converting land under cultivation into a mango-grove—Lakshman v. Ram Chandra, 10 Mad. 351; Bholoi v. Raja of Bansi, 4 All. 174;

(h) Making excavations of such a character as to cause substantial damage to the property demised, although the lease permits the lessee to make excavations—Girish v. Sirish, 9 C.W.N. 255; Viswanath Iyer v. Kunju Ezhuthassan, I.L.R. (1968) 1 Ker. 245.

Acts not amounting to waste :—

(a) Planting trees on the holding so long as it does not materially affect the character of the holding, even though the patta prohibits the planting of new trees—Krishna Das v. Venkatappa, 9 M.L.J. 146.

(b) Planting cocoanut trees in land cultivated with ragi and paddy by an occupancy tenant paying a fixed money rent—Venkaya v. Ramasami, 22 Mad. 39.

(c) The digging of a well, especially if it is a chaunda well of a temporary nature—Bholoi v. Raja of Bansi, 4 All. 174.

(d) Merely allowing the land to remain uncultivated—Dinabandhu v. Lokanadhasami, 6 Mad. 322.

(e) Agricultural tenant letting part of the demised property to a theatrical company for the purpose of their holding theatrical performances thereon, at a time when no crops are growing on the holding—Yusuf Ali v. Hira, 20 All. 469.

586. Clause (p)—Permanent structures :—This clause prohibits the tenant from erecting any permanent structures on the land, but if he so erects, he is entitled to remove them according to the provisions of clause (h). If they are not so removed they vest in the landlord, Pundarikaksha v. Chanda Singh, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 538.

The prohibition under this clause does not apply when according to the contract of the parties the land is let for the erection of a dwelling house or a shop thereon—Ismail v. Nazarali, 27 Mad. 211 (216). See also Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52; Alterations may be material even though they may not cause any damage to the premises or substantially diminish their value—Manmohan Das v. Bishun Das, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 643.

If a tenant transfers the house built by him with the landlords' permission on agricultural land the transferee acquires right to the materials of the house but not to the site, because his right to occupy the site is personal—Chhaju Singh v. Kanhai, 1881 A.W.N. 144 (F.B.); Amir Begam v. Balak, 1900 A.W.N. 182; Sri Girdhariji v. Chote Lal, 20 All. 248. A structure with walls of bricks and roof of corrugated sheets is a permanent structure—Surya Properties (P) Ltd. v. Bimalendu Nath Sarkar, A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 408. Whether a structure is permanent or not is a question of fact—Surya Properties (P) Ltd. v. Bimalendu, A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 1 (S.B.); Atul Sonatan, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 78.

587. Clause (q)—Lessee's duty to restore possession on expiry of term :—Where Government requisitions a portion of the land leased out the landlord can sue on the termination of the lease for the recovery of the residue—Shankarlal v. Pandharinath, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 385, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 670. The tenant giving up the demised lands to his landlord on the expiry of the term is bound to give him vacant possession—Balaramgiri v. Vasudeva, 22 Bom. 348; Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, (1935) 40 C.W.N. 52. This rule applies not only where the tenant gives up possession on the expiry of the term, but also where the tenant treats the lease as void on account of destruction of the premises by fire—Bruel & Co. v. Haji Siddick, 12 Bom. L.R. 474, 6 I.C. 909. If the tenant does not give vacant possession the tenant is liable in damages; the tenancy is not continued indefinitely—Balaramgiri v. Vasudeb, 22 Bom. 348. On the termination of a lease compensation is payable not according to the terms of the tenancy, but according to normal rent—Ubidal Rahaman v. Darbari Lal, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 509 (510), 146 I.C. 845. But it was held in another case of the same High Court that ordinarily the proper measure of damages is twice the amount of rent payable by the tenant—Sundar Singh v. Ram Saran, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 61 (64), 14 Lah. 137, 142 I.C. 754. Yet in another case it was held that the court has the discretion not to penalise the tenant—Narain v. Dharam, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 275. If the property is in the possession of a sub-lessee, and the lessee does not turn him out, the landlord may maintain a suit for ejectment against the sub-lessee and recover damages from the lessee including the cost of ejecting the sub-lessee—Henderson v. Squire, L.R. 4 Q.B. 170; Abdul Qayum v. Md. Fazal Azim, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 121 (124). If B, a lessee of land with a house under A creates a sublease in favour of C and C, after the destruction of the house by fire constructs a hut with the permission of A, B is entitled to recover possession of the land and the hut from C without paying the value of the hut to C, who, however, is entitled to remove the hut—Munnuswamy v. Muniramiah, A.I.R. 1965 And. Pr. 167. Where the demised premises are in the occupation of a trespasser and the tenant has not been included upon them, the landlord cannot recover damages from the tenant who has relinquished his tenancy after informing the landlord about the trespasser's possession—Sah Sita Ram v. Syed Md. Mehdi, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 139.

If the landlord wrongfully refuses to take possession when asked to do so, the tenant's liability to pay ceases. For the subsequent re-entry of other persons the tenant incurs no liability, though landlord can recover from persons in occupation—Ibid, at pp. 124, 125.

Where after termination of a life tenancy by the tenant's death his representatives continue to pay rent to the landlord, the occupation by the representatives must be deemed to be in the capacity of tenants and the landlord would be entitled to a decree for possession provided that the possession of the defendants as tenants is traced within 12 years—Jumma v. Madhusoodan, A.I.R. 1941 All. 306, 1941 A.L.J. 327.

Where the lease provides for the purchase of the building erected by the lessee on the termination of the lease the building is to be valued according to the cost of reproducing the building after deducting depreciation and cost of repairs. No special value can be demanded for a cinema hall—Ethirajulu v. Ranganatham, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 156, (1941) 2 M.L.J. 711, 1941 M.W.N. 938.

If the tenant had encroached upon any land and made it a part of his tenancy, he is bound, after the determination of tenancy, to give up those lands to his landlord—Indu Bhushan v. Atul Chandra, 42 C.L.J. 276, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1114 (1116), 67 I.C. 630. On the failure of a suit for ejectment based on the relationship of landlord and tenant it may be decreed on the plaintiffs' title—Katamaswamy v. Ramayyu Pantulu, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 755.

The tenant is bound to preserve the boundaries of the lands he holds and not to permit them to be confounded with the boundaries of other land belonging to himself—Attorney-General v. Fullerton, 2 V. & B. 264; Dugappa v. Tirthasami, 6 Mad. 263. If owing to his negligence, the land demised is confounded with other lands, he is bound to compensate his landlord by making over to him a part of the property with which it was mixed up, equal to its annual value—Dugappa v. Tirthasami, 6 Mad. 263; Ismail Khan v. Broughton, 5 C.W.N. 846.

Covenant for Renewal:—The assignee of the leasehold can enforce a covenant for renewal—Nabakishore v. Madan Mohan, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 346; 69 I.C. 600; Secretary of State v. Forbes, 16 C.L.J. 217, 17 I.C. 180. Secretary of State v. Volkart Brothers, infra. The covenant is enforceable also against the lessor's transferee with notice of the lease—Onkar Prasad v. Badri Das, 23 N.L.R. 26, 89 I.C. 273, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 281. Where in a deed of lease there is a clause that the lessee must deliver possession after the expiry of the term but may take resettlement the clause is not one for renewal—Chimanlal Agarwala, A.I.R. 1964 Assam 70.

Where a lease for a certain term confers an option to the lessee for renewal of the lease, but no time is fixed within which such option is to be exercised, and the lessee after the expiry of the term continues in possession, the landlord is bound to give notice to the original lessee for exercising his option of renewal—Hemanta Kumari v. Safatulla, 37 C.W.N. 9. Where the covenant of renewal was applicable to the whole, it did not permit renewal of a portion—Secretary of State v. Volkart Brothers, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 258, 51 Mad. 885, 55 I.A. 423, 111 I.C. 404. Where there is a clause for renewal subject to such fair and equitable enhancement as the lessor shall determine the lease is not void for uncertainty, nor is the court precluded from considering whether the enhancement is fair and equitable—Damodhar Tukaram v. State of Bombay, A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 639. Where a lease for 10 years contains a provision that after the expiry of the period of the lease the lessee is entitled to remain in the suit land on a new Bandobasta only, the tenant is entitled to renewal on the original terms on payment of a fair rent—Ramesh v. Atul, A.I.R. 1959 Assam 22.

If the option in a lease does not state the terms of renewal, the new lease will be for the same period and on the same terms as the original lease in respect of all essential conditions except as to the covenant for renewal—Prodyot Kumar v. Maynuddin, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 724 (727); Shrish Chandra v. Doa Mahammad, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 77, 68 C.L.J. 128, 179 I.C. 813; Secretary of State v. Digambar, 27 C.L.J. 443, 45 I.C. 939. If a lease is given for three years and the lessee is given the right to take new settlement, he is entitled to one renewal for three years; he cannot claim a lease for an unlimited period—Shrish Chandra v. Doa Mahammad, supra, at p. 78. The leaning of Court is always against perpetual renewal, in order to establish that, the intention has to be unequivocally expressed—Ibid.

Premature determination of lease:—Where the term of a tenancy is brought to a premature termination, the lessee is entitled to damages and not to rent for the unexpired term of the lease, and the cause of action is not destroyed by acceptance of surrender—Bejoy v. Howrah Amta Railway, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 524 (527), 32 C.L.J. 177, 72 I.C. 98.

109. If the lessor transfers the property leased, or any part thereof, or any part of his interest therein, the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall possess all the rights, and, if the lessee so elects, be subject to all the liabilities of the lessor as to the property or part transferred so long as he is the owner of it; but the lessor shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities imposed upon him by the lease, unless the lessee elects to treat the transferee as the person liable to him :

Provided that the transferee is not entitled to arrears of rent due before the transfer, and that, if the lessee, not having reason to believe that such transfer has been made, pays rent to the lessor, the lessee shall not be liable to pay such rent over again to the transferee:

The lessor, the transferee and the lessee may determine what proportion of the premium or rent reserved by the lease is payable in respect of the part so transferred, and, in case they disagree, such determination may be made by any Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the property leased.

Principal :—The latter portion of the first para which lays down that the lessor shall not, by reason of transfer of his interest, cease to be subject to the liabilities unless the lessee elects to treat the transferee as his landlord, is an illustration of the equitable principle that a "man cannot assign obligations (i.e., cannot substitute some one else as the performer of his duties), without the consent or the authority of those to whom the duties are owing"—per Innes, J., in Cheru Komen v. Govenden, 6 M.H.C.R. 146 (at p. 151).

588. "Transfer" :—The word 'transfer' includes a lease, i.e., a lessee of the lessor is entitled to all the rights enumerated in this section and can therefore eject a monthly tenant put in by the original lessor—Parbhu Ram v. Tek Chand, 1 Lah. 241, 53 I.C. 865.

Partition is a transfer within the meaning of sec. 5 and the present section, as it is a mixture of surrender and a conveyance—Skattar Singh v. Rawela, A.I.R. 1952 J. & K. 18; Banarasilal v. Shri Bhagwan, A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 167. A partition is transfer within the meaning of sec. 109—Pyarelal v. Garachand, 1964 M.P.L.J. 334. A tenancy created by a joint family can be terminated after a partition of the property of the joint family by the co-parcener to whom the tenanted portion is allotted—Ibid. Notice by the original landlord to the tenant after the former has parted with his rights does not have any legal effect or bind the latter in any way—Gurumurthappa v. Chirkmunisamappa, A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 62. Second lease by the lessor is permissible and the reversionary right vests in the second lessee, who can eject the previous lessee—Bhagat Ram v. Keshab Deo, A.I.R. 1965 Ass. 55.

Effect of transfer :—The purchaser of the rights of the lessor has all the rights of the lessor under the lease unless there is some express stipulation to the contrary—Narayan Das v. Parasram, 4 C.P.L.R. 61. Under the previous law the transferee could not sue the lessee for rent unless the latter had previously attorned to him—Ram Lal v. Chandrabulle, 13 W.R. 228. But under the present law an attornment is no longer necessary even in the Punjab—Doulat Ram v. Haveli Shah, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 49 (50), 41 P.L.R. 346, 182 I.C. 533. Where a widow in possession of lands as widow's estate leases them out permanently she gets absolute right to the reversion on coming into force of the Hindu Succession Act and the reversioner would have no claim to it and cannot challenge the lease on the ground of want of legal necessity—Thakur Ram Janki v. Jago Singh, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 131.

The transferee is entitled to take advantage of the forfeiture clause under section 111 (g)—Vishveshwar v. Mahableshwar, 43 Bom. 28 (37), 47 I.C. 330. See this case fully cited in Note 48 under sec. 6. The transferee of the lessor is entitled to eject the tenants put in by the original lessor, and it is not necessary for the original lessor to inform the tenants that he has transferred the house to the transferee—Parbhu Ram v. Tek Chand, 1 Lah. 241, 53 I.C. 865.

The words "all the rights of the lessor.....as to the property" clearly include rights of the lessor under covenants affecting the property, that is,—to use the English expression—under covenants "which run with the land" and that no other rights pass. A purely personal right against the original lessee who has parted with the land is not a right of the lessor as to the property—Abdul v. Phiroz, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 88 (90, 91), 60 Bom. 394, 161 I.C. 57.

The assignee is also subject to all the liabilities of the lessor. Thus, a covenant to renew a lease is a covenant which runs with the land, and which according to this section creates a liability enforceable against the lessor's transferee—Ramasami v. Chinnan, 24 Mad. 449. The expression "if the lessee so elects, be subject to all the liabilities" is taken to mean the burden of all the covenants running with the land, such as covenant for quiet enjoyment. Where there is a breach of such a covenant and the lessee treats the transferee of the lessor as liable, he cannot turn round and charge the lessor in respect of the covenant as he having once made the election it is final—Isuara v. Ramappa, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 658 (662), 152 I.C. 201. Open plots belonging to the Municipality were let out to A, who erected structures and let out the structures to tenants. The Municipality filed a suit for ejectment against A and a consent decree was passed providing inter alia that A was to give up possession of the plots with structures. The tenants resisted execution and thereafter filed a suit under Order 21, r. 103 contending that they had become tenants of the Municipality by reason of sec. 109, T.P. Act and therefore the decree for eviction against A could not be executed against them. Held: S. 109 did not apply as on the date of the so called transfer A had no interest in the property sold. Held further that the effect of the lease terminating was not a transfer from A to the Municipality—Ram Bhagwan Das v. Bombay Corporation, A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 364. A promise by the lessee to pay rent to the alienee from the landlord and his continued occupation with notice of the alienation amounts to attornment—Munavar Basha v. Narayanan, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 200.

589. Para 2 :—The transferee is not entitled to arrears of rent accrued due before the transfer; nor is he entitled to rents accruing due after the transfer, if the lessee had, without notice of the transfer, already paid such rent to the original lessor. Although the title of the assignee of the lease is complete upon execution and registration of the deed of assignment and is not postponed till notice has been given to the tenant, still the tenant is not bound to pay rent to him until he gets notice of the assignment. The tenant is thus able to escape the liability to the assignee if he alleges and establishes that he has paid rent to the assignor in good faith before he had notice of the assignment—Peary Lal v. Madhoji, 17 C.L.J. 372, 19 I.C. 865. But the lessee becomes liable to the assignee as soon as he has notice of the assignment—Raisuddin v. Khodu, 12 C.P.L.R. 479. Therefore, if the tenant pays rent to the assignor after he receives notice of the transfer, the payment is of no avail—Peary Lal v. Madhoji, 17 C.L.J. 372, 19 I.C. 865. So also, if the lessee surrenders his holding on the expiry of the term to the original lessor after the transfer and there is nothing to show that he had no notice of the assignment, the surrender is not valid and binding on the assignee who can claim rent from the lessee on the ground of his holding over after the expiry of the lease—Rama Chandra v. Sheik Hussain, 3 Bom. L.R. 679.

The mere fact that the notice of the transfer of the leased property was not given by the assignee to the tenant shall not lead the Court to assume that the tenant did not become the tenant of the assignee, and that the assignee was not entitled to recover any rent from the tenant. This section provides no penalty for want of notice except the loss of rent already paid by the lessee to the original lessor. That is, if the tenant does not receive any notice of the transfer and therefore pays rent to the original lessor, the assignee of the lessor cannot recover the rent from the tenant twice over—Bhola Nath v. Supper, 72 I.C. 86, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 389.

Where the tenant receives notice of the assignment, he is bound by it, and it is immaterial whether the notice is received from the assignor or from the assignee. The real question which the Court has to consider is whether the payment alleged to have been made by the tenant was made bona fide. If he has made the payment with notice, actual or constructive, of the assignment, he cannot be deemed to have paid in good faith and he cannot escape liability merely by proof that the notice received was from the assignee and not from the assignor—Peary Lal v. Madhoji, 17 C.L.J. 372, 19 I.C. 865 (868). But payment of rent before it is due is not a fulfilment of the obligation to pay rent, but it is in fact an advance to the landlord with an agreement that on the day when the rent becomes due, such advance shall be treated as a fulfilment of the obligation to pay the rent—De Nicholas v. Saunders, L.R. 5 C.P. 569 (594).

589A. Para 3 :—Where it is found that the lessor, his transferee and the lessee have agreed as to the amount of rent payable to the transferee, the lessor or the transferee is entitled to sue for the rent payable to him without impleading the other—Bhudeb v. Bhikshakar A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 120 (126), 196 I.C. 837.

590. Transfer of portion of tenure :—A sale of a share in a tenure which has been let to a tenant in its entirety, does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent; but if the purchaser of the share desires to have such a severance or apportionment, he is entitled to enforce it by taking proper steps for that purpose.

In such a case, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect, and then if an apportionment of the rent cannot be made by amicable arrangement between all the parties concerned, the purchaser may bring a suit against the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned, making all the other co-sharers parties to the suit—Ishwar Chandra v. Ramkrishna, 5 Cal. 902. And the apportionment may take place in respect of the arrears of rent alleged due as well as the future rent—Rajnarain v. Ekadasi, 27 Cal. 479. Where the tenant knows that in spite of the assignment, the assignor is holding himself out as his landlord in all proceedings in court to which the tenant is a party, the tenant is not liable to pay rent to the assignee—Pulin Behary v. Miss Lila Dey, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 627. If on the death of the landlord the tenant makes an attornment in favour of a person having no title to the reversion the attornment is not effective as against a third person claiming title to the reversion unless the attornment is followed by payment of rent and the person in whose favour such attornment has been made cannot be regarded as in possession through the tenant—V. Satyanarayanaraju v. J. Hanumayamma, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 174.

When a lessor sells a portion of his property, the rule of sec. 37 will be applied, and the tenants will be bound to pay to each of the owners his proportionate share of the rent. They are not bound to perform the various obligations imposed on them as lessees, wholly in favour of either the lessor or his transferee, if such obligation is capable of severance and such performance will not be to their prejudice. They are also bound, on the determination of the tenancy to put the lessor in possession of only so much of the property as he has not transferred. The rent payable and the property to be surrendered, unless all the parties agree, can only be ascertained in a suit to which all the lessors and the lessees are parties—Sri Raja Simhadri v. Prattipati Ramayya, 29 Mad. 29 (36).

Under this section it is not competent to an assignee of a part of the demised premises to eject the tenant from that portion only during the period of tenancy—Kannyan Baduvan v. Alikutti, 42 Mad. 603 (612) (F.B.), 51 I.C. 286.

110. Where the time limited by a lease of immoveable property is expressed as commencing from a particular day, in computing that time such day shall be excluded. Where no day of commencement is named, the time so limited begins from the making of the lease.

Where the time so limited is a year or a number of years, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the lease shall last during the whole anniversary of the day from which such time commences.

Where the time so limited is expressed to be terminable before its expiration, and the lease omits to mention at whose option it is so terminable, the lessee, and not the lessor, shall have such option.

591. Application of section :—The first sentence of this section may be compared with section 12 (1) of the Limitation Act which lays down that "in computing the period of limitation, the day from which such period is to be computed shall be excluded." Compare also sec. 9 (a) of the General Clauses Act which enacts that wherever the word 'from' is used, the first in a series of days or any other period of time should be excluded.

This section is not confined to written leases only but applies to verbal leases also for the word "expressed" can include both kinds of leases—Kedar v. Ramendra, A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 460, 50 C.W.N. 306. But see Calcutta Landing & Shipping Co. v. Victor Oil Co., A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 84, 48 C.W.N. 76, where Mukherjea J., has held that this section does not apply to verbal leases, but is confined to written leases only. The section has however no application to an oral lease by which no time is limited—Kedar v. Ramendra, supra. This section is not applicable to a monthly tenancy—Mir Abdul Hanan v. Anil Chandra, I.L.R. (1961) Cuttuck, 122; Ramdhari Sarma v. Jogendra Kumar Biswas, A.I.R. 1959 Assam, 174.

The first para of this section contemplates that a time or period should be limited by the lease and the period must be expressed to begin from a particular date. When both these conditions are fulfilled, the rule of interpretation laid down there applies and in computing the period that day is to be excluded—Calcutta Landing & Shipping Co. v. Victor Oil Co., supra. See also Sunder Singh v. Arjun Singh, A.I.R. 1949 Aj. 38.

A tenancy for a term of 4 years which is said to commence from the 1st June 1921 must be deemed to have commenced on the 2nd June 1921 and ended on the midnight of the 1st June 1925. Thereafter, if the tenant held over as a monthly tenant, a notice given by the tenant on 1st February 1928 intending to vacate on the midnight of the 1st March 1928 was a valid notice—Benoy Krishna v. Salsiccioni, 60 Cal. 389 (P.C.), 37 C.W.N. 1 (3), A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 279, 141 I.C. 514. See also Ganeshi Lal v. Snehalata, A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 68, 51 C.W.N. 136. The decision of the Assam High Court as to the validity of a notice to quit in Dharani Bai v. Sadhu Charan, A.I.R. 1956 Assam 20 appears to be contrary to law. There the tenant was inducted by a registered lease dated 12.9.27 for three years. After the expiry of the lease the tenant continued in possession on payment of rent. The tenant was asked to quit with the end of, 13.9.50. The notice to quit was held to be valid. But according to the principle laid down in Benoy Krishna v. Salsiccioni, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 279, the tenancy was from the 13th of a month to 12th of the next month. The notice to quit was evidently bad. An agricultural lease settling the lessee as permanent raiyat became operative on the date it was made—Jangal v. Mukund, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 446. A monthly tenancy commencing from the 1st December 1924 must be deemed to commence on the 2nd December and ended on the midnight of the 1st January 1925, but if the parties stipulate that on the expiry of the monthly tenancy, the lease shall continue according to calendar months, it must be taken that after 1st January 1925, the lease shall continue for January (i.e., 1st to 31st January), February (i.e., 1st to 28th February), and so on; and the notice must be given accordingly. Therefore, a notice to quit given on 15th September must call upon the tenant to vacate on the midnight of the 30th September and not on the 1st October—Gnanaprakasam v. Vaz, 60 M.L.J. 293, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 352 (353).

The rule in this section applies not only in computing the time for the duration of a lease but also in computing the time from which a notice to quit commences; so that the day on which the notice is given is excluded from calculation. Thus, where the landlord served a notice on the tenant on the 16th of a month, requiring him to quit the land on the 30th of the same month, held that the day on which the notice was served (i.e., the 16th) was to be excluded, and the tenant had therefore only 14 days' notice, which was invalid—Subadini v. Durga Charan, 28 Cal. 118.

Where there is no express stipulation for the commencement of a lease, the parties must be taken to have intended that the lease would take effect from the date of the execution of the instrument—Kailas Chandra v. Bijoy, 23 C.W.N. 190, 50 I.C. 177, even if the lessee holds over after expiry of the lease and the lessor accepts rent for the period—Amar Singh v. Hoshier Singh, A.I.R. 1952 All. 141. Unless it could be definitely shown that the tenancy was to commence at a particular date different from the date of the document by which it was created, it must be held ordinarily that the year of the tenancy commences from the date of the document. Thus, if the document of lease is dated 5th Aswin 1307 B. S., and there is nothing to show that the parties contemplated that the year of the tenancy would commence from any other date, it must be held that the tenancy commenced from 5th Aswin 1907 B. S.—Dinanath v. Janaki Nath, 55 Cal. 435, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 392 (396), 110 I.C. 368.

The agreement referred to in the 2nd para must be an express agreement. If a lease for a term of 4 years is said to commence on the 1st day of June 1921, the term will be calculated from the 2nd June 1921 and will expire on the midnight of the 1st June 1925. The fact that the rent is payable monthly and that each month's rent is payable on the 7th of the next month is merely an agreement providing for the payment of the rent; it does not amount to an inconsistency between the provision with regard to the payment of rent and the provision with regard to the length of the term, and does not lead to an inference of an "agreement to the contrary," excluding the operation of this section, so as to treat the lease as commencing on the 1st day of June 1921 and ending on the 31st May 1925—Binoy Krishna v. Salsicconi, supra; Rahmatulla v. Md. Husain, A.I.R. 1940 All. 444, 1940 A.L.J. 502, 191 I.C. 223.

If a kabuliyat for a term of years commencing from the 1st day of a certain year, expressly stipulates that the lease is to terminate with the end of the last year of the term, then there is "an express agreement to the contrary" within the meaning of para 2. Such a lease shall not last during the whole of the anniversary day from which the lease commenced—Deb Das v. Abdul Gani, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 138.

For other cases see Note 557A, ante.

Para 3 :—The third para lays down a rule of construction to be applied in case of doubt or ambiguity. If the term of the lease is explicit and clear, as for instance, where the lease is expressly made terminable at the option of the lessor, it will be so terminable, and no other person will have that option. It is only where the language of the lease is doubtful that it is to be deemed as terminable at the option of the grantee.

III. A lease of immoveable property
Determination of lease. determines—

(a) by efflux of the time limited thereby :

(b) where such time is limited conditionally on the happening of some event—by the happening of such event :

(c) where the interest of the lessor in the property terminates on, or his power to dispose of the same extends only to, the happening of any event—by the happening of such event :

(d) in case the interests of the lessee and the lessor in the whole of the property become vested at the same time in one person in the same right :

(e) by express surrender ; that is to say, in case the lessee yields up his interest under the lease to the lessor, by mutual agreement between them ;

(f) by implied surrender :

(g) by forfeiture ; that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter * * * ; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself ; or (3) the lessee is adjudicated an insolvent and the lease provides that the lessor may re-enter on the happening of such event ; and in any of these case the lessor or his transferee gives notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease :

(h) on the expiration of a notice to determine the lease, or to quit, or of intention to quit, the property leased, duly given by one party to the other.

Illustration to Clause (f).

A lessee accepts from his lessor a new lease of the property leased, to take effect during the continuance of the existing lease. This is an implied surrender of the former lease and such lease determines thereupon.

Amendment :—Clause (g) has been amended by sec. 57 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929). See Notes 597, 599A and 600 below.

Application :—The principles of this section will apply to the Punjab, although the Act does not propri vigore apply to that province—Chiragh Din v. Mahomed Usman Khan, 70 I.C. 349 (Lah.), and in Pepsu—Vasdev v. Custodian General, A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 26. This section and sec. 116 do not apply to the North Western Frontier Province—Ishar Das v. Qazi Md., A.I.R. 1945 Pesh. 16.

Where the lease was created long before 1929 the incidents of the tenancy could not be governed by the amended sec. 111. In such a case all that is necessary to constitute forfeiture is disclaimer by the tenant and some act by the lessor indicating his intention to determine the lease—Krishna Prasad v. Adyanath, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 77, 22 Pat. 513. A mere non-payment of rent does not of itself determine the tenancy—Kamala v. Mt. Nashin, A.I.R. 1951 H.P. 65.

The provision relating to notice under this section does not apply to a case of ejectment under the Rent Control Order—Md. Gous v. Karimunnissa, A.I.R. 1951 Hyd. 111, see also Baijnath v. Ram Prasad, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 529, 30 Pat. 366; Sunkavally v. Singaraju, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 60, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 339. Karsandas v. Karasonji, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 113.

Scope :—This section will have no application to a suit by the successor in title of the original grantor of a service tenure to eject the tenant where the relation of landlord and tenant was in existence long prior to the passing of the Act and where there was no lease entered into at any subsequent time which would bring the matter within the provisions of one or other of the various sub-sections of this section. In such a case the tenancy ipso facto comes to an end at the time when the service failed to be rendered—Prokash v. Rajendra, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 221 (223), 36 C.W.N. 823, 58 Cal. 1359, 135 I.C. 296.

Though the effect of granting a registered lease would be to determine the unregistered "lease" unexpired at such date, it does not cause it to disappear as though it had never been, rendering acts under it in the past and before the grant of the registered lease unlawful, as though done by a trespasser—Mulji Sicca & Co. v. Nur Mohammad, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 377 (384).

592. Agricultural leases :—Although agricultural leases have been excluded from the purview of this Act by the express prohibition contained in sec. 117, and therefore section 111 cannot apply in terms to such leases, still the principles of equity as embodied in this section will be applied to agricultural leases. Therefore, where a mulgeni lease provided for previous notice to the lessor in case of an intended sale or mortgage of the leasehold interest by the lessee and for forfeiture of lease and re-entry on breach of the covenant, held that the lease would be forfeited and the lessor would be entitled to possession on breach of the covenant, on the application of the principle embodied in clause (g) of this section—Krishna Shetti v. Gilbert Pinto, 42 Mad. 654. See also Souza v. Louis, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 119, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 362. Similarly, an agricultural tenant will forfeit his tenancy under clause (g) by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself—Kemalooti v. Muhamed, 41 Mad. 629 (630).

593. Clause (a)—Expiry of term :—Under this clause, a lease comes to an end upon the expiry of the term for which it was granted. But if there is a covenant for renewal, the lessee may claim enforcement of such covenant. But in order to be enforceable, such covenant must be definite as to the terms upon which the renewal is to be granted. Where a lease for a term of nine years provided that at the expiry of the term the tenant might apply for re-settlement, in which case the landlord would grant him a re-settlement without any bonus, held that the above covenant did not specify any terms as to the amount of rent to be paid by the tenant, and was too vague to be given effect to, and the landlord was entitled to eject the tenant at the end of the term—Surendra v. Dinabandhu, 13 C.W.N. 595, 4 I.C. 535. A covenant for renewal may direct the lessee to exercise his option within a certain time and may provide for the giving of a notice, in which case it would be the duty of the lessee to give notice and obtain renewal within that time. But where the covenant for renewal was in the following terms: "After the expiration of the said term, if the lessee shall so desire, the executant shall have no objection whatever to renew the lease for a further term of twenty years on the terms and in consideration of payment of the rent mentioned in the lease" and there was nothing in the lease to indicate that notice of the intention to renew was to be given by the lessee before its expiration, it was held that the lessee had not forfeited his right to have the lease renewed by reason of having allowed some months to elapse after the expiration of the original term before he gave notice to the lessor of his intention to take advantage of the covenant for renewal—Jaggilal v. Cooper, 27 All. 696. Where the right to renewal is subject to certain conditions precedent, the right does not accrue unless those conditions are fulfilled—State of Bihar v. Indian Copper Corporation Ltd., I.L.R. 38 Pat. 1160. Option to renew on the expiry of the lease does not create any present interest for the extended term—Ibid.

CL (a) has to be read with sec. 116. Where before the determination of the lease by efflux of time the lessee applies to the custodian for confirmation of the lease under sec. 5A, East Punjab Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act, 1947 and the Custodian impliedly assents to his continuing in possession, the lessee does not become a trespasser—Thakar Das v. Custodian, A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 175.

Unlike a lease terminable under the Act by efflux of time, an agricultural lease does not determine of itself on the expiry of the lease, but it has to be terminated by a decree of Court under sec. 89, Bengal Tenancy Act—Sakhisona v. Gourhari, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 567.

Since a lease does not terminate until the expiry of the term, a suit for ejectment and possession before the expiry of the period is premature; but the suit need not necessarily be dismissed, for although it is not maintainable so far as it relates to the claim for immediate possession, the landlord is entitled to a declaration of his right—Ghulam Hussain v. Mahomed Hussain, 6 A.L.J. 177, following Sita Ram v. Ram Lal, 18 All. 440. The Madras High Court holds that such a suit is not maintainable and must be dismissed, even though the lease expires during the pendency of the suit. The reason is that the rights of the parties must be determined as on the date of the action brought—Ramanandan v. Pulikutti, 21 Mad. 288.

No notice to quit is necessary when the action for ejectment is brought after the lease has expired and the tenancy has come to an end by efflux of time. When it is not shown that the lessors accepted rent after the termination of the lease, the lessees are tenants by sufferance and being no better than trespassers are liable to ejectment without notice—Asa Ram v. Kishun Chand, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 386 (388), 120 I.C. 166; Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh, 40 C.W.N. 52; Md. Fazihzzaman v. Anwar Husain, A.I.R. 1932 All. 314, (1932) A.L.J. 126, 139 I.C. 828; Bhagabat Patnaik v. Madhusudan Panda, A.I.R. 1965 Orissa 11. In such a case a suit by the lessor's lessee is maintainable when the lessor is impleaded as a defendant—Bihsen Sarup v. Abdul Samad, A.I.R. 1931 All. 649 (651), (1931) A.L.J. 666.

593A. Clause (b) :—If the term of the lease is limited conditionally on the happening of some event, the lease is determined by the happening of such event. Thus, where the term is limited for thirty years if the lessee shall so long live, the lease is terminable at the end of thirty years or upon the death of the lessee, which event may first happen. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 16th Ed., p. 313; Chauthmal v. Sardarmal, A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 24.

For the distinction between a forfeiture under cl. (b) and that under cl. (g) see In re Srinath Zamindary, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 207, where it has been pointed out that in cl. (b) the term is fixed conditionally and depends upon the happening of a future event. In cl. (g) on the other hand the term is brought to an end by a defeasance clause. A lease for 99 years granted to a company provided inter alia that in case the company goes into liquidation voluntarily or otherwise, it will cease to be operative. The company went into liquidation: Held that cl. (b) did not apply—ibid. Where a lease for 40 years contained a clause that if the lessee carried on any business other than manufacture of salt the lease would stand cancelled; Held that cl. (b) did not apply—Krishna Chandra v. National Chemical etc., A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 35. Where an employee of the landlord occupying a building is liable to be evicted on his ceasing to be in employment, the tenancy is governed by sec. 111 (b), T. P. Act and no notice under sec. 106, T. P. Act is necessary for terminating the tenancy—Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. v. Gouribala Devi, I.L.R. 47 Pat. 359.

593B. Clause (c) :—If the lessor holds the property for his own life or for the life of another, the lease would terminate on the death of himself or that other person. A lease granted by a Hindu widow would fall under this clause. Such a lease is, however, voidable and not void on the grantor's death—Madhu Sudan v. Rooke, 25 Cal. 1 (8) 24 I.A. 164; Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi, 34 Cal. 329 (333), 34 I.A. 87.

This clause does not mean that if in the exercise of his power of due management the mortgagee has entered into an agreement of tenancy, on the mere redemption of the mortgage the tenancy would automatically lapse—Hardie v. Wahid, A.I.R. 1954 All. 16. A lease from year to year granted by the manager of a temple in course of management does not come to an end with the expiry of the office of the manager or his successors—Atyam Veerraju v. Pechetti Venkanna, A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 629.

594. Clause (d)—Merger :—Under this clause a merger takes place when the tenant acquires the immediate reversion, and the greater estate and the less coincide in the same person without any intermediate estate—Suraj Chandra v. Behari Lal, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 551, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 692 (695), 43 C.W.N. 1126. Where a lessee has purchased the equity of redemption belonging to the lessor, the existence of a mortgage on the superior right, even if it cannot be held to be an intermediate estate which would prevent merger, would certainly constitute a criterion to determine the lessee's intention. In the absence of evidence to the contrary the lessee cannot have intended a coalescence of the two rights which is manifestly to his prejudice—Ibid at p. 696. This clause is an embodiment of the maxim "nemo potest esse tenens et dominus", i.e., nobody can be both landlord and tenant at the same time (in respect of the same property). Thus, if a patnidar purchases the Zemindari rights in the mahal, his rights as patnidar would be merged—Prosonno v. Jagut Chunder, 3 C.L.R. 159. The principle of merger enunciated in this clause equally applies where the merger takes place by virtue of transfers by operation of law. Thus, a patni interest determines when the same is purchased by the Zemindar at an execution sale—Promotho Nath v. Kali Prosonno, 28 Cal. 744, but see Bijoy v. Tarini, 39 C.W.N. 694 where it was held that if a tenure created before the Act is acquired by the holder of the superior interest after the Act, the clause (d) being excluded by sec. 2 (c) would not apply and there will be no merger of the tenure in the superior interest by operation of law if the holder keeps the two separate. The same view has been taken by Nasim Ali and Remfry, J.J. in the recent case of Kumar Chandra v. Sarat Chandra, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 128 (129).

For constituting merger within this clause the interest of the lessor and the lessee in the entire property should become vested in the same person at the same time in the same right. Thus where the acquisition of the dar-patni interest by the patnidar did not have the effect of extinguishing the dar-patni interest, there was no merger in the eye of law—Maya Debi v. Rajlakshmi, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 1. Where the lessor purchases the lessee's interest, the lease no doubt is extinguished, for the same person cannot at the same time be both a landlord and a tenant. But where one of several lessees purchases only a part of the lessor's interest, there is no extinction of the lease—Badri Narain v. Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 186, 1951 S.C.J. 252, 30 Pat. 664. As an instance of merger, see Ram Narain v. G. G. in Council, A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 263, 13 B.R. 34.

This clause cannot apply to a lease granted prior to the passing of this Act, by virtue of sec. 2 (c). Therefore, where a mokarari lease was granted to a person prior to this Act, and he subsequently acquired a putni lease, this clause did not apply and there was no merger of the interests—Hirendranath v. Hari Mohan, 18 C.W.N. 860 (865), 22 I.C. 966; Dulhin Lachimbati v. Bodhnath Tewari, 48 I.A. 485 (P.C.), 26 C.W.N. 565, 3 P.L.T. 383, 15 L.W. 343, 66 I.C. 551, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 94. Similarly, where a patni interest was created prior to the passing of the T P. Act, no merger could take place by reason of the patni interest coming into the same hands as the Zemindary interest—Jibanti Nath v. Gokool Chunder, 19 Cal. 760.

So also, in cases not governed by the provisions of this Act, the union of a superior and a subordinate interest does not necessarily merge the subordinate in the superior interest. The question in such cases is one of intention, and the conduct of the party concerned may show that he did not intend to keep the two interests alive as mutually distinct rights—Ram Krishen v. Haripada, 23 C.W.N. 830, 51 I.C. 389, 29 C.L.J. 427. On the other hand, if the two interests (e.g., mokarari and patni leases) held by a joint family in the same land were in the names of different members, that would be a material circumstance in showing that the intention was to keep the interests distinct—Dulhin Lachimbai v. Bodh Nath, 48 I.A. 485 (P.C.), 26 C.W.N. 565, 3 P.L.T. 383. Where a mokarari tenure had all along been treated as a distinct sub-tenure, there was no merger by acquisition of a patni tenure and the mokarari tenure by the same person—Hirendra v. Hari Mohan, 18 C.W.N. 860 (864), 22 I.C. 966.

The principle of merger implies the union of two unequal interests at the same time and in the same right; that is, in order that there may be merger, it is essential that there should be a greater and a less estate—Ulfat Hossain v. Gayani Das, 36 Cal. 802; Surja Narayan v. Nanda Lal, 33 Cal. 1212; Hirendra v. Hari Mohan, 18 C.W.N. 860 (862), 22 I.C. 966. Thus, where the proprietor purchases the inferior right of his lessee, the transaction comes directly within the four corners of this clause, and the inferior interest merges in that of the superior interest—Hriday Narain v. Kali Charan, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 273, 107 I.C. 819. But, if the lessee of a holding takes a usufructuary mortgage of the holding from his landlord, the lease is not merged in the mortgage, because the two interests are co-ordinate, and not inconsistent or incompatible—Lord Dynevor v. Tenant, 13 App. Cas. 279; Kashi v. Durga, 7 N.L.R. 154, 12 I.C. 734; Motilal v. Gopikrishna, 1961 M.P.L.J. 66; Lachman Das v. Heera Lal, A.I.R. 1966 All. 323; Roshanlal v. Baboo Lal, A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 120. But see Sardarilal v. Ramlal, A.I.R. 1962 Punj; 48 where it has been held that if a house is mortgaged to the tenant with right of occupation the tenancy is determined by merger in the mortgage. In such a case, the tenant would not lose his possession as tenant, after his possession as mortgagee has ceased. The tenant's rights would only be in abeyance and the rent suspended during the term of the mortgage, but as soon as the landlord redeems the mortgage, the parties would revert to their former status and the landlord would not be able to get possession except by ejecting the tenant in due course of law—Kalu v. Divram, 24 All. 487; Kashi v. Durga, 7 N.L.R. 154, 12 I.C. 734. So also, if a person who held a malguzari tenure directly under the 16 annas Zemindar, afterwards took a mokarari lease from patnidar under 8 annas maliks, the malguzari interest did not merge in the mokarari—Amattoo v. Sheikh Mukshad Ali, 19 C.W.N. 435, 28 I.C. 314.

Another requisite of merger is that the entire interest of the lessee and the entire interest of the lessor must vest in the same person—Monmatha v. Mohendra, 65 I.C. 469, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 284 (285). Lala Nathuni Prosad v. Anwar Karim, 53 I.C. 16 (Pat.). See also 19 C.W.N.

435 cited above. If a lessee of a portion of the property acquires a fractional share of the proprietary interest in the property, there is no merger of his tenancy right in his proprietary right so as to extinguish his lease—Faqir Bakhsh v. Murli Dhar, 6 Luck. 197 (P.C.), 35 C.W.N. 502 (505), A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 63, 131 I.C. 334. Where a co-proprietor, who had merely one-anna share in the property, purchased for himself the interests of the lessees of the whole property, there could be no merger—Parmeshwar v. Sureba, 6 P.L.T. 805, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 530, 88 I.C. 495. A sale of the demised property to the tenant terminates the lease even though there is a condition for repurchase and the possession of the tenant after reconveyance of the property in the absence of a fresh tenancy is wrongful—Reoti Saran v. Harzu Lal, A.I.R. 1964 All. 542.

595. Clause (e)—Surrender:—This clause applies only to leases which can be surrendered; where a lease is entered into for a definite term, and there is a covenant in it expressly forbidding surrender by the tenant before the expiry of the term, this clause has no application—Jotindra Mohan v. Emam Ali, 9 C.L.J. 632.

In cases of surrender, as indeed in every other transaction, one has to look to the substance of the transaction and not merely to what it might have been called by the parties—Kashiprasad v. Bedprasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 113, 1939 N.L.J. 216, 189 I.C. 111. A formal deed of reconveyance is not necessary to effect a valid surrender—Imambandi v. Kamaleswari, 14 Cal. 109 (119) (P.C.). Nor is any particular form of words essential to make a good surrender. The question is one of intention. Thus, when the lessee executed a razinama in the following terms: "Up to the present time I have been cultivating the land, but the land belongs to the inamdar. I have no title to it, and the inamdar can give it for cultivation to any one he pleases," it was held that a valid surrender was made—Bhutia v. Ambo, 13 Bom. 294. But mere non-payment of rent for several years does not amount to surrender, in the absence of an intention to yield up—Obhoya v. Kailash, 14 Cal. 751; Prem Sukh v. Bhupia, 2 All. 517 (F.B.). It is no doubt true that the tenant of a house in urban areas who abandoned a site leaves it to revert to the Zemindar, but there must be proof of intention to abandon. The mere fact that a house falls into disrepair and is not rebuilt does not necessarily prove that the tenant means to abandon the site or lead to the result that the Zemindar is entitled to enter upon the land—Misri Lal v. Durga Narain, A.I.R. 1940 All. 317, 189 I.C. 623. Where the original lease is registered the surrender of a portion of the tenancy with an abatement of rent can be effected only by a registered instrument—B. Ahmed Maracair v. Mathuwallappa, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 28.

Surrender consists in the yielding up of the term by the lessee to the lessor accompanied by delivery of possession and the acceptance of the same by the lessor. Where the Government takes possession of the property under a requisition order, it takes the possession from both the lessor and the lessee. It cannot, therefore, operate as a surrender so as to terminate the tenancy—Tarabai v. Padamchand, A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 89, 51 Bom.L.R. 791. In a surrender all parties must agree—Pusaram v. Deorao, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 188, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 991; Sudhir Kumar Bose v. Phanindra Kumar Sanyal, 62 C.W.N. 176.

A relinquishment by a tenant without surrender of possession is ineffectual. So a relinquishment in writing without surrender of possession on the part of the tenant does not constitute a sufficient right in the landlord to recover possession by means of a suit in ejectment—Amar Nath v. Har Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 79, 7 Luck. 425. There is no relinquishment when the lessee says that 'he has kept leased premises vacant'—State of Mysore v. Ramoo, B. R., (1967) 2 Mys. L. J. 625.

There can be no valid surrender unless the surrender takes place by mutual agreement between the lessor and the lessee. Therefore, the lessee cannot make 'a valid surrender by merely giving notice to his landlord that he is going to relinquish the land, and the mere fact that the landlord silently receives the notice, which the lessee has no legal right to give, cannot be regarded as an assent to the relinquishment—Judoonath v. Scheone, Kilburn & Co., 9 Cal. 671. If the lessor has mortgaged the land as well as the right to recover the rent, the lessee cannot make a surrender of his lease in favour of the lessor, because it was not competent to the lessor to accept the surrender without the concurrence of the mortgagee. The right to agree to the surrender of the lease did not remain in the lessor-mortgagor but passed to the mortgagee, and without the latter's consent the surrender was not valid. Consequently, the lessee remained liable to pay rent to the mortgagee—Havu v. Ganapati, 32 Bom.L.R. 689, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 329 (330). Where the lease is in favour of joint lessees surrender must be made by all the lessees—Gopaldoss Dwarkadoss Family Trust Estate v. Michalswami Pillai, I.L.R. (1964) 1 Mad. 443.

596. Clause (f)—Implied surrender :—An implied surrender takes place either by the creation of new relationship between the lessor and the lessee, such as the acceptance of a new lease, or in other ways based on consent of the parties, or by relinquishment of possession by the lessee and taking over possession by the lessor which would lead to the inference of an implied surrender of the lease—Amar Krishna v. Nazir Hasan, 14 Luck. 723, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 257, 1939 O.W.N. 825; Cengalvaraya Chettiar v. Nataraja Chettiar, A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 19. If the lessee takes a usufructuary mortgage, terms of which are incompatible with the terms of the lease there is an implied surrender of the lease—Goda-sankara v. Tharappa, A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 293. If a lessee accepts from his lessor a new lease of the property leased, in substitution of the existing lease, it operates as a surrender of the original lease. See Illustration; also, Crowley v. Vitty, L.R. 7 Exch. 319; Upendra v. Meghnath, 18 Pat. 370, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 598, 183 I.C. 56. See also Md. Ibrahim v. Bani Madhab, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 196; Faquira v. Jiwan Singh, A.I.R. 1947 All. 240; Velu v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 584. But a mere alteration of the terms of the tenancy, namely the rent reserved under the lease, is not equivalent to an implied surrender of the lease—Jamini Mohan v. Debendra, 71 I.C. 976, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 355. Surrender of existing lease cannot be inferred from a mere increase or reduction of rent. A surrender does not follow from a mere agreement made during the tenancy for the reduction or increase of rent, unless there is a special reason to infer a new demise—Gappalal v. Shiraji, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1291. It is not necessary that in order to operate as a surrender, the new lease should be of the same duration as the existing lease. If a lessee for twenty years takes a new lease for ten years, the old lease is deemed to be surrendered. But if a lessee for years accepts a new lease of a part of the lands, it is surrender for that part only and not for the whole—Venkayya v. Venkata Subbarao, A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 619.

To constitute an implied surrender it is necessary that the new lease should be a valid one. Where the new lease is void or voidable or does not pass an interest according to the contract, the acceptance of it does not operate as a surrender of the original lease—Jamini Mohan v. Debendra, supra. See also, Munnuswamy v. Muniramaiah, A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 167. A direction given by the tenant to his sub-tenant to attorn to the landlord amounts to an implied surrender of the tenancy—Naratmal v. Mohonlal, A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 89.

The subsequent grant of a mining lease to a lessee who held a prior lease for coffee cultivation over the same area does not necessarily imply a surrender of the prior lease. It is only in cases where there is some incompatibility between the enjoyment under the new lease and the enjoyment under the prior lease that the acceptance of the second lease will involve a surrender of the first. Even where the leases are of the same kind and they are overlapping, and the terms of the second are somewhat inconsistent with the terms of the first, all that can be implied is a cancellation of the first, only for a period which is overlapped by the second—Manavendan Tirumalpad v. Parry & Co., 48 Mad. 815, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1277 (1278), 49 M.L.J. 390, 90 I.C. 729.

Where a possessory mortgage is executed in favour of a lessee, the lessee's interest gets merged in the mortgage right and there is an implied surrender of the lease—Meenakshi v. Kizhakka Valathi Narayan, (1956) 2 Mad. L.J. 235. But see Lachman Das v. Heeralal, A.I.R. 1966 All. 323; A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 86; Cheekati Kurimainaidu v. Kari Padmanabhan Bhukta, A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 539; C. Kurimi Naidu v. K. Padmanavan Bhukta, (1964) 2 An. W.R. 325. If some land in the occupation of a tenant is mortgaged to the tenant the tenancy is not thereby terminated—Varada Bangar Raju v. Kintali Avatharam, (1964) 2 An. W.R. 369. If the tenant of some land becomes the mortgagee and a fresh rent note is executed by the mortgagor the original tenancy revives on the redemption of the mortgage entitling the mortgagee to avail of the protection given by the Rent Act—Puran Chand v. Bakshi Gopi Chand, (1968) 70 Punj. L.R. 1115.

Clause (g)—Amendment :—The following amendments have been made in this clause: the words "or the lease shall become void" have been omitted from sub-clause (1); sub-clause (3) has been newly added; and the words "gives notice in writing to the lessee of" have been substituted for the words "does some act showing". The reasons are stated in Notes 599A and 600 below.

Scope :—This clause, as amended, embodies a principle of justice, equity and good conscience and governs even agricultural leases—Umar v. Dawood, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 68, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 229.

596A. Forfeiture :—The principle of English law as to forfeiture apply both to tenancies created before the Act came into force and to those excepted from its operation. There can be no forfeiture by disclaimer in cases not covered by the Act unless the disclaimer is a matter of record. The power of the Court in India to relieve against forfeiture arising by disclaimer on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience is not necessarily limited to the cases where the tenant proves that the denial was occasioned by fraud, mistake or accident of the landlord and the tenant himself was neither careless nor negligent—Rachotappa v. Konher, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 41, 59 Bom. 194, 155 I.C. 516. There are however no provisions for relief against forfeiture when the lessee renounces his character by setting up a title in himself or any other person—Anand v. Taiyab, A.I.R. 1943 All. 279. Forfeiture ensues when the tenant fails to admit that he is holding the property as such—ibid. To entitle the plaintiff to a decree for ejectment on the ground of determination of the lease by forfeiture, there must be both disclaimer and manifestation of intention to determine the lease before institution of the suit—Salla v. Jainat, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 353. If the defendant simply denies the title of the plaintiff who is not the lessor but claims as heir of the lessor, there is no disclaimer—ibid.

A forfeiture clause must be literally and strictly construed and should be taken most strongly against the lessor—Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co. v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 372 (376), 15 Pat. 460, 163 I.C. 501; Raman v. Malabar & Co., A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 163, 58 Mad. 378, 154 I.C. 445; Kesab v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 636, 65 C.L.J. 305. In the case of successive forfeitures the landlord can rely on the last act entailing forfeiture—Karumanchi v. Karumanchi, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 166.

A usufructuary mortgagee as the lessor's transferee is entitled to enforce a forfeiture clause in a lease between the lessor-mortgagor and the lessee—Vamana v. Venkata, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 116 (117), 160 I.C. 530, following Havu v. Ganapati, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 329 and Kannyan v. Ali-kutti, 42 Mad. 60 (F.B.).

597. Breach of express condition :—This section contains no clause providing for the termination of the lease at the option of the lessee on account of a breach of a term of the contract, nor is there anything in section 108 to enable the lessee to avoid the lease. The lessee is not entitled to put an end to the lease for breach of a covenant in the lease, but he can only claim damages for such breach, if any—Govindaswami v. Palaniappa, 48 M.L.J. 397, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 833, 87 I.C. 10.

A transfer by the lessee in contravention of the terms of the lease is not wholly void but is merely voidable at the lessor's instance. If the lessor after termination of the lease accepts rent from the transferee, the latter will be entitled to remain in possession till the lease is determined—Jankhep v. Kuer Majhi, A.I.R. 1949 Ass. 61. Where a tenant occupies a portion of the house not included in the rent note, there is no breach of any term of the tenancy. At most he is a trespasser of that portion—Keshavlal v. Bai Ajawali, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 119.

What is meant by an "express" condition is, not that the wording of it should be in any particular form, but that the condition can be gathered from the words of the instrument, giving to them their ordinary meaning. If a clause in a lease is so expressed that it can only be read as reserving the right of forfeiture to the landlord in certain circumstances, that is a sufficiently 'express' condition—Mussa Kutti v. Rangachariar, 8 M.L.T. 238 (309). Thus, where the lease contained an express provision for re-entry on "breach of any of the conditions of the lease" and the tenant failed to pay rent, held that as the payment of rent was one of the conditions on breach of which the landlord was entitled to re-enter, the non-payment of rent operated as forfeiture of the lease—Ibid. But where the lessor does not allege that the tenancy has come to an end by forfeiture, but relies on sec. 14, Tenancy Act which provides that the tenancy shall terminate if the tenant fails to pay rent, the present clause does not apply, nor does the principle underlying the clause—Jagannath v. Vasant, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 332, 55 Bom. L.R. 341. Where the relation created is that of a "grantor" and "grantee" of a perpetual tenure, rather than that of landlord and tenant, the law of forfeiture on non-payment of rent is not applicable in the absence of proof of a definite contract to that effect—Tirtha Naik v. Lal Sadananda, A.I.R. 1952 Or. 99.

Where one of two partners after dissolution of the partnership assigns to the other partner his interest in the leasehold of the partnership premises, it does not amount to a breach of the covenant prohibiting an assignment of the lease without the lessor's consent—Devarajulu v. Thayaramma, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 25, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 423.¹

A waqf created by a tenant is not such a dealing with the leasehold as to entail a forfeiture of the tenancy—Md. Sharif v. Waqf Banam-i-Khuda, A.I.R. 1947 All. 49.

The refusal by a tenant to perform services which are incidental to his holding, is sufficient of itself to ground a suit for ejectment—Prokash v. Rajendra, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 221 (225), 35 C.W.N. 823, 58 Cal. 1359, 135 I.C. 296. In case of a service tenure, the discontinuance of services by the lessee does not, however, amount to a forfeiture of the lease, where modern conditions make the services highly burdensome to the lessee without any corresponding benefit to the lessor, and where it is doubtful whether a strict compliance with the provisions of the patta relating to services would not be of public inconvenience—Maharaj of Jeypore v. Rukmini, 42 Mad. 589 (601) (P.C.).

When it is claimed that the lessor is entitled to re-enter by reason of the lessee's breach of covenant, it is first necessary to ascertain what it was that the lessee covenanted to do, or not to do, then to see whether the agreement provides for re-entry on breach of such covenant and finally whether there has been a breach of covenant by the lessee—Pancham v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 450 (451), 15 Pat. 680, 164 I.C. 358. The landlord may re-enter even on the breach of a covenant in a permanent lease prohibiting transfer—Taduri Gopala Krishna Rao v. Kodeg Narayya, A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 528. But the tenant will not incur forfeiture by a partial transfer—Indraloke Studio Ltd. v. Santi Devi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 609. In order to entitle the landlord to treat the lease as forfeited it is necessary that the lease should contain an express provision that on breach of such and such condition, the landlord would be entitled to re-enter.

Unless there is an express provision for re-entry for breach of any covenant in it, the lessor will not be entitled to treat the lease as forfeited and to eject the tenant—Kishori Mohun v. Nund Kumar, 24 Cal. 720 (724). Thus, where the lease merely contained a covenant on the part of the lessee not to alienate the property, but there was no provision for re-entry by the lessor in the event of such alienation, held that an alienation by the lessee in breach of such a covenant would not entitle the landlord to consider the lease as forfeited or to treat the alienation as void and to sue the tenant in ejectment. The relief of the landlord would be by way of damages for breach of the covenant against alienation—Narayan v. Ali Saiba, 18 Bom. 603; Madar Buksh v. Sannabawa, 21 Bom. 195. Timapa v. Timaya, 7 Bom. 262 (265); Udipi v. Seshamma, 43 Mad. 503, 61 I.C. 658; Parmeshri v. Vittappa, 26 Mad. 157; Nilmadhab v. Narotam, 17 Cal. 826; Mahananda v. Saratmani, 14 C.L.J. 585; Basarai v. Manirulla, 36 Cal. 745; Netrapal v. Kallyan, 28 All. 400; Shankar Dayal v. Vinayak, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 305 (306), 79 I.C. 695, 27 O.C. 1; Krishna Chandra v. National Chemical etc., A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 35. See Note 92 under sec. 10. So also, in the absence of an express condition as regards forfeiture, a lease cannot come to an end merely because the lease-money is not paid by the lessee—Mahadoo v. Jainarayan, 62 I.C. 850. Similarly, where there was a stipulation in the lease against sub-letting but the lease contained no stipulation giving a right of re-entry to the lessor upon sub-letting by the lessee, held that the mere prohibition against sub-letting was in the nature of a threat, and in the absence of a provision for re-entry, the tenant could not be ejected on the ground of sub-letting—Gordon Stuart & Co. v. Taylors, W.R. 9 (F.B.); Sital Prosad v. Dildar Ali, 1 P.L.J. 1, 33 I.C. 408; Pramatha Nath v. Prabulla Chandra, A.I.R. 1960 Assam 105. Where a lease is in favour of several persons jointly and the share of each is specified, and there is a covenant for re-entry on transfer of the property or even a portion of it and one of the lessees transfers his share, the landlord is entitled only to re-enter on such lessee's share but not on the whole property in the absence of an express clause empowering him to do so—Pancham v. Pramatha, supra, at p. 455.

The forfeiture clause in the lease-deed would be very strictly construed. So, where the lease contained a provision that an alienation of the tenure by the lessee without the lessor's consent would entitle the landlord to re-enter as upon a forfeiture, the sale of a portion thereof by one of the joint tenants would not work as a forfeiture of the whole tenure; the others will continue in possession as before—Kundan v. Kallu, 12 A.L.J. 650, 24 I.C. 79; Dassorathy v. Rama Krishna, 9 Cal. 526; Krishna Chandra v. National Chemical, A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 35. A covenant against alienation does not prevent the tenant from assigning a portion of the premises, and unless the covenant is expressly worded to exclude a partial alienation of the premises, such partial alienation will not work as a forfeiture—Grove v. Portel, [1905] 1 Ch. 727; Kesab v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 636, 65 C.L.J. 305; Swarnamoyee v. Aferaddi, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 787, 60 Cal. 47, 36 C.W.N. 819, 139 I.C. 239; Venkata-ramana v. Krishna, 47 M.L.J. 307, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 57, 81 I.C. 1006. But where the entire right in a mulgeni lease is transferred by the tenant by separate alienations in parts, the condition against transfer is broken, and there would be a forfeiture of the lease—Veda Bhat v.

Mahalaxmi, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 441, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 229. See also Souza v. Louis, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 119 (1946) 2 M.L.J. 362. Where a lease contains a covenant prohibiting assignment without a previous written consent of the landlord and such consent is not to be unreasonably withheld in case of a respectable or responsible person, an assignment by the tenant to a respectable person without the landlord's consent does not amount to a breach of covenant—Kamala Ranjan v. Baijnath, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 1, 1951 S.C.J. 13. An alienation in favour of a co-lessee is not an alienation within the clause, but a sale by a lessee to his daughter is—Koragalva v. Jakri, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 261, 52 M.L.J. 8, 99 I.C. 700. If a term is granted subject to a condition against assignment, an assignment by the lessee will be void; but if the restraint is by covenant only, the lessee by assigning commits a breach of covenant, but the assignment itself is not void though the landlord can put an end to it as soon as the assignment comes to his knowledge if the lease contains a power of re-entry—Sreedhar v. Kusum Kumari, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 478 (479), 42 C.W.N. 932. Thus, where a clause in a maurasi makarari provides that in the case of a transfer, the transferee shall pay one-fourth of the consideration money to the landlord and also that in default of such payment the transfer shall not be valid; this clause is not in the nature of a covenant, but it is in effect a restrictive condition which limits the power of alienation, and a transfer in breach of it is void—Ibid. A mortgage by conditional sale followed by a decree for foreclosure and the taking of possession thereunder constitutes a transfer within the meaning of such a stipulation which is binding as between the parties and their representatives. Consequently on failure to pay the transfer-fee on the date of the decree for foreclosure the landlord becomes entitled to get a decree for eviction of the transferee—Chandi Charan v. Taranath, (1942) 46 C.W.N. 6, 75 C.L.J. 434. In this particular case their Lordships (Biswas and Akram, JJ.) relieved the transferee against eviction by directing him to pay the amount of transfer-fee with interest. When a landlord is entitled to re-enter by reason for forfeiture, he is also entitled to claim rent or mesne profits up to the date of obtaining possession and the fact that he claims in a suit for ejectment rent or mesne profits till he gets possession cannot be said to be a waiver of the right to re-enter—Koragalva v. Jakri, supra. The mere fact that the landlord refrained from enforcing his right on one or more previous occasions, whether for consideration or not does not amount to a surrender of his right to enforce it when a subsequent occasion arises—Dayal Singh v. Pramatha, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 493 (495), 15 Pat. 673, 164 I.C. 811. The landlord is entitled to eject transferees from the original tenant against whom an ex parte decree for ejectment has been passed—Ibid. A purchaser from a permanent lessee who has covenanted not to alienate, if recognized by the lessor, is not, however, bound by the covenant against alienation—Khetra Nath v. Bahar Ali, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 228, 49 C.L.J. 89, 116 I.C. 153.

Leases of quarry lands were granted to a company subject to the covenant providing that neither the lessee nor any parson claiming through him should assign the lease or transfer any right or interest thereunder, or underlet the whole or any portion of the premises without the assent of the Board of Revenue and the penalty for infraction would be forfeiture of the lease. The company contracted with a person for sale of the leasehold rights but subject to the sanction of the Board of Revenue. It was also provided that in the meantime the intended vendee should act as the agent for the company in respect of the leasehold rights in the quarries, that he should pay to the company the royalties and other sums payable by it to the Government and that he should be entitled to work the quarries for his own benefit. The contract, though the value of the interest created was more than Rs. 100, was not registered: Held that the transaction created an agency coupled with an interest and did not amount to sub-letting. The transaction, however, amounted to a transfer of an interest in the leasehold property [on this point reversing Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co. v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 372, 15 Pat. 460, 163 I.C. 501 which is to be read in this connection]. But the contract not being registered, the transfer was not effective, and hence there was no forfeiture of the lease—Secretary of State v. Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co., A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 20 (22), 17 Pat. 69, 65 I.A. 46, 42 C.W.N. 593, 66 C.L.J. 485, 172 I.C. 443.

Where the terms of a lease provided that the lessee was entitled to underlet but not to "assign" his right in any way, and then the lessee mortgaged the said lease by way of sub-demise, held that the word 'assign' meant 'part with absolutely', i.e., the parties intended and agreed that the lessee should be entitled to part with possession of the land and premises by way of sub-demise or otherwise, so long as he did not absolutely transfer the whole of his right, title and interest therein; consequently, the mortgage did not operate as a forfeiture of the lease—per Page, J., in Bejoy Lal v. Benarasidas, 54 Cal. 948, 110 I.C. 296, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 99 (101). And this view has been affirmed by the Privy Council in Hansraj v. Bejoy Lal, 57 Cal. 1176, 34 C.W.N. 342 (347), 122 I.C. 20, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 59, reversing the judgment of the Division Bench in Bejoy Lal v. Benarsidas, 32 C.W.N. 353, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 681, 114 I.C. 786. By creating the mortgage, the lessee has merely deposited the lease as a security, which it was competent for him to do so. There is no parting with the interest absolutely, because the lessee might at any time redeem the indenture by paying off the incumbrance upon it—Doe v. Hogg. (1824) 4 Dow. & Ry. 226.

Where a lease stipulates for forfeiture in case of alienation by the lessee, it means a covenant against voluntary alienation, and the lease cannot be forfeited where the land is sold against the will of the lessee by the act of a Court, e.g., in execution of a decree—Nilmadhab v. Narottam, 17 Cal. 826; Hamaya v. Timapa, 7 Bom. 262 (265); Subbaraya v. Krishna, 6 Mad. 159. But where the lease contained a covenant that "the lessee is not to let the land be sold or attached and sold in satisfaction of judgment-debts, and that if he does so, the lessor will take away the land and give it to others," and the tenant allowed the land to be attached and sold, and not taking measures to satisfy his judgment-debts, held that there was a breach of the clause in the lease, which gave the lessor a right of re-entry—Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat, 7 Bom. 256 (262). If there is a term in the lease that if the lessee does not start construction within three years the lease shall stand cancelled the landlord can forfeit the lease if the term is not complied with—1966 All. L.J. 531.

The forfeiture clause in the lease enures not only for the benefit of the lessor but also of his representatives and assigns. Thus, where a lease contained a covenant reserving to the lessor a power of re-entry, on default of payment of rent, and there was no mention in such covenant of a similar power being also reserved to the lessor's "heirs, successors or assigns", and the lessee sold his rights in the leased property to third persons, it was held that although re-entry was reserved only to the lessor, yet the vendees of the lessor could take advantage of the covenant—Kristo Nath v. Brown, 14 Cal. 176; Vishveshwar v. Mahableshwar, 43 Bom. 28 (31), 47 I.C. 330. A mineral lease under the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development Act) 1957 is outside the operation of the T. P. Act; hence secs. 111(g) and 114 T. P. Act do not apply to a mineral lease—Serajuddin Md. v. State of Orissa, A.I.R. 1969 Orissa 152.

"Or the lease shall become void":—These words occurring in the old clause (g) have now been omitted because a lessor cannot re-enter on the breach of any condition in a lease unless there is an express stipulation to that effect.

598. Denial of landlord's title:—In the absence of any law, usage or custom to the contrary the principles of Chapter V apply to leases for agricultural purposes as rules of justice, equity and good conscience. Consequently, such leases are forfeited by repudiation by the tenant of the tenancy by claiming title in himself—Faqiria v. Kalu Mal, A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 52. See also Tatya v. Yeshwant, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 283, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 293. In cases where this Act does not apply, clear and unambiguous denial of the lessor's title would be enough to entail forfeiture, and the landlord is not required to show his intention to determine the lease—Ramachandra v. Mahadevi, A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 57, (1945) 2 M.L.J. 416. Such a denial in a notice sent by the tenant in reply to the landlord's notice is sufficient to work out forfeiture of the tenancy—ibid.

A tenant who denies his landlord's title renders the lease liable to forfeiture, notwithstanding that the lease is permanent—Kally Das v. Monmohini, 24 Cal. 440; Abhram Goswami v. Shyama Charan, 36 Cal. 1003 (P.C.); Ananda v. Abraham, 4 C.W.N. 42; Mela Ram v. Sandhi, 13 Lah. 796, 141 I.C. 825, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 221; Ramji v. Shib Charan, A.I.R. 1930 All. 479 (481), (1930) A.L.J. 908. This is an application of the general principle of law that a man cannot blow hot and cold, i.e., cannot both approbate and reprobate.

The denial of a landlord's title by one of the joint tenants cannot be held to bind the other co-tenants, and such a denial cannot work as a forfeiture—Jharu v. Mahatabuddin, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 713; Gani Mia v. Wajid Ali, 39 C.W.N. 882. A disclaimer made by the manager of a joint Hindu family which is effective as forfeiture is however binding on the other members in the absence of anything to suggest the contrary—Krishnarao v. Ghamon, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 144, 155 I.C. 249. It is permissible to a tenant to deny his landlord's title, if it is shown that he executed the lease in ignorance—Alagammai v. P. L. & C. Firm, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 227.

A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be, so long he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord—Bilas v. Desraj, 37 All. 55 (P.C.); Shankar v. Jagannath, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 265, 30 Bom. L.R. 741, 111 I.C. 911; Krishnarao v. Ghamon, supra; Krishna Rao v. Mungara, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 298 (299), 55 Mad. 601, 138 I.C. 34.

In order to work a forfeiture, the denial must be unequivocal, unambiguous and absolutely definite; for the law leans strongly against forfeiture. Omission to pay rent or even refusal to pay it does not constitute such a denial of the landlord's title—Shiam Behari v. Madan Singh, A.I.R. 1945 All. 293; I.L.R. 1945 All. 248; Prag Narain v. Kadir Bakhsh, 35 All. 145, 18 I.C. 728. The mortgaging of premises by a tenant does not amount to an unequivocal and unambiguous denial of the landlord's title. The denial must also be made to the knowledge of the landlord—Md. Mahmud Khan v. Laja Mal, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 289, 15 Lah. 683, 151 I.C. 209; Karumanchi v. Karumanchi, A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 166. The test to apply would be, whether the assertion would operate as a starting point for adverse possession against the landlord—Doe v. Williams, (1777) 2 Cowp. 622; Kemalooti v. Muhamed, 41 Mad. 629 (636). Under this clause, there is a denial of title when "the lessee renounces his character as such, by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself." The word "renounce" connotes that some act is done to the knowledge of the landlord which is calculated to convey to him the impression that the tenant repudiated his title. Where the tenant disclaimed the landlord's title and asserted his own by an incidental and casual statement made in a document executed by him to a third party purporting to convey some property other than that to which the assertion related, but the assertion was not addressed to the landlord nor was followed up by transferring the particular property to a third party, held that such a collateral reference as the one contained in the said document was not enough to constitute a disclaimer of the landlord's title justifying the forfeiture of the tenancy—Kemalooti v. Muhamed, 41 Mad. 629 (632, 636). Where the permanent tenants made a partition among themselves describing themselves as owners, and also passed several mortgages and sale-deeds in favour of strangers, in which also they described themselves as owners, but they never communicated to the landlord their desire to renounce the relationship of landlord and tenant, it was held that this fact did not bring about a forfeiture of the tenancy—Narayan v. Mangesh, 34 Bom. L.R. 1287, 140 I.C. 567, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 599 (601). The mere receipt and retention by the tenant of a document of sub-lease in which he is spoken of as the Jenmi of the lands demised, cannot operate as a denial of the landlord's title, when there was nothing to show that the tenant actually assumed the role of a Jenmi and the landlord was made aware of such assumption—Raman Nair v. Mariyamma, 43 Mad. 480. The law has been thus stated: "In order to make either a verbal or a written disclaimer sufficient, it must amount to a direct repudiation of the relationship of landlord and tenant, or to a distinct claim to hold possession of the estate upon a ground wholly inconsistent with that relation, which by necessary implication is a repudiation of it"—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 19th Edn., p. 431; William's Ejectment, 2nd Edn., p. 56; Doe d Gray v. Stanion, (1836) 1 M. & W. 695 (703); Vivian v. Moat, (1881) 16 Ch. D. 730.

It is not necessary that the denial of landlord's title by the tenant should be accompanied by an express assertion that the title is either in the tenant or in some third person—Rukmini v. Rayaji, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 454, 48 Bom. 541, 83 I.C. 45. If the landlord's title is denied, it involves the assertion that the title is either in the tenant or in some third person—Padmanabhaya v. Ranga, 34 Mad. 161 (163). If the tenant does not claim a right in himself but merely sets up a title in a third party as his landlord under whom he admits to be occupying the status of a tenant, (i.e., where he does not renounce the status of a tenant), still it would amount to a denial of the title of the real landlord—Hatimullah v. Md. Arju, 32 C.W.N. 391 (396), A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 312, 113 I.C. 13. Where a tenant alleges that his landlord is only a co-sharer with another, he incurs forfeiture for denying the landlord's title—Hashmat Husain v. Saghir Ahmad, A.I.R. 1958 All. 847.

A permanent lease is within the provisions of cl. (g). Where a permanent lessee in a suit by the lessor claims to have been in adverse possession for over 12 years, the lessee claims title in himself and it amounts to a disclaimer of the landlord's title—Md. Hafiz v. United Provinces, A.I.R. 1945 All. 285, I.L.R. 1945 All. 222.

Where a building is in the possession of a mortgagee, the tenant is not the tenant of the owner. When the mortgage is redeemed and the owner becomes entitled to possession, the tenant cannot set up any title as against the owner—Balkishen v. Baldeo, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 297.

A denial by the lessee of his landlord's title even by parol declarations entitles the landlord to exercise his option of determining the lease—Satyabhama v. Krishna Chandra, 6 Cal. 55; Vishnu v. Balaji, 12 Bom. 352.

The denial of landlord's title by the original lessee will not work as a forfeiture against the assignee of the lessee—Gopal v. Shriniwas, 42 Bom. 734.

The disclaimer of landlord's title which is relied on as a ground for ejecting the tenant must have been made before the suit in ejectment was instituted. A disclaimer contained in the written statement of the defendant (tenant) cannot be made the basis of a decree for ejectment in the suit—Mallika v. Makhanlal, 9 C.W.N. 928; Pran Nath v. Madhu, 13 Cal. 96; Nizamuddin v. Mamtazuddin, 28 Cal. 135; Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini, 42 Mad. 589 (P.C.); Pratap Narain v. Harihar, 36 Cal. 927; Vithu v. Dhondi, 15 Bom. 407; Subba v. Nagappa, 12 Mad. 353; Madavan v. Athi Nangiyar, 15 Mad. 123; Unhamma v. Vaikuntha, 17 Mad. 218; Reria v. Subrahmanian, 31 Mad. 261; Samundar v. Mukh Lal, 37 I.C. 935 (Pat.); Rajaram v. Vithal, 6 N.L.R. 83, 6 I.C. 927; Chiragh Din v. Mahomed Usman, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 281, 70 I.C. 349; Mukat Singh v. Paras Ram, A.I.R. 1924 All. 726, 79 I.C. 106; Jharu v. Mahatabuddin, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 713; Gulam Mohammood v. Ammani Ammal, (1960) 2 M.L.J. 351; Warner v. Sampson (1959) 2 W.L.R. 109.

But a denial of title in a suit for rent causes a forfeiture of the tenancy—Mahomed v. Habibar Rahaman, 45 I.C. 642 (Pat.). The denial of the landlord's title in a previous suit for rent, coupled with the setting up of a third party as the landlord, makes the lessee liable to have his tenancy forfeited—Gopal Ram v. Dhakeswar, 35 Cal. 807 (810).

There is no provision for relief against forfeiture for renunciation of the character of tenant and setting up a title in himself—Anand v. Taiheb, A.I.R. 1943 All. 279. Non-admission of the landlord's title amounts to a denial. Consequently, forfeiture comes into existence when the tenant fails to admit that he is holding the property as such—ibid.

Where in a suit for rent brought by the lessor against the lessee the latter denied the title of the lessor, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not subsist between them, and the lessor then brought another suit to eject the lessee, held that it was not open to the lessee in the latter suit to set up the tenancy which he had denied in the previous suit, and that by repudiating his landlord's title in the previous suit he had rendered himself liable to ejectment—Khatar Mistri v. Sadruddi, 34 Cal. 922; Nilmadhab v. Ananta, 2 C.W.N. 755; Fayi Dhali v. Aftabuddin, 6 C.W.N. 575; Malika v. Makhanlal, 9 C.W.N. 928. Ramgati v. Pranhari, 3 C.L.J. 201; Sheik Miadhar v. Rajanikant, 14 C.W.N. 339, 5 I.C. 708; Ekbar v. Hara, 15 C.W.N. 335, 13 C.L.J. 1, 8 I.C. 660.

Where a tenant who is entitled to notice denies the title of the landlord, no notice is necessary to eject him—Karam Chand v. Amar Nath, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 377 (378), 145 I.C. 922. See also Ratneswar v. Mongoli, A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 70, (1950) 2 Ass. 166. But after the amendment in clause (g) it is apprehended, a notice in writing of the lessor's intention to determine the lease is necessary. Since this observation was made by the editor in the previous edition, it has been held that as a result of amendment of sec. 111 (g) in 1929, it is incumbent on the lessor to give notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease before a suit can be instituted for eviction of the lessee—Tatya v. Yeshwant, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 283, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 293. See also Jai Narain v. Ali Murtaza, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 190. But see Gajadhar Lodha v. Khas Mahatadih Colliery Co., A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 562.

Where a service tenure was created after the passing of the T. P. Act and the tenant renounced his character as service tenant in Chaitra, 1342 B.S., i.e., in 1936, the landlord before succeeding in a suit in ejectment must prove that there was an overt act on his part to determine the lease—Narendra v. Rajendra, 45 C.W.N. 654, 73 C.L.J. 159, A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 506. In this case Mr. Justice B. K. Mukherjee observed: "Had the point been taken at the proper time, the plaintiff would have been able to prove that there was at any rate a demand for possession which would be quite enough to satisfy the requirements of sec. 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act". But as the cause of action arose after the amendment in clause (g) came into force, would not a notice in writing of the lessor's intention to determine the lease have been necessary?

599. What does not amount to denial of title :—If the tenant has never denied his liability to pay the rent fixed but has asserted a higher status as lessee than what was admitted by the landlord, such an assertion does not amount to denial of title of the landlord or claiming title for himself—Amar Krishna v. Nazir Hasan, 14 Luck. 723, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 257, 1939 O.W.N. 825. A denial of the landlord's title to enhance the rent or the setting up of a permanent tenancy is not necessarily a disclaimer of his title as landlord—Kali Krishna v. Golam Ali, 13 Cal. 248; Haidri Begum v. Nathu, 17 All. 45; Parshotam v. Dattatraya, 10 Bom. 669; Vithu v. Dhondi, 15 Bom. 407; Lalu Gagal v. Bai Motan, 17 Bom. 631; Dodhu v. Madhavrao, 18 Bom. 110; Venkaji v. Lakshman, 20 Bom. 354 (F.B.); Suba v. Nagappa, 12 Mad. 353; Unhamma v. Vaikunta, 17 Mad. 218. The setting up of a mulgeni right by the tenant is not a disclaimer of the landlord's title; it only amounts to a denial of the particular kind of tenancy under which the tenant holds possession and the setting up of a different kind of tenancy, but it does not amount to a denial of title of the landlord—Unhamma v. Vaikunta, 17 Mad. 218. Similarly, an assertion by a tenant from year to year that he is a permanent tenant is not tantamount to a denial of the landlords' title—Gol Daji v. Dod Laxman, 22 Bom. L.R. 648, 58 I.C. 226.

Where after the death of the original lessor the tenant did not directly deny the claimant's title, but refused to pay rent until he knew who was the real owner, and it appeared that the succession was at that time disputed, it was held that there was no denial of the landlord's title—Jones v. Mills, 10 C.B. (N.S.) 788. But see Ramdas v. Ram Lakshman, A.I.R. 1953 All. 797 where it has been held that if the title of the lessor's heir is denied, the denial causes forfeiture of the tenancy. A tenant's plea that "as the plaintiff and a third person both claim rent from him, he is ready to pay either when the Court finds who is entitled to", is not tantamount to a disclaimer—Rakmini v. Rayaji, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 454, 48 Bom. 541, 83 I.C. 45. Where the tenant denies the plaintiff's title to recover rent from him, bona fide for the purpose of seeing such title established in a Court of law in order to protect himself, he is not to be charged with disclaiming the plaintiff's title—Hatimullah v. Mahammad Arju, 32 C.W.N. 391 (395), A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 312, 113 I.C. 13. Similarly, there is no disclaimer of the relationship of landlord and tenant, where the tenant merely puts the landlord to the proof of his title by purchase—Mallika v. Makhan Lal, 9 C.W.N. 928; Venkatachariar v. Rangaswami, 36 M.L.J. 532, 51 I.C. 709; Ram Das v. Lach. Janki, I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 554. The denial by the tenant of the right of an assignee from the original lessor does not work a forfeiture of the tenancy. Where there was no specific denial of the title of the original lessor but the tenant merely denied the right of the purchaser, and set up the right of one of the heirs of the original lessor, held that this could not work as a forfeiture—Abdulla v. Md. Muslim, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1205, 96 I.C. 1056; Somti Prakash v. Natha, I.L.R. (1964) 1 Punj. 616; Ram Das v. Lach. Janki, I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 554; Sugga Bai v. Hiralal, A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 32.

There is no denial of title where the tenant merely questions the extent of the landlord's interest and his title to receive the entire rent—Mallika v. Makhan Lal, 9 C.W.N. 928. A denial of tenancy after the institution of the suit for eviction does not entail forfeiture—Gulam Mohamood v. Ammani Ammal, (1960) 2 Mad. L.J. 351.

Where the tenants could not obtain possession of the whole area leased to them, and on reference to their lessors, got no satisfaction from them, and then took a lease of the portion, of which they could not get possession, from a stranger whom they found in possession, held that there was no renunciation by the tenants of their character as such so as to entail a forfeiture—Farman Bibi v. Shaik Tasha, 12 C.W.N. 587. Where the tenants did not repudiate their lease but rather stuck to it and only questioned the right of the plaintiffs as transferees from their lessor, the alleged transfer appearing to be of a date prior to the lease, held that there was no denial of landlord's title so as to cause a forfeiture of the tenancy—Farman Bibi v. Shaik Tasha, 12 C.W.N. 587. Where the land leased was acquired by the Government, and in the Land Acquisition case the pleader for the tenant described the latter as the owner of the land acquired, but throughout the proceedings the tenant never referred to himself otherwise than as tenant, held that the expression used by the pleader did not amount to a renunciation by the client of his character of a tenant. The Court must consider the intention of the tenant and his intention must be gathered from the attitude he himself adopted throughout the proceedings rather than from the formal grounds framed by his counsel—Zia-uddin v. Fakhruddin, 4 Lah. 160, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 454, 73 I.C. 791. When a person claiming to have a permanent and heritable interest says that the land belongs to him and that he is the owner of it, his statements do not amount to a denial of the landlord's title and hence no forfeiture on that ground—Raja Mohammad Amir Ahmad Khan v. Municipal Board of Sitapur—A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1923.

600. Notice of intention to determine lease :—The opening words of cl. (g) no doubt seem to imply that the lease comes to an end as soon as the notice to quit is given, but the concluding words show that something more, such as an actual entry or the filing of an ejectment suit is necessary to determine the lease. This clause means that even after service of the notice, the lease is voidable and not void, otherwise there will be a conflict between this clause and sec. 112—Chotu Mia v. Mt. Sundri, A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 260 (F.B.), 24 Pat. 109. The institution of a suit for ejectment is an intimation to determine the lease. Notice of termination is not necessary—Amar Singh v. Hoshiar Singh, A.I.R. 1952 All. 141. Where the tenancy has been determined, one of the co-owners can maintain a suit for ejectment of a trespasser without impleading the other co-owners—Vinod Sagar v. Vishnubhai, A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 388.

The provisions of cl. (g) as to notice in writing as a preliminary to a suit for ejectment based on forfeiture is not founded on any principle of justice, equity or good conscience and do not govern leases executed prior to the coming into force of the present Act of 1st April, 1930. The rights and obligations under those leases will be determined according to the rules of law prevailing at the time and those are that a tenant cannot by his unilateral act and by his own wrong determine the lease, unless the lessor gives an indication by some unequivocal expression of intention of taking advantage of the breach—Namedeo v. Narmadabai, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 228 on appeal from A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 123, I.L.R. 1949 Bom. 883, overruling Pulavar v. Rowther, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 68 and Tatya Savla v. Yeshwanta, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 283.

Although forfeiture may be incurred by reason of a breach of condition or of denial of the landlord's title, still the landlord cannot enforce the forfeiture clause unless he "gives notice to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease." These words have been substituted for the words "does some act showing his intention to determine the lease". The words in the old clause left it uncertain as to what act the lessor should do showing his intention to determine the lease. It was held in some cases that the mere filing of a suit for ejectment by the landlord did not amount to doing some act showing the intention of the landlord to determine the tenancy—Prag Narain v. Kadir Baksh, 35 All. 145, 18 I.C. 728; Matilal v. Chandra Kumar, 24 C.W.N. 1064, 60 I.C. 312; Nowrang v. Janardan, 45 Cal. 469, 41 I.C. 952; Padmanabhaya v. Ranga, 34 Mad. 161 (164), 6 I.C. 447; Shib Charan v. Kharka, 47 All. 348, A.I.R. 1925 All. 346, 86 I.C. 174; Kadir Baksh v. Prag Narain, 9 A.L.J. 794, 14 I.C. 747; Anandamoyi v. Lakhi Chandra, 33 Cal. 339; Sheikh Yusuf v. Jyotish, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 241, 35 C.W.N. 1132, 59 Cal. 739, 137 I.C. 139; Creet v. Gangaraj, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 129 (139), I.L.R. (1937) Cal. 203, 170 I.C. 214 (and the cases cited in this case). The Bombay High Court however held in Isabali v. Mahadu, 42 Bom. 195, 43 I.C. 851 (followed in Prokash v. Rajendra, 58 Cal. 1359, 35 C.W.N. 823, at p. 828), that the institution of a suit for ejectment was a sufficient manifestation of such an intention. It was also held that the act showing intention to determine the lease need not be a formal notice to quit, and may be a demand for possession, oral or written—Naurang v. Janardan, supra. In a Madras case, a lawyer's notice was held to be sufficient—Sivarama v. Alagappa, 1915 M.W.N. 845, 31 I.C. 211. So also the withdrawal of an ejectment suit with the liberty to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action—Ramnath v. Sibasundari, 25 C.L.J. 332, 40 I.C. 348; Mazoor v. Padiapurayil, 8 M.L.T. 99, 6 I.C. 264; or the lessors' act of taking possession of the leased premises was held to be an act showing an intention to determine the lease—Cook & Co. v. Phillips, 34 C.W.N. 785 (788), 130 I.C. 222, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 133. But where the landlord after withdrawal of his suit, in which his title had been denied by the tenant, did nothing for 9 years to show his intention to determine the lease, and then filed another suit in ejectment, it was held that in the circumstances there was no forfeiture—Shib Charan v. Kharka, A.I.R. 1925 All. 346, 47 All. 348, 86 I.C. 174. It was necessary that the lessor should do some act showing his intention to determine the lease—Ramji v. Shib Charan, A.I.R. 1930 All. 479 (481), (1930) A.L.J. 908. Oral notice was sufficient before the amendment—Sripada v. Ravikanta, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 454, 157 I.C. 804.

This uncertainty has now been set at rest, and the doubt as to the nature of the act which the lessor must do has been removed by requiring the lessor to give notice in writing of his intention to determine the lease, and this notice should be given before a right to institute a suit can arise. Now the giving of notice in writing is an essential condition of forfeiture taking effect in law. In fact the act of the lessee renouncing his character as such makes the lease only voidable. A lessor cannot file a suit for ejectment until after he has given notice, because till then the relationship of lessor and lessee subsists—Saheb Din v. Gauri Shankar, 15 Luck. 92, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 92, 1939 O.W.N. 980. When the lessor sues in ejectment without giving such notice, a plea of want of notice going to the very root of the case can be entertained for the first time in second appeal—Ibid. Under the present cl. (g) read with sec. 114A only one notice to quit is necessary and not two, but when the breach is capable of remedy, the lessor should require the lessee to remedy it and to give him reasonable time to do so, while when the breach is one not capable of remedy, he has simply to give a written notice conveyning his election to forfeit the tenancy. No particular form of notice is required in the latter case, but in the former a notice to quit forthwith would be a bad notice—Provat v. Bengal Central Bank, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 589, 42 C.W.N. 761. The landlord may give one notice combining the elements of notices under sec. 111(g) and sec. 114A—Kshiroda Sundari v. Bhupendra Mohan, A.I.R. 1961 Assam 70. Where a lease provides for re-entry on assignment and the tenant assigns, the landlord must serve a notice under sec. 111(g) though he is not required to serve any notice under sec. 114A—Chandra Nath v. Chulai Pashi, A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 40.

In the absence of any such act on the part of the landlord, a mere denial of the landlord's title by the tenant does not entail forfeiture—Ramasami v. Thayammal, 26 Mad. 488; Dyamappa Butti v. Somappa, A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 252. So also, the failure by the tenant to renew a lease for a term in compliance with the provision for renewal contained therein, does not operate as a forfeiture relieving the tenant from liability to pay rent, unless the lessor does some act showing his intention to determine the lease—Bourammiah v. Mallammal, 4 M.L.T. 315.

Where there are several lessors, all the lessors must act together. If all of them have not shown their intention to determine the lease, e.g., if all the co-owners in the land have not joined in giving the notice, they cannot succeed. See Gopal Ram v. Dhakeswar, 35 Cal. 807 (811); Motilal v. Chandra Kumar, 24 C.W.N. 1064 and Panchu v. Benode 39 C.W.N. 246. But the Madras High Court is of opinion that one of several joint lessors who has become separately entitled to his share of the lands leased, is entitled to enforce the forfeiture clause in the lease-deed separately as regards his share of the lands, as if he had given a separate lease of his own share alone originally to the lessee—Korapalu v. Narayana, 38 Mad. 445 (447), following Sri Raja Simhadri v. Prattipati Ramayya, 29 Mad. 29, and dissenting from Gopal Ram v. Dhakeswar, supra. It is not open to a landlord to treat the tenancy as forfeited in part and subsisting as to the remainder—Vaddapanti v. Vodoori, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 252 (255).

If the notice is served on one of the joint tenants and similar notices correctly addressed are posted to the others, service on one is prima facie evidence of service on others—Bhusan Chandra Paul v. Bengal Coal Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 63.

Where the landlord gives notice of his intention to determine the lease, i.e., when he elects to determine the tenancy, the election is irrevocable, and the parties cannot by a subsequent agreement revive the old tenancy—Chengiah v. Raja of Kalahasti, 24 M.L.J. 263, 15 I.C. 445. Thus, there can be no revival when a forfeiture has been incurred and the lessor has given a fresh lease of the land to a third party. In such a case the old lease cannot be revived by simply saying that the lessor and the lessee agree to be bound by the terms of the old lease. It is difficult to see how a transaction which the law requires to be in writing registered can be created by a declaration of the parties that an extinct lease subsists—Malabar Timber Co. v. Prapraavan, 126 I.C. 284, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 272 (276). Similarly, if he elects not to enforce the forfeiture, and manifests and communicates to the lessee his intention accordingly, that is, when he elects to waive the forfeiture, his election is also irrevocable—Chengiah v. Raja of Kalahasti, 24 M.L.J. 263, 15 I.C. 445. As to what amounts to waiver of forfeiture, see section 112. Where a deed of lease contains a clause for forfeiture for non-payment of rent for three months and the lessor gives notice on three months' default forfeiting the lease and asking the tenant to quit and vacate on the expiry of June, 1951 the notice is one under sec. 111 (g) and not under sec. 106—Luxmi Spinning & Weaving Mills v. Ibrahim, A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 428. Where no notice under sec. 111 (g) is given forfeiting the lease for non-payment of rent, the lease subsists even though the lease provides for automatic termination on non-payment of rent—Ramniranjan v. Gajadhar, A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 525.

This clause, however, does not apply to leases created prior to the passing of this Act. See sec. 2 (c). In case of such leases, it is not necessary that the lessor should, prior to the action for ejectment, give notice of his intention to determine the lease. The institution of an action on the ground of forfeiture itself amounts to a manifestation of the lessor's intention to determine the tenancy—Padmanabhaya v. Ranga, 24 Mad. 161 (166), 6 I.C. 447; Venkatachariar v. Rangaswami, 36 M.L.J. 532, 51 I.C. 709; Ramkrishna v. Baburaya, 23 M.L.J. 715, 24 I.C. 139. In Venkataramana v. Gundaraya, 31 Mad. 403, however, the principle of this clause was applied to a lease created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act.

This clause is also inapplicable to leases not governed by this Act (e.g., agricultural leases), and the landlord will in those cases be entitled to bring a suit for ejectment without having done any prior act evincing his intention to determine the lease—Korapalu v. Narayana, 38 Mad. 445 (448), 20 I.C. 930; Vidyapurna v. Rangappayya, 25 M.L.J. 486, 21 I.C. 405. But the principles embodied in sec. 111 (g) are equally applicable to tenancies to which the T. P. Act does not apply because they are in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience—Raja Mohammad Amir Ahmad Khan v. Municipal Board of Sitapur, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1923. Sec. 111 (g) applies to a permanent tenancy—Ibid.

602. Clause (h)—Notice to quit:—A suit for ejectment cannot be maintained unless the tenancy has been determined by either a previous notice to quit or demand for possession. Whether a mere demand for possession is enough in a particular case, or whether a notice to quit is necessary, depends upon the status of the tenant. If the status of a tenant is that of a mere tenant-at-will, a demand for possession would be sufficient—Deonandan v. Meghu, 34 Cal. 57. Where some of the joint-lessors give a notice to quit denying the title of the remaining co-sharers a suit for ejectment is not maintainable by the co-sharers giving notice—Vijai Kumar Tandon v. Sm. Ganga Devi Rathor, 1969 All. L.J. 403. Where a suit for eviction is instituted before the expiry of the period of the notice but the plaint is subsequently amended by stating that the claim for possession has matured during the suit, the suit cannot be dismissed as pre-mature—Pundlik v. Mamraj, 1969 Mad. L.J. (Notes) 33.

If a lease is granted by a Municipality, it can be terminated by the Municipality according to law, and only by issuing a proper notice as required by the Transfer of Property Act, because the Municipality is not outside the provisions of this Act. The Municipality cannot determine the lease by simply passing a resolution, and then and there requiring the lessee to quit—Aminullah v. Emp., 26 A.L.J. 328, 107 I.C. 690, A.I.R. 1928 All. 95. As to what is a valid notice, see Notes under sec. 106.

Where the defendant has failed to prove his tenancy, he is not entitled to a notice to quit—Shiba Prasad v. Chamru Pasi, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 167 (168), 178 I.C. 362. Where a tenant after termination of the lease continues in possession of the house without the landlord's assent, his position is no better than that of a trespasser and he can be turned out of the house without any notice to quit—Rahmat Ullah v. Md. Husain, A.I.R. 1940 All. 444, 1940 A.L.J. 502, 191 I.C. 223. If a tenancy is terminated by two co-sharer landlords any one of them is competent to sue for eviction even though the other co-sharer does not join—Motilal v. Basant Lal, A.I.R. 1956 All. 175. Where a monthly tenant spends money on the improvement of the site, he does so at his own risk and on his ejection, he is not entitled to compensation—Gaya v. Debarchan, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 155 (156), 19 P.L.T. 663, 180 I.C. 159.

One decision of the construction of a notice to quit in one context does not afford much guidance for construing a notice couched in different words in a different context. The intention of the landlord and the language used should be looked into to make it sensible. Thus where instead of addressing the notice to a limited company which was the tenant, it was addressed to a person who was its managing director and the name of the company was written after his name with the word "Limited", and the notice was treated by the addressee and the company as a notice to the company itself, it was held that the notice was a valid notice to the tenant—Tulsiram v. R. C. Pat, Ltd., A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 160. Where a lease was terminated by notice but the landlord refused to take possession, the lease did not continue—Raman v. Kunhi, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 996. The landlord's suit for ejection is competent, even though the tenant tenders thereafter the whole rent due where the U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act III of 1947 applies—Khumani v. Saktey Lal, A.I.R. 1952 All. 579. A monthly tenancy is heritable—Mannalal Serowgie v. Iswari Prasad Jain, A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 447.

Removal of structures :—Where a decree for ejection provides that if the tenant fail to remove certain structures raised by him within the time fixed by the decree, the landlord would be entitled to remove the same and to claim costs of removal from the tenant, and he fails to comply with the terms of the decree, he loses his right of removing the structures. After the days of grace allowed to the tenant the landlord has the option either to keep the structures without any compensation to the tenant or to dismantle them—Raghubir v. Rawson, 70 C.L.J. 598, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 197, 189 I.C. 467.

112. A forfeiture under section 111, clause (g), is waived by acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture or by distress for such rent, or by any other act on the part of the lessor showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting :

 Waiver of forfeiture.

Provided that the lessor is aware that the forfeiture has been incurred :

Provided also that, where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture, such acceptance is not a waiver.

602A. This section has been enacted for the benefit of the tenant, and hence Woodfall gives the following warning to the landlords: "Courts of law always lean against forfeiture; therefore whenever a landlord means to take advantage of any breach of covenant or condition so that it should operate as a forfeiture of the lease, he must take care not to do anything which may be deemed an acknowledgment of the continuance of the tenancy and so operate as a waiver of the forfeiture"—Landlord and Tenant, 9th Edn., p. 367. The principle of the section is this:—"The landlord may elect to avoid a lease and bring ejectment when his tenant has committed a forfeiture. If, with knowledge of the forfeiture, by receipt of rent or other unequivocal act he shows his intention to treat the lease as subsisting, he has determined his election for ever, and can no longer avoid the lease. On the other hand, if by bringing ejectment he unequivocally shows his intention to treat the lease as void, he has determined his election, and cannot afterwards waive the forfeiture"—per Mellor, J. in Clough v. London and N. W. Ry. Co., (1871) 7 Ex. 26 (34). See also Shiva Prasad v. Mandira Kumari, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 478, 21 P.L.T. 257, 186 I.C. 686. This, however, does not mean that the landlord for ever waived his right to claim forfeiture against the tenant. Waiver could operate only in respect of a particular breach—Md. Hasan v. Baidyanath, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 140, 21 P.L.T. 117, 184 I.C. 605.

The principle laid down in this section regarding waiver of forfeiture applies to the Punjab and Delhi Province as being in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience—Mt. Gindori v. Shani Lal, A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 330 (F.B.), 48 P.L.R. 487.

603. Waiver of forfeiture by acceptance of rent :—The words "due since the forfeiture" qualify the word "rent" in this section. Hence demand and acceptance of rent which became due before the forfeiture does not constitute waiver. The fact that such demand was made after the notice of forfeiture and therefore with the knowledge of the breach does not amount to waiver either of the breach or of the forfeiture, because if it were so, then the lessee could rely on his own wrong to avoid payment and the landlord would be powerless to forfeit the lease without losing money already accrued due as rent—Talbot & Co. v. Haricharan, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 47. See also Habib v. Mt. Koeli, A.I.R. 1946 All. 328, 1946 A.L.J. 121. A Full Bench of the Patna High Court has held that acceptance by a lessor, prior to the institution of an ejectment suit on the ground of forfeiture, of rent which has accrued due subsequent to the forfeiture operates as a matter of law as a waiver of the forfeiture. The fact that the rent accepted had accrued due since the forfeiture and prior to the issue of the notice, and the actual acceptance was subsequent to the service of the notice is immaterial—Chotu Mia v. Mt. Sundri, A.I.R. 1945 Pat 260 (F.B.), 24 Pat. 109. Where after the forfeiture the lessee remits a certain amount as rent and the landlord accepts it only as damages for use and occupation, the acceptance must be deemed to be as rent and operates as a waiver of the forfeiture—ibid. The giving of a notice to quit may in certain circumstances operate as a waiver of forfeiture—ibid. See in this connection Mohan Lal v. G. G. in Council, A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 255, I.L.R. 1945 Nag. 629.

The breach of covenant in a lease not to erect any structure on the land is not a continuing breach. It is waived by subsequent acceptance of rent—Amulya v. Corpn. of Calcutta, A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 256. Where the landlord being fully aware of a continuing breach acquiesces in it for a long period by accepting rent even though he had served the notice to quit on the ground, there is a waiver—B. N. Gupta v. Satya Wati, A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 41. But see in this connection Ganpatrao v. Anant Ramchand, A.I.R. 1954 M.B. 20. If a lessor, after notice of forfeiture of the lease, accepts rent which accrues after, this is an act which amounts to an affirmation of the lease and a dispensation of the forfeiture—Pennant's Case, 3 Rep. 64a cited in Croft v. Lumley, 6 H.L.C. 672 ; Motilal v. Pure Jambad Colliery, Ltd., 44 C.W.N. 1109. It is only when such rent is accepted after the institution of a suit for ejectment that there is no waiver of forfeiture—Ibid. Where the lessee incurred a forfeiture of the lease by reason of construction of some buildings in contravention of the terms of the lease, but the lessor afterwards accepted rent from the tenant and there was no reason to suppose that the rent was accepted in ignorance of what the tenant had been doing, held that there was a waiver of forfeiture—Chattar v. Nand Kishore, 12 A.L.J. 1139, 26 I.C. 107 (108). Where there is a proviso in a lease for forfeiture on assignment without the consent of the lessor, the acceptance of rent by the lessor from the assignee operates as a waiver of forfeiture—Saraf Ali v. Subraya, 20 Bom. 439. So also, where after the denial of landlord's title, the landlord receives rent from the tenant, he cannot rely upon the denial as a ground of forfeiture—Farman Bibi v. Shaikh Tashi, 12 C.W.N. 587. Where a lease provided that out of the rents payable by them the lessees were to pay the Government revenue, then if after the termination of the lease, the lessor allowed the lessees to pay the Government revenues on two occasions, such payments were in reality payments of rent, and the lease was not therefore brought to a termination but was allowed to run out—Sadai Nath v. Serai Naik, 28 Cal. 532.

Waiver by the subordinate officers of the Government is binding on the Government. Thus, where the realisation of rent by the subordinate officers of Government were on behalf of the Government and the Government had the benefit of those realisations, and the officers had knowledge of the incurring of the forfeiture, the waiver was binding on the Government—Basanta Kumar v. Secretary of State, 59 I.C. 273 (Cal.). Acceptance of rent by a trustee who has been held out by his co-trustees as having authority to receive payments amounts to an acceptance binding on the trustees—Sripada v. Ravikanti, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 454, 157 I.C. 804.

Acceptance of the rent even under protest amounts to an acceptance under this section sufficient to operate as a waiver—Davenport v. Queen, L.R. 3 App. Cas. 115 followed in Kali Krishna v. Fuzle Ali, 9 Cal. 843 ; B. N. Ry. Co. v. Balmukunda, 80 I.C. 200, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 663 (664) ; Amar Krishna v. Nazir Hasan, 14 Luck. 723, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 257, 1939 O.W.N.

825. The protest is altogether inoperative,^o because the lessor had no right at all to take the money unless he took it as rent; he cannot be allowed to say that he wrongfully took it on some other account; and if he took it as rent, the legal consequences of such act must follow, however much he may repudiate them—Croft v. Lumley, 6 H.L.C. 672. Therefore, acceptance of rent constitutes waiver of forfeiture, notwithstanding that the lessor expressly states that he accepts the money as compensation for use and occupation and not as rent—Ibid. A conditional acceptance of rent by the lessor after default involving forfeiture is none the less a waiver—Sripada v. Ravikanti, supra. Where a deed of lease provides for forfeiture on the breach of any one of the conditions of the lease and at the same time says that the lease will be renewed on the observance of all the conditions of the lease, then, if the tenant incurs forfeiture by breaking a condition but the landlord waives the forfeiture by accepting rent after the breach, such waiver does not disentitle the landlord to refuse renewal on the ground of non-fulfilment of all the conditions of the lease—State of Bihar v. Indian Copper Corporation Ltd., I.L.R. 38 Pat. 1160.

There is a waiver of forfeiture under this section if the lessor accepts or demands rent which has accrued due after the forfeiture; but a claim, in a suit for ejectment, for rent which fell due before forfeiture, does not amount to a waiver and cannot negative the plaintiff's right to seek ejectment—Padmanabhaya v. Ranga, 34 Mad. 161 (162), 6 I.C. 447; Raj Mohan v. Mati Lal, 22 C.L.J. 546, 33 I.C. 331; Purna Chandra v. Ali Mahammad, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 520, 37 C.L.J. 548, 70 I.C. 999; Rambux v. Sohanlal, I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj 172; Puranmal Jaiswal v. Onkar Nath, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 128. Where it appeared that rent for a period subsequent to the forfeiture had not only been accepted but was realised by attaching the moveable property of the lessee, held that there was a waiver of forfeiture—Basanta Kumar v. Secy. of State, 59 I.C. 273 (Cal.). A forfeiture may be waived by acceptance of rent or by suing for rent, but if the landlord definitely determines the lease, after the forfeiture, by giving a notice to quit, a subsequent suit for rent for the period subsequent to the forfeiture, does not amount to a waiver, and the tenant is not liable to pay rent for the period subsequent to the termination of the lease by notice to quit—Upendra v. Dhubeshwar, 12 P.L.T. 225, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 240.

Where two persons have jointly leased out a land, and have subsequently become divided, one of them may enforce the forfeiture clause in the lease with respect to his moiety of the land, notwithstanding that the owner of the other moiety has waived his right to enforce the same by receiving his moiety of the rent—Korapalu v. Narayan, 38 Mad. 445, 20 I.C. 930.

604. "Any other act":—The forfeiture may be waived by subsequent demands for rent—Kristo Nath v. Brown, 14 Cal. 176 (184). Thus, if in a suit for ejectment brought on the ground of forfeiture for non-payment of rent, the plaintiff also claims rents for periods subsequent to the period of default, the suit fails, because by making such a claim the plaintiff must be deemed to have waived the forfeiture under this section—Abdul Rashik v. Safor Ali, 42 I.C. 614 (Cal.). Where in a suit for ejectment on the ground of forfeiture, the plaintiff makes an alternative claim that the notice given by him should be treated as a notice terminating the tenancy in suit, he is estopped from relying upon the forfeiture since the claim amounts to an assertion that the tenancy is still subsisting, and is therefore a waiver of forfeiture—Rukmini v. Rayaji, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 454 (456), 48 Bom. 541, 83 I.C. 45. So also, where a lease provided for forfeiture on assignment by the lessee without the consent of the lessor, landlord's entering into an agreement with the assignee in respect of repairs of the premises operated as a waiver of forfeiture—Saraf Ali v. Subraya, 20 Bom. 439.

But merely lying by and witnessing the breach is no waiver; some positive act must be done. The general rule is that if a lessor or the person legally entitled to the reversion, knowing that a forfeiture has been incurred by the breach of any covenant or condition, does any act whereby he acknowledges the continuance of the tenancy at a later period, he thereby waives such forfeiture—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 19th Edn., p. 376. Where a landlord instead of exercising his right of forfeiture allowed a tenant to continue in possession of the premises and treated him as tenant, he must be held to have waived the forfeiture—Thandu Parakel v. Ammalu, 8 M.L.T. 238, 8 I.C. 309. If the landlord elects not to take advantage of the forfeiture, it is waived. The election may be express or implied—Baddaparti v. Vodoori, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 252 (255).

604A. Waiver cannot be revoked :—If the lessor elects not to enforce the forfeiture and manifests or communicates to the lessee his intention accordingly, that is, if he waives his forfeiture, the waiver is irrevocable—Chengiah v. Raja of Kalahasti, 24 M.L.J. 263, 15 I.C. 445. If a certain condition, the breach of which entails forfeiture, is violated repeatedly, a mere waiver of the earlier breaches does not preclude the landlord from enforcing a subsequent breach—Krushna Patra v. Berhampur Municipality, I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 56.

1st Proviso :—There can be no waiver unless the lessor has acted with notice or actual knowledge of the forfeiture. It is not enough for the lessee to prove merely an act of the lessor showing recognition of the tenancy or to show that the lessor's ignorance of the breach has not been proved. The onus is on the lessee to prove positively that the lessor had knowledge of the breach and yet continued to recognise the tenancy—Swarnamoyee v. Royajaddi, 36 C.W.N. 819 (822), 139 I.C. 239, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 787; Mathews v. Smallwood, [1910] 1 Ch. 777; Fatalal v. Dayalal, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 218, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 167.

605. 2nd Proviso—Acceptance of rent after suit :—Acceptance of rent by the landlord from the tenant, after the institution of a suit for eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by the tenant for breach of a condition in the lease, does not operate as a waiver of the forfeiture—Padmanabhaya v. Ranga, 34 Mad. 161 (162); Mazhoor v. Podiyapurayil, 8 M.L.T. 99, 1910 M.W.N. 484, 6 I.C. 264. Where the lessors brought ejectment against the tenant on the ground of forfeiture for breaches of covenants which provided for re-entry, it was held that a distraint for rent after commencement of the action did not operate as a waiver, and the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment—Grimwood v. Moss, 7 C.P. 360. See also Mt. Gindori v. Sham Lal, A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 330 (F.B.). If the suit for ejectment is brought on the ground of forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and after such suit the tenant pays rent, the rule in sec. 114 will apply.

113. A notice given under section 111, clause (h), is waived, with the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given, by any act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting.

Waiver of notice to quit.

Illustrations.

(a) A, the lessor, gives B, the lessee, notice to quit the property leased. The notice expires, B tenders, and A accepts, rent which has become due in respect of the property since the expiration of the notice. The notice is waived.

(b) A, the lessor, gives B, the lessee, notice to quit the property leased. The notice expires, and B remains in possession. A gives to B as lessee a second notice to quit. The first notice is waived.

606. Scope of section :—This section deals with the waiver of notice to quit just as the last section deals with the waiver of forfeiture. But the distinction between the two lies in this: a forfeiture can be waived without the lessee being a consenting party thereto; it is entirely at the option of the lessor to waive the forfeiture or not. But in a waiver of a notice to quit the express or implied consent of the lessee is necessary; in other words, a notice to quit cannot be waived without the assent of both the lessor and lessee—Blyth v. Dennett, (1853) 13 C.B. 178 (180). Thus under this section a notice is waived by an act showing the person giving notice showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting provided there co-exists the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given. When both the landlord and tenant contends that by acceptance of rent the old tenancy on old terms continued then the old tenancy within the default clause also continued—Ranjit v. Mohitosh, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1187. The parties must be ad idem in making a new agreement—Navnilal v. Baburao, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 132, I.L.R. 1945 Bom. 68. Secs. 113 and 116 have not made the Indian law different from the English law—ibid. See also Muralidhar v. Tara Dye, A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 349 where in the circumstances of the case it was held that a letter sent by the lessor after notice to quit, demanding possession of the premises did not constitute waiver of the notice; nor was there any waiver because the lessee was allowed to collect rent and pay taxes. See also Hindusing v. Nihalkaranji, infra. The parties must come to a definite agreement; otherwise there can be no waiver. The mere fact that negotiations and discussions which did not come to anything took place between the parties, subsequent to the notice to quit, does not show that there was waiver—Thei Un v. Mahomed Ajnm, 6 Bur. L.J. 164, 104 I.C. 335, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 276 (277).

A waiver to be effective must be made by the entire body of joint owners—Motilal v. Basant Lal, A.I.R. 1956 All. 175. There can be no waiver after the institution of the suit for ejectment—Ibid. The question of waiver is one of intention and the acceptance of rent after the expiry of the notice to quit does not necessarily operate as waiver—Harbhajan Singh v. Munshi Ram, A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 246. Acceptance of rent by the landlord for seven months after the termination of the tenancy by a notice to quit amounts to a waiver of the notice to quit even though the tenant unsuccessfully claims to be a permanent tenant—Kapur Chand v. Kanji, A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 346.

Though this section is in terms inapplicable to agricultural leases, as based on general principles, it will apply to such leases. In such cases a reasonable notice to quit only is necessary and the notice will be waived only where there is in effect an agreement to restore the old tenancy—Hindusingh v. Nihalkaranji, A.I.R. 1954 M.B. 37. In the last cited case it was held on the facts that payment of rent in the case was not to the landlord but to his servant who had no authority to accept it, hence the notice was not waived. Where a landlord applies for possession on the ground of personal cultivation after notice to quit and thereafter files a suit for rent for a period subsequent to the application for possession both the notice to quit and the order of possession are waived—Bapurao v. Waman, A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 179 (Nag.). Acceptance of rent for a period prior to the termination of tenancy does not operate as waiver—Ved Prakash v. Din Dayal, 1961 All. L.J. 637. If subsequent to the notice to quit validly given rent is accepted without reservation or condition the notice is waived—M/s. Mehra C. L. v. Kharak Singh, 70 Punj. L. R. (D.) 55. Receipt of rent subsequent to the notice to quit and pending suit, by itself, does not amount to waiver; the intention to waive must be established—Saleh Bros. v. K. Rajendran, (1969) 1 M.L.J. 247.

Where after the notice to quit has been served and the ejectment proceeding instituted, the landlord has claimed and accepted rent which has accrued after the expiration of the notice, such claim and acceptance of rent would amount to a waiver of the notice to quit. But a claim for arrears of rent due prior to the ejectment, proceedings, even though such claim is made after the notice to quit was served, does not constitute a waiver of the notice to quit—Shah Wali Ahmad v. Hussaini Begum, 2 P.L.J. 595, 42 I.C. 655. See also Khumani Saktey Lal, A.I.R. 1952 A. 579; Kamlapat v. Manho Bibi, A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 127; Ilahibux v. Munir Khan, A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 219, 1953 N.L.J. 147. The question of waiver is a question of fact—Maharana Shri Bhagwati Singhjee v. Keshulal, A.I. R. 1963 Raj 113.

Where subsequent rent is accepted after the notice to quit whether before or after a suit for ejectment has been filed, the landlord thereby shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. It cannot be argued on the analogy of the second proviso to sec. 112, that the acceptance of rent after the suit for ejectment has been filed does not amount to a waiver of the notice to quit; for had it been intended that acceptance of rent after suit should not operate as a waiver in the case of a notice to quit, a proviso similar to that in sec. 112 would have been incorporated in sec. 113—Maniklal v. Kadambini, 43 C.L.J. 272, 94 I.C. 156, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 763. Ram Dayal v. Jowla Prasad, A.I.R. 1966 All. 623. But see Purusottam v. Ram Chandra, 1960 M.P.L.J. 631 and other cases noted below where it has been held that mere acceptance of rent does not necessarily operate as waiver. Plaintiff accepted rent from the tenant defendant after the termination of the monthly tenancy by a notice to quit and also after the institution of the suit for eviction. The defendant was a statutory tenant during the period for which rent was accepted under the local law. Held that the acceptance of rent did not amount to a waiver of the notice to quit —Pulin Bihari v. Lila, A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 106. This view was accepted on appeal—Pulin v. Lila, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 627. Illustration (a) to s. 113 is not applicable to a lease governed by control laws—Narayana Tyengar v. Subba Rao, A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 113.

If within the time fixed in the notice to quit rent already due from the lessee for a period prior to the date on which he has to vacate is accepted by the lessor, such acceptance does not amount a waiver—Ram Sarup v. Gayatri Devi, A.I.R. 1952 All. 863. Where by an arrangement between the lessor and the lessee municipal taxes paid by the latter would be set off against the rent, any tax paid by the lessee after service of the notice to quit would not constitute a waiver of the notice—Sant Kuer v. Ganesh, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 137, 27 Pat. 695. Withdrawal of rent deposited by a statutory tenant does not operate as waiver—Bhagat Ram v. Keshabdeo, A.I.R. 1965 Assam 55. Acceptance of rent from a statutory tenant for a period subsequent to the period of the notice to quit does not amount to a waiver of the notice to quit—Hari Shankar v. Chaitanya Kumar, 1968 All. L.J. 387.

Illustration (a) shows that the rent accepted must be for a period after the notice. The effect of a second notice to quit and of a waiver of forfeiture is that the determination of the lease under cls. (g) and (h) of sec. 111 does not take effect. The tenancy that runs after the waiver is not a fresh tenancy—Chotey Lal v. Sheo Shankar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 478. The mere fact that a second notice to quit is given when the first notice is found defective or is waived does not affect the permission granted under the U. P. Act III of 1947—ibid. See in this connection Ram Sarup v. Gayatri Devi, supra. If a tenant on receipt of a notice on April 11, 1959 requiring him to pay arrears within one month and asking him to vacate by April 30, 1959 sends a cheque on June 25, for arrears of rent and also for rent upto June and the landlord after accepting the cheque sends a second notice to quit on July 9 asking the tenant to vacate by the end of July, suit on second notice is competent—Mangilal v. Sujan Chand, A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 101.

Mere production of rent receipts for periods subsequent to the termination of the tenancy by notice to quit should not be sufficient to prove an agreement to continue the tenancy so as to constitute a waiver of notice when the rent is paid for the protection of his rights under the Rent Control Act—Manindra v. Man Singh, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 342; Babulal v. Hanuman Prasad, 1964 All. L.J. 1143; Ganga Narain v. Bal Krishna Dass, A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 356. Where the landlord even after the service of notice to quit and the institution of the ejectment suit continues his proceedings for fixing the standard rent, this is not sufficient to show that the landlord had waived the notice to quit—Joy Kumar v. S. K. Choudhury, A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 130; Commissioners of Hazaribagh Municipality v. Fulchand Agarwalla, A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 434.

A notice to quit may be waived only by mutual consent, whereas forfeiture may be waived by the unilateral act of the lessor—Hirajibhai v. Balarambhai, A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 125. Where a tenant continues in possession even after the receipt of the notice to pay enhanced rent or to quit, he accepts the enhanced rent and consents to the waiver of the notice to quit—Hossankhan v. Pandit Sharada Charan, A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 233. Where there is a repudiation of the tenancy a mere demand for rent for the period subsequent to the termination of the tenancy by a notice to quit does not constitute a waiver—Pran Mal v. Onkar Nath, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 128. A mere combination of the claim for both rent and damages for the period subsequent to the expiration of the notice does not operate as waiver—Ibid. Where the landlord accepts rent for a period subsequent to the period of the notice on the tenant's assurance to vacate as the house is too small there is no waiver—Kamaksha v. Parwatibai, A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 192. Where the landlord files a suit on a notice to quit demanding rent in arrears and damages, the notice is not waived by acceptance of sums sent by money order after the institution of the suit—Laxminarayan v. Jaisiram, 1960 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 52.

114. Where a lease of immoveable property has determined by forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and the lessor sues to eject the lessee, if, at the hearing of the suit, the lessee pays or tenders to the lessor the rent in arrear, together with interest thereon and his full costs of the suit, or gives such security as the Court thinks sufficient for making such payment within fifteen days, the Court may, in lieu of making a decree for ejectment pass an order relieving the lessee against the forfeiture ; and thereupon the lessee shall hold the property leased as if the forfeiture had not occurred.

Relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent.

607. Principle :—This section is based upon the principle that as a right of re-entry was intended merely as a security for rent, the lessor, by the lessee's bringing the rent into Court, recovered full compensation and was put into his original position. The proper rule, as established by judicial decisions, is that if at any time the relief is asked the position has been altered so that relief cannot be granted without causing injuries to third parties relief will be refused. If no injustice will be done, there is no real discretion and the Court should make the order—S. K. Shaw v. Brij Raj, A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 475, 30 P.L.T. 183.

Scope :—This Act does not apply to agricultural lease, but the principle of this section may be acted upon in case of such lease. A condition in a lease which enables the landlord to re-enter on non-payment of rent is regarded as penal, and should be relieved against by the Court, even though the case does not fall under this Act—Vaguran v. Rangayyanger, 15 Mad. 125 (126) ; S. K. Shaw v. Brij Raj, supra. This section will apply to relieve the tenant against forfeiture even though the case is governed by the special provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act. The Transfer of Property Act must not be deemed to have been abrogated by the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act which is an Act of a Local Government—Ahindra v. Twiss, 49 Cal. 150 (160), A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 394, 70 I.C. 75.

For attracting the provisions of this section the lease must be expressed for a term and on breach of the covenant to pay rent at a specified time the lessor must have a right to re-enter—Pandit v.

Narsinghdas, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 207, I.L.R. 1950 Nag. 870. Forfeiture in the technical sense employed in this section with reference to cl. (g) of sec. 111 is incurred in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter, and even in such a case the lessor has to give notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease—Bhagwant v. Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 129, 54 Bom.L.R. 833. Where the conditions of the lease are not strictly complied with, forfeiture cannot be relieved against—Shammugam v. Annalakshmi, A.I.R. 1950 F.C. 38, (1950) 1 M.L.J. 683. In this case subsequent acceptance of payment of rent was held not to amount to waiver.

This section has been enacted to relieve the tenant from the extreme penalty of forfeiture to which the literal enforcement of his contract might have otherwise exposed him. Under this section the Court has a discretion to relieve him against forfeiture and not to make a decree for ejectment, if the lessee pays or tenders the rent in arrears with interest and full costs of suit—Kundan v. Kallu, 12 A.L.J. 650, 24 I.C. 79. Provisions for forfeiture of leases for non-payment of rent are intended merely as a security for the non-payment of rent, and a Court of Equity will relieve the lessee and set aside a forfeiture, on his bringing the rent into Court. The principle of English law has been recognized by the Legislature in sec. 114 of the T. P. Act—Megh Lal v. Raj Kumar, 34 Cal. 358 (368). Thus, where the landlord had taken a large sum by way of premium under a registered lease for ten years, and the rent was payable on the first of every lunar month failing which the lease was to stand cancelled, held that it was against equity and good conscience to allow the landlord to cancel the lease, after having taken a large sum as premium, simply on account of a few days' delay in payment of rent, especially in a case in which the lessee had not even then taken possession of the leased premises—Kallan v. Jawahir, 5 Lah.L.J. 99, 71 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 49 (50). And this section gives the lessee the last chance of saving himself from the operation of the forfeiture clause.

It should be noted that this section relieves only against forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and does not relieve against forfeiture occasioned by other causes. Section 114A has been newly enacted to give relief against forfeiture due to breach of an express condition.

Under this section the Court is invested with a discretionary power to grant relief which it may or may not exercise in favour of the tenant. It cannot be said that merely because the tenant has complied with the conditions laid down in sec. 114 by depositing in Court the rent in arrear he becomes entitled as of right to the relief. The Court has a discretion to give relief or not, according to the special circumstances of the case, having regard to the conduct of the tenant and to any equities that may have arisen between the date of forfeiture and the application for relief—Debendra v. Cohen, 54 Cal. 485, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 908 (910), 106 I.C. 477; Gopinath Auddy v. Thakars Press and Directories Ltd., 66 C.W.N. 449. The discretion has to be exercised on proper judicial grounds, and if the Court of first instance has exercised that discretion, and there is nothing to show that there was anything wrong in principle, the Appellate Court should not interfere. But if the Appellate Court finds that the discretion has been exercised by the first Court in a capricious and whimsical manner, and not on any judicial principle, then the Appellate Court should interfere—Ramabrahmon v. Rami Reddi, 1927 M.W.N. 305, 108 I.C. 273, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 250 (253). Provided that the principles on which the trial Court acts, no Court of second appeal will interfere with the exercise of the discretion—Ladhuram v. Chimmiram, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 86, 48 Bom.L.R. 608. In exercising the discretion the delay, the conduct of the parties and the difficulties which the landlord has been to should be weighed against the tenant. It is a maxim of equity that a person who comes in equity must do equity and must come with clean hands and if the conduct of the tenant is such that it disentitles him to relief in equity, then the Court's hands are not tied to exercise it in his favour—Namdeo v. Narmadabai, A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 228 ; Dwarkaprasad Arya v. Omprakash Mohta, A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 612.

The mere fact that the lessee pleads payment of rent which he fails to prove does not in itself disentitle him to the relief given under this section—Ramakrishna v. Baburaya, 23 M.L.J. 715, 24 I.C. 139 (141).

The principle of this section is applicable not only to the original lessee but also to the transferee of the lessee (where the lessee is permitted to transfer); the transferee by act of parties or by operation of law must be deemed to stand in the shoes of the transferor and is as much entitled to be relieved against as the original tenant—Ahmad Husain v. Riaz Ahmad, 12 A.L.J. 1085, 25 I.C. 186 ; Ladhuram v. Chimmiram, supra.

Although this section does not apply to agricultural leases, still the Court has got power to relieve against forfeiture in case of such leases independently of this section, on such conditions as may appear equitable on the facts of each particular case, and is not bound by the conditions of this section—Rama Krishna v. Fernandez, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 239, 98 I.C. 851. An appellate Court has also power to grant relief against forfeiture when this section does not in terms apply to the case—Shrikishanlal v. Ramnath, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 229, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 877.

Relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent was given in case of leases created prior to the passing of this Act. See Narayana v. Narayana, 6 Mad. 327 (330).

608. Payment or tender of rent :—Under this section there must be an actual payment or tender before the Court. Mere readiness to pay is not enough. The advantage of this section should be taken at the earliest opportunity and not at the appellate stage—Habib v. Mt. Keoti, A.I.R. 1946 All. 328, 1946 A.L.J. 121 ; Bhusan Chandra Paul v. Bengal Coal Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 63. But after the landlord has refused to receive the rents, it is useless to make the tender any more—Shrikishanlal v. Ramnath, supra. Since the lessee is allowed to pay the arrears of rent at the time of hearing, it follows that the lessee is at liberty to tender the amount at any time before the institution of the suit, and the lessor cannot refuse to accept it. If the lessor refuses to accept it and files a suit for ejectment, he does so at his own risk, and the lessee will not be liable for forfeiture, not to pay the costs of the suit—Krishnaswami v. Natal Emigration Board, 17 Mad. 216.

If the tenant deposits the rent with the Rent Controller, under the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act, that would be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section and would relieve the tenant against forfeiture—Ahindra v. Twiss, 49 Cal. 150, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 394, 70 I.C. 75.

The lessee is not entitled to the benefit of this section when he omits to make any tender before suit, or to pay the money into Court, and on the contrary pleads payment unsuccessfully—Narayana v. Handu, 15 M.L.J. 210.

“Rent in arrear” :—The expression includes time-barred rents, also the word “lessor” includes the transferee of the lessor—Vamana v. Venkatu, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 116 (117), 160 I.C. 530; Janab Vellathi v. K. Kadervel Thayammal, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 232. Though in a suit for rent the landlord cannot recover arrears for more than three years, yet in a suit for ejectment by the landlord on the ground of forfeiture of the lease owing to the non-payment of rent, the Court can relieve the tenant against the forfeiture only on condition of his paying the full arrears of rent, though it is for a longer period than three years—Vasudeva v. Krishna Udpa, 44 Mad. 629, 40 M.L.J. 460, 62 I.C. 583.

The rent to be tendered under this section need not be the rent stipulated in the lease; if a standard rent has been fixed by the Rent Controller under the Calcutta Rent Act, the tenant may deposit that rent, and by so doing will be entitled to relief against forfeiture—Ahindra v. Twiss, supra.

The “rent in arrear” means not only the rent claimed in the suit but includes all that is due to the lessor up to the date when the application for ejectment is heard—Dhurrumtolia Properties Ltd. v. Dhunbai, 58 Cal. 311, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 457, 133 I.C. 87. Rent includes the entire amount which the tenant is liable to pay upto the date of tender—Narsing Das v. Peremshwari Das, A.I.R. 1962 All. 65.

609. Forfeiture and nullity :—In the old clause (g) of sec. 111, it was stated that forfeiture could take place upon the breach of an express condition which provided that on breach thereof the ‘lessor may re-enter’, or the ‘lease shall become void’. So that, no distinction was made between a case in which a lessor could re-enter on breach of an express condition and a case in which the lease became void on breach of the condition. In other words, the Act made no difference between a condition of forfeiture and a clause of nullity. And in either case the Court could grant relief under sec. 114. Therefore, where there was a covenant in a lease that ‘on failure to pay rent the lease shall become null and void’, this section operated to relieve against the forfeiture, in spite of the nullity clause, and protected the tenant from ejectment for non-payment of rent, if he paid the rent in Court—Hiranandan v. Ramdhar, 1 Pat. 363, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 528, 69 I.C. 886.

In the present clause (g) of sec. 111, however, the words “or the lease shall become void” have been omitted, and the ruling of the above Patna case is no longer of any importance.

610. Relief when period of grace is allowed :—The equitable relief given to the lessee under this section is provided as a matter of grace.

And the Court will not grant any relief under this section where a period of grace has already been allowed by the lease itself for the payment of rent. Thus, where the lease contains a provision to pay rent on the 15th of April, but no forfeiture is provided for on account of default of such payment, and it further provides that if the default continues until December then the lease is to be forfeited, held that the lease provides a sufficiently long period of grace, and that if the tenant fails to pay within December and the landlord has consequently to sue for ejectment upon forfeiture, the Court will not grant relief to the lessee by allowing him to pay the rent during the hearing of the suit—Narayana v. Vesudeva, 28 Mad. 389; Narayana v. Handu, 15 M.L.J. 210; Mahalakshmi v. Lakshmi, 21 M.L.J. 960, 12 I.C. 456; Adhiragi v. Billa, 20 M.L.J. 944, 6 I.C. 438; Arju v. Narayana, 19 N.L.R. 50, 71 I.C. 445, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 193. But the Bombay High Court does not favour this view, and holds that the tenant should be relieved against forfeiture, even though the rent was not paid within the period of grace allowed by the lease—Krishnaji v. Sitaram, 45 Bom. 300, 59 I.C. 769, 22 Bom.L.R. 1439. In some other cases the Madras High Court has said that the question whether a tenant is entitled to relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent must depend upon the facts of the particular case, and that the Courts have power to grant relief even in cases where a period of grace is allowed for payment of the rent. The condition of forfeiture of a tenancy should be regarded as penal in its nature and the equitable provision of sec. 114 should generally be given effect to—Ramabrahman v. Rami Reddi, 1927 M.W.N. 305, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 250 (252), 108 I.C. 273; Appayya v. Mahomed Behari, 29 M.L.J. 381, 30 I.C. 596. This holds good equally in the case of a lease for agricultural purposes—Tripura v. Venkateswarlu, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 841, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 586. Sec. 114 is not applicable to a forfeiture on account of default under the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956—Ganesh Chandra Nandy v. Chatterjee Brothers, 70 C.W.N. 676. Sec. 114 has no application in a suit on a notice to quit—Ram Pakhpal v. Dropodi Devi, 1965 All. L.J. 249. Relief under this section cannot be invoked on principles of equity—Tippayya v. Rama Narayana, A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 131. When there is no forfeiture under sec. 111 (g), no relief under sec. 114 can be given—Ibid.

611. Which Court can grant relief :—Besides the original Court, the Appellate Court also can grant relief against forfeiture incurred for non-payment of rent, on the tenant making the payment or tender of the arrears of rent at the hearing of the appeal, even though such offer was not made in the lower Court—Praduman Kumar v. Virendra, A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1349; Vidyapurna v. Rangappaya, 25 M.L.J. 486, 21 I.C. 405; Janab Vellathi v. K. Kaderval Thayammal, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 232. Relief against forfeiture can be given even in the case of an agricultural lease and the court is not bound by the condition laid down in this section—Janab Vellathi v. K. Kaderval Thayammal, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 232.

Relief after decree :—The execution Court also has power to grant relief against forfeiture, if the decree is a consent decree. Thus, where a compromise decree contained a stipulation that on failure by the defendant to pay the rent within the time fixed for each year, the lease was to be forfeited, and the defendant not having tendered the rent for a particular year, the decree-holder applied for possession of the lands according to the terms of the decree, whereupon the defendant contended that relief ought to be given to him, held that it was competent to the Court to relieve the defendant against the forfeiture by allowing him to pay the rent—Nagappa v. Venkat Rao, 24 Mad. 165 ; Krishnabai v. Hari, 31 Bom. 15 (F.B.) (overruling Shirekulli v. Mahabyla, 10 Bom. 435). See also Gajanan v. Pandurang, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 290, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 240 ; Ladhwam v. Chimmiram, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 36, 48 Bom. L.R. 608. If a decree, which is not a consent decree, was to the effect that “if the defendant pays to the plaintiffs the arrears of rent together with interest and costs on or before the 20th February, he be relieved as against forfeiture, and in case of default, the defendant be evicted and plaintiffs be put into possession of the respective land,” and the defendant failed to pay within 20th February, whereupon the plaintiffs applied for getting possession of the property, held that the decree not being a consent decree, no relief could be granted, even though it appeared that the defendant made some payments after 20th February which were accepted by the plaintiffs—Giridharadoss v. Para Appadurai, 51 Mad. 157, 54 M.L.J. 316, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 193 (194), 107 I.C. 792. See also Perdan v. Saraswati, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 148. In Krishna Rao v. Balwant, 27 Bom. L.R. 678, 89 I.C. 217, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 404, relief was granted on the special facts of the case, although it was not a consent decree.

Relief may be given to a tenant under this section even though he is not entitled to any relief under sec. 4 of Madhya Pradesh Accommodation Control Act by reason of his failure to pay arrears within one month of the service of notice—Rajaram Dhaniram v. Ramswaroop Sunderlal, A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 56. Relief may be given in respect of agricultural holdings—Palaniswamy v. Kundappa, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 96.

114A. Where a lease of immoveable property has determined by forfeiture for a breach of an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter, no suit for ejectment shall lie unless and until the lessor has served on the lessee a notice in writing—

Relief against forfeiture in certain other cases.

- (a) specifying the particular breach complained of; and
- (b) if the breach is capable of remedy, requiring the lessee to remedy the breach ;

and the lessee fails, within a reasonable time from the date of the service of the notice, to remedy the breach, if it is capable of remedy.

Nothing in this section shall apply to an express condition against the assigning, under-letting, parting with the possession, or disposing, of the property leased, or to an express condition relating to forfeiture in case of non-payment of rent.

611A. This section has been inserted by sec. 58 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

Prior to the enactment of this section it was held that the Court could not give relief where the forfeiture took place by reason of breach of condition in the lease, e.g., breach of a covenant to repair—Debendra v. Cohen, 54 Cal. 485, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 908 (910), 106 I.C. 477. The present section would give relief to the tenant in such cases.

The Act is not in force in the Punjab and the technical provisions of this section do not apply to that Province—Md. Hussain v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 330 (338), 41 P.L.R. 895, 186 I.C. 45.

The provisions of this section have no retrospective effect and cannot govern suits instituted before its enactment—Ibid. See also Note 1A, ante.

The object of this section is to give the lessee a clear intimation as to the breach complained of. Once this purpose is substantially complied with, mere technical defects should not stand in the way of the lessor from availing himself of the right of forfeiture—Wood v. Spain, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 313, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 758. Two notices in writing, one under cl. (g) of sec. 111 and one under this section are not necessary. This section must be deemed to have specified the nature of the notice required under cl. (g) of sec. 111—Ibid. Where the notice of forfeiture was not in accordance with sec. 114A, the Court gave relief against forfeiture of an agricultural lease—Souza v. Louis, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 119, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 362. Where there was a breach of the covenant and the lessor gave the necessary notice of forfeiture, forfeiture followed as a matter of legal consequence. As the breach in this case was capable of remedy and the lessee failed to remedy the breach, the Court had no power to grant relief against forfeiture—Charusila v. Madan Theatres, Ltd., A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 536, 90 C.L.J. 263.

A landlord cannot enforce his right of forfeiture of the tenancy, unless and until he gives an opportunity to the tenant to remedy the breach—Fatelal v. Dayalal, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 218, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 167. There is however no provision in the Act for granting relief against forfeiture for denial of the landlord's title—Mt. Gindori v. Sham Lal, A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 330 (F.B.), 48 P.L.R. 487. Where a person has never been a lease-holder no question under secs. 111 and 114A arises—Md. Azim v. Pateswari, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 105. As this section has no application to a lease created before April 1, 1930, such a lease can validly be terminated on the ground of forfeiture by a notice that satisfies the requirements of sec. 111 (g) but not those of sec. 114A—Sakuthalammal v. Chandrasekhar Reddiar, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 195.

The second para lays down that this section does not apply to a case of breach of an express covenant against assigning the property leased. See sec. 14 (6), Conveyancing Act, 1881, reproduced in sec. 146 (8), Law of Property Act, 1925. The reason is obvious: relief can be given against forfeiture for breach of a condition, when the breach is capable of remedy, but when it is incapable of remedy by reason of the fact that at the time the relief is asked for the position of parties has been altered, and the interests of third parties have intervened, the relief cannot be given, for to do so would be to cause injury to third parties—Newbolt v. Bingham, (1895) 72 L.T. 852; Stanhope v. Hanworth, (1886) 3 T.L.R. 34. In a Madras case, it was likewise held, following the English law, that there was no relief where the tenant forfeited the tenancy by reason of an alienation of the leasehold interest without the consent of the landlord—Krishna Shetti v. Gilbert Pinto, 42 Mad. 654 (659).

Two transactions, one a sale and the other a lease, took place in respect of the same property on the same date. Under the first the purchaser was to pay the price in certain instalments, and in case of default in respect of any instalment, the seller would have the option to extend the time for payment of the instalment up to three months; but if he did not extend the time or if the instalment was not paid within the time extended, the entire balance due would become immediately payable and if the purchaser did not pay the same within a month of being called upon to do so, the seller would have the right to rescind the agreement, forfeit the instalment paid and sue either for specific performance or for damages. The lease provided that in case of default in the payment of any instalment under the agreement for sale, the landlord would have the right to re-enter: held that the dates for payment of the instalments were of the essence of the contract and non-payment of any instalment on the due date was a breach incapable of remedy. Accordingly, on the occurrence of such a breach a notice terminating the lease forthwith was a good notice—Provat v. Bengal Central Bank, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 589, 42 C.W.N. 761.

Where in an agricultural lease there was a covenant against alienation, and the tenant mortgaged his land, whereupon the landlord sued to eject the tenant, it was held that relief should be given to the tenant, firstly, because it was an agricultural lease which is exempted from the T. P. Act and therefore the restrictions contained in this Act did not apply; and secondly, because there was no absolute alienation, but only a mortgage. And so the Court gave the tenant three months' time within which to release the land from the mortgage—Janardhan v. Mahalappa, 50 Bom. 450, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 304 (305), 94 I.C. 1054.

But neither the Transfer of Property Act nor the English law gives relief to a tenant, where the forfeiture takes place by reason of denial of landlord's title, unless the tenant can prove that the denial was occasioned by fraud, mistake or accident of the landlord and that the tenant himself had not acted with carelessness or negligence—Kemalooti v. Muhamed, 41 Mad. 629 (631), following Barrow v. Isaacs, (1891) 1 Q.B. 417 (per Lord Esher, J.).

115. The surrender, express or implied, of a lease of immoveable property does not prejudice an under-lease of the property or any part thereof previously granted by the lessee, on terms and conditions substantially the same (except as regards the amount of rent) as those of the original lease; but, unless the surrender is made for the purpose of obtaining a new lease, the rent payable by, and the contracts binding on, the under-lessee shall be respectively payable to and enforceable by the lessor.

Effect of surrender and forfeiture on under-leases.

The forfeiture of such a lease annuls all such under-lease, except where such forfeiture has been procured by the lessor in fraud of the under-lessees, or relief against the forfeiture is granted under section 114.

612. Principle and scope :—"It is a rule of law that if there is a lessee, and he has created an underlease or any other legal interest, then if the lease is forfeited, the under-lessee, or the person who claims under the lessee, loses his estate as well as the lessee himself; but if the lessee surrenders, he cannot, by his own voluntary act in surrendering, prejudice the estate of the under-lessee or the person who claims under him"—Great Western Railway Co. v. Smith, 2 Ch. 235.

This section is confined only to underleases, and does not apply to the assignee of a lessee. Therefore, a denial of the lessor's title by the original lessee will not work a forfeiture against the assignee of the lessee. The second para of this section will not apply to the case, as it speaks of the effect of forfeiture on under-leases. "The Transfer of Property Act very emphatically recognises that the interests of the lessee in the property may be transferred to an assignee and this may be done without the consent of the lessor; and if that can be done it seems to me to follow as a matter of reason that when the entire interest has been transferred by the lessee to the assignee, then the assignee is not responsible for the acts done by the lessee"—per Heaton, J. in Gopal Jaycant v. Shrinivas, 42 Bom. 734 (741), 20 Bom. L.R. 820, 47 I.C. 635. Where the tenant, subsequent to a mortgage, surrenders his land only to benefit the landlord at the expense of the mortgagee, the tenancy continues for the purpose of preserving the rights of the mortgagee—Kanchadilal v. Jabbarsha, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 171 (174), 166 I.C. 686; see also Prem Narayan v. Jhado, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 129 .

Where a lessee has given a sub-lease and thereafter surrenders the head-lease to the lessor, the position of the sub-lessee remains unaffected and he becomes the lessee of the original lessor on the same terms as in the sublease. If, however, the lessee surrenders the head-lease for the purpose of obtaining a new lease, the sub-lessee continues as before to hold under the lessee—Subman v. Darabshaw, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 144, 41 Bom. L.R. 25, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 98 (100). A lease by voluntary surrender of his lease cannot prejudice the right of his under-lessee—Yusuf v. Jyotish, 59 Cal. 739.

Under this section, the sub-lease becomes void when the original lease becomes forfeited—Sheikh Yusuf v. Jyotish, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 241; if the interest of the original lessee is not forfeited but merely sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by his lessor for arrears of rent, the interest of the sub-lessee is not affected by such sale—Vishnu Atmaram v. Anant Vishnu, 14 Bom. 384. In case of forfeiture of a lease the under-leases become extinguished inspite of any contract to the contrary between the lessor and the lessee—Bhupatrai Hirachand v. Choonilal Chunder, 70 C.W.N. 62.

Whatever rights the sub-lessee may have against the lessee, do not affect the rights of the landlord. So far as the landlord is concerned, the sub-lessee does not exist at all, and any proceedings by which the landlord has got a decree against the lessee would bind the sub-lessee—Devaraju v. V. S. Raja, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 356, (1952) 2 M.L.J. 179. When the landlord acquired a right to evict his tenant under sec. 7 of the Madras Act XV of 1946 after giving a valid notice to quit, the sub-tenant who cannot claim higher rights than the tenant is liable to be evicted. The fact that he was not made a party to the proceedings before the Rent Controller does not affect the question, as he would be bound by the order passed against the tenant obtained without any fraud or collusion—Parthasarathy v. Krishnamoorthy, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 387, (1948) 2 M.L.J. 391.

Where a decree for ejectment is passed against the tenant and the sub-tenant, the latter has a right of appeal; but if the decree has become final as against the tenant, the sub-tenant would be bound by the decree on the second para of this section, and the appeal by the sub-tenant alone would be incompetent—Shankarrao v. Kisanlal, A.I.R. 1950 M.B. 19.

116. If a lessee or under-lessee of property remains in possession thereof after the determination of the lease granted to the lessee, and the lessor or his legal representative accepts rent from the lessee or under-lessee, or otherwise assents to his continuing in possession, the lease is, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, renewed from year to year, or from month to month, according to the purpose for which the property is leased, as specified in section 106.

Illustrations.

(a) A lets a house to B for five years. B underlets the house to C at a monthly rent of Rs. 100. The five years expire, but C continues in possession of the house and pays the rent to A. C's lease is renewed from month to month.

(b) A lets a farm to B for the life of C. C dies, but B continues in possession with A's assent. B's lease is renewed from year to year.

Scope :—For the application of this section two things are necessary: (1) the lessee must be in possession after expiry of the lease; and (2) the lessor or his representative should accept rent or otherwise assent to the lessee's continuing in possession. What is contemplated is that the payment of rent and its acceptance should be made at such a time and in such a manner as to be equivalent to the landlord assenting to the continuance in possession—Karnani Industrial Bank v. Province of Bengal, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 285, 1951 S.C.J. 407, on appeal from A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 47, 53 C.W.N. 195. Where the landlord had accepted rent for a period subsequent to the determination of the lease nearly a year before its expiry, the landlord's consent to the tenant's continuing in possession could not be inferred—ibid.

This section has to be read along with cl. (a) of sec. 111 which deals with the termination of a tenancy by efflux of time. This section does not affect the rights of the landlord and tenant as contained in secs. 112 and 113—Novnitlal v. Baburao, A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 132, I.L.R. 1945 Bom. 68. The principles are applicable to an agricultural lease—Anantmal v. Lala, A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 88.

This section does not apply to matters arising under the Rent Control Act where after an order for eviction of the tenant, but pending an appeal therefrom and the stay order, the landlord accepts cheques sent by the tenant as rent, the latter does not acquire any fresh right to continue in possession—Kuppuswami v. Mahadeva, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 746 I.L.R. 1950 Mad. 844. See also Ghulam v. Raja Rao, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 436, (1947) 1 M.L.J. 354. Where the person in occupation is not a tenant but a sub-lessee, the doctrine of holding over does not apply—Nawabali v. Md. Ramzan, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 141, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 267.

By cl. (j) of sec. 108 the lessee's right to sublet the whole or part of his interest has been recognized. Where on expiry of the lease the lessor finds a number of sub-lessees continuing in occupation and accepts rent from one or more of them, sec. 116 will apply—Kaikhushiroo v. Bai Jerbia, A.I.R. 1949 F.C. 124, 53 C.W.N. (F.R.) 73, per Patanjali Sastri, J..

In the case of a lease governed by sec. 107 and not by sec. 106 when there is no acceptance of rent by the lessor after the determination of the lease or any agreement by him that the former lessee should remain in possession without the execution of a fresh lease, this section is not applicable—Thakur v. Jagdambika Pratap, A.I.R. 1942 Ohdh 93 (95), 1941 O.W.N. 1065, 196 I.C. 694.

613. English and Indian law :—The rule embodied in this section differs from the English law in this respect that while under this section the term of the new tenancy is decided according to the purpose for which the property is leased, under the English law the tenancy is deemed to continue according to the terms of the original tenancy. Thus, where a lease of land was granted for a term of years, and the property leased was not used for agricultural or manufacturing purposes and was held over by the lessee after the expiration of the term, held according to Indian law that the lessee must be deemed to be a tenant from month to month (sec. 106) and entitled only to 15 days' notice to quit—Troilokya v. Sarat Chandra, 32 Cal. 123; Bijoy Chandra v. Howrah Amta Light Ry., 38 C.L.J. 177, 72 I.C. 98, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 524. See in this connection Khater v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 262, 33 C.W.N. 1207, 125 I.C. 654. The Patna High Court has, however, held that when the tenant is found to be continuing in possession, he will be presumed to be a tenant from year to year in the absence of any evidence that he holds on a different tenure—Ramsundar v. Duthin, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 271, 155 I.C. 367. The Allahabad High Court has also held in a recent case that when the lessee holds over after the expiry of the term fixed by the lease, the relations between the parties are governed by the same terms as are embodied in the original lease—Badal v. Ram Bharosa, A.I.R. 1938 All. 649 (650), (1938) A.L.J. 983. Under the English law, "where a tenant for a term of years holds over after the expiration of lease.....a new tenancy from year to year is thereby created upon the same terms and conditions as those contained in the expired lease so far as the same is applicable to and not inconsistent with the yearly tenancy.....In the absence of any evidence one way or the other, it seems that upon the holding over and payment of rent, the Jury would be directed to find a tenancy on the terms of the expired lease"—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 17th Ed., p. 246.

614. Holding over :—A distinction should be drawn between a tenant continuing in possession after the determination of the lease, without the consent of the landlord, and a tenant doing so with the landlord's consent. The former is called a tenant 'by sufferance' in the language of English law; the latter class of tenant is called a tenant 'holding over' or a tenant-at-will. A tenant by sufferance is no better than a mere trespasser and he can be turned out at any time without any notice to quit—Woodfall, p. 366; Barry v. Goodman, 2 M. & W. 768; Moore v. Makham Singh, 53 I.C. 180 (P.C.); Bansidhar v. Ram Charan, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 401 (403), 1940 O.W.N. 586, 189 I.C. 488; Punjab National Bank v. Chaudhury, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 392. The tenancy-at-sufferance is merely a fiction to avoid continuance in possession operating as a trespass. It therefore cannot be created by contract, and arises only by implication of law when a person who has been in possession under a lawful title continues in possession, after the lawful title has determined, without the consent of the person entitled. The tenancy-at-will again arises by implication of law in cases of permissive occupation—Mozam v. Ananda, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 341, 46 C.W.N. 366. "The difference between a tenancy-at-will and a tenancy by sufferance is that in the one case the tenant holds by right and has an estate or term in the land, precarious though it may be, and the relationship of the lessor and the lessee subsists between the parties; in the other, the tenant holds wrongfully and against the will and permission of the lord, and has no estate at all in the occupied premises"—Addison's Law of Contract, 10th Edn., p. 618. Thus, if a Hindu woman in possession of a raiyati holding as a limited owner grants a mokarari lease of the holding, the lease is valid only during the lifetime of the limited owner, and after her death the reversioner may treat the tenant as trespasser and sue to eject him without giving any formal notice to quit—Raghubir Singh v. Jethu Mahton, 2 Pat. 171, 4 P.L.T. 396, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 130, 70 I.C. 290. But where a Mohant leased a house site for 95 years, and after his removal from the gadi his successor continued to receive the rent from the lessee and then instituted a suit to eject him, a fresh tenancy was deemed to have been created from month to month—Har Nath v. Mohar Singh, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 675, 32 P.L.R. 469. Where a lessee holds over after the expiry of his term without the express or implied consent of his landlord, he is only a trespasser and if he is dispossessed by a person claiming under the landlord, he cannot maintain a suit for possession or declaration of title based upon his previous possession—Mathura Prasad v. Naju Khan, 4 P.L.T. 696, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 463, 80 I.C. 568, and 6 P.L.T. 142 (But see Rudrappa v. Narasingrao, 29 Bom. 213, where a tenant by sufferance, who was evicted by his landlord proprio motu, brought a suit against the landlord under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and recovered possession). If he refuses to leave the premises after being requested to depart, and offers any resistance, the landlord may use such force and violence as may be necessary to overcome such resistance—Woodfall, p. 780. But entirely different is the position of tenant holding over, whose possession continues with the consent of the landlord and is therefore not wrongful, and he cannot be ejected without due notice—Chaturi v. Mukund, 7 Cal. 710; Bose A. L. v. Sayed Nayyur Abbas, A.I.R. 1967 All. 209.

In the case of a holding over, it is the acceptance of rent or the express or implied assent of the landlord that has the effect of renewing the lease and not continuing the original lease—Ambar Ali v. Anjab Ali, A.I.R. 1949 Ass. 87. Where in pursuance of an invalid lease the plaintiff got possession and paid rent to the landlord for several years, the plaintiff would be deemed to be a tenant from month to month under this section—Surya Lall v. Tulsi Modak, A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 483. Mere delay in filing a suit for ejectment does not create a tenancy by holding over—Pritilal Devi v. Banke Behari Lal, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 446. Where no rent is paid by the lessee, nor any rent accepted by the lessor after the expiry of the lease and a claim for the rent of the second half of the month though the tenancy expired on the 15th of the month is made through mistake, there is no holding over by the lessee with the consent of the landlord—Ibid.

This section enacts that if after the termination of the lease, the tenant continues in possession, and the landlord accepts rent or otherwise gives consent to his remaining in possession, such action has the effect of converting the tenant by sufferance into a tenant-at-will. But this rule applies only to the original tenant, and not his representatives. Therefore, if the original tenant dies and his representative enters into possession, he does so as a trespasser, and the landlord cannot, by mere assent under this section, convert such representative into a tenant, unless a new tenancy is created by the consent of both parties—Vadapalli v. Dronamraju, 31 Mad. 163. Section 116 deals with the effect of holding over by a lessee, and with the creation of a fresh tenancy by implication. The kind of tenancy under section 116 is only created by law in favour of the original lessee. Therefore section 116 applies only to the case of a lease fixed for a term of years and not a lease for life. The representatives as assignees of the tenant for life will not become tenants from year to year, without the formalities of sed. 107; that is, they can become tenants from year to year only by means of a registered document. They may, of course, become tenants-at-will or for a year without any registered document, that is, by verbal contract—Ram Rachhya v. Kamakhya Narayan, 4 Pat. 139, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 216, 84 I.C. 586, 6 P.L.T. 12. And so, where after the death of the original mukarraridars, who were tenants for life, the heirs remained in possession and paid rent to the lessor, but the receipts were given in the marfatdari form, and the lessor refused to give receipts to the persons paying the rent in their own name, held that the lessor did not recognize the heirs of the mukarraridars as tenants from year to year, that there was not even any relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and that sec. 116 did not apply—Kamakhya Narayan v. Ram Raksha, 7 Pat. 649 (P.C.), 9 P.L.T. 501, 32 C.W.N. 897 (901, 902, 905), A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 146, 109 I.C. 663, affirming Ram Rachhya v. Kamakhya Narayan, supra. Section 116 does not contemplate the holding over by the heirs of the original lessee, and therefore the heirs cannot, by continuing in possession, acquire the status of a tenant holding over after the determination of the lease—Chāran v. Kamākhyā Narayan, 6 P.L.T. 98, 88 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 357. But where the original lessee holds over by consent of the lessor and becomes a tenant, his interest is assignable, and the lessor can sue the assignee for rent from the date of transfer—Bengal National Bank v. Janoki Nath, 54 Cal. 813, 31 C.W.N. 973, 104 I.C. 484, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 725 (730). But see Mahendra Ramayya v. Mahendra Govindu, (1966) 1 Andh. L.T. 424. If on the death of the original tēnant before the expiry of the term of the lease his heirs remain in possession even after the expiry of the original term with the assent of the landlord they will be tenants by holding over—Janardan Swarup v. Devi Prasad, A.I.R. 1959 All. 33.

The holding over by one or more co-tenants without the consent of the others cannot render the person not so holding over liable for rent. In order to make the estate of a deceased co-tenant liable for rent due for holding over, the onus lies heavily on the plaintiff (landlord) to prove clearly and conclusively that after the expiry of the old lease a new contract was made by and between the plaintiff on the one hand and all the co-tenants (including the co-tenant whose estate is sought to be made liable) on the other, making themselves jointly and severally liable to perform the conditions of the tenancy—Brojo Lal Roy v. Belchambers, 9 C.W.N. 340. But where one only of the joint lessees vacated the premises and not the others, all of them were liable to pay the rent till a new agreement was substituted for the original—Maragathammal v. Azimunnissa, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 92.

615. Assent of lessor :—In order to justify a holding over, it must be proved that the landlord has either accepted rent or has otherwise assented to the tenant's continuing in possession—Durgi v. Gobordhan, 19 C.W.N. 525. Punjab National Bank v. Chaudhury, A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 392; Amirchand v. Sadhoram, 1968 All. W.R. (H.C.) 641. Simply because the landlord waited for a number of years for instituting the suit after the formal delivery of possession in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against the tenant the tenant cannot be deemed to have held over—E. H. Christian v. Hari Prasad, A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 158. If absence of dissent continues for a sufficiently long period, it may give rise to an inference of assent by the landlord—Ram Barai Singh v. Tirthu Pada Misra, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 173. Whether a tenancy has been created by holding over is a question of fact—Bhagwan Das Sukul v. Dhanjoy Paul, A.I.R. 1963 Assam 137. Mere delay in filing a suit for eviction after the expiry of the lease does not constitute assent on the part of the landlord—Digambar Narain v. Comm. of Tirhut Division, A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 1 (F.B.). It must be proved that there was a direct consent on the part of the landlord; no implication of consent can arise merely by reason of the landlord's passive failure to take steps to eject the tenant—Govindaswami v. Ramoswami, 30 M.L.J. 492, I.C. 6 (8); Ratan v. Farashi Bibi, 34 Cal. 396. But where after the expiry of the lease, the landlord neither took rents nor brought a suit for ejectment for so long a period as 10 years, it must be presumed that he assented to the holding over, and that the lessee was not to be deemed a trespasser—Safar Ali v. Abdul Majid, 31 C.W.N. 282 (285), 100 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 279. But mere failure by the landlord to take any action against the sub-tenant immediately after expiry of the lease cannot be construed an assent to his continuing the lease. Something more, such as demand of rent, must be shown—Baban v. Champabai, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 336, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 432. If a tenant holds over after the expiry of his lease he ordinarily becomes a trespasser, unless the landlord in some manner signifies his intention of recognizing the continuance of the tenancy, which is sufficiently indicated by the fact that a suit for rent has been instituted—Ramsundar v. Duthin, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 271, 155 I.C. 367. Where after the expiry of the period of the kabuliat, the landlord sued the tenant for rent and obtained a decree, that decree must be held to be an adjudication that after the date of the expiry of the kabuliat, the defendant continued in possession as a tenant and was liable to payment of rent—Balaji v. Ramchandra, 27 Bom. 262. Where the landlord according to his own admission has for 4 or 5 years protested against the tenant holding over, the institution of a rent suit by him for rent does not amount to a consent to the tenant holding over. In such a case the landlord is not entitled to recover rent from the tenant after the expiry of the lease—Bachu Narain v. Md. Umrao, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 555, 21 P.L.T. 336, 190 I.C. 733. But see Monohar Lal v. Braja Kishore, A.I.R. 1957 Mad. Pra. 214. If the landlord brings a suit for damages for use and occupation, it does not convert the defendant into a tenant, and the lease is not renewed—Govindaswami v. Ramaswami, supra. The mere claim of rent after the notice to quit for the period after the expiry of the lease does not operate either as waiver of the notice to quit or holding over—Zaffar Hussain v. Mahabir Prasad, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 206.

The burden of proving that the landlord has assented to the continuance of possession lies on the tenant. Although it is a general presumption of law that when the existence of a relationship is once proved such relationship continues till it is shown to have ceased, still when it appears that the relationship of the parties is such that, but for the existence of some special contract, the landlord would have had a right to eject the tenant, the burden of proving that the latter is entitled to resist ejectment lies on the tenant—Keshav v. Puran, 1 N.L.R. 32; Zaffar v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 206.

Where a landlord accepts rent for a quarter from a tenant holding over, it does not imply a promise by the landlord that the tenant would be allowed to stay for the whole year—Matilal v. Darjeeling Municipality, 17 C.L.J. 167, 18 I.C. 844. If the lessee deposits rent with the Rent Controller under the order of the court in a suit for ejectment and the lessor withdraws the amount so deposited, he cannot be said to have assented to the lessee continuing in possession within the meaning of sec. 116—Panchanan Basak v. Ishanitos Ghatak, 66 C.W.N. 872.

The assent referred to in this section is the assent of the lessor and not that of the lessee. The option of giving an assent is one that is conferred on the lessor and not on the lessee—Meghji v. Dayalji, 48 Bom. 341 (345), A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 322, 80 I.C. 507, 26 Bom. L.R. 231.

Legal representative :—This expression is not defined in the Act, but it clearly implies a person who occupies the same position as the lessor. It does not include an intermediate lessee who has sublet the land to a sub-lessee—Durgi Nikarini v. Gobordhan, 19 C.W.N. 525 (529), 24 I.C. 183.

"Agreement to the contrary" :—The expression "agreement to the contrary" means an agreement as to the terms of the holding over—Troikukhya v. Sarat Chander, 32 Cal. 123 (127); Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (492), 26 I.C. 962; Dasarathi v. Sarat, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 135, 37 C.W.N. 971, 149 I.C. 214. This agreement must be express, and not implied. And so where a tenant took the premises for a shop for one year, and the rent was fixed for one year, and then at the end of the year the tenant continued in occupation, but there was no express agreement as to the terms of the holding over, it could not be implied that if the tenant held over he would hold over from year to year. As it was a non-agricultural tenancy, the tenant must be deemed to hold over from month to month—Gobinda v. Dwarka, supra. [In Matilal v. Darjeeling Municipality, 17 C.L.J. 167, 18 I.C. 844 (846), it was remarked that the "agreement to the contrary" need not be express but may be implied]. Where the lease had expired and the lessee continued in possession under an express agreement to do so till a final decision was reached by the lessee as to the granting of a fresh lease, there was no holding over—Subodh Gopal v. Province of Bihar, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 222, 31 P.L.T. 100. The words "in the absence of an agreement to the contrary" do not refer only to the existence of an agreement to the terms of the holding over but also to the existence of an agreement to the contrary regarding the period of notice provided in sec. 106 for a particular kind of notice. Thus where a lease for manufacturing purposes is held over on the terms of the original lease providing for 3 months' notice, the provision for 6 months' notice in sec. 106 does not apply—Suiti Devi v. Banarsidas, A.I.R. 1949 All. 703. If a tenant who originally held under a lease for nine years certain, at a yearly rent, held over after the expiry of nine years, and then the landlord expressly treated the tenant as holding on from year to year under the terms of the original contract of lease, the presumption of this section would not apply and the tenancy would be a tenancy from year to year and terminable by six months' notice—Chattar v. Nand Kishore, 12 A.L.J. 1139, 26 I.C. 107 (108). If in the original lease there is a stipulation for renewal of the lease, and the tenant continues in possession after the expiry of the terms of the original lease, he must be deemed to be in possession under the renewal clause of the lease. The tenant continuing in possession under a stipulation for renewal of the lease stands on a different position from a tenant holding over (under sec. 116) merely by consent of the lessor, but if for any reason his agreement has to be disregarded (e.g., for want of registration of the renewal lease) he can fall back upon the landlord's mere consent and claim his rights under sec. 116—Bengal National Bank v. Janaki, 54 Cal. 813, 31 C.W.N. 973, 104 I.C. 484, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 725 (727, 730). If a lessee under a temporary lease granted by the Deputy Commissioner continues in possession after the determination of the lease, and arrears of rent are recovered by certificate proceedings, the lease is renewed from year to year—Ratnakar Nayak v. Rasananda Sahu, (1962) 4 Orissa J.D. 31. When during the pendency of an eviction proceeding against a statutory tenant the premises are sold and the tenant attorns to the purchaser no fresh tenancy is created by such attornment—Munavar Basha v. Narayana, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 200.

616. Effect of holding over :—By presumption of law the payment and acceptance of rent and the continuance of the tenant's possession after expiry of the lease results in the relation being that of landlord and tenant under a year to year tenancy terminable by 6 months' notice—Gooderham & Works Ltd. v. Canadian Broadcasting Corpn., A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 90. But where a tenant, under an unregistered lease of a shop for manufacturing purposes for one year which fixes only monthly rent, held over, the tenancy was held to be from month to month—Kishan Lal v. Ram Chander, A.I.R. 1952 All. 634. It is worthy of note that when a tenant holds over, the lease is renewed not in accordance with the terms of the original grant, but in accordance with the purpose for which the grant had been made—Matilal v. Darjeeling Municipality, 17 C.L.J. 167, 18 I.C. 844 (846); Lalit Mohan Dey v. Satadalbasini Dasi, 68 C.W.N. 1036. A tenancy created by holding over is a tenancy on the same conditions as those on which the original tenancy was created, subject only to the modification under this section that it would be a tenancy from month to month or from year to year according to the purpose for which the land was let—Khuda Baksh v. Abid Husain, 12 O.C. 279. This section lays down that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the duration of the renewed lease shall be regulated according to the purpose of the lease, irrespective of the term of the original lease. Thus, if a lessee, under a lease (for non-agricultural purpose) granted for one year or for a term of years was allowed to hold over after the expiry of the term of the lease, the renewed lease would not be a lease from year to year, but one from month to month under sec. 106, and terminable by 15 days' notice—Matilal v. Darjeeling Municipality, supra; Troilokya v. Sarat Chandra, 32 Cal. 123; Gobinda v. Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 489 (492), 26 I.C. 962. Durgi Nikarini v. Gobordhan, 19 C.W.N. 525 (529), 24 I.C. 183; Meghji Vallabhdas v. Dayali & Co., 48 Bom. 341 (344), 80 I.C. 507, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 322; and this is so, even though after the expiry of the original term the rent was being paid per year and not from month to month—Secy. of State v. Madhu Sudan, 36 C.W.N. 918 (920). A tenant of homestead land within a town, holding over after the expiry of a ten years' lease, must be deemed a monthly tenant, and not entitled to six months' notice—Manmatha v. Peary Mohan, 23 C.W.N. 596, 52 I.C. 180. Where a tenant took a lease for 10 years from the mutwali of a mosque with a covenant for renewal, and it was found that the covenant for renewal was ultra vires, the tenant holding over must be deemed to be holding on a monthly tenancy—Gajendra Nath v. Ashraf Hossain, 27 C.W.N. 159, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 130, 69 I.C. 707. If the lease is granted for agricultural purposes, the tenant holding over after the expired lease will be deemed to hold from year to year—Fakira v. Leakut Hussain, 18 C.W.N. 858, 23 I.C. 318; Administrator-General v. Asraf Ali, 28 Cal. 227; Ram Prasad v. Debi Prasad, 49 I.C. 974 (Cal.); Stonewigg v. Kameshwar, 11 P.L.T. 444, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 340, 71 I.C. 1022; Mahomed Ayejuddin v. Prodyot Kumar, 25 C.W.N. 13, 61 I.C. 503. So also, if the original lease was for manufacturing purposes, the tenant holding over after the expiry of the lease will be deemed to hold over on a tenancy from year to year, and will be entitled to six months' notice—Jacks & Co. v. Joosab Mahomed, 48 Bom. 38 (41), A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 115. Where the tenant continues in possession by virtue of Rent Control Legislation after the expiry of the lease by efflux of time or determination by notice to quit no new tenancy by holding over is created by payment and acceptance of rent and no notice to quit is required to sue for eviction—Ganga Dutt v. Kartik Chandra, A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1067. There is no recognition of tenancy by holding over if the landlord obtains a decree for recovery of municipal taxes against the tenant in respect of the period subsequent to the expiry of the lease—Ramesh v. Jajneswar, 65 C.W.N. 488. If heirs of a tenant continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy by efflux of time transfer their right, a suit for the eviction of the transferee by the sons of the lessor more than fifty years after the termination of the lease must fail as the transferee from the heirs of the original tenant cannot be regarded as a tenant by holding over—Sadaram v. Sunderlal, A.I.R. 1968 All. 363. A tenant continuing in possession after the expiry of the lease as a trespasser is liable to pay mesne profits but not double the rent as in England—Hindustan Steel Pvt. Ltd. v. Sm. Usha Rani Gupta, A.I.R. 1969 Delhi 59.

The tenancy created by the "holding over" of a lessee or sub-lessee is a new tenancy in law, even though many of the terms of the old lease might be continued in it by implication, and to bring a new tenancy in existence there must be a bilateral act—Kai Khushroo v. Bai Jibia, A.I.R. 1949 F.C. 124 53 C.W.N. (F.R.) 73. But see Nanda Lal Das v. Monmatha Nath Ghose, A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 597. See also Annapurna Seal v. Tincowrie Dutt, 66 C.W.N. 338.

In all other respects, viz., the rate of rent, rate of interest, etc., the tenant continues to hold on the same stipulations as are mentioned in the original lease—Kishore v. Administrator-General, 2 C.W.N. 303. Krishna Chandra v. Nitya Sundari, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1239; Allah Bibee v. Joogul, 25 W.R. 234; Rangaswami v. Jainabu, A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 507, (1942) 1 M.L.J. 448, 1942 M.W.N. 232; Sanjeevi v. Chettibabu, A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 473, (1953) 1 M.L.J. 260. The stipulation in an expired lease providing a security or creating a charge for the outstanding rent is a term of the lease within the meaning of this section and the landlord can enforce the security or charge during the currency of the lease created by holding over—Devoki Amma v. Krishna Kammathi, A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 146 (F.B.); Aryam Satti Raju v. Sri Ragha Venkata Mahipali, 69 Mad. L.W. (Andh.) 156. The stipulation in the original lease that at the expiration of the term, the lessee is to give up possession without notice cannot be imported into the new tenancy by holding over—Saraswati R. v. Pedapara-ju, (1967) 1 Andh. L.T. 137. The new tenancy will be deemed to have commenced on the same day of the year as the original lease, and notice to quit shall be given accordingly—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 17th Edn., p. 246; Deo v. Samuel, 5 Esp. 173. But in some cases governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, it has been held that although the tenant agreed to pay interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum under the original lease (which was created before the Act came into operation), still if the lease expired after the passing of that Act, and that tenant continued to hold over, the landlord was not entitled to recover interest at more than 12½ per cent., that being the maximum rate fixed by the Bengal Tenancy Act (sec. 67)—Administrator General v. Asraf Ali, 28 Cal. 227; Ali Mamud v. Bhagbali, 2 C.W.N. 525. Alim v. Satis Chunder, 24 Cal. 47. On the expiry of a written lease for one year from 7.4.45 there was a monthly tenancy by holding over. Held that the tenancy by holding over was from the 8th of one month to the 7th of the next month—Baidyanath v. Nirmala Bala, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 649.

Where no privity of estate was created between the mortgagor-lessee and his transferee who held over after expiry of the lease, he was liable for mesne profits for use and occupation—Sivajnanam v. Mathevan, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 359.

Where after the expiry of the period fixed in a lease the tenant continues in possession as tenant on the same terms expressed in the lease, he cannot claim adverse possession—Chandrika v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co., A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 59 (62), 39 C.W.N. 552, 154 I.C. 945. As to distinction between a tenancy by holding over and a tenancy under a renewal clause, see Lalit Mohan Dey v. Satadalbasini Dasi, 68 C.W.N. 1036.

117. None of the provisions of this chapter apply to leases for agricultural purposes, except in so far as the “State Government” * * * may, by notification published in the “Official Gazette”, declare all or any of such provisions to be so applicable in the case of all or any of such leases, together with, or subject to, those of the local law, if any, for the time being in force.

Such notification shall not take effect until the expiry of six months from the date of its publication.

Amendment :—The words “with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council” which occurred in this section have been omitted by the Devolution Act (XXXVIII of 1920). By the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 the words “Provincial Government” were substituted for “Local Government” and the words “Official Gazette” were substituted for “Local Official Gazette”. Then by A.L.O. 1950 “State Government” was substituted for “Provincial Government”.

Notification.—For Notification issued by the Bombay Government under this section see Bombay Gazette, 1910, Pt. I, p. 59. For Notification as to Sind, see Ibid.

617. Agricultural leases :—Before the passing of this Act, there was no distinction between agricultural and non-agricultural tenancies. See Madhab Chand v. Bejoy Chand, 4 C.W.N. 574. The distinction is for the first time recognised in this Act. Where a tenancy was granted for residential purposes before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act in favour of a non-agriculturist, a suit for recovery of possession of land on which stood a homestead was governed by the T. P. Act and it was not maintainable without service of notice—Banwari v. Gopal, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 643 (644), 37 C.W.N. 471, 146 I.C. 540.

In exempting leases for agricultural purposes from the operation of Ch. V of the Transfer of Property Act, it was probably the intention of the Legislature to retain in force the special provisions contained in the various Rent Acts passed prior to the T. P. Act, in respect of the agricultural leases dealt with in those Acts—Broucke v. Chhatar Kumari, 4

Pat. 404, 86 I.C. 597, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 421. An agricultural lease can be created by a Kabuliyat or even orally—Mt. Tapesara Kuer v. Kalap Rajcar, A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 92.

Whether a tenancy is governed by this Act or the Bengal Tenancy Act, depends upon the purpose for which the tenancy was created. User of the land for agricultural purposes, where the tenancy is shown to have been created for residential purposes, does not bring the tenancy under the Bengal Tenancy Act—Radhanath v. Krishna Chandra, 40 C.W.N. 722—per D. N. Mitra & Patterson, JJ. See also Raj Kumari v. Mirza Samsuddin, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 330, 46 C.W.N. 277, 75 C.L.J. 29. That Act does not apply to a lease for non-agricultural purposes, even though it be a lease of agricultural lands or lands with cultivating tenants thereon. Accordingly, the true test is not to determine whether the lands comprised in it are or are not agricultural lands, but whether or not the letting was for agricultural purposes. Where, therefore, the letting is for collection of rents and there is no question of the lessee being required or expected to bring any land under cultivation, either himself or by members of his family or by servants and labourers or by establishing tenants on the land, there is no lease for an agricultural purpose, although the lands may be agricultural or tenanted by cultivating tenants. Such a case would be governed by the T. P. Act—Alauddin v. Tomizuddin, (1938) 41 C.W.N. 1001—per Henderson & Biswas, JJ. See also Maheshwari v. Manrao, A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 87 (F.B.), 23 Pat. 185; Budhan v. Ram-anugraha A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 78, 13 B.R. 332; Abdul v. Shalimar P. C. & Varnish Co., A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 36, 81 C.L.J. 138; Babu Biswanath Prasad v. Shah Mohammad A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 142. Where a person has taken settlement of the lands and is in possession of the same by settling them with bhagdars, the lease is in respect of agricultural lands—Giribala v. Dwarka, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 715, 55 C.L.J. 312. Where a person holding a lease under a permanent ijardar is himself a raiyat, it has been held by Henderson J., that the status of persons holding land under him under a lease granted for residential purposes is that of an under-raiyat—Ujendra v. Bipin, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 429. It may be so, but according to the test laid down by the learned Judge sitting with Mr. Justice Biswas the Transfer of Property Act will apply in such a case—see Alauddin v. Tomizuddin, supra.

The phrase "agricultural purpose" in this section must be given a narrow and strict interpretation—Abdul v. Salimar P. C. & Varnish Co., supra, following Satya Narayan v. Saraju Bala, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 13, 33 C.W.N. 865. But it cannot be held that a sub-tenant to whom land has been let out for the purpose of bringing the lands under cultivation would not be governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act—Abdul v. Salimar P. C. & Varnish Co., supra. Before a lease can be saved by this section it must be shown that it is a lease for agricultural purposes. The mere fact that the lease relates to agricultural land does not make it a lease for agricultural purposes, unless the primary object of the lease is cultivation or agriculture—Noor Md. v. Dherasingh, A.I.R. 1949 Sind 34. A lease may be an agricultural lease, even if it was granted originally for the purpose of constructing building thereon—Banamali v. Padmanabha, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 262. A lease for purposes of reclamation is a lease for agricultural purposes—Manindra v. Amiya, A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 361, 55 C.W.N. 171. Where a lease in respect of agricultural lands comes under the operation of this section, a verbal declaration would be sufficient to prove alteration of rent—Tarak Nath v. Raghu Nandan, A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 22, 28 Pat. 844. A valid lease of agricultural land can be made by a registered instrument and delivery of possession is not necessary—Jangal v. Mukund, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 446.

Although agricultural leases are excepted from the operation of section 106 to 116, still the provisions of those sections, being reproduced from the rules of English law, are of general application and rest on principle as well as authority, and therefore they may be applied to agricultural leases as rules of justice, equity and good conscience. The legislature has wisely refrained from making these sections applicable proprio vigore to agricultural leases for fear of unnecessarily interfering with settled usages which it is undesirable to disturb. But in the absence of special reasons, there is no ground for applying a different rule in the case of agricultural leases—Krishna Setti v. Gilbert Pinto, 42 Mad. 654 (660). See also Kemalooti v. Muhamed, 41 Mad. 629 (630); Saldanha v. Subraya, 30 Mad. 410; Gangamma v. Bhomakka, 33 Mad. 253; Srinivasa v. Rangaswami, 1 L.W. 858, 25 I.C. 812; Narayan v. Krishna Rao, 14 N.L.R. 188, 43 I.C. 970. See also Bahadur v. Motichand, A.I.R. 1925 All. 580 (583), 47 All. 589, 23 A.L.J. 409; Krishna Shetti v. Pinto, 42 Mad. 654, 36 M.L.J. 367; Nanjappa v. Rangaswami, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 410, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 200, 1640 M.W.N. 266; Narayan v. Gokuldas, A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 48, I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 568; Kesarbai v. Rajabhan, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 94, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 141. Secs. 106 and 107 specifically apply to agricultural leases; hence an agricultural lease from year to year must be registered—Hareswar Das v. Nareswari Dasya, A.I.R. 1967 Assam 99.

It has been held by the Madras High Court that in this section, the word 'agriculture' is used in its more general sense as comprehending the raising of vegetables, fruits and garden products as good for man and beast, though some of them may be regarded in England as products of 'horticulture' as distinguished from 'agriculture'—Murugesu v. Chinnathambi, 24 Mad. 421. In Panadai Pathan v. Ramasami, 45 Mad. 710 (714), A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 351, 70 I.C. 657, it has been held that the term 'agriculture' should not be taken as limited to the raising of food product but should be interpreted in a wider sense so as to include cultivation of fibrous plants such as cotton, jute and linen and all plants used for dyeing purpose such as indigo, etc., and all timber trees and flowering plants.

In Seshayya v. Rajah of Pittapur, 31 M.L.J. 214, 34 I.C. 730, and Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Ayyapareddi, 38 Mad. 738, the term 'agriculture' was defined as the raising of annual periodical grain crops through the operation of ploughing, sowing, etc. But this narrow definition was disapproved of in 45 Mad. 710. A lease of land for a thrashing floor is a lease for agricultural purposes—Bhikary Tripathy v. Kashinath Misra, I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 289.

A lease for horticultural purposes is on the same footing as an agricultural lease and is outside the scope of the T. P. Act and is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act—See Gopal Chandra v. Bhutnath, 42 C.L.J. 520, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 312 (313). Horticulture, which means the cultivation of gardens or orchards, is a species of agriculture in its primary and more general sense—Murugesu v. Chinnathambi, 24 Mad. 421 (423). But the mere fact that in a lease for residential purposes, there is given a right to take fruit from the trees on the land and to plant other fruit trees and take their fruits, does not convert the lease into a lease for horticultural purposes—Gopal Chandra v. Bhutnath, supra. So, where a lease expressly stated that it was for residential purposes and the land had always been used for that purpose, the fact that it was described as bagat or that damages in respect of the arrears of rent and cesses were claimed, or that it was advertised for sale as a non-transferable occupancy holding, cannot, in the absence of estoppel, be said to have altered the original non-agricultural purpose—Udaytara v. Habibar Rahaman, 42 C.W.N. 771—per Mukherjea, J. A tenancy created for the purpose of gathering and enjoying fruits from trees standing on the land of the tenancy is governed not by the Bengal Tenancy Act, but by the Transfer of Property Act—Sailendra v. A. CoCo, 44 C.W.N. 582.

Rearing tea plants is an agricultural purpose. The lease of a tea estate together with factory and machinery is an agricultural lease; so it is covered by this section, and a notice to quit forthwith is perfectly legal—Pravat v. Bengal Central Bank, 42 C.W.N. 701, (1938) Cal. 589—per R. C. Mitter & Biswas, JJ.

A lease of lands for growing casuarina trees to be used as fuel is a lease for agricultural purposes—Panadai v. Ramasami, 45 Mad. 710. Contra—Devaraja v. Ammani, 3 L.W. 319, 34 I.C. 539.

A lease of a village or a portion of a village for the purpose of bringing it under cultivation is an agricultural lease—Banamali v. Nihal Singh, 48 I.C. 354. A lease of lands on which potatoes, grains, vegetables, etc., are growing is a lease of lands used for agricultural purposes—King Emperor v. Allan, 25 Mad. 327. So also, is a lease of land for cultivation of roots under the same category—Ibid. So a lease of lands used for pasture; so also a lease of land as a yard for ploughing cattle, or as a habitation for agriculturists, or as a pasture for the ploughing cattle, or for the purpose of storing manure or growing plants to be used as manure for agriculture—Murugesu v. Chinnathambi, 21 Mad. 421. A lease of land for the cultivation of betel is, according to the usage and custom of the country, an agricultural lease within the meaning of this section—Ibid. A lease of a land for grazing purposes is an agricultural lease, inspite of the fact that portions of the land are still jungle and have not been brought under tillage—Brojabashi v. Ramsankar, 23 C.L.J. 638, 29 I.C. 834. A reclamation lease granted expressly for the purpose that the jungle and wild trees might be removed and the land brought under cultivation, is a lease for agricultural purposes within the meaning of this section, and it is immaterial whether the grantee did the work himself by his servants and hired labourers, or by under-tenants whom he settled on the land—Jagdish v. Lal Mohan, 13 C.L.J. 318, 7 I.C. 864. The cultivation of indigo is an agricultural purpose, but the manufacture of indigo cakes out of indigo plants cannot be said to be so—Surendra v. Hari Mohan, 31 Cal. 174 (176).

In Kunhayan v. Haji Mayan, 17 Mad. 98, it was held that the lease of a coffee-garden was not an agricultural lease; but the decision was held to be wrong by Shephard, J., in Murugesu v. Chinnathambi, 24 Mad. 421.

Where an entire village was leased out to the lessee who was put in possession and authorised to let out the land to tenants and make collections, but he was not to cultivate the lands himself; further, the lessee was not entitled to plant groves on the land, and was also to be responsible for the payment of Government revenues and cesses, held that it was impossible to say that the primary object of the transaction was agriculture. The mere fact that it was open to the lessee to cultivate any particular land if he so desired would not make the lease an agricultural one, because agriculture was the secondary and not the primary object—Ballabha v. Murat Narain, 48 All. 385, 95 I.C. 1048, A.I.R. 1926 All. 432. Where the land is a homestead land within a Municipality, in which there is a house which the tenant has enjoyed for a long time, the mere fact that in the record-of-rights some portions of the lands are shown as bagan lands does not necessarily indicate that the lease is one for agricultural or horticultural purposes, especially where the tenants are not shown to be agriculturists or cultivators—Safar Ali v. Abdul Mojid, 31 C.W.N. 282 (284), 100 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 279. A lease of land for building purposes and for establishing a coal depot is not a lease for agricultural purposes—Raniganj Coal Association v. Judoonath, 19 Cal. 489.

A lease of tank which does not appertain to an agricultural holding but is used only for the preservation and rearing of fish is not an agricultural lease—Mahananda v. Mongala, 31 Cal. 937; Hari v. Wanu, 11 N.L.R. 122, 31 I.C. 294. But a lease of a tank for rearing fish and of the banks of the tank for stacking grass for cattle and for grazing cattle, granted to persons who are agriculturists and use their cattle in cultivation, is a lease for agricultural purposes. The fact that part of the leased property is a tank to be used for the purpose of catching fish does not make any difference; for the water may be used by the cattle for drinking purposes. The lease is on the whole an agricultural lease—Surendra v. Chandratara, 34 C.W.N. 1063 (1066). The true test in such cases is the primary object of the lease—namely, whether it is a lease of the tank or a lease of the surrounding lands for the purposes of agriculture with the tank within it. Thus where the principal parcel of the demise was the tank which was let out for non-agricultural purposes of rearing fish, the grazing of cattle on the banks being only a subsidiary purpose, the lease was governed by the T. P. Act—Bikram Kishore v. Amanaddin, 40 C.W.N. 156—per R. C. Mitter, J.

Where a lease is executed mainly with the object of making arrangement for collecting rents and not with the object of cultivation, the lease cannot be an agricultural lease—Shiam Sundar v. Chooby Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 151, 12 Luck. 514, 164 I.C. 830.

A patni lease is not a lease for agricultural purposes, as a patni lease is generally granted to a middleman with a view to his subletting which he generally does, and it is not the patnidar but his tenants who use the land for agricultural purposes—Promotho v. Kali Prosanna, 28 Cal. 744 (746). An ijara for the realisation of rent from the cultivating tenants is not a lease for agricultural purposes—Satyaniranjan v. Sarajubala, 33 C.W.N. 865 (870); affirmed 33 C.W.N. at p. 872 (P.C.).

A lease of the right to receive the collections of a village is not a lease for agricultural purposes—Jang Bahadur v. Eshan, 5 O.C. 122.

In cases governed by this Act no suit for settlement of rent lies, for the Court has no power to make a contract for the parties in such cases. An aggrieved landlord's remedy against a trespasser in possession is by way of ejectment—Kripa Sankar v. Janki Prasad, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 86 (87).

If a raiyati holding is surrendered and thereafter the land of the holding is leased out for non-agricultural purposes the lease will be governed by the T. P. Act—Orient Paper Mills v. Sitaram Agarwalla, A.I.R. 1957 Orissa 276. Where a sub-lease is created for non agricultural purpose it will be governed by the Transfer of Property Act even though the head lease is governed by the Bihar Tenancy Act and vice versa—Suhdir v. Nirsi Dhobin, A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 321 (F.B.).

CHAPTER VI.

OF EXCHANGES.

118. When two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another, neither thing or both things being money only, the transaction is called an "exchange".

"Exchange defined.

A transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale.

618. Exchange and sale :—The difference between a sale and an exchange is this, that in the former the price is paid in money, while in the latter it is paid in another property by way of barter—Samaratmal v. Govind, 25 Bom. 696. See also Kama v. Krishna, A.I.R. 1954 Or. 105. Sale is always for price which means money or the current coin of the realm; but no price is paid in an exchange, but one specific property is transferred for another. But payment of price may be made in addition to the transfer of property, by way of equality of exchange, and such payment does not make the exchange lose its character as such—Turner v. Edgell, 6 L.J. (N.S.) Ch. 201. In other words, in a transaction of exchange, money may be added to the property or goods to equalise the consideration. Thus, where an owner of a property transfers it partly in exchange for another property and partly for cash, the transaction is an exchange—Nathu Mal v. Har Dial, 97 P.R. 1900; Qazi v. Sharfa, 199 P.L.R. 1913, 19 I.C. 301 (302); Bepu v. Maruti, 3 N.L.R. 138; Ismail Shah v. Saleh Muhammad, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 326, 86 I.C. 266; Randhir v. Randhir, A.I.R. 1937 All. 665 (667), (1937) A.L.J. 743, 171 I.C. 577.

Fateh Singh v. Prithi Singh, A.I.R. 1930 All. 426 (427), (1930) A.L.J. 1312, 124 I.C. 557, P. R. Srinivasan v. The Corporation of the City of Bangalore, I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 167. No hard and fast rule can, however, be laid down as to when transactions amount to a sale or to an exchange. If the consideration is not paid in cash, but is paid by the transfer of ownership of some property, it would be an exchange and not a sale. The mere fact that the value of the property transferred has been fixed does not convert the transaction into one of sale. It is not the name or form of the transaction, but the nature of the consideration paid for the transfer which determines the nature of the transfer itself—Ram Badan v. Kumwar Singh, A.I.R. 1938 All. 229 (230, 231), (1938) A.L.J. 52, 175 I.C. 618. Where one of the parties has failed to execute the document of exchange, the mere fact of exchange of possession is not sufficient to the passing of title in favour of each other, especially when the properties are each worth more than Rs. 100—Kama v. Krishna, supra.

Subject to these differences, the Legislature has put an exchange on the same footing as a sale in almost every respect, as shown by the provisions of sec. 118 (para 2) and sec. 120.

Exchange and partition :—A partition of joint property is not an exchange within the meaning of this section—Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal, 10 C.L.J. 503, 3 I.C. 247. An exchange is a transfer of ownership while in a partition there is no transfer but a mutual arrangement between the parties. Therefore, where certain co-owners possessing an undivided share in several properties took by arrangement some specific properties instead of their shares in all the properties, the transaction was not an exchange but only a partition. It was a transaction by which the parties held in severalty the lands which had been previously held in common. It was not an exchange but a partition, and not require to be effected by a registered instrument—Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa, 25 Cal. 210 (213). In other words, an exchange is a transaction by which a party acquires a property in which he had no interest before; but in a partition the parties who already possess definite interests in the property, make a convenient arrangement between themselves for enjoyment of the property. Thus, where plaintiff and defendants were the joint owners of a certain property. A, and plaintiff alone was the owner of another property B, and by an oral agreement plaintiff got the former property A in its entirety, and gave to the defendants his share in the other property B, held that the transaction was an exchange, in as much as the defendants acquired a property in which they had no share before, and was invalid not being in writing registered—Raj Narain v. Khobdari, 5 C.W.N. 725.

619. Transfer of ownership :—An exchange is a completed transfer and does not imply the contract to make a transfer. The Law Commissioners remark: "We should define exchange not as an agreement but as the fulfilment of an agreement by mutual transfer a dominion"—Law Commissioners' Report, 1879.

The mutual transfer of two things is an essential element in exchange. Thus, where the plaintiff and the defendant having obtained decrees against each other settled their differences by a compromise by which the former gave up certain jotes to the latter, and the decrees obtained by the plaintiff were set off against the decrees obtained by the defendant, and the parties gave up their claims under their respective decrees, it was held that the transaction was not one of exchange, since there was no transfer of the decrees but only mutual set off of cross-decrees, and the fact that to equalise the difference between the two decrees the plaintiff gave up some jotes to the defendant would not make any difference in the nature of the transaction—Deno Nath v. Motimala, 11 C.W.N. 342.

Where a tenant voluntarily surrendered certain lease-hold rights and took from the landlord the lease-hold rights of some other property, the transaction was not an exchange, because there was no mutual transfer of ownership between the two parties—Waliul Hussan v. Gopal, 6 C.W.N. 905 (911).

Where a husband transfers a land to his wife for her use during her lifetime and the wife gives up her right to future maintenance, the transaction is not an exchange, because the husband does not transfer the ownership of the land (but simply gives a life-interest in the property) and the wife also does not transfer the ownership of anything. She does not purport to transfer anything nor had she anything which she could transfer within the meaning of this section—Madam Pillai v. Badrakali, 45 Mad. 612 (618) (F.B.).

For validating an exchange, the delivery must be physical and not constructive. Hence no exchange of intangible property can be made by delivery of possession—Debi Prasad v. Jaldhar, A.I.R. 1946 All. 125, 1945 A.L.J. 537.

A family arrangement is not a transfer of ownership, and does not therefore come within the definition of exchange under this section—Ram Gopal v. Tulshi, 51 All. 79 (F.B.), 116 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1928 All. 641 (643).

620. Instances of exchange :—Money may be exchanged for money. The change of currency notes for money is merely an exchange of money in one form for money in another form—Empress v. Joggeshur, 3 Cal. 379. A transfer of a Court-fee stamp on promise of a stamp of equal value being returned is not a sale (but an exchange)—Kedar Nath v. Emperor, 30 Cal. 921. Where a person assigned his equity of redemption in consideration of the assignee transferring to him the proprietary rights over certain other lands, held that the equity of redemption was not a "price" within the meaning of sec. 54, but was a "thing" under this section and the transaction was an exchange, not a sale. The word "thing" in this section does not include tangible things only, but intangible things as well, such as an equity of redemption—Lachhman v. Fida Husain, 18 O.C. 109, 30 I.C. 232 (233). Where a mortgagor who has mortgaged his properties A and B, sells the property A to the mortgagee in discharge of the whole debt, in consideration of the latter freeing the property B from the mortgage-lien, held that the transaction is a transfer of property in consideration of a discharge of debt and may be a sale or an exchange—Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumaraswami, 37 Mad. 423, 15 I.C. 343. If a house worth Rs. 1,500 is exchanged for land worth Rs. 500 and cash Rs. 500.

the transaction is an exchange and not a sale—Ismail v. Saleh Muhammad, 7 Lah.L.J. 18, 86 I.C. 266, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 326.

But where the consideration for a transfer of property is the forbearance on the part of the transferee to take certain legal proceedings, the transaction is not an exchange, because a right to sue or to take legal proceedings cannot be the subject of ownership—Venkata Jagannadha v. Venkata Kumara, 54 Mad. 163, 60 M.L.J. 56, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 140 (143).

621. Exchange, how made :—“An exchange of immoveable property of Rs. 100 or upwards can only be effected by means of a registered instrument—Chidambara v. Vaidilinga, 38 Mad. 519 (521), 30 I.C. 408; Shams Shah v. Hussain, 145 P.W.R. 1909, 4 I.C. 1004; Susheelamma v. Polla Bucha Reddy, (1969) 1 Andh. L.T. 150.

Non-registration of document cured by part performance :—Under sec. 53A (newly inserted by the T. P. Amendment Act, 1929), if two persons exchange property worth Rs. 100 or upwards between each other, under a written document, but that document is not registered and the parties take possession of each other's property in pursuance of the exchange, neither party will be afterwards entitled to eject the other on the ground that the document has not been registered and has not passed any title. The non-registration of the deed of exchange will be cured by the doctrine of part performance, i.e., by the act and conduct of the parties in delivering possession to each other. The principle of law has been thus stated: Though a transaction has been clothed imperfectly with legal formalities (e.g., has not been registered), still equity will support the transaction if it has been acted upon by the parties, and it will then be effectually binding on the parties in spite of the fact that secs. 118 and 54 were not strictly complied with—Salamat v. Masa Allah, 40 All. 187, 43 I.C. 645 (following Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar, 42 Cal. 801 (P.C.)). See also Dada v. Bahiru, 29 Bom. L.R. 1419, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 627 (628). In such a case the conditions laid down in sec. 53A must however be fulfilled.

It should be noted that sec. 53A applies to those cases in which there is a document in writing (though it is unregistered) and not to cases in which there is no document at all. In 29 Bom. L.R. 1419 and 40 All. 187 there was no written document at all; the exchange took place by parol agreement. Nevertheless the doctrine of part-performance was applied. These cases were decided prior to the enactment of sec. 53A. Henceforth, the doctrine will not be applied unless there is a written document. In Chidambara v. Vaidilinga, 38 Mad. 519 (521), the Court refused to apply the doctrine of part-performance, because the exchange was made by oral transfer.

In Ramanathan v. Ranganathan, 40 Mad. 1134 (1164, 1165), the exchange was made in writing which was unregistered, but the Court strictly followed the provisions as to registration, and refused to give effect to the doctrine of part-performance. This ruling is no longer correct in view of sec. 53A.

But it is clear that the estoppel arising out of the equitable doctrine of part-performance will not create title in the plaintiff, and if he seeks to recover possession on the strength of his title, he cannot succeed when there has been no transfer by a registered deed such as is necessary under this section read with sec. 54—Kalipada v. Fort Gloster Jute Co. Ltd., 31 C.W.N. 348, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 365 (370), 100 I.C. 866. See Notes under sec. 53A ante.

Even if the deed of exchange which is unregistered does not confer a legal title to the lands covered by the exchange, a party to the exchange acquires full title to the property by continuous possession for over 12 years openly and adversely to the other party to the exchanges—Kashi Nath v. Makchhed, A.I.R. 1939 All. 504, 1939 A.L.J. 384, 184 I.C. 233.

119. In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the party deprived of the thing or part thereof he has received in exchange, by reason of any defect in the title of the other party, is entitled at his option, to compensation, or to the return of the thing transferred by him.

Right of party deprived of thing received in exchange.

119. If any party to an exchange or any person claiming through or under such party is by reason of any defect in the title of the other party deprived of the thing or any part of the thing received by him in exchange, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the exchange, such other party is liable to him or any person claiming through or under him for loss caused thereby, or at the option of the person so deprived, for the return of the thing transferred, if still in the possession of such other party or his legal representative or a transferee from him without consideration.

Right of party deprived of thing received in exchange.

Amendment :—This section has been redrafted by section 59 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929) but no substantial change has been made.

Not retrospective :—This section as amended by the Act of 1929 does not apply to transfers effected before 1st April 1930. Where the exchange is made before that date and dispossession takes place subsequent to the said date, the governing date will not be the date of dispossession but the date of the exchange—Chidambara v. Swaminatha, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 426, (1940) M.L.J. 248, 1940 M.W.N. 290.

Before amendment :—This section, before the amendment, related only to the rights of the parties inter se and it was not intended to relate to a third person not bound by the exchange to which he was not a party. The original section assumed a case in which the parties to the exchange had retained the properties exchanged and were in a position to restore them ; therefore, the principle of that section did not apply to an innocent transferee for value from one of the parties to the exchange—Ganga Singh v. Ragho Ram, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 934. But it appears that a transferee for value is protected under the amended section also. See however Chidambara v. Swaminatha, infra.

Scope :—Under the amended section the right to the return of the thing transferred in exchange is limited to the three classes of persons mentioned therein and so long as they were in possession of the same. Where A is deprived of a portion of the property got by him in exchange from B, but the property transferred has passed into the possession of a trespasser, A is not entitled to the return of the property under this section. His only remedy is to claim compensation from B—Sitaramiah v. Kanakaiah, A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 602. The statutory right of buyer and seller created by sec. 55 (2) was outside the scope of sec. 119. Sec. 120 could not be to confer on an assignee of the “party” within the meaning of sec. 119, rights which this section conferred upon that party—Narayanaswamy v. Muthraithnam, A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 715, (1949) 1 M.L.J. 620.

622. This section affirms in distinct terms that each party warrants his title to the things which he transfers. This rule is based on equity and good conscience and may apply to exchanges effected prior to this Act—Balusa Veeraraghavalu v. Boppanna, 31 M.L.J. 380, 35 I.C. 92..

Contrary intention :—The provisions of this section do not apply if there is a contrary intention in the terms of the exchange. Thus, a deed of exchange recited as follows:—“If any claim or dispute arises, I hereby bind himself to settle it. If I do not so get the dispute settled, I bind myself to pay an amount not exceeding Rs. 401-8-6, at the rate of Re. 1-4-0 per kuli of land for lands going out of your possession,” and the plaintiff being ousted from the land he received by reason of defendant’s want of title, he sued to recover the land which he had given in exchange, held that the operation of this section was excluded by the express covenant in the document mentioned above, and that the defendant having expressly covenanted to compensate for the plaintiff’s ouster, all that the plaintiff was entitled to was compensation up to the amount specified in the document. The suit for recovery of possession must fail—Subramania v. Saminatha, 21 Mad. 69.

But a covenant saying that “neither party has after to-day any claim against the other contrary to the exchange, and whatever proprietary rights each had in his own land will be owned by the other party” is not a contract to the contrary. It is rather a recital of the legal incidents of an exchange, and does not exclude the operation of this section—Salabat v. Abdul Rahaman, 51 P.R. 1917, 41 I.C. 248.

623. Effect of defect in title :—The remedy provided by this section is available to a party, whether he loses the whole or a portion of the property obtained in exchange, through defect of title of the other party. And if the party loses a portion of the property, he must repudiate the whole transaction and claim to be placed in the position he was in before the exchange, i.e., he must claim to recover the whole thing; he cannot seek to recover an equivalent portion of the lands he gave—Veera Pillai v. Poonnambala, 9 M.L.J. 137; Salabat v. Abdul Rahaman, 51 P.R. 1917, 41 I.C. 248.

Under this section it is not open to a transferee from one of the parties to the exchange deed to set up the plea of a bona fide purchase for value, as the transferee can get no better title than that which his transferor had. Although the section does not explicitly say that a party to the exchange is entitled to the return even when the property has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser, there is nothing in the section which rules out such a contingency—Chidambara v. Swaminatha, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 426, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 248, 1940 M.W.N. 290.

But this section does not exclude the operation of sec. 43 ; so that if the party having a defective title afterwards acquires full title, the other party will be entitled to its benefit. Thus, A obtained a certain property from B in exchange. B at the time of exchange had only a half share in the property but he subsequently acquired the other half. Held that as soon as the title to the whole was perfected, the benefit thereof accrued to A. Though the assignment was of a defective title yet as the assignor afterwards acquired good title, the Court would make that good title available to make the assignment effectual—Bhairab v. Jiban, 33 C.L.J. 184, 60 I.C. 810.

120. Save as otherwise provided in this Chapter, each party has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a seller as to that which he gives, and has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a buyer as to that which he takes.

Rights and liabilities of parties.

625. Rights and liabilities :—The rights and liabilities of the buyer and seller, so far as immovable property is concerned, are set forth in sec. 55. If the property is moveable, the case will be governed by the Sale of Goods Act, III of 1930.

The plaintiff, a cotton-dealer of Tuticorin, delivered certain quantity of cotton to the defendants, the owners of a cotton press, and according to the custom prevailing in Tuticorin the defendants were bound to give the plaintiff in exchange cleaned cotton of the like quality and quantity. The cotton was accidentally destroyed by fire. Held that since by delivery the ownership of the cotton had vested in the defendants, the loss would fall on them, and not upon the plaintiff—Volkart v. Vettivela, 11 Mad. 459.

This section implies the exchange of one property for another property and not for money. Having regard to the definition given in sec. 118, no question of money is involved in a transaction of exchange. Even if there be a stipulation to pay money in addition in order to make up the deficiency of the property, and that money remains unpaid, the other party cannot have any charge on the exchanged property for the money remaining unpaid, on the principle of sec. 55 (4) (b). He will only get a simple money-decree—Krishna Nair v. Kundu Nair, 1912 M.W.N. 535, 16 I.C. 109. So also, if the exchange-transaction turns out to be invalid, no charge can arise as under sec. 55 (6) (b) for the value of land exchanged—Chidambara v. Vaidilinga, 38 Mad. 519 (522), 30 I.C. 408. The effect of a decree directing the "return of the thing transferred" is not to declare that the exchange was void from the outset. The effect of such a decree is to divest the title of one of the parties to the exchange and to vest it in the original owner. It follows that till the date of the directing the return of the property, the title thereto remains with the person to whom the same was given in exchange. It is therefore manifest that the exchange holds good till the date of the decree—Alimulla v. Md. Khalil, A.I.R. 1940 All. 478, 1940 A.L.J. 569, 191 I.C. 385.

A right of pre-emption can be exercised only in a case of sale and not where the transaction amounts to an exchange—Lachhman v. Fida Hussain, 18 O.C. 109, 30 I.C. 232 (234). Where A has transferred land to B in exchange of B's land by which transfer B has become co-sharer, the fact that after a suit of pre-emption by a third party A had obtained a decree for return of the land under sec. 119 would not give the pre-emptor any right of pre-emption—Alimulla v. Md. Khalil, supra relying on Tara Chand v. Radha Sami, 56 All. 668 (F.B.). Where a wajib-ul-arz of a village contained a provision for pre-emption in case of a sale of any land in the village, held that the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz would not apply to an exchange, and therefore if S gave a land to A in exchange for a land given by A to S, the co-shares of A were not entitled to use to pre-empt the land given by A to S. Section 120, T. P. Act lays down that each party to an exchange has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a seller as to that which he gives, and has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a buyer as to that which he takes. But these rights and liabilities are enforceable between the parties to the exchange inter se. Third person cannot be substituted in the place of either of them, because they cannot give what does not belong to them—Samar Bahadur v. Jit Lal, 46 All. 359 (360), 76 I.C. 495, A.I.R. 1924 All. 390 (dissenting from Bhagwan Singh v. Kharag Sing, 4 A.L.J. 756). But where the language of the wajib-ul-arz was more general, and gave a right of pre-emption in case of transfer of any kind, the right of pre-emption was allowed in the case of an exchange—Niamat Ali v. Asmat Bibi, 7 All. 626 (F.B.). See also Daryao v. Jahan Singh, 31 All. 539.

121. On an exchange of money, each party thereby warrants the genuineness of the money given by him.

Exchange of money.

626. This section is based on the principle that payment of spurious money is no payment at all; and it applies only to spurious money and not to money depreciated by use and wear.

The aggrieved party is entitled to recover the money paid by him as upon a failure of consideration. Thus, if a man pays money for bank-notes which afterwards turn out to be forged, he is entitled to recover back the money—Leeds and Country Bank v. Walker, 11 Q.B.D. 84; Jones v. Ryde, 5 Taunt. 487; Eicholtz v. Bainster, 17 C.B. (N.S.) 708.

CHAPTER VII.

OF GIFTS.

122. "Gift" is the transfer of certain existing moveable or immoveable property made voluntarily and without consideration, by one person, called the donor, to another, called the donee, and accepted by or on behalf of the donee.

"Gift defined"

Acceptance when to be made. Such acceptance must be made during the lifetime of the donor and while he is still capable of giving.

If the donee dies before acceptance, the gift is void.

627. Gift :—Construction :—The question whether a document is a gift or a will depends not merely upon its form, but the intention gathered from the words used. The usual tests are, the name of the document, its registration, reservation of the power to revoke and the use of the present or future tense. One or two of these tests are not alone sufficient—Khushalchand v. Trimbak, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 49, I.L.R. 1946 Bom. 984; Esakkimadan v. Esakki Amma, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 336. In construing a document the subsequent conduct of the parties should not be taken into consideration when there is no ambiguity in the words used—Khushalchand v. Trimbak, supra.

Essentials of gift :—No condition afterwards—To a gift divesting the donor of all his interest in certain property, a condition cannot afterwards be attached. The general rule of law is that a gift to which an immoral condition is attached remains a good gift while the condition is void—Ram Sarup v. Bela, 6 All. 313 (P.C.). See Istak v. Ranchod, A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 198, 48 Bom. L.R. 775. An unqualified gift will not be cut down by subsequent words unless they clearly have that effect—Tripurari v. Jagat Tarini, 40 I.A. 87. Where a gift of immovable property is made under the Mahomedan law, the donee gets title to it, the condition against alienation being repugnant to the gift is void—State v. Memon Haji, A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 180.

Transfer :—A gift is a transfer of ownership; and therefore where the owner of certain Government promissory notes endorsed them to his son but reserved to himself the right of enjoying the interest during his lifetime, and in his will treated them as his own, charging the income thereof with certain bequests to be paid after his death, held that it was really a benami transaction and that no gift was intended—Nawab Ibrahim Ali Khan v. Ummat-ul-Zohra, 19 All. 267 (P.C.). But where the plaintiff purchased a property for and in the name of the defendant who had rendered some service to him, and the defendant was thenceforth in possession of the property and received the rents and profits, held that the right inference from the facts was that the property was not held by the defendant benami for the plaintiff, but belonged to the defendant, it being intended as a gift to him for his services—Ram Narain v. Muhammad, 26 Cal. 227 (230, 231) (P.C.). See also Ismail v. Hafiz, 33 Cal. 773 (784, 785) (P.C.). Where a taluqdar executed a deed of gift, in favour of his minor son, of the whole of his estate reciting in it that the estate was heavily indebted and that he desired to put it under the superintendence of the Court of Wards to liquidate those debts, such recital was not inconsistent with the genuineness of the gift and could not make the deed of gift a fictitious one—Ram Bharose v. Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 26 (29), 171 I.C. 481.

The question whether what is transferred has in truth been gifted or not depends upon the actual intention of the parties and the facts of the particular case—Istak v. Ranchod, supra. Where there has been a clear intention to make an out-and-out gift, but the intention has failed for want of transfer or any other cause, the Courts will not convert what was meant to be an out-and-out gift into a trust, and the donor will not be deemed a trustee of the property for the intended donee. The gift will fail—Manchershaw v. Ardeshir, 10 Bom. L.R. 1209; Natha Gulab & Co. v. Scheller, 25 Bom. L.R. 599, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 88.

Where one pays a sum of money to his brother, it does not amount to a gift, if the money is paid in consideration of the latter giving up his claim, however imaginary, to the property of the former—Abdul v. Vishwanathan, A.I.R. 1950 Mys. 33 (F.B.). Where the husband deposited certain ornaments with a bank for safe custody in the joint names of himself and his wife, with direction to be delivered to be either or survivor, it did not amount to a gift, as the husband retained dominion over the property—Chandramani v. Rama Shankar, A.I.R. 1951 All. 529, 1950 A.L.J. 932. Where a purchase has been made in the name of a concubine with the funds of her paramour, it is for the concubine to prove that it was made for her, as the doctrine of advancement does not apply in India—Shiva Kumari v. Udeya Partap, A.I.R. 1947 All. 314, 1947 A.L.J. 144. See also Chandramani v. Rama Shankar, supra. Where a person keeps money in fixed deposit in the name of his niece, brought up and given in marriage by him, there is an inference of gift in favour of the niece—Raghuraj Kishore v. Uttam Devi, I.L.R. (1966) 1 All. 111.

Consideration should not be confused with motive. Where the motive behind the deed of gift was unequivocal to give the transferee a title which would act as a safeguard against any claim for pre-emption the transaction for that reason cannot be called a sale—Hari Singh v. Kallu, A.I.R. 1952 All. 149. Where the owner stated: "Now I have gifted the above mentioned land with all rights appurtenant thereto (mae jumla haq haqooq): held that the wording was sufficient to divest the donor of all rights which he possessed including the right to shamiliat—Bhim Singh v. Chandgi, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 135. Where the dispositive words are clear that an absolute estate is given, the fact that the purpose of the gift is stated to be for maintenance of the donee, it does not follow that a life estate is given—Yadeorao v. Vithal Shamji, A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 55. As to the meaning of "choli bangdi" or "haldi Kumkuni", see the last cited case.

A mere contract to convey immoveable property by way of gift does not create an interest in the property in favour of the intended donee—Dhyabhai v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, 1 P.L.J. 238 (245), 34 I.C. 482. But where a person settles an annuity upon his alleged wife, the settlement cannot be construed to be a contract for consideration of love and affection, but is a gift pure and simple—Gopal Saran v. Sita Devi, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 34 (35), 36 C.W.N. 392, 55 C.L.J. 66, 135 I.C. 753.

The creation or imposition of an easement is not a transfer of property, and does not amount to a gift—Sital Chandra v. Delanney, 20 C.W.N. 1158 (1163, 1164), 34 I.C. 450.

The transmission of the Kyaungdike effected by the 'nomination' or 'appointment' by the Kyaungtagas though may be a 'transfer' does not amount to a gift—U. Thita v. Areseinna, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 76, (1938) R.L.R. 678, 179 I.C. 903.

Property:—This chapter deals only with gifts of tangible property; and so a release of a security without consideration does not fall under this chapter: because, though the release of the security may be said to be a gift, still the gift is not one of tangible property—Mohim Chnadra v. Ram Dayal, 42 C.L.J. 582, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 170.

This Chapter applies to both moveable and immoveable property.

'Existing property':—The subject of gift must be actually in existence at the time of the gift. A donation cannot be made of anything to be produced in future (e.g., future revenues of a property)—Amtulnissa v. Mir Nurudin, 22 Bom. 489. See sec. 124.

'Voluntarily':—In this section the word "voluntarily" bears its ordinary popular meaning denoting the exercise of the unfettered free will, and not its technical meaning of without consideration—U. Thita v. Areseinna, supra relying on A. G. v. Ellis, (1895) 2 Q.B. 466; In re Wilkinson, (1926) Ch. 842; Art Union v. Overseers of the Savoy, (1894) 2 Q.B. 609; and Churchwardens of Birmingham v. Shaw, (1849) 10 Q.B. 868. When a gift is made, it must satisfactorily appear that the donor knew what he was doing and understood the contents of the instrument and its effect, and also that undue influence or pressure was not exercised upon him by the party in whose favour the gift is made—Phul Chand v. Lakkhu, 25 All. 358; Sarba Mohan v. Manmohan, 37 C.W.N. 149 (150). But where a gift which has been found to be not unconscionable is impeached as being procured by the use of undue influence, it is for the person attacking the gift to prove that the donee did use his position to obtain an unfair advantage over the donor—Forman Ali v. Uzir Ali, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 157 (159), 42 C.W.N. 14, 66 C.L.J. 125, 175 I.C. 712, following Poosathurai v. Kannappa, 43 Mad. 546, 47 I.A. 1, 55 I.C. 447. In case of a gift tainted by undue influence and imposition, even an innocent third party cannot retain the benefit, if he is a mere volunteer. But if he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, there is no obligation for restitution on his part; and the mere fact that such a purchaser is a co-villager of the donor will not raise a presumption of his having notice of the undue influence—Forman Ali v. Uzir Ali, supra, at p. 160. If the parties stand in a confidential relation to each other, a gift cannot be supported unless it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the parties were substantially 'at arm's length', i.e., that the donor had competent and independent advice, and was in a position to exercise a free unfettered judgment with full knowledge of what he was doing. In such a case, the law throws the burden of proving good faith on the donee—Phul Chand v. Lakkhu, 25 All. 358. Where a person donates an amount to the Government for a specific purpose, which fails, the donor is entitled to the refund of the amount—State of U. P. v. Shamsundar Ramcharan, A.I.R. 1961 All. 418.

If gifts are made by a pardanashin lady, the strongest and most satisfactory evidence ought to be given by the party who claims under the deed that the transaction was a real and bona fide one, and was understood by the lady, that she had opportunity to take independent advice and that she was a free agent and executed the deed of her own free will—Mahomed Bakhsh v. Hosseini Bibi, 15 Cal. 584 (P.C.); Wazid Khan v. Ewaz Ali Khan, 18 Cal. 545 (P.C.); Khatija v. Ismail, 12 Mad. 380; Mariam Bibi v. Sakina, 14 All. 8; Hakim Muhammad v. Najiban, 20 All. 447 (P.C.). See also Note 69 under sec. 7.

If the donor be an old and infirm woman, the burden will lie very heavily upon the donee to show that the deed of gift was voluntarily executed by her with the full knowledge of its contents, and that she did so without any pressure or solicitations which might amount to an exercise of undue influence on her—Rajaram v. Khandu, 14 Bom. L.R. 340, 15 I.C. 529. The law as to undue influence is the same in the case of a gift as in the case of a contract; Subhas Chandra v. Gangu Prosad, A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 878. But where it was found that the donor was fully able to manage her own business and transacted all her business herself, and even went to the Court and to the Registration Office in connection with litigation and registration of deeds, the mere fact that she was a very old woman with the natural infirmity incident to her age ought not to raise any presumption of undue influence in respect of a deed of gift executed by her—Ismail Mussajee v. Hafiz, 33 Cal. 773 (783) (P.C.).

Without consideration :—“The first condition of a gift, as distinguished from other alienations, is that it should be an act of mere liberality on the giver’s part, in this sense that whatever may be his motive, the act is not done in obedience to any legal obligation, nor with the purpose of placing the donee under any legal obligation. It is an act therefore which imports a clear gain to the donee, an accession to his property which he could not have demanded and for which he cannot be compelled to make a return.”—Shephard and Brown, 7th Edn., p. 444.

A gift is a transfer without consideration, and if there is any consideration in any shape, there is no gift. A promise to discharge the debts of the transferor is a good and valid consideration, and if a property is transferred in consideration of the transferee undertaking to discharge the debts of the transferor, the transaction cannot be treated as a gift—Anrudh v. Lachhmi, 50 All. 818, 26 A.L.J. 753, 117 I.C. 351, A.I.R. 1928 All. 500 (503); Kulasekaraperumal v. Pathakully Thalevanar, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 405. But consideration of love and affection or spiritual or moral benefit is not contemplated by this section. The word ‘consideration’ means valuable consideration, i.e., consideration either of money or money’s worth. A gift in lieu of conferring spiritual benefit to the donor is not a transfer with consideration, but is to be treated as a gift—Debi Saran v. Nandalal, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 591 (593). A transfer of some lands to the transferee for services rendered by him during the illness of the transferor is a gift: see Hiralal Gaurishankar, 30 Bom. L.R. 451, 109 I.C. 149, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 250 (251).

Where a gift of a life-estate is made to a person, the donee has disposing power over the rents and profits which accrued due but were not realized during his lifetime—Mohini Mohan v. Rash Behari, 41 C.W.N. 495.

628. Who can be a donee :—The word “donee” in this section means an ascertained or ascertainable person or persons by whom or on whose behalf a gift can be accepted or refused. This section has no application to a gift to an unascertained number of persons, e.g., the public—Palayya v. Ramavadhanulu, 13 M.L.J. 364. A gift may be made to an idol, because according to Hindu Law an idol is regarded as a juridical person capable of holding property, though it is only in an ideal sense that the property is so held—Jagadindra v. Hemanta Kumari, 32 Cal. 129 (P.C.); Bhupati Nath Smrititirthu v. Ramlal, 37 Cal. 128 (F.B.). A math like an idol is a juridical person capable of holding property—Babajirao v. Lakshmandas, I.L.R. 28 Bom. 215. But see Ram Kumar Ram Chandra & Co. v. Com. I. T., U. P., A.I.R. 1966 All. 100, where it has been laid down that a dedication to a deity is not governed by the T. P. Act.

A gift to a dharma is not valid, as the word 'dharma' is too vague and indefinite for the Court to enforce the gift—Devshunkur v. Motiram, 18 Bom. 136; Morarji v. Nenbai, 17 Bom. 351; Runchorda v. Parbati, 23 Bom. 725 (P.C.). A pious Hindu ordinarily dedicates property to a deity by renouncing his right in a particular property in favour of the idol. That can be done orally, but if there is any document in writing it is registrable—Vide The Hindu Law of Religious & Charitable Trust, by Bijan Kumar Mukherjea, p. 122 (3rd Edn.). An endowment can validly be created in favour of an idol or temple without the performance of any particular ceremonies provided the settlor has clearly expressed his intention in that behalf—Shanti Sarup v. Radhaswami Satsang Sabha, A.I.R. 1969 All. 248. When a Satsangi makes a gift of money to Radha Swami Dayal, a non-juristic person, the gift is in substance for the benefit of the Agra Satsangis, a registered society, and hence valid, because it is in the nature of a gift to an idol or temple to which T. P. Act does not apply—Ibid.

629. Acceptance :—The gift must be accepted by the donee or by some one on his behalf. An offer without acceptance by the donee cannot complete the gift, though the donor may in fact believe that it was accepted—Pudmanand v. Hayes, 28 Cal. 720 (P.C.). Acceptance may be inferred from acts prior to the execution of the deed of gift—Jalakanti Krishnamurthi v. Appalarajugari, A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 213.

What the law requires is acceptance of the gift after its execution, though the deed may not be registered. Anterior negotiations or talks about the gift would not amount to acceptance. The acceptance may be implied, but the facts relied on must be acts of positive conduct of the donee or persons acting on his behalf and not merely passive acquiescence such as standing by when the deed was executed or registered—Venkatasubamma v. Narayanaswami, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 215. Acceptance must be made before the death of the donor—Kesava Kurup v. Thomas Idichla, A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 21.

There must be something shewn to indicate an acceptance on the part of the donee; and as to whether there has been an acceptance and what constitutes acceptance depends upon the circumstances of each case. The acceptance may be signified by an overt act such as the actual taking possession of the property, or such acts by the donee as would in law amount to taking possession of the property where the property is not capable of physical possession. In the case of the donee being incapable of signifying his acceptance by reason of age or of his being an impersonal being, recognised by law as capable of being a donee, such as a Deity, the acceptance required by this section may be made on his behalf by somebody else competent to act as an agent—Deosaran v. Deoki, 3 Pat. 842 (848), 80 I.C. 980, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 657. See also Gangadhar v. Kulathu, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 47. Acceptance does not mean express acceptance; it may be implied: but the rule of implied acceptance ought not to be extended so far as to hold (as under the English law) that the acceptance will be presumed unless dissent is shown. Such a construction is not permissible in view of the last line of the section which says that if the donee dies before acceptance the gift is void. This provision makes it impossible to hold that there is a presumption of acceptance immediately upon the gift, whether the gift is known or unknown to the donee—Anandi v. Mohan Lal, 54 All. 534, 137 I.C. 156, A.I.R. 1932 All. 444 (445). Acceptance will be presumed if there is possession, actual or constructive by the donee. In case of Zemindary property, mutation of names means delivery of possession, and this is undoubtedly proof of acceptance—Ibid. In case of gift by husband to wife, the husband's act of taking steps to get mutation in the name of his wife amounts to delivery of possession to the wife, which means acceptance by the wife. The fact that the husband performed certain acts in respect of the property after the mutation did not show that the husband retained ownership in himself, because those acts must be presumed to be acts done by the husband on behalf of his wife—Ibid. Where the donee received the deed of gift from the donor after its due execution and presented it for registration, these were sufficient indications of his acceptance of the gift—Esukkimadan v. Esakki Amma, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.Coch. 336.

Where the instrument of gift, duly executed and attested is handed over to the donee, and the donee accepts the same, it may constitute a sufficient acceptance of the gift within the meaning of this section—Kalyanasundaram v. Karuppa, 50 Mad. 193 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 509, 100 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 42, followed in Venkat Subba v. Subba Rama, 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.), 30 Bom. L.R. 827, 108 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 86; Adhikari Narayanamma v. Adhikari Thabitinaidu, A.I.R. 1964 Orissa 212. Failure to stamp a document does not affect the validity of the transaction: it merely renders the document inadmissible in evidence. Therefore where the deed is delivered over to the donee immediately after execution, it would be sufficient acceptance of the transfer by the donee under this section and the deed becomes effectual from the very moment of its execution subject to its being stamped and registered as required by law—Purna Chandra v. Kalipada, A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 386, 46 C.W.N. 477.

Under this section, the acceptance may be made while the donor is still capable of giving, and during his lifetime. It is therefore unnecessary that the acceptance should take place immediately.

The acceptance may be made either by the donee himself or by any one on his behalf. A guardian may accept a gift on behalf of his ward. The father is competent to accept a gift made to his minor son. Where the donee is incapable of signifying his acceptance to a gift by reason of age or of his being an impersonal being such as a deity, the acceptance can be made on his behalf by somebody else competent to act as an agent, and acceptance will be presumed after his possession, actual or constructive, by the donee—Ram Bharose v. Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh. 26 (31), 171 I.C. 481. Thus, where the donor is the father and his minor son the donee, and the father applies for mutation of names in favour of the donee and continues to act in dealing with the gifted property on behalf on the minor as his guardian, there is a sufficient acceptance of the gift on behalf of the minor—Ibid. Where a minor's uncle, by a registered deed, made gift of certain property to the minor, which was already in the possession of the minor's father, held that the gift to the minor was valid, as the possession of the father was the only mode in which the minor son could accept or exercise possession—Joitaram v. Ramkrishna, 27 Bom. 31 (40). In a Nagpur case it has been held that an acceptance of a gift may be made personally by a minor donee without the intervention of a guardian—Ganeshdas v. Suryabhan, 13 N.L.R. 18, 39 I.C. 46. A gift made to an idol may be accepted by the priest or the manager of the temple—Jagadindra v. Hemanta, 32 Cal. 129 (P.C.); Deosaran v. Deoki, 3 Pat. 842 (848), 80 I.C. 980, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 657. Where a gift of a house was made to two minors, which was accepted by the donees' guardians, and since then the donees have been living in the house for 11 years, the mere fact that the donor retained the custody of the deed and kept the house in his name in the Municipal records and paid the taxes, does not show that the donor did not intend the gift to be acted upon—Venkataramayya v. Nagamma, 35 L.W. 233, 136 I.C. 343, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 272 (275). Where a gift in favour of the wife and daughters is accepted by the wife, but the donees get their names mutated in pursuance of the deed and retain custody of the deed there is acceptance by all the donees—Tara Sahuani v. Raghunath Sahu, A.I.R. 1963 Orissa 50.

The mere custody by the donor of the deed of gift does not lead to any adverse conclusion against the donee, especially where the entire conduct of the donee shows that he accepted the gift and the document was kept in the family-box to which the donee also had access—Ankamma v. Narasayya, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 127, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 357. The acceptance of a gift can be inferred not from the donee's present possession of the deed of gift, but from the fact of the deed having been handed over to him by the donor and his having accepted the same. Where the donee was living as an inmate of the donor's family being in league with the donor's daughter, it is quite possible for him to take hold of the deed of gift without the donor's knowledge and intention—Ram Chander v. Sital Prasad, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 130.

Registration of deed after donor's death :—This section only requires that the gift should be accepted during the life-time of the donor; it does not require that the gift should also be registered during his life-time. Therefore, a gift of immoveable property is not invalid merely because registration of the deed of gift may have taken place after the death of the donor—Hardei v. Ramlal, 11 All. 319 (F.B.); Nand Kishore v. Suraj Prasad, 20 All. 392; Khashaba v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 Bom. 441. See Note 634 under sec. 123.

123. For the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses.

Transfer how effected.

For the purpose of making a gift of moveable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed as aforesaid or by delivery.

Such delivery may be made in the same way as goods sold may be delivered.

For limitation of the territorial operation of this section see sec. 1, ante. Sec. 123 extends to every cantonment in British India—Section 287 of the Cantonment Act II of 1924.

By Notification No. 183-st. dated 27-4-1935 under section 1 of this Act, the present section was extended to all Municipal Committees of the Punjab. So thereafter for the purpose of a valid gift, a written instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor attested by two witnesses and registered is necessary—Prakash Vati v. Maya Devi, A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 304.

630. Scope of section :—The Allahabad High Court has laid down that this section applies to religious gifts, and in the absence of a registered deed of gift, the dedication of property to an idol is invalid—Mannu Lal v. Radha Kishenji, 36 I.C. 989 (All.). See also Shaukat Begam v. Thakurji, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 14, 131 I.C. 442, where it has been held that the provisions of this section apply to gifts direct as well as to gifts through the intervention of a trust, and title, therefore, in an endowment, properly passes on to the idol (who must be treated as a juridical person) on the execution of a deed of endowment by the donor. "Their Lordships cannot adopt such a narrow construction of the term 'gift' as would exclude any gift where the donor's bounty passes to his intended beneficiary through the medium of a trust so that while a gift by A to C direct would be governed by the Mahomedan law, a gift by A to B in trust for C would be governed by some other law. So to hold would, they think, defeat the plain purpose and object of this section of the statute"—Sadik Husain v. Hashim Ali, 38 All. 627 (645) (P.C.). The Patna High Court likewise holds that the Hindu law in the case of gifts has been expressly abrogated by sec. 129, and a gift under the Hindu law must be made in accordance with sec. 123 by a registered document—Debi Saran v. Nandalal, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 591 (593). But the Madras High Court holds that the Chapter relating to gifts can have no application to gifts by dedication, because a dedication to an idol is not a gift to a sentient being, but to God. Consequently, a dedication to a temple or idol of a small portion of the property on the occasion of a marriage or sradh ceremony need not be in writing registered, but may be made orally. But if it is made in writing it must be registered. If the dedication is made by giving the property to the trustees of the temple, it must be in writing registered—Ramalinga v. Sivachidambara, 42 Mad. 440 (442, 444). And it has been ruled by the Privy Council that a dedication of a portion of the family property (including the immoveable property) for the purpose of a religious charity (e.g., for erecting a choultry or charity house for Brahmans) may, according to Hindu law, be validly made without any instrument in writing—Gangi Reddi v. Tammi Reddi, 50 Mad. 421 (P.C.), 52 M.L.J. 524, 31 C.W.N. 799, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 80 (82), 101 I.C. 79. But this decision was given without any reference to the T. P. Act. The law is therefore unsettled on this subject. It should also be noticed that since the Transfer of Property Act contemplates only a transfer from one living person to another living person (sec. 5), a gift to an idol does not fall under this Act (and need not be in writing registered), because an idol, though recognised in law as a juristic person, is not strictly speaking a living person—Narasimhaswami v. Vekatalingam, 50 Mad. 687 (F.B.), 53 M.L.J. 203, 103 I.C. 302, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 636 (638); Harihar v. Guru Granth Saheb, 11 P.L.T. 658, 128 I.C. 791, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 610 (612). See also Birendra v. Bahuria, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 612 (614), 13 Pat. 356. Moreover, the new definition of 'living person' as given in sec. 5 does not include an idol.

This section does not apply to a grant of easement, because a grant or imposition of an easement does not amount to a transfer—Sital Chandra v. Delaney, 20 C.W.N. 1158 (1163, 1164), 34 I.C. 450.

This section does not apply to partition, for partition is not a gift, and no writing or registration is necessary to effect it—Laxman v. Tayya, 51 I.C. 93, 15 N.L.R. 93; Ma Sein v. Maun U., 25 I.C. 498. At a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his sons, they purported to include the second defendant who was admittedly not a member of the joint family, and to allot to him a proportionate share of the joint properties. There was, however, no registered instrument though the property allotted was over Rs. 100 in value. Held that the transaction, by which a portion of the property was given to a person who was not a member of the family, was a gift and not a partition, and not being made by a registered instrument, was invalid. The parties cannot evade the formal requirements of the Transfer of Property Act by calling a transaction by a different name—Mare Gouda v. Chenne Gouda, 49 M.L.J. 150, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1174, 90 I.C. 131. A deed of release may operate as a deed of gift—A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1395.

This section does not affect the essential ingredients of a complete gift set forth in section 122 (viz., voluntary giving by the donor and acceptance by the donee) but only provides a further safeguard by requiring a gift of immoveable properties to be effected by a registered instrument. The provision in sec. 123 does not purport to legislate that the registration of a deed of gift in respect of an immoveable property is a sufficient transfer of the property. And so, it must be proved in each case, apart from the registration of the document, that there was complete divesting of ownership, i.e., that the donor had voluntarily and without consideration transferred the property to the donee, and that there was an acceptance on the part of the donee. Therefore, the registration of a deed of gift is not sufficient to constitute a gift where it is found that in spite of the registration the donor continued to be in possession of the property—Deosaran v. Deoki Bharathi, 3 Pat. 842 (849), 80 I.C. 980, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 657. Therefore, if, in spite of the registration and delivery of the deed of gift, it appears that the donor never intended to give effect to the deed and had not done all he could do to complete the gift, but had remained in possession, to which the donee never objected, and the donor subsequently sold the property to other persons, held that the gift was not complete in spite of registration of the deed—Lakshimoni v. Nit-tayananda, 20 Col. 464.

The effect of a registered instrument of gift duly executed and attested and accepted and acted upon by the donee is that the title legally passes from the donor to the donee. Any mental reservation or secret intention on the part of the donor to the contrary is ineffective—Bhagabai v. Ghanshamdas, A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 328, I.L.R. 1948 Nag. 824.

631. Hindu Law :—Although the Hindu Law requires delivery of possession to complete a gift of immoveable property, that law has been abrogated by sec. 123 of this Act. This section clearly seems to have the effect of rendering unnecessary the delivery of possession, substituting, as it does, registration for delivery of possession—Phul Chand v. Lakkhu, 25 All. 358; Pahlwan Singh v. Ram Bharose, 27 All. 169; Lallu Singh v. Gur Narain, 45 All. 115 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1922 All. 467, 68 I.C. 798; Balmakund v. Bhagwan, 16 All. 185; Kali Das v. Kanhaiyalal, 11 Cal. 121 (P.C.). Dharmodas v. Nistarini, 14 Cal. 446; Balbhadra v. Bhowani, 34 Cal. 853 (858); Madhab Rao v. Kasi Bai, 34 Bom. 287; Bai Ram-bai v. Bai Moni, 23 Bom. 234; Alabai Koya v. Mussa Koya, 24 Mad. 513 (522); Debi Singh v. Bansidhar, 66 I.C. 480, A.I.R. 1922 All. 44; Bhagwan v. Hari Singh, 22 N.L.R. 124, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 199, 83 I.C. 41; Nandra v. Chandi, 5 O.C. 98; Haripada v. Elokeshi, 44 C.W.N. 357, 71 C.L.J. 144, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 254. So also, a gift, of moveable property may be made simply by a registered instrument without delivery of property—Dharmodas v. Nistarini, 14 Cal. 446.

Since delivery of possession is not necessary, it follows that if a Hindu executes a gift in presenti of three villages by means of a duly registered instrument but reserves possession of the villages in order to enjoy the usufruct during his life-time, and at the same time provides that he would not alienate the property to anybody else, the gift is perfectly valid—Lalu Singh v. Gur Narain, 45 All. 115 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1922 All. 467, 20 A.L.J. 744; and if the donee dies during the life-time of the donor, the ownership of the properties (though not the immediate possession thereof) would pass to the donee's heirs—Ibid.

A transaction by which a Hindu father makes a division of his self-acquired property between his sons does not amount to a gift and therefore does not require registration—Kisansingh v. Vishnu, A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 4, I.L.R. 1951 Bom. 148.

This Act was not applied to Berar until 1907. So a gift of immoveable property made prior to that date was governed by the Hindu law and delivery of possession was essential to make a gift valid. A gift by a registered deed without delivery of possession in such a case was invalid and did not convey a valid title to the donee—Chandrabhaga v. Anandrao, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 142, 173 I.C. 85.

Where a deed of gift was duly made, registered and accepted, the mere fact that the deed of gift remained with the donor did not make the gift any the less complete—Anrithammal v. Ponnusami, 17 M.L.J. 386;

Ankamma v. Narasayya, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 129 (1946) 2 M.L.J. 357. A dedication of property to a Hindu deity is not a gift—Ram Kumar Ramchandra & Co. v. Commissioner of Incometax, A.I.R. 1966 All. 100.

632. Mahomedan law :—Under the Mahomedan law, the essentials of a gift are, a declaration of gift by the donor, an acceptance of the gift by the donee, and delivery of possession such as the subject of the gift is susceptible of. This rule of Muhammadan law is unaffected by the provisions of sec. 123, T. P. Act (see sec. 129, infra), and consequently a registered instrument is not necessary to validate a gift of immoveable property—Ali Bakhsh v. Ghurai, 18 O.C. 122, 28 I.C. 180 (181); Mahomed Kasim v. Controller of Estate Duty, A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 130.

Delivery of possession being essential to the validity of a gift, it follows that if there is no delivery of possession, there is no valid gift—Sadik Hussain Khan v. Nawab Syed Hasim Ali, 38 All. 627 (645, 647, 657) (P.C.); Chaudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Mahomed Hasan, 28 All. 439 (P.C.); Even a registered deed of gift is not effectual under the Mahomedan law, if it is not accompanied by delivery of possession—Mogulsha v. Mahomed Saheb, 11 Bom. 517; Ismail v. Ramji, 23 Bom. 682; Vahazulla v. Boyapati, 30 Mad. 519; Mohinuddin v. Manchershaw 6 Bom. 650; Meherali v. Tajuddin, 13 Bom. 156; Nizamuddin v. Abdul Gaffur, 13 Bom. 264; Rahim Baksh v. Sajjad Ahmad, 19 C.W.N. 1311, 26 I.C. 466; Rahimjan v. Imanjan, 17 C.L.J. 173, 15 I.C. 698 (700). When the donee is the minor child of the donor actual transfer of possession is not necessary, and when the donee is the grand child acceptance by the father is sufficient—Qhamarunnissa Begum v. Fatima Begum, A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 367.

Under the Mahomedan law, a valid gift can be effected by delivery of possession, and if there is delivery of possession, the mere fact that there is also an unregistered deed of gift does not make the gift invalid. The gift was complete as soon as there was delivery of possession, and the unregistered instrument of gift should be left out of consideration—Nasib Ali v. Wajed Ali, 44 C.L.J. 490, 100 I.C. 296, A.I.R. 1927, Cal. 197 (198); Ali Bakhsh v. Ghurai, 18 O.C. 122, 28 I.C. 180 (182). So also, if a gift takes place by delivery of possession, and there is also a deed of gift but that deed is not duly attested, the gift is nevertheless valid. The gift is complete by delivery of possession. It is immaterial that there is an instrument in writing and that it has not been properly attested. The provisions of this section as to execution of a deed of gift and attestation do not apply to Mahomedans—Karam Ilahi v. Sharfuddin, 38 All. 212 (213), 35 I.C. 114.

An entry in column 11 of the sesha (marriage certificate) which relates to the amount of dower was as follows; "Rs. 500 of the current coin as prompt dower in lieu of which a house is given". Held that as the house was given in lieu of mehar, the transaction was a simple gift and not a transfer in consideration of the relinquishment of the mehar by the proposed bride. The unilateral act was not a sale— Md. Hashim v. Amcnabi, A.I.R. 1952 Hyd. 3.

There is no real analogy, between a wakf and a gift. In the case of a wakf delivery of possession is not essential, and an intention to divest oneself in presenti of the ownership of the property is sufficient—Zainab Bi v. Jamalkhan, A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 428, I.L.R. 1949 Nag. 426.

Gift by a Mahomedan to a Hindu :—Under the Mahomedan law, a Mahomedan can make a valid gift to a Hindu, and such a gift is governed by the rule of Mahomedan law, and not by the Hindu law. Sec. 123 does not apply to the case, and consequently, an oral gift immoveable property made by a Mahomedan to a Hindu, if made simply by delivery of possession, is valid. No registered deed is necessary—Tabera v. Ajodhya, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 417 (419).

633. Buddhist law :—It has been held that although the rule of Buddhist law requires delivery of possession as essential to the validity of a gift, such rule is abrogated by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, just as this Act has abrogated the rule of Hindu law as to the necessity of delivery of possession—U. Pandwan v. U. Sandima, 2 Rang. 131 (134), 83 I.C. 557, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 309; Mi Hla Zan v. Pa Pa Ye, 3 Bur. L.J. 111, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 353; Ma Thin v. Maing Gyi, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 13 (14), 75 I.C. 166.

Under the Buddhist law, delivery of possession is necessary to the validity of a donatio mortis causa—Maung Ba v. Maung Pyu, 40 I.C. 854.

633A. Immoveable property :—Future rent is a benefit to arise out of land within the meaning of sec. 3 (25) of the General Clauses Act X of 1897, and therefore is immoveable property within the meaning of this section—Bhudeb v. Bhikshakar, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 120 (125), 196 I.C. 837. See Note 17, ante.

634. Registration :—Where the subject-matter of a gift is immoveable property it must be registered under the provision of this section—Lim Charlie v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 67, 12 Rang. 238, 59 C.L.J. 91, 147 I.C. 328; otherwise the gift is invalid—Ibid; Varada v. Jeevarthummal, 43 Mad. 244 (P.C.). Recital contained in a petition to the Collector for an order for transferring the villages to the donee's name cannot be used as evidence of the gift but can be referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by the donee—Ibid.

Where there was a gift of Sarvottam's right to assessment of the dhara, such a right was a nibandha in Hindu law and is immoveable property. So the instrument of gift required registration—Madhav Rao v. Kashibai, 34 Bom. 287.

The compliance with secs. 34, 35, 58 and 59 of the Registration Act constitutes registration of the document and not the presence of certificate under sec. 60 of that Act—Sobhnath v. Pirthipal, A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 223. In this case it was held that the document must be deemed to have been duly registered though there were some defects in the formalities of registration.

Registration after donor's death :—It is not necessary for the validity of a deed of gift that it should be registered by the donor himself. Where a Hindu executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife and died, and the deed was subsequently registered at the instance of the widow, held that it was a valid deed of gift within the provisions of this section—Bhabotosh v. Soleiman, 33 Cal. 584. Nor is it necessary that the registration should take place during the lifetime of the donor. A gift of immoveable property is not invalid merely because the deed of gift may have been registered after the death of the donor—Hardei v. Ramlal, 11 All. 319; Nand Kishore v. Surja Prosad, 20 All. 392; Kashaba v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 Bom. 441. The post mortem registration of a deed of gift by the legal representative of the donor has the same effect as its registration by the donor himself during his life-time—Meiyyalu v. Anjalay, 25 Mad. 672; Kashaba v. Chandrabhagabai, 32 Bom. 441. If the donor dies after executing the deed of gift, and the donee does not take any steps to register the deed, the gift fails. See Hiralal v. Gaurishankar, 30 Bom. L.R. 451, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 250.

A deed of gift registered against the wishes of the donor is valid. And so, where the donor executed a deed of gift and handed over the deed to the donee, and the latter proceeded to register the deed, the donor could not bring a suit for injunction against the donee to restrain him from registering the deed. Once a deed is executed and handed over to the donee, the gift is complete—Venkat Subba v. Subba Rama, 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.), 32 C.W.N. 708, 108 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 86 (87). The defendants induced the plaintiff to execute a deed of sale but they got a deed of gift written, and the plaintiff on knowing that it was a deed of gift refused to have it registered, whereupon the defendants applied to the Registering Officer, and procured its registration by order of that Officer against the wishes of the donor. Held (leaving aside the question of fraud in getting a deed of gift executed instead of a deed of sale, for which the plaintiff had a separate remedy) that a "gift duly made and accepted is not invalid merely because it was registered afterwards against the wishes of the donor. Registration is not an act of the donor, but the act of the officer appointed by law to register documents. A document need not even be presented for registration by the executant. Consent to the registration of the deed is not a part of the gift. The term registered instrument does not necessarily mean an instrument registered at the instance of, or with the consent of, the donor"—per Chamier, J., in Parbati v. Baijnath, 9 A.L.J. 300, 14 I.C. 61, upheld on appeal in Parbati v. Baijnath, 35 All. 3, 16 I.C. 406. In Madras, it was once held that a deed of gift registered against the wishes of the donor was not valid, and not sufficient to complete the gift—Ramamirtha v. Gopala, 19 Mad. 433 (435); it was further held that a deed of gift registered after the death of the donor against the wishes of the legal representatives of the deceased donor was ineffective and did not pass the property—Dasi Svarnam v. Deivanayagam, 28 M.L.J. 378, 28 I.C. 271; but both these cases have been overruled by a Full Bench which has decided that there is nothing in sec. 123 which requires the donor to have the deed registered; all that is required is that he should have signed the instrument, and once it is duly executed, the Registration Act allows it to be registered even though the donor may not agree to its registration, and upon registration it would take effect from the date of execution. Consequently, a deed of gift can be registered by the donee after the death of the donor without the consent of the legal representative of the donor—Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi, 40 Mad. 204 (211) (F.B.).

The law on this subject has been thus stated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee: "When the instrument of gift has been handed over by the donor to the donee and accepted by him, the former has done everything in his power to complete the donation and to make it effective. Registration does not depend upon his consent, but is the act of an officer appointed for the purpose, who if the deed is executed by or on behalf of the donor and is attested by at least two witnesses, must register it if it is presented by a person having the necessary interest within the prescribed period. Neither death nor the express revocation by the donor is a ground for refusing registration, if the other conditions are complied with"—Kalyanasundaram v. Karuppa, 50 Mad. 193 (P.C.), 52 M.L.J. 346, 100 I.C. 105, 31 C.W.N. 509, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 42; Venkat Subba v. Subba Rama, 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.), 30 Bom. L.R. 827, 32 C.W.N. 708, 108 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 86 (87); see also Sudhir v. Tarangini, 41 C.W.N. 1201.

A deed of gift of immoveable property executed in accordance with the terms of sec. 123, but never communicated to the intended donee and remaining in the possession of the donor undelivered, would not come within the ruling of the Full Bench in 40 Mad. 204, and cannot be compulsorily registered at the instance of the donee—Kalyana Sundaram v. Karuppa, supra.

Where there is a gift of immoveables and moveables, but the former fails for want of registration, the latter may be held good if it was not conditional on the validity of the former—Perumal v. Perumal, 44 Mad. 196.

635. Oral gift or unregistered deed of gift:—According to the Allahabad High Court, the provisions of this section are mandatory and imperative, and no gift of immoveable property can be made except by means of a registered instrument. An oral gift (e.g., a gift by way of sankalpa at the time of nuptials) cannot operate as a valid gift of immoveable property. It cannot divest the donor of his proprietary rights in the property or clothe the donee with any title to the same. The donor must be taken, in the eye of the law, to continue to remain the owner of the property—Hira Mani v. Anmol, 26 A.L.J. 944, A.I.R. 1928 All. 699 (702), 117 I.C. 351; Allam Gangadhara Rao v. Gollapalli Gangarao, A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 291. See also Samar v. Dinanath, A.I.R. 1953 Ass. 19. Where the plaintiff consented to make a gift of land to the defendant (a municipality) but there was no registered deed of gift, the Bombay High Court held that the oral gift was not complete in law, and the fact that the municipality occupied the land and constructed a road on it, did not give validity to the transaction—Kuverji v. Municipality of Lonavela, 45 Bom. 164, 58 I.C. 403, 22 Bom. L.R. 654. An oral gift is not valid, even if the donee executes a document in favour of the donor acknowledging the oral gift—Girija Prasad v. Purshottam, 28 Bom. L.R. 421, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 261, 94 I.C. 609. If there is an oral gift, followed by delivery of possession, and then the donor executes a deed of gift but dies before he can register it, held that there is no valid gift—Hiralal v. Gaurishankar, 30 Bom. L.R. 451, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 250 (251), 109 I.C. 149. The Madras High Court similarly holds that where there was no deed of gift, but the donor merely presented to the Collector a petition reciting that he had given certain villages to the donee and praying that an order be made transferring the villages to the donee's name, and on the same date the donee also presented a petition to the Collector reciting the gift of the villages and asked for the transfer of them to his name on the register, held that as there was no deed of gift in writing registered, the mere recitals in the petition could not be used as evidence of the gift—Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal, 43 Mad. 244 (249) (P.C.) But the Rangoon and Calcutta High Courts lay down a more equitable principle. Thus, the Rangoon High Court is of opinion that where an immoveable property was transferred with possession orally as a gift and the donor allowed the donees in possession to deal with it as their absolute property (e.g., to mortgage it, to re-mortgage it, to purchase other properties with the proceeds of the mortgages), the donor would not be allowed to take advantage of the non-registration of the gift and to take back the property. To allow the donor to do so would be to permit this Act to be used to perpetrate a fraud in a manner which could not be recognised—Ma Htay v. U Tha Hline, 2 Rang. 649 (652, 653), 88 I.C. 66, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 184. Where the donor made an oral gift of certain lands, and reported to the revenue authorities for effecting a mutation in the name of the donee, and the donee was in possession since the date of the gift, held that though the gift did not convey any title to the donee, by reason of not being made by a registered deed, still as the donor had clearly divested himself of the ownership of these lands, neither the donor nor any person claiming through him was entitled to bring a suit to take back the properties, and the donee could resist the suit on the ground of estoppel—M. P. L. M. P. Chetty v. Ma Ngwe Sin, 1 Rang. 665, 79 I.C. 485, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 200 (201); Ma Shin v. Maung Hman, 1 Rang. 651, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 102 (103), 79 I.C. 579. Similarly, where in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement, a father made a gift of his house to his daughter and put her in possession, under an unregistered deed, and she held such possession for a number of years, and the donor afterwards sued for recovery of possession of the house, held that the donor was estopped from bringing the suit—Pran Mohan v. Hari Mohan, 52 Cal. 425, 29 C.W.N. 889 (891), A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 856 (following Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar, 42 Cal. 801 (P.C.)). It is apprehended by the present editor that the above cases of the Rangoon and the Calcutta High Courts are no longer good law in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ariff v. Jadunath, 58 I.A. 91, 58 Cal. 1235, 35 C.W.N. 550, A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 79.

If, under the oral gift, the donee remains in possession for more than 12 years, his title will be perfected by adverse possession, and it will not be in the power of the donor to take back the property—Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal, 43 Mad. 244 (250) (P.C.).

Part-performance:—The doctrine of part-performance applies only when the agreement is capable of specific enforcement. An agreement to make a gift is not capable of specific performance, and the above doctrine has no application. Therefore, where there is an oral gift followed by delivery of possession, the donee cannot rely on the doctrine of part-performance in order to resist a suit for recovery of possession brought by the donor or his representatives—Hiralal v. Gourishankar, 30 Bom. L.R. 451, 109 I.C. 149, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 250 (252); Hira Mani v. Anmol, 26 A.L.J. 944, A.I.R. 1928 All. 699 (703), 117 I.C. 351. The positive enactment of this section as regards registration cannot be ignored or overridden by any rule of equity (e.g., the rule of part-performance)—Hira Mani v. Anmol, supra. It should also be noted that the rule of part-performance enunciated in the new section 53A does not apply to a gift, because that section applies only to a transfer for consideration.

635A. Non-delivery of possession :—Though delivery of possession is not essential to the validity of a gift of immoveable property, still the withholding of possession may, under the circumstances of the case, lead the Courts to presume that the gift was merely a colourable transaction and that there was no intention to pass title. Thus, where a deed of gift of immoveable property was secretly executed by a person in favour of his wife at a time when the failure of the firm of which the donor was a partner was in sight, if not actually imminent, and the gift was kept secret till the firm had been declared insolvent, and it was found that the donee never obtained possession of the property, held that the title did not pass from the donor to the donee—Official Assignee v. Bidyasundari, 24 C.W.N. 145, 54 I.C. 700.

Signed :—The deed of gift must be signed either by the donor himself or by someone on his behalf. As to what is or is not a valid signature, see the analogous cases of mortgage cited in Note 350 under sec. 59.

636. Attestation :—See the new definition of 'attested' in sec. 3 added by the T. P. Amendment Act XXVII of 1926. Prior to this definition it was held that the attesting witness must see the executant sign the deed of gift; if the attesting witnesses did not see the execution but merely heard from the executant in acknowledgment that he had executed the deed, there was no valid attestation—Sahda v. Raja Ram, 11 A.L.J. 757, 21 I.C. 83; In re Velavapalatti Peda, 9 M.L.T. 57, 8 I.C. 887; Baijnath v. Biraj Koer, 2 Pat. 52 (61). Amarappa v. Raghu, 44 Bom. 231. These decisions are no longer of any authority in view of the new definition of 'attested' in sec. 3. See Note 18A, under sec. 3 and compare Note 353 under sec. 59.

The Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts as well as the Oudh Chief Court are of opinion that an attesting witness, if he is illiterate, can put his mark to the instrument, and this would be sufficient attestation. See Sashi Bhushan v. Chandra, 33 Cal. 861; Lal Bahadur v. Rameshwar, 3 Luck. 113, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 510 (511); Chirangi Lal v. Purna, 12 A.L.J. 1114, 26 I.C. 84. But the Madras High Court is of opinion that under the new definition of 'attested' in sec. 3, which is taken from sec. 63 (old sec. 50) of the Indian Succession Act, attestation by mark is not a valid attestation. This definition enables the executant to "sign or affix his mark" to the instrument, but uses no such alternative expression in the case of witnesses but simply speaks of their having "signed" the instrument. The conclusion is that the attesting witness must sign the document, and a person who cannot sign his name is not competent to attest a document by means of a mark—Venkataramayya v. Nagamma, 35 L.W. 233, 136 I.C. 343, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 272 (274). See also Nityagopal v. Nagendra, 11 Cal. 429 (relating to a will). Contra—Nagamma v. Venkataramayya, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 178, 58 Mad. 220, 154 I.C. 777.

The scribe may be attesting witness; and it is not necessary that he should add the word 'witness' after his signature. Though prima facie the scribe's signature on a deed is not that of an attesting witness, still if there is sufficient evidence to show that he signed not as a writer but as an attesting witness after the execution of the document, there is no reason why he should not be considered as one of the attesting witnesses—Ma Kin v. Maung Kya, 10 Bur. L.T. 106, 35 I.C. 275. This subject is elaborately discussed in Note 352 under sec. 59.

It is unnecessary to prove due attestation where validity of the deed of gift is not specifically denied on the ground that it has not been attested in the manner required by law—Mt. Azizunnissa v. Siraj Hussain, A.I.R. 1934 All. 507 (514), 152 I.C. 146.

Since this section does not apply to Mahomedans, a deed of gift executed by a Mahomedan would be valid even if it be not validly attested according to the requirements of this section—Karam Ilahi v. Sharfuddin, 38 All. 212 (213), 35 I.C. 114. But of course there should be delivery of possession.

637. Gift of moveable property :—A gift of moveable property may be effected either by a registered deed or by delivery of the property: and before the thing is actually delivered or a deed of gift executed and registered, the property does not vest in the donee. Where therefore a bonus was granted by a Railway Company to a certain person, and before it was paid to him it was attached in execution of a decree obtained against him, held that the property was not yet at the disposal of the donee and could not be attached in execution of the decree against him—Janki Das v. E. I. Ry. Co., 6 All. 634; Natha Gulab v. Sheller, 25 Bom. L.R. 599, 87 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 88. Similarly, where the proprietor of a company got certain entries made in the company's account books crediting his wife with certain items after debiting them to his capital account, it was held that the entries did not complete the gift and what the law required for completion was never carried out, e.g., a registered deed or delivery of possession although the wife was actually paid interest on the amounts—Chambers v. Chambers, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 154, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 963, 1940 M.W.N. 1185.

The original gift of jewels to a woman on her first marriage being subject to the customary incident that there should be a reverter of the property to the husband's family on her remarriage, the woman had no absolute property in the jewels within sec. 123—Sanyasi v. Guruvolu, A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 271, (1949) 2 M.L.J. 738.

Where a gift of a certain sum of money was made by the father to his daughter by a pro-note which was registered, the gift could not be objected to on the ground of non-delivery, as gifts of moveable property can be validly made by a registered instrument only—Krishan v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1950 Tr.-Coch. 73. If a person, not being a banker, makes entries in his own accounts crediting a certain sum in the account of his grandson and debiting his account by the same amount the transaction does not operate as a gift as there is no delivery of possession—Com. of Income-tax, U. P. v. Smt. Shyamo Bibi, A.I.R. 1967 All. 82.

If the subject of gift is already in the possession of the donee, formal delivery of possession is not possible. The donor may make a declaration of gift in his favour, leaving him in possession of the thing, and such declaration is sufficient delivery—Bai Kushal v. Lakshmana, 7 Bom. 452. "The delivery need not be made at the time of the gift. Delivery first and gift afterwards is as effectual as gift first and delivery afterwards. Therefore, where a chattel of one person is already in the possession of another, though not for the purpose of an intended gift, an effectual verbal gift of it to the latter may be made without any further delivery to him"—Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 15, p. 412. Where the thing is in the hands of a third person, the donor's request to such person to deliver is the only delivery possible.

An oral gift must be established by satisfactory evidence—Rameshwar v. Ruknath Koeri, infra.

If both moveable and immoveable properties are made the subject of gift, and the gift is invalid in respect of the immoveable properties (e.g., for want of a registered deed) it would not be a ground for dismissing the claim as regards the moveables, because the gift of the latter was not conditional on the gift of the former—Perumal v. Perumal, 44 Mad. 196 (204), 40 M.L.J. 25, 61 I.C. 461.

Under the third para, the delivery of moveable property may be made in the same manner as goods may be delivered—Rameshwar v. Ruknath Koeri, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 165 (170), 67 I.C. 451. As to how delivery of goods may be made, see section 33 of the Sale of Goods Act (III of 1930) which runs as follows: "Delivery of goods sold may be made by doing anything which the parties agree shall be treated as delivery or which has the effect of putting the goods in the possession of the buyer or of any person authorised to hold them on his behalf." In England, the law is thus stated: "Actual manual delivery by the donor to the donee is not however essential to complete the gift thereof. It is sufficient if the donee be put by the donor in possession of the chattels. Where chattels cannot be actually delivered owing to their bulk, they can be constructively delivered, e.g., by delivery of the key of the warehouse in which they are stored."—Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 15, p. 412.

Under the English law, if money is deposited in a Bank by the husband in the name of his wife, it is presumed that the deposit is intended for her advancement. But this rule does not hold good in India, and such a deposit would not amount to a gift of the money to the wife, because there is no delivery of the money to her—Paul v. Nathaniel, 1931 A.L.J. 417, 132 I.C. 573, A.I.R. 1931 All. 596. But if a current account in the sole name of J is converted into joint, either or survivor account, in names of J and F, then on the death of J, F will be entitled to the amount standing to the credit of the joint account—Arris Fitzalan v. Imperial Bank of India, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 56.

The making of the gift of a fixed deposit in a bank is not a gift of moveable property, but of an actionable claim. The handing over of the fixed deposit receipt would not be enough, and a document in writing signed by the transferor under sec. 130 would be necessary—Rajeshwari v. Mohan Bikram, A.I.R. 1945 All. 409. But the document need not be executed in any particular form—Brahmayya v. K. P. Thangavelu Nadar, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 570.

638. Gift when takes effect :—A gift takes effect from the date of execution of the deed of gift and not from the date of its registration—Venkata Subba v. Subba Rama 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.), 30 Bom. L.R. 827, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 86 (87), 108 I.C. 367. Thus, where a person executed a deed of gift in favour of a charity on the 9th September, adopted a son on the 10th and registered the deed on the 15th, held that the gift was complete on the 9th, and the adopted son had no claim to the properties comprised in the gift, though the deed was registered subsequent to his adoption—Kalyansundaram v. Krishnaswami, 11 L.W. 187, 62 I.C. 280; Kalyanasundaram v. Karuppa, 17 L.W. 232, 73 I.C. 206, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 282; Kalyanasundaram v. Karuppa, 50 Mad. 193 (P.C.), 52 M.L.J. 346, 100 I.C. 105, 31 C.W.N. 509, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 42. In other words, a gift takes effect, as soon as the instrument of gift, duly executed and attested, is handed over to the donee, and the gift has been accepted by the donee. The view once taken by the Madras High Court in Ramamirtha v. Gopala, 19 Mad. 433 (434) that a gift is not complete until it has been registered and that it operates only upon registration, has been overruled by Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi, 40 Mad. 204 (211) (F.B.), where it is distinctly laid down that upon registration the gift takes effect from the date of its execution.

Imperfect gift—Trust :—Where there has been a clear intention to make a gift, but on account of an omission to comply with the requirements of this section or through any other cause, the gift has failed, the Court will not convert what was intended to be an out-and-out gift into a trust. The gift will fail altogether—Manchershaw v. Ardeshir, 10 Bom. L.R. 1206. Thus, a Railway Company sanctioned a gratuity of Rs. 7700 to the defendant, a retired employee, but before the money was remitted to him, the plaintiff in execution of a money-decree against the defendant attached the sum. Held that the money not having been delivered to the defendant at the date of attachment, there was no complete gift of the amount to the defendant, and the attachment of the money as the property of the defendant was inoperative. Even the incomplete transfer would not constitute the donor a trustee of the property for the intended donee; in other words, the imperfect gift will not be construed as a declaration of trust—Natha Gulab & Co. v. Scheller, 25 Bom. L.R. 599, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 88, 87 I.C. 312.

124. A gift comprising both existing and future property is void as to the latter.

Gift of existing and future property.

639. This section is an explanation of sec. 122 which lays down that a gift is a transfer of an existing moveable or immoveable property. There can be no alienation of a thing not in existence. Thus, where a gift was made of "all my present and future personalty," it was held that the transfer was good as to the property of the transfer existing at the date of execution of the deed, but bad as to the after-acquired property—Belding v. Read, 3 H. & C. 955; Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H.L.C. 199; Tadman v. Epineuil, 20 Ch. D. 758.

A gift of future property is a mere promise which cannot be enforced and is therefore void. When a gift rests merely in promise or unfulfilled intention, it is incomplete and imperfect, and the Court will not compel the intending donor or those claiming under him to complete and perfect it—Forrest v. Forrest, (1865) 11 L.T. 763. Where there was a transfer by way of gift of future income of a property before it had accrued, it was inoperative under this section—Brindaban v. Oudh Behari, A.I.R. 1947 All. 179, I.L.R. 1947 All. 8.

125. A gift of a thing to two or more donees, of whom one does not accept it, is void as to the interest which he would have taken had he accepted.

Gift to several of whom one does not accept.

640. When a gift is made to two or more persons, this section intends that the donees would take the property as tenants-in-common, each donee getting a distinct share in the property, and the non-acceptance by one of the donees would make the gift void only in respect of his intended share. This section lays down that a gift is personal to the donee, and therefore if a gift is made to two persons jointly and one of them does not accept it, the other cannot take the whole. The English law, however, lays down a contrary rule: "If an estate is limited to two persons jointly, the one capable of taking and the other not, he who is capable of taking shall take the whole"—per Lord Hardwicke in Humphrey v. Tayleur, (1752) 1 Amb. 138.

The above rule of English law was applied by the Privy Council in a case of gift executed prior to the passing of this Act. Thus, where a gift was made by a widow to her daughter and the daughter's husband jointly, and the gift was invalid as to the husband (owing to a custom of the village as to the right of inheritance) held that the daughter took the whole estate—Nandi Singh v. Sita Ram, 16 Cal. 677 (682). (P.C.).

126. The donor and donee may agree that on the happening of any specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor a gift shall be suspended or revoked ; but a gift which the parties agree shall be revocable wholly or in part, at the mere will of the donor, is void wholly or in part, as the case may be.

When gift may be suspended or revoked.

A gift may also be revoked in any of the cases (save want or failure of consideration) in which, if it were a contract it might be rescinded.

Save as aforesaid, a gift cannot be revoked.

Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to affect the rights of transferees for consideration without notice.

Illustrations.

(a) A gives a field to B, reserving to himself with B's assent, the right to take back the field in case B and his descendants die before A. B dies without descendants in A's lifetime. A may take back the field.

(b) A gives a lakh of rupees to B, reserving to himself, with B's assent, the right to take back at pleasure Rs. 10,000 out of the lakh. The gift holds good as to Rs. 90,000, but is void as to Rs. 10,000, which continue to belong to A.

Scope :—So that the provisions of this section may be attracted the following conditions are to be fulfilled: (1) that the donor and the donee must have agreed that the gift shall be suspended or revoked on the happening of a specified event. (2) such event must be one which does not depend upon the donor's will; (3) the donor and the donee must have agreed to the condition at the time of accepting the gift, and (4) the condition should not be illegal, or immoral and should not be repugnant to the estate created under the gift—Subramanian v. Kannu Ammal, A.I.R. 1953 Tr.-Coch. 115.

641. Revocation :—The first para lays down the conditions under which a gift may be revoked under an agreement between the donor and the donee; and the second para lays down under what circumstances a gift may be revoked without any previous agreement.

The first para enumerates the broad general rule that there is no gift at all when a person purports to give and at the same time retains the liberty of revoking the gift at his pleasure. See Moss v. Ma Nyein, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 418. But this rule is subject to an exception, viz., that a power of revocation would be valid if the event on the happening of which the gift can be revoked does not depend upon the will of the donor.

Where the donor has the power of revocation of a gift and validly revokes it, he becomes the absolute owner of the property intended to be gifted. If he has no such power he ceases to have any interest or right in the property gifted away, in which case there is no question of the donor continuing to be an ostensible owner within sec. 41—Ankamma v. Narasayya, A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 127, (1946) 2 M.L.J. 357. A donor can revoke the gift if the donee agreeing to maintain the donor till death fails to do so—Sirwartin v. Baiyu, 1965 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 59. But see—Tila Bewa v. Mana Bewa, A.I.R. 1962 Orissa 130, where a contrary view has been taken. Where an old lady executes a deed of gift of her entire property in favour of one, not a member of the family, and the latter on the same day executes another deed accepting the gift and agreeing to maintain the lady till death, the gift can be revoked if the donee neglects to maintain the donor—Purnima Kumari v. Manindra Nath Mahanti, A.I.R. 1968 Assam 50.

The clause of reverter in an insurance policy, in case the assignee predeceases the assignor before the policy matures is valid under this section; and if the assignee predeceases the assured, the policy and the benefits thereunder would revert to the assured and form part of his estate. Section 11 does not apply to the case—Soma Sekharrao v. Mishra, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 185, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 871.

Who can revoke :—The right of a person to avoid a voidable gift under the second para of this section is one personal to himself, and cannot be transferred, because the right to revoke a gift is in the nature of a right to sue, which is not transferable under sec. 6 (e) of this Act—

Bajinath v. Biraj Koer, 2 Pat. 52 (64), 4 P.L.T. 239, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 514; see also Mt. Azizunnissa v. Siraj Hussain, A.I.R. 1934 All. 507, 152 I.C. 146.

But the right survives to the heirs of the donor—Ghumma v. Ram Chandra, 47 All. 619, 83 I.C. 411, A.I.R. 1925 All. 437. Contra, Mt. Azizunnissa v. Siraj Hussain, supra. A right to have a gift set aside for fraud or undue influence does not cease on the death of the donor, but passes to his legal representatives and executors—Allcard v. Skinner, (1887) 36 Ch. D. 145 (per Lord Lindley); Morley v. Loughman, [1893] 1 Ch. 736.

Revocation by agreement:—The agreement referred to in the first para of this section must be entered into at the time of the gift, for a gift which is complete and absolute at the time it is made cannot be modified by a condition subsequently added—Ram Sarup v. Bela, 6 All. 313 (P.C.).

D executed a deed of gift in favour of J which was registered. On the same date the donee executed an unregistered agreement which provided that the donee would maintain the donor till his death and that if he failed to do so, the donor might revoke the deed of gift or in the alternative obtain maintenance allowance: Held that the two documents formed part of the same transaction which read as a whole fell within the perview of secs. 31 and 126. The failure to make payment by the donee would constitute the happening of the specified event mentioned in sec. 126 and sec. 31. The arrangement as to the condition upon which the donor could revoke the gift did not require registration. The donor was therefore entitled to revoke the deed of gift on the donee's failure to maintain him—Jagat Singh v. Dungar Singh, A.I.R. 1951 All. 599. But a gift subject to the condition that the donee should maintain the donor cannot be revoked for failure to maintain in the absence of a provision for revocation on such failure—A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 195.

"Event which does not depend on the will of the donor":—A gift cannot be revoked at the mere will of the donor. And if the parties agree that the gift shall be revocable at the will of the donor, it is really no gift at all and is void—Nawab Ibrahim v. Ummatul, 19 All. 267 (P.C.). This section recognises the validity of a power of revocation in the case of a gift, provided the event on the happening of which the gift can be revoked does not depend on the will of the donor. Thus, where the defendants made a gift of certain property to the plaintiff, on condition that the land would be liable to be taken back in the event of the plaintiff's transferring it, it was held that as the event on which the power of revocation was to be exercised did not depend upon the will of the donor, the condition of revocation was therefore valid—Makund v. Rajrup, 4 A.L.J. 708. Similarly, where a person executed a deed of gift to the donee, and on the same day the donee executed another registered deed by which he agreed not to transfer the property without the consent of the donor, and that if he did so he would return the property to the donor, held that this agreement was valid under the first para of this section, because the donee agreed that the gift would be revocable on the happening of an event (transfer of the property by the donee) which did not depend upon the will of the donor—Ma Yin v. Ma Chit, 7 Rang. 306, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 226 (227), 119 I.C. 737.

On the same principle, a grant of land subject to the rendering of services can be resumed on the grantee refusing to perform the services—Forbes v. Mir Mohammed, 5 B.L.R. 529 (P.C.); Hurrogobind v. Ramrutno, 4 Cal. 67; but so long as the grantees are willing and able to perform the services, the grantor has no right to put an end to the tenure—Venkata Narasimha v. Sobhanadri, 29 Mad. 52 (P.C.).

641A. Revocation before registration :—It was once held by the Bombay High Court that this section, dealing with the revocation of a gift, referred only to a complete gift and not to an inchoate gift; an inchoate gift could be revoked under all circumstances and its revocation was not restricted by the limitations imposed by this section. Therefore, if a deed of gift was handed over to the donee but not registered, the gift was incomplete, and the donor was entitled to revoke the gift before the donee got the document registered, and to file a suit to restrain the donee from completing the gift by getting it registered—Subba Rama v. Venkat Subba, 48 Bom. 435 (440), 26 Bom. L.R. 427, 80 I.C. 477, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 434. But this decision has been reversed by the Privy Council in Venkat Subba v. Subba Rama, 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.), 30 Bom. L.R. 827, 32 C.W.N. 708, 108 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 86 (87), where their Lordships have authoritatively laid down that once a deed is executed and delivered to the donee, the gift is complete, and the donor cannot revoke the gift even before registration, on the ground that the gift is not completed until it is registered. Consequently if the donee refuses to give back the document, the donor cannot obtain an injunction from the Court restraining the donee from proceeding to register the document. So also, in the Full Bench case of Atmaram v. Vaman, 49 Bom. 388 (F.B.), 27 Bom. L.R. 290, 87 I.C. 490, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 210, the majority of the Judges laid down that where the donor of immoveable property handed over to the donee an instrument of gift duly executed and attested, and the gift was accepted by the donee, it was not competent to the donor to revoke the gift of the property even before registration and to file a suit to recover possession of the property from the donee. And this view has been confirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Kalyanasundaram v. Karuppa, 50 Mad. 193 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 509, 100 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 42. See also Venkalasubbamma v. Narayanaswami, A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 215.

642. Para 2 : Gift when can be revoked :—Para 2 of this section lays down that a gift may generally be rescinded on the same grounds mutatis mutandis as a contract, and the circumstances under which a contract may be rescinded are laid down in sec. 19 of the Indian Contract Act: "When consent to an agreement is caused by coercion, undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation, the agreement is a contract voidable at the option of the party whose consent was so obtained."

The words in brackets "save want or failure of consideration" are used because a gift is itself a transfer without consideration.

Thus, the grounds on which a gift may ordinarily be set aside are coercion, undue influence, fraud, mistake or misrepresentation—Bcharilal v. Sindhubala, 45 Cal. 434, 22 C.W.N. 210 (212), 41 I.C. 878, and the onus of proving that the gift is revocable on any of the above grounds lies on the party who wants to get the gift set aside. "The law is that anybody of full age and sound mind who has executed a voluntary deed by which he has denuded himself of his own property, is bound by his own act, and if he himself comes to have the deed set aside, especially if he comes a long time afterwards, he must prove some substantial reason why the deed should be set aside"—per Kay J. in Henry v. Armstrong, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 668; Mastanamma v. G. Adinarayana, (1964) 2 Andh. L.T. 405. A mere mistake of law would not however be sufficient to revoke a deed of gift—Narasingh v. Radhakant, A.I.R. 1951 Or. 132, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 374.

But where the donor is an old and infirm woman, the burden lies heavily on the donee to show that the donor executed the deed with full knowledge of its contents, and that she did so willingly and without any pressure or solicitation, which might amount to exercise of undue influence—Rajaram v. Khandu, 14 Bom. L.R. 340, 15 I.C. 529. So also, if gifts are made by a paradanashin lady, the strongest and most satisfactory evidence ought to be given, by the person who claims under the gift from her, that the transaction was real and bona fide and was fully understood by the lady whose property is dealt with—Thakurdeen v. Ali Hossein, 13 B.L.R. 427 (P.C.); Wazid Khan v. Ewaz Ali Khan, 18 Cal. 545 (P.C.). Similarly, if the person in whose favour the gift is executed stood at the time in a position of active confidence to the donor, e.g., an agent, the law throws the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction on the donee—Phulchand v. Lakkhu, 25 All. 358. A gift by a person to his lawyer's wife is not liable to be set aside if the gift is spontaneous—Bireswar Sen v. Ashalata Ghose, A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 111. When the donor who was a man of weak health settled the bulk of his property on the defendant who was his family priest and who had a considerable influence over the mind of the donor, the burden of proving that the settlor understood the legal effect of the settlement (viz., that it was irrevocable) was on the defendant; and the defendant having failed to do so, the deed must be set aside—Bai Manigavri v. Narondas, 15 Bom. 549. The donee was in illicit connection with the donor's only daughter and was residing with the donor and his daughter: Held (1) the daughter and her paramour, the donee, have been in a position to dominate the donor's will; (2) the gift of the entire property to the donee ignoring the daughter and her daughter made the transaction unconscionable, and (3) the above two circumstances conjointly raised the presumption that the gift deed was brought about by undue influence—Ram Chander v. Sital Prasad, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 130, 1947 P.W.N. 42.

The donor is entitled to revoke a deed of gift on the ground of fraud, undue influence or misrepresentation even before the deed is registered. The rule in 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.) (cited in Note 641A above) would not apply to such a case. The donor is entitled, after the execution of the deed of gift and before its registration, to retract from the gift on the ground of undue influence, and in such a case the donee is not entitled to have the document compulsorily registered—Padmavati v. Shrinivasa, 7 L.W. 339, 44 I.C. 483. There cannot be any acquiescence in, or confirmation of a gift until the donor knows his right and is free from the influence of the donee—Bhola Ram v. Peari Devi, A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 168.

This para presupposes that the gift is voidable and not void ab initio. If it is void ab initio, it is not necessary to have it set aside by a suit—Ghumna v. Ram Chandra, 47 All. 619, A.I.R. 1925 All. 437 (438); Baij Nath v. Biraj Kuer, 2 Pat. 52 (65).

643. What are not grounds of revocation :—The only circumstances under which a gift may be revoked are specified in paras 1 and 2. The third para lays down that a gift is not revocable otherwise. And so, a gift cannot be revoked at the mere will of the donor. A gift once made cannot be capriciously recalled by the donor, for a transfer by gift is as complete and binding on the parties when once completed, as any other form of transfer—Rajaram v. Ganesh, 23 Bom. 131. The donor cannot set aside the gift once made on the plea that he had made a mistake or that he had supposed that the donee could perform his funeral rites—Abhachari v. Ramchandrayya, 1 M.H.C.R. 393. "Courts of Equity have never set aside gifts on the ground of the folly, imprudence, or want of foresight on the part of the donors. The Courts have already repudiated any such jurisdiction. It would obviously be to encourage folly, recklessness, extravagance and vice, if persons could get back property which they foolishly made away with, whether by giving it to a charitable institution or by bestowing it on less worthy objects"—Allcard v. Skinner, 36 Ch. D. 145 (183). So also, ignorance of the result of deliberate choice is no ground for equitable relief—Ibid. So also, the fact that the donor's feelings towards the donee changed after the deed of gift was executed is not a ground for revoking the deed—Venkatasubba v. Subba Rama, 52 Bom. 313 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 886 108 I.C. 367. "The law of this Court is very strict on the subject of voluntary deeds The mere alteration of intention is not sufficient to induce this Court to interfere and cancel an instrument which was fully understood and deliberately executed by the grantor. That I believe to be the case here, and being so, I cannot interfere merely because the feelings of the plaintiff towards the defendant are now no longer what they were at the time when the gift was made"—Toker v. Toker, (1862) 31 Beav. 629, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 370. So also, where a woman executed a deed of gift by which she conveyed all her property to her nephew, and she executed the deed with full possession of her senses and without the exercise of any fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence on her, and she fully understood its contents and the effect it would have of divesting her of her property: held that the deed was binding on her and could not be set aside, and the mere fact that the donor's feelings towards the donee subsequently underwent a change was not sufficient to set aside the gift—Rajaram v. Khandu, 14 Bom. L.R. 340, 15 I.C. 529. A gift of a non-transferable occupancy holding cannot be revoked by the donor on the ground that it is non-transferable. It is binding as between the donor and the donee. It cannot be impeached by the donor himself, though the landlord may possibly refuse to recognise the transfer—Beharilal v. Sindhubala, 45 Cal. 434, 22 C.W.N. 210 (213), 41 I.C. 878.

Even if a donor might have made a gift under undue influence, yet if he had subsequently acquiesced in it, he cannot afterwards impeach it—Seetharamaraja v. Bayanna, 17 Mad. 275.

644. Hindu and Muhammadan law :—The rules of Hindu law as to revocation of gifts are substantially the same as that contained in the second para of this section. A Hindu may revoke a gift made in wrath or excessive joy or through inadvertence or during disease, minority or madness, or under the influence of terror or under intoxication. Since the rule under this section does not substantially affect the above rule of Hindu law, this section may be justly applied to Hindus. An incomplete gift can be revoked at any time. Where the true intention of the donor was to effect a transfer in presenti but with a reservation of the right to enjoy the usufruct during the donor's lifetime, there was an immediate gift of the property and the enjoyment by the donee of its profits is postponed till after the donor's death. A gift of this nature is recognized as valid under the Hindu law—Gangadhara v. Kulathu, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 47. In such a case the gift having become complete cannot be revoked unless there is an express reservation to that effect in the deed of gift itself—ibid.

But the rules of Muhammadan law as regards revocation of gifts are entirely different, and this section therefore ought not to be applied to them. A Mahomedan can revoke a gift even after delivery of possession except in the following cases: (1) when the gift is made by a husband to his wife or by a wife to her husband. (2) when the donee is related to the donor within the prohibited degrees; (3) when the gift is Sadaka (i.e., made to a charity or for any religious purpose); (4) when the donee is dead; (5) when the thing given has passed out of the donee's possession by sale, gift or otherwise; (6) when the thing given is lost or destroyed; (7) when the thing given has increased in value, whatever be the cause of the increased; (8) when the thing given is so changed that it cannot be identified, as when wheat is converted into flour by grinding; (9) when the donor has received something in exchange for the gift—Hedaya, 485; Baillie, 524-548; Mulla's Mohomedan Law, 7th Ed., pp. 121—122. Except in those cases, a gift may be revoked at the mere will of the donor, whether he has or has not reserved to himself the power to revoke it, but the revocation must be by decree of Court.

127. Where a gift is in the form of a single transfer to the same person of several things of which one is, and the others are not, burdened by an obligation, the donee can take nothing by the gift unless he accepts it fully.

Onerous gift.

Where a gift is in the form of two or more separate and independent transfers to the same person of several things, the donee is at liberty to accept one of them and refuse the others, although the former may be beneficial and the latter onerous.

A donee not competent to contract and accepting property burdened by any obligation is not bound by his acceptance. But if, after becoming competent to contract and being aware of the obligation, he retains the property given, he becomes so bound.

Onerous gift to disqualified person.

Illustrations.

(a) A has shares in X, a prosperous joint-stock company, and also shares in Y, a joint-stock company, in difficulties. Heavy calls are expected in respect of the shares in Y. A gives B all his shares in joint-stock companies. B refuses to accept the shares in Y. He cannot take the shares in X.

(b) A having a lease for a term of years of a house at a rent which he and his representatives are bound to pay during the term, and which is more than the house can be let for, gives to B the lease, and also, as a separate and independent transaction, a sum of money. B refuses to accept the lease. He does not by this refusal forfeit the money.

645. Principle :—The principle of the first para of this section is that he who accepts the benefit of a transaction must also accept the burden of the same: Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. And so it was observed in an English case (which related to a will) that "no man shall claim any benefit under a will without conforming so far as he is able and giving effect to every thing contained in it whereby any disposition is made shewing an intention that such a thing shall take place"—Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. 367. This section lays down a rule of election that where a gift consists of several things some of which are burdened with an obligation, he is put to his election either to accept the whole gift or not to accept anything at all. He cannot pick up the benefits of the transaction and reject the burdens. This rule applies only where the donor has by one inseparable transaction made the gift and burdened it with an obligation. But where a gift is in the form of two or more separate and independent transfers, some of which are so burdened, no question of election arises, and the donee is at liberty to accept any or all of them.

This section, being an embodiment of a rule of equity, applies equally to Hindus and Mahomedans—Abdul Sattar v. Satyabhushan, 35 Cal. 767.

Where the donor executed a pro-note in favour of the plaintiff and subject to the payment of the amount due thereunder made a gift of his entire property in favour of the defendant, the latter could not retain the benefit and at the same time repudiate the burden. Further, the defendant being the universal donee was on the principle embodied in the next section liable to pay the debts out of the estate in his hands—Ram Sarup v. Shiv Dayal, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 285, 42 P.L.R. 307, 190 I.C. 463.

Where a mortgagor makes a gift of a part of a property mortgaged by him and charges the said part with a portion of the mortgage-debt and orders that till the payment of the said portion the transferee is to pay interest to the mortgagee on the amount of the proportionate charge from year to year, the transferee takes the gift burdened with the liability for interest—Nisar v. Manjur, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 47 (48), 159 I.C. 54.

A gift by a person to his children on condition that they should allow him to continue in the enjoyment of the income of the property until his death is not invalid—Ma Shin v. Ma Then, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 129 (131), 150 I.C. 966.

In the case of an out and out transfer by gift followed by a direction to the donee to maintain the donor, the direction is only a pious wish. On the other hand, if the gift deed starts with a statement that it is made with the object of providing for maintenance of the donor and it is followed by the operative clause, the gift is subject to the liability to maintain the donor—Gangadhara v. Kulathu, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 47.

For acceptance of an onerous gift, acceptance of the gift itself is sufficient; there need not be any separate and express acceptance of the onerous condition also at the same time. The acceptance of the gift will carry with it the acceptance of the onerous condition also, even though at the time of the gift the donee was not aware of such condition, specially where the onerous condition is of a trifling nature (payment of Rs. 5 as monthly maintenance to a certain person for life)—Sarba Mohan v. Manmohan, 37 C.W.N. 149 (152), 143 I.C. 757, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 438.

Disqualified donee :—If an onerous gift is made to a disqualified person, e.g. a minor, and that person accepts it, he is not bound by his acceptance but can make his choice upon attaining majority either to accept the gift burdened with the obligation or to return it. But so far as the donor is concerned the gift is complete as against him, and he cannot claim back the property unless the donee returns it after attaining majority (if he so chooses). And if therefore the donee dies in his infancy, the donor cannot resile from his gift and resume the property treating the gift as inchoate or revocable. The property will in such a case pass to the heirs of the donee—Subramania v. Lakshmi, 20 Mad. 147.

128. Subject to the provisions of section 127, where a gift consists of the donor's whole property, the donee is personally liable for all the debts due by and liabilities of the donor at the time of the gift to the extent of the property comprised therein.

Universal donee.

Amendment :—The words "and liabilities of" have been added by sec. 60 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

646. Universal donee :—The essential condition to constitute a universal donee is that the gift must consist of the donor's whole property. If any portion of the donor's property, no matter whether it is moveable or immoveable, is excluded from the operation of the gift or the endowment, the donee is not a universal donee. The creditor is entitled to the benefit of this section against a person who is a universal donee and nothing short of a universal donee—Shyam Behari v. Maha Prasad, 1930 A.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1930 All. 180 (182), 123 I.C. 324. Where at the date of the gift-deed the donor owns the equity of redemption in certain mortgaged property and has not included in the deed of gift, the donor cannot be said to have transferred his whole property within the meaning of this section and the donee cannot be said to be the universal donee—Ram Raj v. Lal Chandra, A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 205, 1941 O.W.N. 56. But where for all practical purposes the donee holds the entire property of the donor, he must be deemed to be a universal donee, even though a small portion of the gifted land is held by the donor on rent—Shahzad v. Madan, A.I.R. 1933 All. 146, 140 I.C. 120. Thus the mere fact that some insignificant part of the property, was retained by the donor for herself did not derogate from the universal nature of the donees—Bapurao v. Bulakidas, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 225, I.L.R. 1945 Nag. 191. A universal donee is liable only to the extent of the property received by him under the gift, not duly applied by him towards payment of the debts—Ibid. If a person makes a gift of all his immoveable properties, but not of all the moveable properties, the donee cannot be called a universal donee—Anrudh v. Lachmi, 50 All. 818, 26 A.L.J. 753, A.I.R. 1928 All. 500 (502), 115 I.C. 114. Where a Mahomedan made a gift of the whole of his estate to his son and directed him to pay his debts, the son was a universal donee and he was liable to pay all the debts of the donor. There is no rule of Mahomedan law which conflicts with the provisions of this section—Abid Husain v. Ram Nidh, 7 O.W.N. 532, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 268. Where a widow owns two sets of properties, in one of which she has only a widow's estate and in other she has an absolute interest (being her stridhan) a surrender deed in favour of her daughter of the properties can operate to transfer her stridhan but not the widow's estate, and the daughter cannot be regarded as a universal donee so as to make her liable for the debts of her mother—Thiruccikedaswami Mudaliar v. Palani Ammal, A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 291.

The position of the universal donee and the universal legatee is practically the same. In the case of the former it was necessary to provide for his liability under this section, as otherwise in case of personal liabilities the donor being alive the donee would escape all liability. It was not necessary to make similar provisions in the Succession Act where the estate of the deceased must be deemed to be the balance after all liabilities were paid off—Joti Prasad v. Bahal Singh, A.I.R. 1945 All. 433, 1945 A.L.J. 347.

The creditor's right to follow the properties in the hands of a universal donee has to be exercised by a suit and not merely by levying execution against the properties in their hands under a decree obtained against the donor—Muhamathu v. Muhamathu, A.I.R. 1952 Tr.-Coch. 23.

If a donor has two properties P and K, of which P is mortgaged to another, and the donor makes a gift of property K only, the donee is not a universal donee. So long as the property P has not been foreclosed by the mortgagee, the donor is still the owner of it: consequently if it is not included in the gift, it cannot be said that the gift consists of the donor's whole property—Brij Raj v. Ram Dayal, 7 Luck. 411, 135 I.C. 369, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh. 40 (43).

Under this section the reversioners, in whose favour the holders of the Hindu widow's estate relinquished their interest by a family arrangement as donees, would be liable for the debts of their donors—Sudhamoyee v. Bhujendra, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 226 (228, 229) 172 I.C. 121.

The rule enacted in this section is independent of sec. 53. Therefore a creditor is not bound to get the gift set aside under that section in order to get himself paid, but can proceed against the donee under this section. Further, sec. 53 speaks of fraudulent transfers of immoveable property, whereas the present section applies to both moveables and immoveables and the gift under this section is not necessarily fraudulent. If the gift is fraudulent and the property immoveable, sec. 53 applies; if it is honest, remedy may be had under this section. And so the Law Commissioners observe :—"Gifts of one's whole property to a relation or friend are not uncommon before an execution or in anticipation of insolvency. For such cases of fraud, sec. 53 supra provides, when the property is land. But an universal gift may conceivably be honest and comprise moveable property. Section 128 therefore specially provides for such gifts."

The rule in this section is different from that in England. Under the English law, a universal donee is not bound to discharge the donor's debt except on the latter's death or insolvency or when the transfer has been made with intent to defraud creditors.

Where the donor had contracted secured as well as unsecured debts from the same person, the creditor can tack the unsecured debts to the secured ones, and claim that the universal donee will not be allowed to redeem the mortgage alone without paying off the unsecured debts as well, although the original mortgagor (the donor) could have redeemed the mortgage without paying off the unsecured debts—Ragho Govind v. Balvan, 7 Bom. 101.

Trustee :—The case of a gift is different from that of a trust created by the debtor for payment of his debts in which the trustees get no benefit for themselves, and even if the deed of trust comprises all the property of a debtor, the author of the trust, the trustees would not be personally liable for any debt due from the author of the trust—Matinuzzaman v. Hunter, 14 Luck. 548, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 161 (174), (1939) O.W.N. 420.

129. Nothing in this Chapter relates to gifts of moveable property made in contemplation of death, or shall be deemed to affect any rule of Muhammadan Law. * * * *

Saving of donations mortis causa and Muhammadan Law.

Amendment :—The words "or save as provided by section 123, any rule of Hindu or Buddhist Law" have been omitted by sec. 61 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929).

This section, as it stood before the amendment, kept the rules of Hindu law unaffected by anything contained in this Chapter—Forman Ali v. Uzir Ali, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 157 (159), 42 C.W.N. 14, 66 C.L.J. 125, 175 I.C. 712.

Extension to the Province of Delhi :—This section has been extended to the following areas in the Province of Delhi, namely :—(a) Area within the jurisdiction of the Delhi Municipal Committee; (b) area within the jurisdiction of the New Delhi Municipal Committee; (c) area within the jurisdiction of the Notified Area Committee, Civil Lines; and (d) area within the jurisdiction of the Notified Area Committee, Fort—See Gazette of India, Part I, dated 23rd November, 1940, Home Dept. No. 61/40—Judicial.

Scope :—This section exempts donations mortis causa of moveable property from the operation of this chapter; the reason is, that such gifts are in the nature of wills, and have been provided for by sec. 191 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. It should be noted that gifts of only moveable property made in contemplation of death are excepted here; a similar gift of immoveable property must be made according to the rule under this chapter. Further, it provides that the provisions of this chapter shall not affect the rules of Muhammadan Law.

647. Donatio mortis causa :—"A gift is said to be made in contemplation of death when a man who is ill and expects to die shortly of illness delivers to another the possession of any moveable property to keep as a gift in case the donor shall die of that illness. Such a gift may be resumed by the giver and shall not take effect if he recovers from the illness during which it was made, nor if he survives the person to whom it was made."—Section 191, Indian Succession Act, 1925.

The distinction between a gift and a donatio mortis causa is that the former takes effect immediately, while the latter takes effect only on the death of the donor; the latter is revocable at the will of the donor, but the former is not.

A gift made in contemplation of suicide is not a valid donatio mortis causa, as that would be against public policy—Agnew v. Belfast Banking Co., (1896), 2 Ir. R. 204.

Before a gift can be repudiated as void in Hindu law on the ground that it was made during illness, the donor must be proved to have been in very great physical distress brought on by illness which makes him incapable of thinking and acting properly or of forming a rational estimate as regards the consequences of his action. The man must be overwhelmed with the disease in the sense that his mind must be unsettled by it—Forman Ali v. Uzir Ali, supra. When the deceased donor was suffering from a wasting disease, but at the time of the gift, far from being in extreme bodily pain, he was freely moving about attending to his normal work, it could not be said that it was the disease which impaired his judgment; so the gift was not void on that account—Ibid.

Where the deceased, a few hours before his death, and in contemplation of death, caused certain Government papers to be fetched and himself gave them into the hands of the plaintiff with the intention of passing the property to him, but could not make the endorsement because he was too weak to do so, held that under the circumstances the gift amounted to a valid donatio mortis causa—Kumar Upendra Krishna v. Nabin Krishna, 3 B.L.R. O.C. 113.

648. "Shall not affect" :—This section does not mean that the provisions of this Chapter shall not at all apply to Mahomedans, but it only lays down that its provisions shall not affect any rule of Mahomedan Law. In other words, whenever the provisions of this Chapter shall conflict with those of Mahomedan law, the latter shall prevail. Thus, under the Mahomedan law, a gift of immoveable property may be made orally by simple delivery of possession, but this Chapter lays down that such a gift must be made by a registered instrument. Hence there is a conflict; and the Mahomedan law must therefore prevail. So again, the rules of Mahomedan law as to revocation of gifts are entirely different from the rule enacted in sec. 126, and therefore the Mahomedan law shall prevail. See Note 632 under sec. 123 and Note 644 under sec. 126.

But in so far as the rules of this Chapter are founded upon equity and reason, they do not conflict with any rule of Mahomedan law. Thus, sec. 127 being an embodiment of a principle of equity has been held to be equally applicable to Hindus and Mahomedans; see Abdul Sattar v. Satyabhusan, 35 Cal. 767; also 7 O.W.N. 532 in Note 646 under sec. 127.

Gift under Mahomedan law :—"For a valid gift inter vivos under the Mahomedan law," observe their Lordships of the Privy Council, "three conditions are necessary—(a) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor, (b) the acceptance of the donee, and (c) the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively." The taking of possession of any part of a Zemindary property is constructively a taking possession of the whole—Md. Abdul v. Fakhr Jahan Begum, 49 I.A. 195 (209—10); Amjad v. Ashraf, A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 149 (151), 4 Luck. 305, 56 I.A. 213, 33 C.W.N. 753, 116 I.C. 405. No transaction of which the above are not the ingredients is or is to be treated as a gift under the Mahomedan law. A gift may be heba simple or heba-bil-ewaz (gift for an exchange or a return gift) or a heba-ba-shart-ul-ewz (a gift with a stipulation for an exchange or a return gift); but in each case and of every variation of a gift the transaction is a heba under the Mahomedan law—Sharifuddin v. Mahiuddin, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 808 (814), 54 Cal. 754, 31 C.W.N. 1068, 105 I.C. 67. For an explanation of the different kinds of heba and the doctrine of musha see this case.

Where at the time of marriage a piece of land was assigned by the bridegroom to the bride in lieu of mahr, the assignment was a simple gift (hiba) and neither a sale nor a hiba-bil-ewaz. No writing was necessary, as this section exempts a gift by a Mahomedan. But such a gift is subject to the doctrine of Musha and the gift would not be complete and valid without delivery of such possession as the subject of the gift is capable of—Jaitunbai v. Fatrubhai, A.I.R. 1948 Bom. 114, I.L.R. 1947 Bom. 372.

Under the Shia law a gift is a contract between two parties. The elements of proposal and acceptance are the essential constituents of a contract of gift. Seisin is also an essential element of a gift. A gift in favour of a person who has not come into existence must fail for the absence of acceptance and the presence of contingency or futurity—Strij v. Mushaf, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 93, 65 I.C. 132.

Oral gift by a Mahomedan in favour of his wife in lieu of her dower-debt is hiba-bil-ewaz which is pure gift and not sale. Being a valid gift under the Mahomedan law the provisions of Chapter VII of this Act are not applicable, and such gift can be made orally and without registration—Mt. Kulsum v. Shiam Sundar, A.I.R. 1936 All. 600 (605), 164 I.C. 515. But see Mt. Amina v. Lachmi Chand, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 705 (707) where it has been held that the provisions of the Mahomedan law applicable to gifts do not apply to a so-called gift made in lieu of dower-debt, that is hiba-bil-ewaz which is really of the nature of a sale. A gift by a Mahomedan to a Hindu is governed by Mahomedan law—Someshwar v. Barkat Ullah, A.I.R. 1963 All. 469.

According to Mahomedan law an oral gift is complete as soon as a declaration of gift and a delivery of possession is given by the donor to the donee. When these essential conditions are complied with the gift becomes perfectly valid; and if a written deed is executed afterwards, the deed may not be admissible in evidence for want of registration, but the oral gift would be valid notwithstanding—Mt. Kulsam v. Shiam Sundar, supra, and Nasib Ali v. Wajed Ali, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 197, 41 C.L.J. 490, 100 I.C. 296. If a gift is reduced to writing it requires to be registered—S. Chinna Budha Saheb v. Raja Subbamma, (1954) 2 M.L.J. (Andh.) 113. A gift is not complete in the absence of delivery of possession or relinquishment of control over the property by the donor—Musa Miya v. Kader Bux, A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 108, 32 C.W.N. 733, 55 I.A. 171, 52 Bom. 316, 169 I.C. 31; Sadik Hussain v. Hashim Ali, 38 All. 627 (P.C.). Gani Mia v. Wajed Ali, 39 C.W.N. 882. "According to Mahomedan law" observe their Lordships of the Privy Council, "a holder of property may in his life-time give away the whole or part of it if he complies with certain forms, but it is incumbent on those who seek to set up such a transaction to prove that those forms have been complied with, and this will be so whether the gift be made with or without consideration. If the latter, then unless it be accompanied by delivery of the thing given, so far as it is capable of delivery, it will be invalid. If the former, delivery of possession is not necessary, but actual payment of the consideration must be proved, and the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in presenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee must also be proved [Mehdi Hasan v. Hd. Hasan, 28 All. 439 (449), 33 I.A. 68 (76)]. The case of Ranee Khajooroonessa v. Rowshan Jehan, 3 I.A. 294 (305) supports this statement of the law"—Sadik Hussain v. Hashim Ali, supra, at pp. 645-46.

Where a debtor who owes a certain amount (dower-debt) to a creditor makes a gift to him of an amount either equal to or greater than the amount of the debt, the question whether such payment is towards satisfaction of the debt is a question of fact. The rule of English law in this respect is applicable to India—Sultan v. Salamar Bibi, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 25 (26), 46 M.L.W. 617, relying on Md. Sadiq Ali v. Fakr Jahan, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 13, 6 Luck. 556, 59 I.A. 1, 136 I.C. 385.

Areeat under the Mahomedan law for a fixed period being valid, it follows that the gift of the usufruct of the property for the life-time of the donee is valid as areeat, though it would not be included in the term hiba—Naziruddin v. Khairat Ali, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 51 (53, 54), 172 I.C. 384.

The Local Government in the exercise of the powers conferred on them by sec. 1 of this Act has extended sec. 123 of this Act to Burma. This must mean that the Local Government has extended sec. 129 also, because the power conferred by sec. 1 to extend "the whole or any part of this Act" does not authorise the Local Government to extend any particular section of the Act so as to give that section a different operation from that which it has in the Act itself read as a whole, and thus to abrogate in the area to which the extension is made the existing rule of Mahomedan law as to delivery of possession regarding gifts as to which the Legislature has expressly provided that it should remain unaffected by this Act. So in Burma, the rule of Mahomedan law, viz., that a gift is perfected by delivery of possession, applies; see Ma Mi v. Kallander Ammal, 5 Rang. 7 (P.C.), 31 C.W.N. 625, 100 I.C. 33, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 22. A recent Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court have held that a gift of immoveable property in Burma by one Mahomedan to another is invalid if not made by a registered instrument. It is not rendered good by virtue of sec. 129 which only enacts that if there is any rule of Mahomedan law, e.g., delivery of possession, it shall not be affected by anything contained in Chapter VII—Ma Asha v. B. K. Haldar, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 430 (F.B.), 14 Rang. 439, 164 I.C. 984.

Rules of Mahomedan law have no application to a gift of an actionable claim. Such a gift by a Mahomedan in favour of his son is valid if the requirements of sec. 130 are fulfilled—H. H. Iqbal Mahomad Khan Nawab v. Controller of Estate duty, Gujrat, 53 I.T.R. (E.D.) 51. A transfer of a part of an actionable claim is permissible—Ibid. S. 130 applies to an assignment of a decretal debt by a Mahomedan, hence oral gift is void—Ahmad Hossain v. Bibi Naeman, A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 30.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF TRANSFERS OF ACTIONABLE CLAIMS.

130. (1) The transfer of an actionable claim whether
Transfer of actionable claim. with or without consideration shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorised agent * * * shall be complete and effectual upon the execution of such instrument, and thereupon all the rights and remedies of the transferor, whether by way of damages or otherwise, shall vest in the transferee, whether such notice of the transfer as is hereinafter provided be given or not :

Provided that every dealing with the debt or other actionable claim by the debtor or other person from or against whom the transferor would, but for such instrument of transfer as aforesaid, have been entitled to recover or enforce such debt or other actionable claim, shall (save where the debtor or other person is a party to the transfer or has received express notice thereof as hereinafter provided) be valid as against such transfer.

(2) The transferee of an actionable claim may, upon the execution of such instrument of transfer as aforesaid, sue or institute proceedings for the same in his own name without obtaining the transferor's consent to such suit or proceedings and without making him a party thereof.

Exception.—Nothing in this section applies to the transfer of a marine or fire policy of insurance "or affects the provisions of section 38 of the Insurance Act, 1938".

Illustrations.

(i) A owes money to B, who transfers the debt to C. B then demands the debt from A, who, not having received notice of the transfer as prescribed in section 131, pays B. The payment is valid, and C cannot sue A for the debt.

(ii) A effects a policy on his own life with an Insurance Company and assigns it to a Bank for securing the payment of an existing or future debt. If A dies the Bank is entitled to receive the amount of the policy and to sue on it without the concurrence of A's executor, subject to the proviso in sub-section (1) of section 130 and to the provisions of section 132.

Amendment :—By section 62 of the T. P. Amendment Act (XX of 1929), the words "and whether with or without consideration" have been added and the words "notwithstanding anything contained in sec. 123" have been omitted.

The result is that a gift of an actionable claim even by a Muhammadan must be made in writing.

In the Exception of this section the last few words within inverted commas were added by the Insurance Act IV of 1938, s. 121.

648A. Actionable claim :—The definition of actionable claim is contained in sec. 3. This definition has been substituted by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act (II of 1900) for the old definition which ran thus :—"A claim which the Civil Courts recognise as affording grounds for relief is actionable, whether a suit for its enforcement is or is not actually pending or likely to become necessary." But this definition was too wide and covered every claim for which an action would lie in Courts, so as to include claims arising out of sales, gifts, mortgages or leases of immoveable property or exchanges or gifts of moveable property within its provisions. It was subjected to different interpretations by different High Courts, and they were at hopeless variance with one another as to whether a mortgage-debt was included in the term "actionable claim." This conflict has now been set at rest by the Amendment Act of 1900, and the definition has been narrowed down to that given in section 3, from which a mortgage-debt has been expressly excluded.

A gift of a fixed deposit in a bank is not a gift of moveable property, but is the gift of an actionable claim. The handing over of the fixed deposit receipt is not enough and a document in writing signed by the transferor is necessary—Rajeshwari v. Mohan Bikram, A.I.R. 1945 All. 409. A right to recover insurance money on the death of the assured or on expiry of the endowment period is an actionable claim. Its transfer may be absolute or conditional on the assignee surviving the assured—Soma Sekharrao v. Mishra, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 185, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 871.

Actionable claims can be validly transferred by execution of a trust deed in favour of trustees—Official Trustee v. Cheppendali, A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 335, 47 C.W.N. 441. Provident fund amount payable after retirement can be a subject-matter of trust. It is an actionable claim. Trust of such fund though not registered is valid though the precise amount is not ascertainable on the date of trust—ibid.

As to what are and what are not actionable claims, see Note 21 under sec. 3.

649. Scope of section :—This section implies that every actionable claim is transferable and the section points out how it may be transferred—Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder, 36 Cal. 345 (351).

Under the English law there is a distinction between an absolute transfer of a chose in action and a transfer by way of a charge. This section makes no such distinction and the provisions hereof apply to both—Santuram v. Trust of India Assurance Co., A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 11, 46 Bom. L.R. 752. The word 'transfer' means not only an absolute transfer, but also covers transfer of actionable claims by way of mortgage—Mulraj v. Viswanath, 37 Bom. 198 (P.C.), 17 C.W.N. 209, 17 I.C. 627; Muthu Krishna v. Veeraraghava, 38 Mad. 297, 21 I.C. 316; Venkatachalam v. Subramanya, 14 I.C. 144, 1912 M.W.N. 461; Kali Mohan v. Empire of India Life Assurance Co., 44 C.W.N. 593; Official Assignee v. Hukum Chand, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 147, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 891, 1940 M.W.N. 1290. Section 134 provides for the transfer of a debt by way of mortgage. Where a person hypothecates all his book-debts, present and future, as security for the balance of his account, the hypothecation creates a valid charge on, or to use the term familiar in English law, assignment of, the future book-debts of the debtor. But nothing passes under such an assignment until the property comes into present existence—Balthazar & Son, Ltd. v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 426, (1938) R.L.R. 480...

An agreement between a debtor and a creditor that the debt owing shall be paid out of a specific fund coming to the debtor, or an order given by a debtor to his creditor upon a person owing money or holding funds belonging to the giver of the order directing such person to pay such funds to the creditor, operates as an equitable assignment of that part of the debt or funds to which the agreement or order refers—Thakur Das v. Malek Chand, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 102 (103), 14 Lah. 325, 144 I.C. 6; Official Liquidator, Travancore, N. B. S. Co. v. Official Liquidator, Travancore N. & Q. Bank, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 258, 1939 M.W.N. 1054; P. Venkata Rao v. M. China Venkatapathy, A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 410. But the assignee is under an obligation to refund to the assignor any surplus that may remain after discharge of the liability—Ibid. So far as the Indian Courts are concerned regarding the creation of equitable charges in respect of property which may come into being in future, the Courts are bound to follow the strict requirements of the Indian statute, and under the provisions of the present Act such an equitable assignment or equitable charge can only be created by a document in writing as provided by this section—B. N. Railway Employees' Urban Bank v. Seager, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 307, 23 P.L.T. 135.

A right to recover back the price paid under a contract of sale on the vendor's failure to make over possession to the purchaser can be transferred under this section—Damodhar v. Allabux, A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 332, I.L.R. 1943 Nag. 762. Where a Hindu widow embraces a civil death on her re-marriage, the next reversioner succeeding to the estate can enforce an actionable claim in respect of land settled on bhag cultivation by the widow. No question of transfer of an actionable claim by a written instrument arises in such a case—Hari v. Jugal, A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 32.

It is within the competence of the holder of a life policy to make a conditional assignment of each of his policies, whether an endowment or an ordinary life policy, providing therein that in the event of the death of the assignee, the benefits of the policy would revert to him and the assignee is alone entitled to receive the sum assured in case of the death of the insured before the day named—Shamdas v. Sabitribai, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 181, 170 I.C. 225. The hypothecation of a life policy can only be made by an instrument in writing which need not be in terms an absolute transfer, but it must be clear from the instrument that the deposit of the life policy is being made with the intention of creating a title in the person with whom the deposit is made—Kali Mohan v. Empire of India Life Assurance Co., supra; Official Assignee v. Hukum Chand, supra. But a mere intention to create a pledge does not amount to a pledge within the meaning of this section—Ibid. An instrument evidencing a pledge and nothing more cannot be read as an assignment and therefore does not satisfy the requirements of this section—Ibid. Although the pledge has a special interest in the property as the holder of security, he is not a transferee—Ibid.

In a Madras case it was held, following the English law, that the transfer of a debt must be of the whole debt, and that a transfer of a portion of a debt is not recognised—Doraisami v. Doraisami, 48 M.L.J. 432, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 753 (756), following Durham v. Robertson, (1895) 1 Q.B. 765. But in a subsequent case of the same High Court it has been ruled that although a transfer of a part of a debt was not recognised in English Common Law, the assignment of a part of a debt has always been held to be good in Equity, and is deemed to pass the property in that portion of the debt. In enforcing such claim it would be necessary to implead the owner of the other portion of the debt, but apart from that there is no objection in equity to the enforcement of a claim for part payment of a debt—Rajamier v. Subramaniam, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1201 (1207), following In re Steel Wing Co., [1921] 1 Ch. 349, and virtually dissenting from Doraisami v. Doraisami, supra; Rajamier v. Subramaniam, has been followed in Official Liquidator, Travancore N. B. S. Co. v. Official Liquidator, Travancore N. & Q. Bank, supra. Relying upon the earlier Madras case, the Calcutta High Court has held that an assignment of a debt to be valid must be of the whole debt. Where partners in a firm became insolvent and there was also a minor partner, the assignment by the Official Assignee of debt due to the firm could not be said to be of the whole debt, because the minor's interest in the partnership could not be assigned—Ghisulal v. Gumbhirmull, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 377 (381), 62 Cal. 510, 89 C.W.N. 606, 164 I.C. 111. Following this case it has been held that where the debt is a joint debt, an assignment by one of the joint creditors would not enable the assignee to enforce the payment of the whole debt—In re A. K. Fazlul Huq, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 532. In Bibi Haliman v. Bibi Umadatunnissa, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 506 (508), 181 I.C. 37, Wort, J. of the Patna High Court has held (obiter) that a part of a debt or part of a chose in action is not assignable. But in a later case Harris, C.J. and Fazl Ali, J. of the same High Court have held that the T. P. Act does not recognize any distinction between the whole debt and part of a debt. Both may be transferred under the Act if they come under the category of "actionable claim", as an actionable claim is property. Or. 2, r. 2, C. P. Code being a rule of procedure does not affect the right of transfer. It does, however, bar the right of suit in certain cases and it may prevent the transferee of a part of a debt enforcing his claim and thereby make the transfer nugatory, as under Or. 2, r. 2, C. P. Code a single cause of action cannot be allowed to be spilt up into several causes of action—Durgi Singh v. Kesho Lal, 18 Pat. 839, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 170; 185 I.C. 514. The same view has been taken by the Lahore High Court in Ram Kishen v. Gurdial, A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 337, where it has been further held that an action can be maintained for a part of a debt transferred provided the transferee makes the transferor and the other transferees concerned parties to the suit. Such a suit cannot fail merely because on the objection of the debtor the other assignees were struck off the record—Ibid.

A as sole proprietor, of A and sons, made a contract with B. A then as karta of the joint Hindu family firm of A and sons assigned the benefit of the said contract to C. This assignment does not affect B's liability to pay A and in law to pay his assignee C. The apprehension of B that by paying the assignee he would not get a complete discharge is baseless because the coparceners having no privity of contract with him cannot sue B under the contract—Jethalal v. Municipal Corporation, A.I.R. 1954 Bom. 167.

A transfer of an actionable claim is to be distinguished from a novation of a contract, which does not require any writing. Thus, where there is a debt due by A to B, and another debt due by C to A, and the three parties meet and agree that instead of A paying B, and C paying A, C shall pay B. The result of such an arrangement is to destroy the old debts which A owed to B, and which C owed to A, and to substitute a new debt by C to B. This is something different from a mere transfer of the debt—Jivraj v. Lalchand, 56 Bom. 462, 34 Bom. L.R. 837, 139 I.C. 582, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 446 (447); see also Kadusao v. Surajmal, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 37 (38, 40), 161 I.C. 787.

A dedication is not a transfer; consequently, a dedication of an actionable claim to a temple is not a transfer of an actionable claim, and is not governed by section 130, but may be made orally—Bhopatrao v. Sri Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 469, 96 I.C. 1004.

As this Act is not in force in the Punjab, the technical rule requiring an assignment of an actionable claim to be made in writing is not applicable to that province. Consequently, an oral assignment of a promissory note is valid—Locha Ram v. Hem Raj, 33 P.L.R. 120, 134 I.C. 121. Section 130 can, however, be invoked to justify the assignment of a debt as an actionable claim, as the principles of the Act as distinct from its technicalities should be applied to the Punjab—Ram Kishen v. Gurdial, supra. In provinces where the Act does not apply, a hundi can be assigned orally subject to all equities as a chose in action independent of the Negotiable Instruments Act XXXVI of 1881, so as to give the assignee locus standi to sue thereon—Kalu Ram v. Feroze Shah, A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 45; Ram Rattan v. Gobind Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 501, 185 I.C. 426.

Effect of clause (1):—The effect of cl. (1) in the cases which it covers is to confer without notice to the debtor a legal title on the transferee as opposed to an equitable title only. But it cannot be too strongly em-phased that its purpose and effect is merely to confer a title and to enable the assignee to sue in his own name and has nothing to do with possession—In re Stephens, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 1 (5), 175 I.C. 786.

650. Transfers how effected:—A transfer of an actionable claim can be effected simply by the execution of an instrument in writing. Nothing more is necessary. The provisions of secs 54, 59 and 123 regarding sales, mortgages and gifts do not apply to a sale, mortgage or gift of an actionable claim. A gift of an actionable claim may therefore be made without a registered instrument as required by sec. 123—Syed Yacoob v. Pancha Bibi, 4 L.W. 339, 38 I.C. 248. This is now made clear by the amendment made in 1929 by which the words “whether with or without consideration” have been newly added in this section. See Notes under heading “Amendment” above. The view expressed by Duckworth, J., in K. V. v. Chettiar, 5 Bur. L.T. 179, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 39, that a transfer of an actionable claim can be made only by a registered instrument, is erroneous.

The transfer can only be made in writing—Velayutham v. Pillaiyar, 9 M.L.T. 102, 9 I.C. 287; an oral transfer is not valid—Raman Chetty v. Nagaratna, 11 M.L.T. 246, 15 I.C. 880. The rent in arrear and current due can only be transferred “by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorized agent”—Rameshwar v. Ruknath Kori, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 165 (166), 67 I.C. 451. Even a gift of an actionable claim by a Mahomedan must be in writing—Mt. Alimunnissa v. Abdul Aziz, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 527 (529, 530), 165 I.C. 298. See “Amendment”, ante. The mere delivery of a promissory note without any endorsement or written transfer is not sufficient to effect a transfer—Akhoy Kumar v. Hari Das, 18 C.W.N. 494, 22 I.C. 510. So again, the mere deposit of a policy of life insurance does not effect a transfer (mortgage) of the policy in favour of the deposittee—Mulraj v. Viswanath, 37 Bom. 198 (P.C.), 17 I.C. 627; Official Assignee v. Thompson, 8 Bur. L.T. 157, 30 I.C. 602. See also Official Assignee v. Hukumchand, A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 147, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 891, 1940 M.W.N. 1290 and Kali Mohan v. Empire of India Life Assurance Co., 44 C.W.N. 593. A life policy may be validly assigned by an instrument in writing signed by the transferor. It is immaterial if such instrument is written on a separate piece of paper or is endorsed on the policy itself. Though an endowment policy creates a contingent interest, it is assignable under sec. 130 read with sec. 21—Shamdas v. Sabitribai, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 181, 170 I.C. 225. When A had effected a policy of insurance upon his own life and it was expressed to be for the benefit of his wife, held that in the absence of an assignment in writing, the beneficial interest under the policy would not pass to A's widow upon his death—Shankar v. Umabai, 37 Bom. 471, 19 I.C. 736. In this case, sec. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act (III of 1874) could not be applied, because that section was held to be inapplicable to a policy of insurance effected by a Hindu for the benefit of his wife and children. But this ruling (37 Bom. 471) is no longer good law in view of the enactment of the Married Women's Property Amendment Act (XIII of 1928), which makes the provisions of sec. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1874 applicable to policies effected by Hindus, Muhammadans, etc., after the 1st April 1923. See also Krishnan v. Velayu, I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 909 (F.B.).

The validity of an assignment of an actionable claim involving a foreign element is to be determined by the proper law of the assignment—Rabindra N. Maitra v. Life Insurance Corporation of India, A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 141. No written instrument is necessary for the assignment of a joint promissory note in partition—Asuram v. Niranjandass, I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 963.

An arrangement made by the partners on dissolution of a partnership that the remaining partners are to be entitled to the debt due to the firm is an arrangement amounting to a transfer of an actionable claim and as such can only be made by a writing signed by the other partners—Virbhandas v. Dasumal, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 288 (289), I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 344, 185 I.C. 28; see also Mulchand v. Shamdas, A.I.R. 1941 Sind 73. But see Bharat Prasad v. Paras Singh, A.I.R. 1964 All. 15.

The words “duly” as used in this section means “lawfully”, and where the law requires a person to be lawfully authorized, the ratification of assignment by an agent will have retrospective effect and cure a defect in his authority—Govardhandas v. Friedmans Diamond Trading Co., A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 543, 1939 M.W.N. 290, 49 M.L.W. 375.

An assignment of an actionable claim must conform strictly to the provisions of this section, and there must be words of transfer in the instrument—Balaram v. Gopinath, A.I.R. 1954 Or. 44; Alkash Ali v. Nath Bank Ltd., infra. Where a letter written by an insurance agent did not show that he was transferring his interest in the commission and it was not addressed to the chief agent, it was held that the letter did not effect an assignment of the commission—ibid. See in this connection Union of India v. Bank of the East, A.I.R. 1954 Ass. 23. This section does not, however, require that the assignment of an actionable claim should be in any particular form or that there should be consideration for it. No particular words are necessary if the intention to transfer is clear from the language used—Ramaswami v. Manickam, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 236 (238), 47 M.L.W. 118; Alkash Ali v. Nath Bank Ltd., A.I.R. 1951 Ass. 56, (1951) 3 Ass. 1. A power of attorney executed by a contractor in favour of a bank embodying an arrangement that the bank would advance money to the contractor on the security of the bills that were to accrue due, and it gave the bank the necessary authority for collection of the bills: Held that it served the purpose of a writing required under this section—ibid. An endorsement on the bond containing a direction to pay the amount due on the bond to the plaintiff, coupled with the delivery of the instrument so endorsed to the plaintiff, amount to a valid transfer of the instrument so as to enable the plaintiff to sue upon it—Rama Iyer v. Venkatachellam, 30 Mad. 75; Kissen Gopal v. Bavin, 42 C.L.J. 43, 89 I.C. 735, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 447. There is no transfer of an actionable claim when a contractor gives sole power of attorney in favour of a bank advancing him money on overdrafts and surrenders all rights to receive payment of bills; and sec. 130 is not attracted—Bank of East v. State of Assam, A.I.R. 1958 Assam 22; Madan Monohar v. Narayan Sadashio, 1958 Nag. L.J. 279. A non-negotiable promissory note may be assigned by a separate deed without any endorsement on the note itself and the assignee will be entitled to sue upon it—Sugappa v. Govindappa, 12 M.L.J. 351. It would also be sufficient if the transfer is evidenced by a partition list; for the partition list is a writing and therefore satisfies the requirements of this section—Venkatadri v. Lakshminarasimha, 21 M.L.J. 80, 8 I.C. 83. An assignment made in a statement of accounts by way of an entry in an account book is an assignment in writing within the meaning of this section—Seetharama v. Narayanaswami, 47 I.C. 749. If a bond is delivered by the creditor to the transferee without any endorsement on it, and the creditor also gives a letter to the transferee in which he requests the debtor to pay the money to the transferee, the letter constitutes a valid assignment under this section—Konjeti Veerasawmy v. Varada Veerasawmy, 13 M.L.T. 77, 16 I.C. 708. Whether certain bales of cotton held as security by one creditor were transferred in favour of another to be held by him as security, and the next day the debtor wrote to the latter a letter which after stating the total amount of indebtedness continued: "As against the said amount our bales which are lying with (previous creditor) and are got transferred to your name," held that the writing amounted to a valid transfer—Jivraj v. Lalchand, 56 Bom. 462, 139 I.C. 582, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 446 (448). A deposit receipt of a Bank may be validly assigned by an endorsement on the receipt together with a letter given to the transferee in which the transferor directs the Bank to pay the money to the bearer—Sethna v. Hemingway, 38 Bom. 618, 16 Bom. L.R. 534, 28 I.C. 144. The right to enforce the reserve liability of a shareholder is an actionable claim. Where a company has completely assigned its right to receive uncalled share capital to another Corporation by way of an English mortgage, the uncalled money can be recovered only by the transferee Corporation and not by the liquidator of the transferor company—Narayan Chettiar, In re, A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 34.

The instrument in writing by which the actionable claim is transferred must be an instrument of transfer. A deed of relinquishment is not an instrument of transfer, and therefore where a partner of a partnership business executed a deed of release by which he gave up his claim to the business and declared that henceforth the business should be conducted by H and D, held that there was no transfer in favour of H and D, and no title passed to them—Dharam Chand v. Mouji, 16 C.L.J. 436, 16 I.C. 440. If on the dissolution of a joint family firm a promissory note in favour of the firm is allotted to the share of one of the partners without any indorsement or written instrument the allottee get a good title as the transaction is not hit by sec. 130—Asuram v. Niranjandass, I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 963.

There must be words of transfer in the instrument of transfer. A mere notice to the debtor asking him to pay the debt to the assignee, does not amount to a transfer of the debt; thus, where the assignment of a debt consisted of a letter from the assignor to the assignee and another letter by the assignor to the debtor intended to be a notice under sec. 130, T. P. Act, and the letter of assignment (which was not proved to be stamped) was lost, held that the second letter, which was merely a notice to the debtor not containing any words of transfer nor referring to the transfer, was not sufficient to operate as an instrument of transfer. An instrument of transfer should, except in special cases, be in favour of the assignee, whereas a notice is addressed to the debtor—Doraisami v. Doraisami, 48 M.L.J. 432, 87 I.C. 382, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 753 (754). So also, a mere direction for payment of money to a certain person does not amount to an assignment of the money to that person. Thus, a company sold and delivered to Kilburn & Co., a lathe for a certain sum. One G claimed to be entitled to the sum by virtue of an assignment alleged to have been made by the company. The assignment on the back of the bill against Kilburn & Co., was in these terms: "Messrs. Kilburn & Co., kindly remit to G who will collect on our behalf." Held that the above words did not amount to an assignment of the debt due to the company, but to a mere order for payment of the money due from Kilburn & Co.—Kissen Gopal v. Bavin, 89 I.C. 735, 42 C.L.J. 43, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 447 (449). See also B. N. Railway Employees' Urban Bank v. Seager, A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 307, 23 P.L.T. 35. But see Prokash Chandra v. Kays Construction Co., A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 654.

This section does not apply to assignments of negotiable instruments (sec. 137); such instruments can be assigned according to the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act—Venkatadri v. Lakshminarasimha, 21 M.L.J. 80, 8 I.C. 33. But an assignment of a non-negotiable instrument must be made according to the rules under this section. Thus, a deposit receipt is not a negotiable instrument which can pass either by delivery or by endorsement under the Negotiable Instruments Act. It must be assigned according to the provisions of this section—Sethina v. Hemingway, 38 Bom. 618, 28 I.C. 114; Anantaraman v. Perrie, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 157, 1939 M.W.N. 1096, 187 I.C. 531.

In a joint Hindu family business the members can, on retirement, relinquish their interest in favour of the continuing co-parceners and no instrument in writing is necessary for transferring their claim under this section—Brijmohan v. Mahabir, 40 C.W.N. 808.

651. Notice :—The validity of the transfer does not depend upon the giving of notice to the debtor, although it may be necessary for the transferee to give notice to prevent the debtor from dealing with the debt to the prejudice of the transferee—Viswanath v. Mulraj, 13 Bom. L.R. 590, 11 I.C. 964; Kalka Prashad v. Chandan, 10 All. 20. Notice of transfer is not essential to perfect the title of the assignee of an actionable claim, but until the debtor receives notice of the assignment, his dealings with the original creditor will be protected. In other words, if the debtor pays the debt to the original creditor without having any notice of the transfer, he will not be bound to pay it over again to the assignee—Gopala Krishna v. Gopala Krishna, 33 Mad. 123; Basant Singh v. Burma Railways Co. 8 L.B.R. 288; Balkhazar & Son Ltd., v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 426, (1938) R.L.R. 480. But any payment by the debtor to the original creditor, after notice of the transfer, is made at the risk of the debtor and will not absolve him from liability to the transferee—Gopala Krishna v. Gopala Krishna, 33 Mad. 123. This subject has been thus elaborately explained in a Calcutta case:—"It is well settled according to English law that it is not necessary to the validity of an assignment of a debt as between the assignor and assignee that notice should be given to the debtor. The assignment, therefore, is perfectly valid though no notice is given. But the title of the assignee as against third persons is not complete until he has given notice, and the reason is this: As between the debtor and assignor the liability on the part of the debtor is still subsisting, and the debtor may pay the assignor, or the assignor may afterwards assign to a third party who gives notice and thereby acquires priority. Notice, therefore, ought to be given by the assignee to protect himself, and for this purpose only. It is immaterial to the debtor whether he pays his money to the original creditor or to some third person claiming through such creditor, so long as he gets a discharge for his debt. If he pays the assignor, having no notice of the assignment he is protected. The assignment does not in any way affect the liability of the debtor to discharge his debt, but the assignee should take care to let the debtor know that it is he and not the original creditor who is entitled to be paid. It is therefore only for the protection of the assignee that notice ought to be given"—per Mitter and Agnew, J.J. in Lala Jagdeo v. Brij Behari, 12 Cal. 505 (509, 510). The assignment is not however valid as against the debtor until he in fact has notice of the assignment and therefore any payment by the debtor of the debt due from him to his original creditor is valid as against the assignee until notice of the assignment is given—Tata Iron & Steel Co. v. Baidyanath, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 118 (119), 2 Pat. 754, 76 I.C. 55. A debtor cannot after notice of the assignment pay a portion of the debt, even under the Court's order in a case to which the assignee was not a party, so as to protect him from paying it over again to the assignee—Burmah Shell Oil Storage & Co. v. Official Receiver, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 244, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 661. It is not incumbent upon the assignee of a promissory note to issue notice to the promisor forthwith after the assignment. Where therefore the assignee issued such notice nearly a year after the assignment, there was no negligence on the part of the assignee—Krishaiiah v. Manikyaraw, A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 171, (1947) 2 M.L.J. 196. Where after the notice of assignment of a debt to the debtor by the heirs of a deceased creditor, the assignors obtained succession certificate and recovered the debt from the debtor by virtue thereof, the debtor obtains a valid discharge of the debt—Keshavji v. Nanji, A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 49 (1).

As to the endorsement "refused" made by postal servant and the value thereof in respect of a notice sent by post, see Kanraj v. Vijai Singh, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 74. Delivery of a copy of the plaint in a suit for recovery of the debt by the transferee of an actionable claim along with the summons served on the debtor, cannot be deemed to be a notice of the transfer of the debt—ibid.

Where there are two transferees, the transferee who first gives notice to the debtor does not acquire any priority over the other transferee, but the transferees take in the order of the date of transfer—Vishwanath v. Mulraj, 13 Bom. L.R. 590, 11 I.C. 964.

As to the essentials of notice see next section.

Effect of transfer :—A transfer of an actionable claim takes effect immediately from the date of the transfer, and not from the date of notice which the transferor or transferee may or may not give to the debtor—Kanraj v. Vijai Singh, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 74; Santuram v. Trust of India Assurance Co., A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 11, 46 Bom. L.R. 752. Accordingly after the execution of the transfer no decree can be passed in favour of the transferor plaintiff even if the transferee is impleaded as defendant in the suit—ibid. The position would however be different if the plaintiff trans-feror had an interest jointly with the transferee in which case a decree could be passed in favour of the transferor plaintiff and the transferee—ibid. As to the case of a collusion between the transferee and the debtor for defeating the rights of the transferor, see this case.

From the date of assignment, all the rights of the transferor in the actionable claim vest in the transferee. If a debt is transferred by way of the sale, but the transferor in spite of the sale realises the amount of such debt, it is just and equitable that the vendee should be allowed credit for the amount so realised, out of the consideration—Ramdas v. Dwarka, A.I.R. 1930 All. 875 (876), 128 I.C. 763. Even prior to the enactment of sec. 38 (7) of the Insurance Act, 1938, an assignment of a life policy on condition that the policy should revert to the assured if the assignee predeceased him before maturity was valid in law. On such a conditional assignment an immediate vested interest is created in the assignee and such an assignment is not revocable. It completely divests the assignor of any right under the policy. The assignment, however, becomes imperative on the happening of the condition—In re Khairunnissa Begum & Others, A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 459.

Consent of debtor, not necessary :—The consent of the debtor is not necessary for the assignment of an actionable claim. The assignment, therefore, does not become invalid for want of such consent—Seetharama v. Narayanaswami, 47 I.C. 749.

652. Sub-section (2)—who can sue after transfer :—The transferee is the only person who can sue for the debt after transfer—Arunachalam v. Madaswami, 27 M.L.T. 269; Muthukrishna v. Veeraraghava, 38 Mad. 297, 21 I.C. 316. He can sue in his own name and it is not necessary for him to obtain the transferor's consent, or to make him a party to the suit. In a Madras case, it has been held that although sec. 130 lays down that when an actionable claim is transferred, all the rights and remedies of the transferor are transferred to the transferee, still the transferor may maintain an action on the claim for the benefit of the transferee, and hand over the amount when collected to the transferee—Chandrasekaralingam v. Nagabhushanam, 53 M.L.J. 342, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 817, 104 I.C. 409. An unqualified endorsement on a railway receipt transfers to the endorsee the property in the goods covered by the receipt as well as the right and benefit of the contract of carriage and the endorsee can enforce the performance of the contract by a suit in his own name—Shah Mulji Deoji v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 31. But see Commissioners, Port of Calcutta v. General Trading Corporation, 68 C.W.N. 410 where it has been held that a mere endorsement and delivery of the railway receipt, without any consideration, is not intended to confer any proprietary right in the goods on the indorsee and that such an endorsee cannot sue the railway for the loss of goods or damages to them. See also Ibrahim v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1966 Gujrat 6 where it has been held that a mere endorsee of a Railway receipt cannot sue the Railway for short delivery and that a Railway receipt is not an actionable claim.

As notice is not a condition precedent to the validity of a transfer of a debt, it is competent to the transferee to bring a suit against the debtor without giving a previous notice of the assignment. The suit is not liable to be dismissed on the ground that no notice of the assignment was given to the debtor. Even if notice to the debtor is necessary, the institution of the suit is in itself a notice of the assignment—Kalka v. Chandan, 10 All. 20 (27); Lala Jagdeo v. Brij Behari, 12 Cal. 505 (510); Subbammal v. Venkatarama, 10 Mad. 289 (290). These cases were decided, before the Amendment of 1900 under the old section 131, which required that the debtor must have notice or must be otherwise aware of the transfer, before he could be made liable to the transferee. Under the present section, notice to the debtor is not at all necessary.

130A. [Transfer of policies of marine Insurance—repealed by section 92 Marine Insurance Act, 1963 with effect from 1st August, 1963.]

The repealed section 130A stood as follows :

(1) A policy of marine insurance may be transferred by assignment unless it contains terms expressly prohibiting assignment, and may be assigned either before or after loss.

(2) A policy of marine insurance may be assigned by endorsement thereon or in any other customary manner.

(3) Where the insured person has parted with or lost his interest in the subject matter insured, and has not, before or at the time of so doing, expressly or impliedly agreed to assign the policy, any subsequent assignment of the policy is inoperative :

Provided that nothing in this sub-section affects the assignment of a policy after loss.

(4) Nothing in clause (e) of section 6 shall affect the provisions of this section.

653. This section was inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act VI of 1944. This section having been incorporated into the comprehensive code on Marine Insurance, has been proved to be redundant and as such has been repealed.

131. Every notice of transfer of an actionable claim shall be in writing, signed by the transferor or his agent duly authorized in this behalf, or, in case the transferor refuses to sign, by the transferee or his agent, and shall state the name and address of the transferee.

654. Essentials of notice :—The notice to be given to the debtor must be an express notice, and not merely constructive ; see para 2 of sec. 130.

The old section 132 (before the amendment of 1900) contained the words "Every such notice must be in writing signed by the person making the transfer or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf." That is, it contained no provisions as to giving of notice by the transferee. And so it was held that as this section did not provide for the assignee giving notice in a particular way, all that was required of him was to make the debtor somehow aware of the transfer. And therefore the service of the summons on the debtor in a suit by the assignee against him was held to be sufficient notice—Ragho v. Narayan, 21 Bom. 60 (63). In this case, Farran, C.J. expressed the opinion that the duty of giving notice should be cast upon the transferee. "Before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, it was the assignee upon whom it was incumbent for his own protection to give notice of the assignment to the debtor. There is no particular reason why the assignor should give it. We cannot help thinking that there has been a slip made in sec. 132 (now 131) in throwing upon the person making the transfer the obligation of giving express notice to the debtor.....The attention of the Legislature may well be directed to the point"—Ragho v. Narayan, 21 Bom. 60 (62). Out of deference to these remarks the Legislature added the words "or in case.....transferee," thus making a provision for the giving of the notice by the transferee. But still the Legislature has cast the duty of giving notice primarily upon the transferor, and it is only when he refuses to give the notice that the transferee may give it. The notice which the transferor gives must be a valid and sufficient notice; if the transferee finds it insufficient, he is entitled to give a notice of his own—Gopala Krishna v. Gopala Krishna, 33 Mad. 123.

The notice of transfer is to be given by the transferor and if given by the transferee it should be alleged or shown that the transferor had refused to sign the notice, although it is not necessary to mention that fact in the notice—Kanraj v. Vijai Singh, A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 74.

The notice must contain the name and address of the transferee. The reason is thus stated by the Select Committee: "A notice in general terms not stating the name and address of the transferee would not be sufficient as a safeguard against fraud. A debtor is, we think, entitled to know the name and address of the person to whom he becomes liable on a transfer of the claim against him." Though there be a valid transfer of a debt between the transferor and the transferee, the person bound to pay the debt is not bound by the transfer unless he receives an express notice in writing conforming to the provisions of sec. 131, from the transferor, or if he refuses to sign, from the transferee, stating the name and address of the transferee—Basant Singh v. Burma Ry. Co. Ltd. 8 Bur. L.T. 266, 30 I.C. 278. Where the notice given by the transferor did not contain the address of the transferee, it was held to be insufficient—Hansraj v. Nathoo, 9 Bom. L.R. 838. So also, a notice which did not state the address of the assignee but his solicitor's address, was held to be defective—Sadasook v. Hoare Miller & Co., 27 C.W.N. 733, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 719 (720), 41 C.L.J. 176.

The notice must be given to the person concerned or to his agent authorised to receive such notice—Basant Singh v. Burma Ry. Co. Ltd., (supra).

132. The transferee of an actionable claim shall take it subject to all the liabilities and equities to which the transferor was subject in respect thereof at the date of the transfer.

Liability of transferee of actionable claim.

- (i) A transfers to C a debt due to him by B, A being then indebted to B. C. sues B for the debt due by B to A. In such suit B is entitled to set off the debt due by A to him, although C was unaware of it at the date of such transfer.

(ii) A executed a bond in favour of B under circumstances entitling the former to have it delivered up and cancelled. B assigns the bond to C for value and without notice of such circumstances. C cannot enforce the bond against A.

Scope :—This section of itself does not apply to a transferee who purchases at a Court-sale, but the principle hereof will apply. One general principle is that the transferee of a debt, decretal or non-decretal, cannot get rid of the commitments and disabilities to which the original holder is subject. Thus where a person purchases a debt during the pendency of a suit in relation to it, he takes it subject to the result of that suit against the creditor—Ramchandra v. Shankar, A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 98, I.L.R. 1944 Nag. 170.

655. Liabilities of the assignee :—The assignee is bound by all the terms and conditions to which the debt assigned may have been subject. He will therefore be bound by an order of the Court previously passed relating to the subject-matter of the assignment—Subbaraya v. Srinivasa, 10 M.L.J. 211.

The debtor has a right to set off any counter-claim against the assignee which he could have done against the assignor—Kaim Ali v. Luckhy Kant, 10 W.R. 32 (F.B.) ; Ram Bhaj v. Ram Das, 3 Lah. 414, 69 I.C. 720, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 261 ; Kristo Ramani v. Kedar Nath, 16 Cal. 619 ; and this the debtor can do even when the amount claimed to be set off is due under a transaction independent of and unconnected with the claim assigned to the plaintiff—Arunachellam v. Subramania, 30 Mad. 235 ; Subramanian v. Kiradadasan, 1912 M.W.N. 1235, 16 I.C. 686. Such a set-off is enforceable even though the plaintiff was the purchaser of the actionable claim in Court auction : though the Act does not apply of itself to a transferee who purchases in a Court-sale, still the principle of this section will apply to such transfers—Subramanian v. Kiradadasan, 1912 M.W.N. 1235, 16 I.C. 686. See also Ram Bhaj v. Ram Das, 3 Lah. 414, where the plaintiff purchased the debt in Court auction. Where a debtor on receiving notice of the assignment of the debt, sees that the assignee is deceived and yet stands by and allows the assignee to be defrauded, he will not be allowed to set up an equity which he has against the assignor—Brahmayya v. K. P. Thangavelu Nadar, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 570.

The debtor is entitled to set off against the transferee not only a counter claim which existed at the time of the assignment, but also a claim which accrued to him after the assignment, provided the assignee had notice of such claim. Thus, A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000. B then sues A for Rs. 2,000. Pending B's suit A transfers his decree to C who has notice of B's suit. A decree is then passed in B's suit. C applies for execution against B of the decree for Rs. 5,000. B will be entitled to set off his decree for Rs. 2,000 which he has obtained against the assignor A, as C is a transferee with notice of B's suit. C will therefore be not entitled to execute for more than Rs. 3,000—Kristo Ramani v. Kedar Nath, 16 Cal. 619. This principle however has not been applied to an assignment of a mortgage, as a mortgage is not an actionable claim. Therefore in a suit by the assignee of a mortgage, the debtor (mortgagor) will not be allowed to set off any claim obtained by him against the assignor (original mortgagee) subsequent to the date of assignment—Subramania v. Subramania, 40 Mad. 683, 34 I.C. 859. It has been held by the Nagpur High Court that the claim of set-off under this section cannot be allowed in a suit to recover arrears of profit in a village share transferred to a co-sharer, as right to such profits is not an actionable claim but a benefit arising out of land and hence immoveable property—Kamal v. Shyamal, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 217 (218), 165 I.C. 414.

A pledge of a promissory note vests in the pledgee all the rights and the remedies of the pledgor subject to all equities which remained in the pledgor. The pledgee is the only person entitled to sue for the debt due under the pro-note, and if he omits to sue and allows the debt to become time-barred, he is accountable to the pledgor for the amount of the debt—Muthu Krishna v. Veeraraghava, 38 Mad. 297, 21 I.C. 316 following Shyam Kumari v. Rameswar, 32 Cal. 27 (P.C.), and Mulraj v. Viswanath, 37 Bom. 198 (P.C.). Where a vendor sells the equity of redemption in a property after the right of redemption had been extinguished by a deed containing the usual clause for indemnity and the vendee executes a bond for a part of the purchase money, the assignee of the bond cannot recover anything on the bond and he cannot be heard to say that the defendant was liable on the doctrine of caveat emptor—P. Sankunny Menon v. Thommen Mathai, A.I.R. 1956 Trav.—Co. 80.

Since the assignee of an actionable claim takes it subject to all existing equities, the onus of proving affirmatively that the assignment is free from an existing right is upon the assignee—Venkata Subbiah, v. Subba Naidu, 1915 M.W.N. 822, 31 I.C. 152. But it has been held by the Madras High Court that where a fixed deposit receipt is validly assigned and the bank is informed about the assignment, the bank has no right of set off or adjustment against the deposit—Brahmayya v. K. P. Thangavelu Nadar, A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 570.

133. Where the transferor of a debt warrants the solvency of the debtor, the warranty, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, applies only to his solvency at the time of the transfer, and is limited, where the transfer is made for consideration, to the amount or value of such consideration.

656. This section does not make it compulsory on the part of the assignor to give the assignee any warranty as to the solvency of the debtor, nor does it mean that in every assignment of an actionable claim there shall be implied a covenant by the assignor to warrant the solvency of the debtor. This section merely lays down a rule of construction to be applied only when the assignor actually gives such warranty to the assignee. If the assignor gives the warranty, it means that the debtor is solvent at the date of the transfer. The insolvency of the debtor after the date of the transfer does not entail any liability on the transferor. But the assignor should do nothing in derogation of his deed, which may prevent effect being given to his assignment—Aulton v. Atkins, 25 L.J. (P.C.) 229.

Further, the liability of the transferor as regards the solvency of the debtor is only limited to the extent of the amount of the consideration received by him and not to the extent of the amount of the debt.

134. Where a debt is transferred for the purpose of securing an existing or future debt, the debt so transferred, if received by the transferor or recovered by the transferee, is applicable, first, in payment of the costs of such recovery : secondly, in or towards satisfaction of the amount for the time being secured by the transfer ; and the residue, if any, belongs to the transferor or other person entitled to receive the same.

Mortgaged debt.

657. Scope :—This section does not allow the transferor to recover the debt. Accordingly, after the transfer no decree can be passed in favour of the transferor in a suit by him even if the transferee is impleaded as a defendant—Santuram v. Trust of India Assurance Co., A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 11, 46 Bom. L.R. 752. A debt can be transferred apart from the security, though the debt can be realized by enforcing the security by the mortgagee or the assignee from him. It is equally partible. So under the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, before its amendment by Act XXVI of 1947 a Hindu widow was entitled to a share in a mortgage debt secured on both agricultural and other movable properties—Veerayamma v. Venkamma, A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 809, (1951) 1 M.L.J. 364.

A transfer of an actionable claim (e.g., debt) can be made not only by way of absolute sale, but also by way of mortgage—Muthu Krishna v. Veeraraghava, 38 Mad. 297, 21 I.C. 316.

An assignment by way of security of a book-debt of a company (in this case bills) for securing an existing debt constitutes a mortgage of the debt—Ranjit v. David, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 218, 38 C.W.N. 1190, 155 I.C. 193. It has been observed in this case that the wordings of this section read with sec. 130 are anomalous inasmuch as instead of saying "residue belongs to the transferor" it ought to have said "residue if any shall be transferred by the original transferee to the original transferor". It is submitted with respect that if the debt is received by the transferor no question of re-transfer arises. If, on the other hand, the debt is recovered by the transferee, it is money in his hands and so "re-transfer" would be hardly the appropriate word. As to the criticism that under sec. 130 all the rights including the right of ownership pass to the transferee, it may be submitted that this is subject to the latter provision in sec. 134 regarding mortgage of a debt.

Though this section speaks only of a mortgage, it is obvious that a charge-holder has the same right as a mortgagee. And consequently the holder of a charge on a debt due to his debtor, by way of security for his own loan, is to be treated as a transferee of an actionable claim, and so entitled to recover the debt from the transferor's debtor—Muthu v. Venkatachellum, 20 Mad. 35; Ramasami v. Muthu, 34 Mad. 53, 5 I.C. 834; Ardeshir v. Syed Sirdar, 33 Bom. 610. See also Imperial Bank of India v.

135. Every assignee, by Assignment endorsement or of rights other writing, of a under marine policy of marine or fire policy of insurance. insurance or of a policy of insurance against fire, in whom the property in the subject insured shall be absolutely vested at the date of the assignment, shall have transferred and vested in him all rights of suit as if the contract contained in the policy had been made with himself.

135. Every assignee, by Assignment endorsement or other of rights writing, of a policy under policy of insurance against fire, in whom the property in the subject insured shall be absolutely vested at the date of the assignment, shall have transferred and vested in him all rights of suit as if the contract contained in the policy had been made with himself.

For the original sec. 135 this new section has been substituted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act VI of 1944.

The original section reproduced the only unrepealed section of the Policies of Insurance (Marine and Fire) Assignment Act, 1866 (V of 1866). Inasmuch as the provisions of that enactment constituted an exception to the rule laid down in section 130, they ought to have found a place in this chapter.

135A. Assignment of rights under policy of marine Insurance—repealed by section 92 Marine Insurance Act, 1963 with effect from 1st August, 1963.

The repealed section 135A stood as follows :

(1) Where a policy of marine insurance has been assigned so as to pass the beneficial interest therein, the assignee of the policy is entitled to sue thereon in his own name ; and the defendant is entitled to make any defence arising out of the contract which he would have been entitled to make if the action had been brought in the name of the person by or on behalf of whom the policy was effected.

(2) Where the insurer pays for a total loss, either of the whole, or; in the case of goods, of any apportionable part, of the subject-matter insured, he thereupon becomes entitled to take over the interest of the insured person in whatever may remain of the subject matter so paid for, and he is thereby subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the insured person in and in respect of that subject matter as from the time of the casualty causing the loss.

(3) Where the insurer pays for a partial loss, he acquires no title to the subject matter insured, or such part of it as may remain, but he is thereupon subrogated to all rights and remedies of the insured person as from the time of the casualty causing the loss, in so far as the insured person has been indemnified by such payment for the loss.

(4) Nothing in cause (e) of section 6 shall affect the provisions of this section.

This section was inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act VI of 1944 but this section having been incorporated in the comprehensive code of Marine Insurance, the section was found superfluous and has been repealed by section 92 Marine Insurance Act, 1963, with effect from 1st August, 1963.

Transit by land can be the subject matter of marine insurance—Indian Trade and General Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 190. Where the deed of subrogation gives the insurer nothing more than what he would have under s. 135 A (3) he is not entitled to file a suit for damage in his own name—Ibid. See also Asiatic Govt. Security Fire and General Assurance Co. v. Scindhia Steam Navigation Co., A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 214; Textiles and Yarn (P) Ltd. v. India National Steamship Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 362.

An insurer who has paid for a total loss of an apportionable part of insured goods carried by a Railway can maintain a suit in his own name under sub-sec. (2) against the carrier for reimbursement of the amount paid to consignee—Union of India v. Bharat Fire and General Insurance Ltd., A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 157. An insurer paying compensation to the owner cannot sue the carrier, unless the right to sue is assigned to him, there being no statutory provision enabling him to sue—New India Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Savani Transport (P) Ltd., (1968) 1 Andh. L.T. 317.

136. No Judge, legal practitioner or officer connected with any Court of Justice shall buy or traffic in, or stipulate for, or agree to receive any share of, or interest in, any actionable claim, and no Court of Justice shall enforce, at his instance, or at the instance of any person claiming by or through him, any actionable claims, so dealt with by him as aforesaid.

658. Principle :—The object of this section is to prevent the legal practitioners from purchasing claims with the express purpose of putting them in suit, and thus oppressing debtors and fomenting litigation. Further, the intention of the Legislature was that the persons mentioned in this section should not be placed in a position in which they may be tempted to use the influence or the information which they may acquire by virtue of their possible connection with the transaction of business in the Court, to the prejudice of persons who might have to resort to it for the adjudication of actionable claims—Rathnasami v. Subramanya, 11 Mad. 56 (at p. 61). "It is of great importance that no officer of a Court of Justice should be even exposed to the suspicion that in the discharge of the official duties his conduct may be influenced by any personal consideration; and although we see no reason to think that the proceedings in the present case have been at all affected, either in their origin or in their conduct hitherto, by such considerations, yet when there is room for the operation of sinister motives, the belief of their operation can hardly be excluded from the minds of the parties"—Kerakoose v. Serle, 3 M.I.A. 329 (at p. 346).

A pleader is guilty of unprofessional conduct if he purchases an actionable claim, especially so if the purchase be speculative, as when a suit has been instituted on the claim, and the claim is ripe for judgment and the seller is his own client unable to judge the result of the suit—Muni Reddi v. Venkata Row, 37 Mad. 238, 17 I.C. 544.

659. Scope of section :—The law under the old section (before the amendment by the T. P. Amendment Act of 1900) stood thus: "No Judge, pleader, mukhtar, clerk, bailiff, or other officer concerned with Courts of Justice can buy any actionable claim falling under the jurisdiction of the Court in which he exercises his functions." Thus, it appears that under the original section the prohibition was not so extensive as it now is; under that section, the persons specified therein were forbidden to purchase only such claims as fell under the jurisdiction of the Court in which they exercised their function. Therefore, a pleader or an officer who did not habitually practise or exercise his functions in the Court by which the actionable claim was cognizable was not prevented from purchasing it—Appasami v. Scott, 9 Mad. 5; Rathnasami v. Subramanya, 11 Mad. 56 (61); Singaracharlu v. Sivabai, 11 Mad. 498; Subbarayudu v. Kotayya, 15 Mad. 389. But having regard to the fact that there are constant changes of Judges as well as officers, and that legal practitioners from all parts of the country may from time to time plead and appear in any court, it was thought desirable to make the prohibition absolute as regards them all. Consequently the section was amended in 1900, and it now prohibits the lawyers and officers of any Court from purchasing an actionable claim, and the above cases should be regarded as overruled.

The right to recover arrears of rent being an actionable claim, a transfer of such claim by a Magistrate to a Mukhtar is barred by this section—Sheo Gobind v. Gouri Prasad, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 310 (312), 4 Pat. 43, 83 I.C. 81. A claim to unpaid dower debt is an actionable claim and a legal practitioner is debarred from taking transfer of such a claim. The prohibition under this section being absolute, the transfer is void—Amir Husan v. Md. Nazir, A.I.R. 1943 All. 345 (347), 54 All. 499, 136 I.C. 853. The transfer being void in such cases, in a suit instituted by a person who is prohibited from dealing in actionable claims, to recover the debt transferred, the assignor may be substituted in place of the assignee plaintiff and continue the suit—Sitla Bux v. Mahabir, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 275 (277), 162 I.C. 229.

The word 'buy' refers to private sales and not to sales in execution; therefore, there is nothing to prevent a pleader from purchasing the property of his client sold in Court, although no doubt the Courts will always look askance at such a transaction—Aghore Nath v. Ram Churn, 23 Cal. 805; Subbarayyudu v. Kotayya, 15 Mad. 389; National Insurance Co. v. Haridas, 46 C.L.J. 225, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 691; and the onus will lie very heavily on him to show that the transaction was free from suspicion—Subbarayyudu v. Kotayya, 15 Mad. 389. The only persons who are for-bidden to purchase at Court-sale are "officers or other persons having any duty to perform in connection with any sale" (C. P. Code, O. XXI, r. 73) and a pleader does not fall under the category of those persons—Alagirisami v. Ramanathan, 10 Mad. 111.

A pleader is not precluded from purchasing decrees of Courts which are not actionable claims—Ibid; Govindarajulu v. Ranga Rao, 40 M.L.J. 124, 62 I.C. 255. But the right to arrears of rent in respect of property purchased by a pleader along with the property is an actionable claim, and he cannot under this section enforce it in any Court—Hira Lal v. Tripura Charan, 40 Cal. 650 (F.B.), 17 C.W.N. 679, 19 I.C. 129; Sheogobind v. Gouri Prasad, 4 Pat. 43, 6 P.L.T. 139, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 310.

This section prohibits a legal practitioner from purchasing an actionable claim; but a sale of an actionable claim by a pleader is not invalid. It is doubtful whether a mere sale would amount to "trafficking in"—Hirday Narain v. Jugat Prasad, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 2, 8 P.L.T. 201, 97 I.C. 373.

137. Nothing in the foregoing sections of this Chapter

Saving of negotiable instruments, etc. applies to stocks, shares or debentures, or to instruments which are for the time being, by law or custom, negotiable or to any mercantile document of title to goods.

Explanation.—The expression, "mercantile document of title to goods," includes a bill of lading, dock-warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, railway receipt, warrant or order for the delivery of goods, and any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented.

660. Scope of section:—This section merely provides that the methods of assignment in this Chapter shall not apply to the case of certain specified documents which are for the time being by law or custom negotiable. It merely deals with the manner in which the documents to which it relates can be transferred, but it does not affect the result of the transfer when made—Arunachalam v. Ko Po Yan, 1 Bur. L.J. 90, A.I.R. 1923 Rang 1 (4).

661. Negotiable instruments:—These instruments have been exempted from the operation of this Chapter because their assignment is regulated mostly by the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The usual mode of transfer of negotiable instruments is endorsement or delivery. See secs. 27 and 48, Neg. Ins. Act. But such instruments are nevertheless choses in action, and as such may be transferred by assignment i.e., by an instrument in writing under sec. 130; Ghanshyam v. Ragho, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 100 (102) (F.B.), 16 Pat. 74, 167 I.C. 57; Ram Rattan v. Gobind Ram, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 501, 185 I.C. 428; Surath v. Kripanath, 61 Cal. 425, 38 C.W.N. 465, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 549; Lacha Ram v. Hem Raj, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 30, 33 P.L.R. 120, 134 I.C. 121. The important difference between transfer by endorsement and transfer by assignment of a negotiable instrument is that in the case of an assignment, the assignee will acquire no more than the right, title and interest of his assignor, i.e., subject to all the liabilities and equities to which the assignor was subject (sec. 132), whereas in the case of an endorsement, the endorsee will have all the rights and advantages of a holder in due course, and not subject to the liabilities and equities of his transferor—Mahammad Khumbar Ali v. Ranga Rao, 24 Mad. 654; Muthar Sahib v. Kadir Sahib, 28 Mad. 544; Raman Chetty v. Nagaratna, 11 M.L.T. 246, 15 I.C. 380; Akhoy Kumar v. Haridas, 18 C.W.N. 494.

Where a promissory note is taken in the name of a joint family, and after partition of the joint estate a share of the debt is allotted to one member, he can bring a suit to recover his share of the debt. In such a case an assignment of the debt is not necessary—Gopalu v. Kothandarama, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 529 (532), 57 Mad. 1082, 153 I.C. 916. But see Virappa v. Mahadevappa, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 356 (359), 36 Bom. L.R. 807, 153 I.C. 352 where it has been held that where a pro-note was executed in favour of a son but on arbitrator's award and decree following it was allotted to the father, the latter could not sue upon it making his son a defendant, for the facts did not amount to an assignment by operation of law. See in this connection Narayanamoorthi v. Vumamaheshwaram, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 197, 122 I.C. 345.

According to the custom of merchants in the cotton trade at Bombay, a railway receipt is a negotiable instrument—Ramdas v. Amarchand, 40 Bom. 630 (P.C.) But according to the custom of the merchants of Rangoon in the paddy trade, a railway receipt is not a negotiable instrument—Arunachalam v. Ko Po Yan, 1 Bur. L.J. 90, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 1 (4).

Shares :—Under the English law a share is regarded as a chose in action [Harold v. Plenty, (1901) 2 Ch. 314]. But in India it is not so. This section excepts the applicability of this Chapter, which deals with transfer of actionable claims, to stocks and shares, and both in sec. 28 of the Companies Act and sec. 2, cl. (7) of the Sale of Goods Act “shares” have been defined as constituting moveable property and are therefore “goods” within the meaning of the latter Act—Kanhambra v. Krishna Pattar, A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 74, (1942) 2 M.L.J. 120, (1942) M.W.N. 450, 55 M.L.W. 428, reversing A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 394, I.L.R. 1941 Mad. 419, 199 I.C. 828.

662. Mercantile documents of title to goods :—The definition of a mercantile document of title to goods embodied in the Explanation is taken from sec. 1(4) of the English Factors Act 1889.

The documents specified in the Explanation also occur in Exception 1 of sec. 108 of the Indian Contract Act.

Delivery order :—A delivery order is a mercantile document of title. It passes from hand to hand by endorsement, and the transferee acquires a title to the goods to which it relates—Anglo-Indian Jute Mills v. Omademull, 38 Cal. 127, 10 I.C. 859. In some cases the delivery order may be transferred by mere delivery of the document—Khoo Po Khwet v. Nanigram, 9 L.B.R. 143.

The true test as to whether a document is a delivery order or title to goods is to ascertain whether it is such as is used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by endorsement or delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive the goods—Abdul v. Motiram, A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 186, J.L.R. 1948 Nag. 843. In this case it was held that a mere endorsement on a souda chethi (agreeement to sell goods) was not sufficient to transfer the rights in the goods, as the document could not be said to represent the goods.

Railway receipt :—A railway receipt is a document of title and passes by endorsement, so that the endorsee acquires title to the goods covered by the receipt—Amerchand v. Ram Das, 38 Bom. 255, 21 I.C. 343, on appeal, Ram Das v. Amerchand, 40 Bom. 630 (P.C.). "In their Lordships' opinion the only possible conclusion is that whenever any doubt arises as to whether a particular document is a 'document showing title' or a 'document of title' to goods for the purpose of the Indian Contract Act, the test is whether the document in question is used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by endorsement or delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive the goods thereby represented. In the present case it has been found as a fact by both the Courts below, and is not, and indeed cannot be disputed before this Board, that the railway receipts in question satisfy the test. It is therefore unnecessary to consider whether apart from evidence as to the ordinary course of business, the effect of sections 4 and 137 of the Transfer of Property Act would be conclusive on the point. It is clear even without the assistance of these sections, the receipts in question are 'documents showing title to goods' within sections 102 and 108, and documents of title within section 178, Contract Act"—Ibid at pp. 634—35. See also Commissioner of Income-tax v. Bhopal Textiles Ltd., A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 426, where it has been held that the railway receipt is a document of title, and that when it is handed over to the consignee on payment, the property in the goods is transferred. Their Lordships, however, have expressed doubt whether the property in the goods passes to the buyer by the mere fact of the receipt being in the name of the consignee. But a railway receipt which contains a condition contemplating delivery only to the consignee or to his endorsee as his agent (if the consignee is himself unable to take delivery), is not a document of title within the meaning of this section or section 108 of the Contract Act—Bombay Steam Navigation Co. v. Ramdas, 14 Bom. L.R. 532, 16 I.C. 61. In the absence of evidence to show a mercantile custom that an unendorsed railway receipt is used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, unendorsed railway receipt is not a document of title in the hands of a person to whom it is sent—Secretary of State v. Rishi Ram, A.I.R. 1928 All. 145 (146), 50 All. 227, 108 I.C. 457. But see Governor General v. Joynarain, A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 36, 29 P.L.T. 99 where it has been held that the contract indicated by a railway receipt can be transferred without a writing, the form or method of transfer being regulated by custom. The transfer can be made even by endorsement in blank coupled with delivery of the document, provided the intention is to make an absolute delivery of the goods—ibid. Where the railway receipt is handed over on payment of the price of the goods, there is such an absolute transfer—ibid. The endorsement of a railway receipt coupled with a letter of lien to the effect that the goods were deposited with the bank by way of security had the effect of passing the goods in the constructive possession of the bank irrespective of the fact that there was no notice to the carrier—Mercantile Bank v. Official Assignee, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 207 (209), 56 Mad. 177, 64 M.L.J. 320. The railway receipt is in effect clothed with all the essential characteristics of negotiability though it may not be a negotiable instrument in the strictest sense—Shah Mulji Deoji v. Union of India, A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 31. Where there is a series of indorsements on the railway receipt the last endorsee can sue in his own name—Ibid. But see Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta v. General Trading Corporation, 68 C.W.N. 410 where it has been held that the railway receipt is not like a negotiable instrument.

Mate's receipt :—A document denominated 'mate's receipt' granted by a shipping company which merely acknowledges the receipt of the goods shipped and promises to carry them to the place of destination, is a simple ordinary receipt for goods and not a negotiable instrument or a mercantile document of title within the meaning of this section, and cannot be transferred by mere endorsement. If the consignee endorses the receipt to another person, such person gets no title to the goods covered by the receipt and cannot compel the company to deliver the goods to himself—Natcheappa v. Irrawaddy Flotilla Co., 41 Cal. 670 (P.C.), 22 I.C. 311, 18 C.W.N. 457.

(ACT V OF 1908)

ORDER XXXIV

Suits Relating to Mortgages of Immovable Property

1. Parties to suits for foreclosure, sale and redemption—Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage.

Explanation.—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit; and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage.

2. Preliminary decree in foreclosure-suit—(1) In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a preliminary decree—

(a) ordering that an account be taken of what was due to the plaintiff at the date of such decree for—

(i) principal and interest on the mortgage,

(ii) the costs of suit, if any, awarded to him and,

(iii) the costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him up to that date in respect of his mortgage-security, together with interest thereon; or

(b) declaring the amount so due at that date and

(c) directing—

(i) that, if the defendant pays into Court the amount so found or declared due on or before such date as the Court may fix within six months from the date on which the Court confirms and countersigns the account taken under clause (a), or from that date on which such amount is declared in Court under clause (b), as the case may be, and thereafter pays such amount as may be adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs, charges and expenses as provided in rule 10, together with subsequent interest on such sums respectively as provided in rule 11, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as the defendant appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendant at his cost free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall also if necessary, put the defendant in possession of the property; and

(ii) that, if payment of the amount found or declared due under or by the preliminary decree is not made on or before the date so fixed, or the defendant fails to pay, within such time as the Court may fix, the amount adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs, charges, expenses and interest, the plaintiff shall be entitled to apply for a final decree debarring the defendant from all rights to redeem the property.

(2) The Court may, on good cause shown and upon terms to be fixed by the Court, from time to time, at any time before a final decree is passed, extend the time fixed for the payment of the amount found or declared due under sub-rule (1) or of the amount adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs, charges, expenses and interest.

(3) Where, in a suit for foreclosure, subsequent mortgagees or persons deriving title from, or subrogated to the rights of, any such mortgagees are joined as parties, the preliminary decree shall provide for the adjudication of the respective rights and liabilities of the parties to the suit in the manner and form set forth in Form No. 9 or Form No. 10, as the case may be, of Appendix D with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require.

High Court Amendments :

Orissa Same as in Patna.

Patna —In sub-rule (2) after the words "the Court may" insert the words "of its own motion or" (7.1.1936).

3. Final decree in foreclosure-suit—(1) Where before a final decree debarring the defendant from all right to redeem the mortgaged property has been passed, the defendant makes payment into Court of all amounts due from him under sub-rule (1) of rule 2, the Court shall, on application made by the defendant in this behalf, pass a final decree—

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents referred to in the preliminary decree, and, if necessary,—

(b) ordering him to retransfer at the cost of the defendant the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree, and, also, if necessary,—

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property.

(2) Where payment in accordance with sub-rule (1) has not been made, the Court shall, on application made by the plaintiff in this behalf, pass a final decree declaring that the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him are debarred from all rights to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary, ordering the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession of the property.

(3) On the passing of a final decree under sub-rule (2), all liabilities to which the defendant is subject in respect of the mortgage or on account of the suit shall be deemed to have been discharged.

4. Preliminary decree in suit for sale—(1) In a suit for sale, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a preliminary decree to the effect mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) (i) of sub-rule (1) of rule 2, and further directing that, in default of the defendant paying as therein mentioned, the plaintiff shall be entitled to apply for a final decree directing that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and the proceeds of the sale after deduction therefrom of the expenses of the sale be paid into Court and applied in payment of what has been found or declared under or by the preliminary decree due to the plaintiff, together with such amount as may have been adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs, charges, expenses and interest and the balance, if any, be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same.

(ii) that, if payment of the amount found or declared due under or by the preliminary decree is not made on or before the date so fixed, or the plaintiff fails to pay, within such time as the Court may fix, the amount adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs, charges, expenses and interests, the defendant shall be entitled to apply for a final decree—

(2) The Court may, on good cause shown and upon terms to be fixed by the Court, from time to time, at any time before the passing of a final decree for foreclosure or sale, as the case may be, extend the time fixed for the payment of the amount found or declared due under sub-rule (1) or of the amount adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs, charges, expenses and interest.

8. Final decree in redemption suit.—(1) Where, before a final decree debarring the plaintiff from all right to redeem the mortgaged property has been passed or before the confirmation of a sale held in pursuance of a final decree passed under sub-rule (3) of this rule, the plaintiff makes payment into Court of all amounts due from him under sub-rule (1) of rule 7, the Court shall, on application made by the plaintiff in this behalf, pass a final decree or, if such decree has been passed, an order—

Where such deposit has been made, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of the amount of the purchase money paid into Court by him, together with a sum equal to five per cent thereof.

(b) in the case of any other mortgage, not being a usufructuary mortgage, pass a final decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, and the proceeds of the sale (after deduction therefrom of the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is found due to the defendant, and the balance, if any, be paid to the plaintiff or other persons entitled to receive the same.

8A. Recovery of balance due on mortgage in suit for redemption.—Where the net proceeds of any sale held under the last preceding rule are found insufficient to pay the amount due to the defendant, the Court, on application by him, may, if the balance is legally recoverable from the plaintiff otherwise than out of the property sold, pass a decree for such balance.

10. Cost of mortgagee subsequent to decree.—In finally adjusting the amount to be paid to a mortgagee in case of a foreclosure, sale or redemption, the Court shall, unless in the case of costs of the suit the conduct of the mortgagee has been such as to disentitle him thereto, add to the mortgage-money such costs of the suit and other costs, charges and expenses as have been properly incurred by him since the date of the preliminary decree for foreclosure, sale or redemption up to the time of actual payment.

11. Payment of interest.—In any decree passed in a suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption, where interest is legally recoverable, the Court may order payment of interest to the mortgagee as follows, namely:—

(a) interest up to the date on or before which payment of the amount found or declared due is under the preliminary decree to be made by the mortgagor or other person redeeming the mortgage—

(i) on the principal amount found or declared due on the mortgage,—at the rate payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at such rate as the Court deems reasonable.

(ii) * * *

(iii) on the amount adjudged due to the mortgagee for costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by the mortgagee in respect of the mortgage-security up to the date of the preliminary decree and added to the mortgage-money,—at the rate agreed between the parties, or, failing such rate, at the same rate as was payable on the principal, or failing such rate at such rate not exceeding six per cent per annum as the Court deems reasonable; and

(b) subsequent interest up to the date of realisation or actual payment on the aggregate of the principal sums specified in clause (a) as calculated in accordance with that clause at such rate as the Court deems reasonable.

12. Sale of property subject to prior mortgage.—Where any property the sale of which is directed under this Order is subject to a prior mortgage, the Court may, with the consent of the prior mortgagee, direct that the property be sold free from the same, giving to such prior mortgagee the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold.

13. Application of proceeds.—(1) Such proceeds shall be brought into Court and applied as follows:—

first, in payment of all expenses incident to the sale, or properly incurred in any attempted sale;

secondly, in payment of whatever is due to the prior mortgagee on account of the prior mortgage, and of costs, properly incurred in connection therewith;

thirdly, in payment of all interest due on account of the mortgage in consequence whereof the sale was directed, and of the costs of the suit in which the decree directing the sale was made;

fourthly, in payment of the principal money due on account of that mortgage; and lastly, the residue (if any) shall be paid to the person proving himself to be interested in the property sold, or if there are more such persons than one, then to such persons according to their respective interests therein or upon their joint receipt.

(2) Nothing in this rule or in rule 12 shall be deemed to affect the powers conferred by section 57 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (IV of 1882).

14. Suit for sale necessary for bringing mortgaged property to sale.—(1) Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage, and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in Order II, rule 2.

(2) Nothing in sub-rule (1) shall apply to any territories to which the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (IV of 1882), has not been extended.

15. Mortgages by the deposit of title-deeds and charges.—All the provisions contained in this Order which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds within the meaning of section 58, and to a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (IV of 1882).
